PREFACE

The poetry of the Victorian Period bulks large; moreover, it is notably rich and diversified in content and in interest. This book aims to give adequate representation to the poets and to the poetry of this great period. Effort has been made to choose material that accurately reflects the temper and the spirit of the age and that reveals at the same time the individuality and the special merit of each author. This is an ample collection of poetry; it must needs be if it is to represent fairly the hundreds of volumes of verse written or published between 1830 and 1910. Whether poems are included for their intrinsic worth or, as occasionally, because of their historical importance, there is enough here for almost any study that one cares to make of the poetry of the period.

More space than usual has been given to the dozen or fifteen leading poets of the period—from Tennyson and Browning at one end to Kipling and Hardy at the other. The best and most enduring work of the most enduring poets is here. Too often, however, the few obviously great poets in a period crowd out significant minor poets that deserve a better fate. Furthermore, not infrequently a knowledge of the work of the poets of second rank is essential to any real understanding of the age in which they lived and wrote. Considerable space has therefore been allotted to the minor poets of the period, who in no small or uncertain way contributed to the great stream of literary tradition of which they are a part. A few poets are represented by but one or two poems, the result of an inspiration that struck fire only once or twice, but that furnished for the moment real illumination. Many of these poems were famous in their own day and deserve to be recaptured for the delight of modern readers. Victorian verse cannot be adequately presented or studied without them.

The book presents wherever possible complete poems or at least complete units. The following appear in their entirety—In Memoriam, Maud, Pippa Passes, In a Balcony, Sonnets from the Portuguese, The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, Tristram and Iseult, Sohrab and Rustum, The City of Dreadful Night, The Land of Heart's Desire, and The Shropshire Lad. There are included also two Idylls of the Idylls of the King, two Books of The Ring and the Book, over half of the sonnets of The House of Life, two sections of The Story of Sigurd the Volsung, and generous selections from Atalanta in Calydon and In Hospital.

Much space is given to verse inspired by exciting events of the nineteenth century—in politics, in industry, in social organization—events that stirred human passions throughout the world and roused men to noble and heroic endeavor. The entire Victorian era was marked by significant political and social change and advancement. The poetry of the period—that of the major poets, and perhaps even more that of the minor poets—is closely related to the political and social structure of the age. Ample recognition is given also to the religious and devotional poetry of the period, so sincere and so poignant in its record of the contemporary controversies aroused by new and disquieting discoveries and theories in science. Another significant interest given copious space is art, which was a passion of a number of the poets represented. No period of the world's history approaches the nineteenth century in its understanding of great artistic achievements and in its appreciation of perennial qualities of various forms of creative art. Here are included numerous poems treating art and poetry of earlier days and exemplifying contemporary artistic theories and enthusiasms. Nor has there been overlooked that cherished body of humorous poetry which has always delighted a multitude of readers. No collection of Victorian poetry would be complete without a fair representation of this sparkling lighter verse. The more solid and serious aspects of the period needed the relief of the comic, and nonsense and laughter may justly claim a place in any such volume as this.

But Victorian verse need not base its claim for recognition on Victorian history and thought; the reputations established between 1830 and 1900 are undergoing re-evaluation, of course, but that re-evaluation does not seriously weaken the belief that the Victorian age is one of the three or four peaks of significant creative force in the long record of English poetry. And the controlling factor in the selection of material for this book has been the desire to show the Victorian poets giving play to "their free onward impulse brushing through."

Of especial interest will be found the selections from the poets of the later years of the period—including the writers listed in the Table of Contents from Austin Dobson to Thomas Hardy. The importance of many of these names is already unquestioned, and their place in English literature is secure. Some of them continued the tradition of their Victorian predecessors; others openly challenged the past and carried new torches lighted by the twin spirits of change and revolt. Down to the 90's Victorian poetry is in the main, though with significant new shadings, a continuation of the Romantic tradition founded in the first third of the century. Manner and substance alike bear the noble stigmata of the generation of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Shelley, Byron, and Keats. From 1890 on, there were daring iconoclasts who discarded conventional Victorian themes and theories, Victorian seriousness and idealism, Victorian richness of manner, and dedicated themselves eagerly and confidently to the task of writing poetry that out-Browninged Browning in its direct grapple with life, or in a striking complementary effort sought escape from life in a dream, a picture, a mood, an emotion, an impression. Both the English and the Irish members of this intrepid and adventurous group are well represented in this text.

It will thus be seen that the entire collection is more comprehensive, more inclusive, more accurately representative, than any of its predecessors. It will therefore readily allow for individual choices of teachers using the volume in college or university courses.

The construction of this book is not on the easy and conventional plan of most anthologies. Serious effort has been made to prepare a really usable book, one that the student can understand without running hither and yon to books of reference. Real investigation has its place, of course, sometimes even in college classes. But when a student or a general reader sits down to read poetry, the less he has to stop to find out the meaning of unfamiliar words or obscure allusions, the better. This book aims to furnish an apparatus which shall make it possible readily to understand and to enjoy the poems presented. Explanatory footnotes give the information and explanations needed to allow straight-away reading. The Critical Notes in the Appendix throw into relief certain important problems concerning the artistry of the poets and the period. Brief biographical sketches, also in the Appendix, endeavor to present vividly and interestingly the minimum number of facts necessary in the case of each poet. Although reasonably full, the bibliographies prepared are not intended to be complete, they include the more important editions of each writer, the chief biographies, and the more illuminating criticisms of his work.

The order of the poets in the volume is roughly chronological, the chief dates of writing and publication being determining factors. Poems under each author are arranged in the order of their writing (if known) or of their first publication. Following each poem are printed dates of writing (in italics) and dates of publication (in Roman type).

In the preparation of this volume I have been generously aided by several of my colleagues—Professor Will Hutchins, Mrs Lois Miles Zucker, and Dr. Harold Golder. Dr. Golder rendered especially valuable service in helping prepare the biographies, the bibliographies, and some of the notes. The Index was prepared by my daughter Margaret. My chief obligation, however, is due Professor Lindsay Todd Damon, of Brown University, whose scholarship and judgment contributed to the improvement of the work at every turn. To him and to my colleagues who aided me so materially, I express appreciation and gratitude. I express thanks also to the authors who have graciously allowed me to include their poems in the volume, and to the various publishers who have granted permission to use poems still in copyright.

POETRY OF THE VICTORIAN PERIOD

THOMAS A INGTON MACAULAY
(1800-1859)

THE BATTLE OF NASEBY

BY OBADIAH BIND-THEIR-KINGS-IN-CHAINS-AND-THEIR-NOBLES-WITH-LINKS-OF-IRON,
SERGEANT IN IRETON'S REGIMENT

Oh, wherefore come ye forth in triumph from the North,
With your hands, and your feet, and your raiment all red?
And wherefore doth your rout send forth a joyous shout?
And whence be the grapes of the wine-press
that ye tread?

Oh! evil was the root, and bitter was the fruit, 5
And crimson was the juice of the vintage that we trod,
For we trampled on the throng of the haughty
and the strong,
Who sate in the high places and slew the saints of God.

It was about the noon of a glorious day of June,
That we saw their banners dance and their curasses shine, 10
And the Man of Blood was there, with his long essencéd hair,
And Astley, and Sir Marmaduke, and Rupert of the Rhine.

The Battle of Naseby The Battle of Naseby, fought on June 14, 1645, was the first important victory of the Parliamentary, or Puritan, forces over the forces of the English king, Charles I. Oliver Cromwell was one of the Parliamentary generals. Over 5000 royalists surrendered, 2000 fled from the field with Charles. Naseby is 70 miles northwest of London.

Subtitled The story is supposed to be told by a Puritan soldier in the regiment of General Ireton, Cromwell's son-in-law. The fantastic name indicates the zealous nature of the militant Puritans.

1 the North The royalists were in control in the North, the Puritans in the South. The first stanza is the inquiry of a Puritan in the southwest of England, where Fairfax led his army after Naseby. The rest of the poem is the Sergeant's reply. 4 wine-press . . . tread. From Isaiah, 63 2-3—"Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winevat? I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment." 11 Man of Blood, Charles I. 12 Astley . . . Rupert These men were Royalist officers. Rupert was Charles's nephew. He was the son of Frederick, the Elector Palatine of the Rhine.

Like a servant of the Lord, with his Bible and his sword,
The General rode along us to form us for the fight;
When a murmuring sound broke out, and swelled into a shout 15
Among the godless horsemen upon the ty-rant's right.

And hark! like the roar of the billows on the shore,
The cry of battle rises along their charging line
For God! for the Cause! for the Church! for the Laws!
For Charles, King of England, and Rupert of the Rhine! 20

The furious German comes, with his clarions
and his drums,
His bravoes of Alsatia and pages of Whitehall,
They are bursting on our flanks! Grasp your pikes! Close your ranks!
For Rupert never comes, but to conquer, or to fall.

They are here—they rush on—we are broken
—we are gone— 25
Our left is borne before them like stubble on the blast.
O Lord, put forth thy might! O Lord, defend the right!
Stand back to back, in God's name! and fight
it to the last!

Stout Skippon hath a wound—the center hath given ground
Hark! hark! what means the trampling of horsemen on our rear? 30
Whose banner do I see, boys? 'Tis he! thank God! 'tis he, boys!
Bear up another minute! Brave Oliver is here!

14 The General, Sir Thomas Fairfax (1612-71), commander-in-chief of the Parliamentary forces. 16 godless horsemen The Puritans regarded the Royalists as utterly depraved. The war was religious as well as political. 22 Alsatia, an outlying district of London, now known as Whitefriars. It was the resort of lawbreakers because of certain privileges of sanctuary it possessed by virtue of a convent of the Carmelites, or White Friars, that formerly stood there. The privilege was annulled in 1697. White-hall, the royal palace in London. 29 Skippon, a general of the Parliamentary army.

Their heads all stooping low, their points all
in a row;
Like a whirlwind on the trees, like a deluge
on the dikes,
Our cuirassiers have burst on the ranks of the Accurst, 35
And at a shock have scattered the forest of his pikes.

Fast, fast, the gallants ride, in some safe nook
to hide
Their coward heads, predestined to rot on Temple Bar,
And he—he turns! he flies! shame on those cruel eyes
That bore to look on torture, and dare not look on war!

Ho, comrades! scour the plain, and ere ye strip the slain,
First give another stab to make your search secure,
Then shake from sleeves and pockets their broad-pieces and lockets,
The tokens of the wanton, the plunder of the poor.

Fools! your doublets shone with gold, and your hearts were gay and bold, 45
When you kissed your lily hands to your lemans today;
And tomorrow shall the fox from her chambers in the rocks
Lead forth her tawny cubs to howl about the prey.

Where be your tongues that late mocked at heaven and hell and fate?
And the fingers that once were so busy with your blades? 50
Your perfumed satin clothes, your catches, and your oaths?
Your stage-plays and your sonnets, your diamonds and your spades?

Down, down, forever down with the miter
and the crown,
With the Belial of the court, and the Mammon of the Pope!

38 Temple Bar, one of the entrances to London. The heads of criminals and of persons convicted of treason were displayed over the gateway at this place. 40 That . . . war There is no evidence to support this statement regarding Charles I. 43 broad-pieces, gold coins, twenty-shilling pieces. 51 catches, light songs. 52 diamonds . . . spades. The Puritans looked with abhorrence upon card playing. 53 miter, the official headgear of a bishop, hence, the symbol of a bishop's office. 54 Belial, the spirit of evil or lawlessness. He is one of the fallen angels in Paradise Lost. Mammon, the personification of earthly ambition, the god of wealth.

There is woe in Oxford halls, there is wail in Durham's stalls, 55
The Jesuit smites his bosom, the bishop rends his cope.

And she of the seven hills shall mourn her children's ills,
And tremble when she thinks on the edge of England's sword;
And the kings of earth in fear shall shudder
when they hear
What the hand of God hath wrought for the Houses and the Word! 60

THE LAST BUCCANEER

The winds were yelling, the waves were swelling,
The sky was black and drear,
When the crew with eyes of flame brought the ship without a name
Alongside the last Buccaneer

"Whence flies your sloop full sail before so fierce a gale, 5
When all others drive bare on the seas?
Say, come ye from the shore of the holy Salvador,
Or the gulf of the rich Caribbees?"

"From a shore no search hath found, from a gulf no line can sound,
Without rudder or needle we steer, 10 Above, below, our bark, dies the sea fowl and the shark,
As we fly by the last Buccaneer

"Tonight there shall be heard on the rocks of Cape de Verde
A loud crash, and a louder roar,
And tomorrow shall the deep, with a heavy moaning, sweep 15
The corpses and wreck to the shore "

55 Oxford halls Oxford was the rallying place of the King's party. Durham's stalls, seats in the choir of Durham Cathedral, used by officiating clergy. The Bishop of Durham was an ardent supporter of the King. 57 she of the seven hills, the Roman Catholic Church. Rome was built on seven hills. 60 Houses, the two houses of Parliament. the Word, the Bible.

The Last Buccaneer. A buccaneer was a pirate or a pirate ship. The name was applied especially to adventurers who in the 17th and 18th centuries plundered the Spanish possessions in the West Indies and South America and preyed upon Spanish ships. Cf. Kingsley's The Last Buccaneer, page 398. 3 ship without a name, probably a spectral ship of death, like "The Flying Dutchman," a phantom ship that meant disaster to the sailors who saw it. 7 Salvador, San (Saint) Salvador, one of the Bahama Islands. 8 rich Caribbees. The Spanish possessions in the Caribbean Sea were noted for their wealth. 13 Cape de Verde, a cape on the west coast of Africa, also a group of islands off the cape

ride

In the breath of the citron shades;
And Severn's towering mast securely now flies fast,
Through the sea of the balmy Trades 20

From St. Jago's wealthy port, from Havan-nah's royal fort,

The seaman goes forth without fear,
For since that stormy night not a mortal hath had sight

Of the flag of the last Buccaneer. (1839)

HORATIUS

A LAY MADE ABOUT THE YEAR OF THE CITY 360

I

Lars Porsena of Clusium

By the Nine Gods he swore
That the great house of Tarquin
Should suffer wrong no more
By the Nine Gods he swore it, 5
And named a trysting day,
And bade his messengers ride forth
East and west and south and north,
To summon his array.

2

East and west and south and north 10
The messengers ride fast,
And tower and town and cottage
Have heard the trumpet's blast
Shame on the false Etruscan
Who lingers in his home, 15
When Porsena of Clusium
Is on the march for Rome.

3

The horsemen and the footmen
Are pouring in amain
From many a stately market-place, 20
From many a fruitful plain;
From many a lonely hamlet,
Which, hid by beech and pine,
Like an eagle's nest, hangs on the crest
Of purple Apennine; 25

17 Clyde. The river Clyde, in Scotland, and the Severn (line 19), in England, are noted for their shipping 18 In shades, in tropical winds 20 Trades, the trade winds, of tropical regions 21 St Jago, an important seaport on the west coast of Cuba, now known as Santiago de Cuba

But now no stroke of woodman 50

Short time was there, ye well may guess,
 For musing or debate.
 Out spake the Consul roundly: 150
 "The bridge must straight go down;
 For, since Janiculum is lost,
 Naught else can save the town."

20

Just then a scout came flying,
 All wild with haste and fear; 155
 "To arms! to arms! Sir Consul:
 Lars Porsena is here."
 On the low hills to westward
 The Consul fixed his eye,
 And saw the swarthy storm of dust 160
 Rise fast along the sky.

21

And nearer fast and nearer
 Doth the red whirlwind come;
 And louder still and still more loud,
 From underneath that rolling cloud, 165
 Is heard the trumpet's war-note proud,
 The trampling, and the hum.
 And plainly and more plainly
 Now through the gloom appears,
 Far to left and far to right, 170
 In broken gleams of dark-blue light,
 The long array of helmets bright,
 The long array of spears.

And plainly, and more plainly
 Above that glimmering line, 175
 Now might ye see the banners
 Of twelve fair cities shine,
 But the banner of proud Clusium
 Was highest of them all,
 The terror of the Umbrian, 180
 The terror of the Gaul.

23

And plainly and more plainly
 Now might the burghers know,
 By port and vest, by horse and crest, 185
 Each warlike Lucumo
 There Cilnius of Arretium
 On his fleet roan was seen,
 And Astur of the fourfold shield,
 Girt with the brand none else may wield, 190
 Tolumnius with the belt of gold,
 And dark Verbenna from the hold
 By reedy Thrasymene.

180-181 terror Gaul Porsena of Clusium was a terror to the men of Umbria (a province in central Italy, east of Etruria) and to the men of Gaul (a province in northern Italy) 184 port and vest, bearing and dress 185
Lucumo, the title of an Etruscan prince

Fast by the royal standard,
 O'erlooking all the war,
 Lars Porsena of Clusium 195
 Sat in his ivory car.
 By the right wheel rode Mamilius,
 Prince of the Latian name,
 And by the left false Sextus,
 That wrought the deed of shame. 200

25

But when the face of Sextus
 Was seen among the foes,
 A yell that rent the firmament
 From all the town arose.
 On the house-tops was no woman 205
 But spat toward him and hissed,
 No child but screamed out curses,
 And shook its little fist.

26

But the Consul's brow was sad,
 And the Consul's speech was low, 210
 And darkly looked he at the wall,
 And darkly at the foe
 "Their van will be upon us
 Before the bridge goes down,
 And if they once may win the bridge, 215
 What hope to save the town?"

Then out spake brave Horatius,
 The Captain of the Gate
 "To every man upon this earth 220
 Death cometh soon or late
 And how can man die better
 Than facing fearful odds,
 For the ashes of his fathers,
 And the temples of his Gods,

28

"And for the tender mother 225
 Who dandled him to rest,
 And for the wife who nurses
 His baby at her breast,
 And for the holy maidens 230
 Who feed the eternal flame,
 To save them from false Sextus
 That wrought the deed of shame?"

29

"Hew down the bridge, Sir Consul,
 With all the speed ye may;

194 war, warlike array 200 the deed of shame, the rape of Lucretia 229 holy maidens, Vestal Virgins, whose chief duty was to keep the sacred fires burning on the altar of Vesta, goddess of the hearth

I, with two more to help me, 235
 Will hold the foe in play
 In yon strait path a thousand
 May well be stopped by three
 Now who will stand on either hand,
 And keep the bridge with me?" 240

Then out spake Spurius Lartius —
 A Ramnian proud was he —
 "Lo, I will stand at thy right hand,
 And keep the bridge with thee."
 And out spake strong Herminius — 245
 Of Titian blood was he —
 "I will abide on thy left side,
 And keep the bridge with thee"

31

"Horatius," quoth the Consul,
 "As thou sayest, so let it be" 250
 And straight against that great array Forth went the dauntless Three.
 For Romans in Rome's quarrel
 Spared neither land nor gold,
 Nor son nor wife, nor limb nor life, 255
 In the brave days of old.

32

Then none was for a party,
 Then all were for the state;
 Then the great man helped the poor,
 And the poor man loved the great, 260
 Then lands were fairly portioned;
 Then spoils were fairly sold:
 The Romans were like brothers
 In the brave days of old.

Now Roman is to Roman 265
 More hateful than a foe,
 And the Tribunes beard the high,
 And the Fathers grind the low
 As we wax hot in faction,
 In battle we wax cold, 270
 Wherefore men fight not as they fought
 In the brave days of old.

Now while the Three were tightening
 Their harness on their backs,

237 strait, narrow 242 Ramnian. The three defenders of the bridge belonged to the three original patrician tribes — the Ramnes, the Tities, and the Luceres. Horatius belonged to the Luceres. 262. Then, etc. After Camillus captured the Etruscan city of Veii in 396 B.C., he distributed large quantities of booty among the Roman citizens; he was later accused of making unfair distribution, and as a consequence went into exile. 267 Tribunes, officers appointed to protect the interests of the common people

The Consul was the foremost man 275
 To take in hand an ax,
 And Fathers mixed with Commons,
 Seized hatchet, bar, and crow,
 And smote upon the planks above,
 And loosed the props below. 280

35

Meanwhile the Tuscan army,
 Right glorious to behold,
 Came flashing back the noonday light,
 Rank behind rank, like surges bright
 Of a broad sea of gold. 285
 Four hundred trumpets sounded
 A peal of warlike glee,
 As that great host, with measured tread,
 And spears advanced, and ensigns spread,
 Rolled slowly toward the bridge's head, 290
 Where stood the dauntless Three

The Three stood calm and silent,
 And looked upon the foes,
 And a great shout of laughter
 From all the vanguard rose; 295
 And forth three chiefs came spurring
 Before that deep array;
 To earth they sprang, their swords they drew,
 And lifted high their shields, and flew
 To win the narrow way: 300

37

Aunus from green Tifernum,
 Lord of the Hill of Vines,
 And Seius, whose eight hundred slaves
 Sicken in Ilva's mines;
 And Picus, long to Clusium 305
 Vassal in peace and war,
 Who led to fight his Umbrian powers
 From that gray crag where, girt with towers,
 The fortress of Nequinum lowers
 O'er the pale waves of Nar. 310

38

Stout Lartius hurled down Aunus
 Into the stream beneath,
 Herminius struck at Seius,
 And clove him to the teeth,
 At Picus brave Horatius 315
 Darted one fiery thrust,
 And the proud Umbrian's gilded arms
 Clashed in the bloody dust

39

Then Ocnus of Falerii
 Rushed on the Roman Threc, 320

278 crow, a bar of iron with a crook or claw, used as a lever

And Lausulus of Urgo,
 The rover of the sea;
 And Aruns of Volsinium,
 Who slew the great wild boar,
 The great wild boar that had his den 325
 Amidst the reeds of Cosa's fen,
 And wasted fields, and slaughtered men,
 Along Albinia's shore.

40

Herminius smote down Aruns,
 Lartius laid Ocnus low, 330
 Right to the heart of Lausulus
 Horatius sent a blow
 "Lie there," he cried, "fell pirate!
 No more, aghast and pale,
 From Ostia's walls the crowd shall mark 335
 The track of thy destroying bark.
 No more Campania's hinds shall fly
 To woods and caverns when they spy
 Thy thrice accurséd sail "

But now no sound of laughter 340
 Was heard among the foes.
 A wild and wrathful clamor
 From all the vanguard rose.
 Six spears' lengths from the entrance
 Halted that deep array, 345
 And for a space no man came forth
 To win the narrow way.

42

But hark! the cry is Astur,
 And lo, the ranks divide;
 And the great Lord of Luna 350
 Comes with his stately stride.
 Upon his ample shoulders
 Clangs loud the fourfold shield,
 And in his hand he shakes the brand
 Which none but he can wield. 355

43

He smiled on those bold Romans
 A smile serene and high;
 He eyed the flinching Tuscans,
 And scorn was in his eye
 Quoth he, "The she-wolf's litter 360
 Stand savagely at bay;
 But will ye dare to follow,
 If Astur clears the way?"

44

Then, whirling up his broadsword
 With both hands to the height, 365

322 The rover, etc The Etruscans were pirates as well as merchants 360 The she-wolf's litter, a reference to Romulus and Remus, the legendary founders of Rome, suckled by a she-wolf

He rushed against Horatius,
 And smote with all his might.
 With shield and blade Horatius
 Right deftly turned the blow.
 The blow, though turned, came yet too nigh;
 It missed his helm, but gashed his thigh. 371
 The Tuscans raised a joyful cry
 To see the red blood flow.

45

He reeled, and on Herminius
 He leaned one breathing-space, 375
 Then, like a wild-cat mad with wounds,
 Sprang right at Astur's face.
 Through teeth, and skull, and helmet,
 So fierce a thrust he sped,
 The good sword stood a handbreadth out 380
 Behind the Tuscan's head.

And the great Lord of Luna
 Fell at that deadly stroke,
 As falls on Mount Alvernus
 A thunder-smitten oak 385
 Far o'er the crashing forest
 The giant arms he spread;
 And the pale augurs, muttering low,
 Gaze on the blasted head

On Astur's throat Horatius 390
 Right firmly pressed his heel,
 And thrice and four times tugged amain,
 Ere he wrenched out the steel
 "And see," he cried, "the welcome, 395
 Fair guests, that waits you here!
 What noble Lucumo comes next
 To taste our Roman cheer?"

48

But at his haughty challenge
 A sullen murmur ran,
 Mingled of wrath and shame and dread, 400
 Along that glittering van.
 There lacked not men of prowess,
 Nor men of lordly race;
 For all Etruria's noblest
 Were round the fatal place 405

49

But all Etruria's noblest
 Felt their hearts sink to see
 On the earth the bloody corpses,
 In the path the dauntless Three;
 And, from the ghastly entrance 410
 Where those bold Romans stood,

388 augurs, official soothsayers, or prophets.

All shrank, like boys who unaware, Ranging the woods to start a hare, Come to the mouth of the dark lair Where, growling low, a fierce old bear Lies amidst bones and blood	415
50
Was none who would be foremost To lead such dire attack; But those behind cried "Forward!" And those before cried "Back!" And backward now and forward Wavers the deep array; And on the tossing sea of steel, To and fro the standards reel, And the victorious trumpet-peal Dies fitfully away.	420
51
Yet one man for one moment Stood out before the crowd, Well known was he to all the Three, And they gave him greeting loud, "Now welcome, welcome, Sextus! Now welcome to thy home! Why dost thou stay, and turn away? Here lies the road to Rome "	430
52
Thrice looked he at the city; Thrice looked he at the dead; And thrice came on in fury, And thrice turned back in dread; And, white with fear and hatred, Scowled at the narrow way Where, wallowing in a pool of blood, The bravest Tuscans lay.	435
53
But meanwhile ax and lever Have manfully been plied; And now the bridge hangs tottering Above the boiling tide. "Come back, come back, Horatius!" Loud cried the Fathers all. "Back, Lartius! back, Herminius! Back, ere the ruin fall!"	445
54
Back darted Spurius Lartius; Herminius darted back — And, as they passed, beneath their feet They felt the timbers crack. But when they turned their faces, And on the farther shore Saw brave Horatius stand alone, They would have crossed once more.	455
		55
		But with a crash like thunder Fell every loosened beam, And, like a dam, the mighty wreck Lay right athwart the stream; And a long shout of triumph Rose from the walls of Rome, As to the highest turret-tops Was splashed the yellow foam.	460
		56
		And, like a horse unbroken When first he feels the rein, The furious river struggled hard, And tossed his tawny mane, And burst the curb, and bounded, Rejoicing to be free, And whirling down, in fierce career, Battlement, and plank, and pier, Rushed headlong to the sea.	470
		57
		Alone stood brave Horatius, But constant still in mind; Thrice thirty thousand foes before, And the broad flood behind "Down with him!" cried false Sextus, With a smile on his pale face "Now yield thee," cried Lars Porsena, "Now yield thee to our grace "	480
		58
		Round turned he, as not deigning Those craven ranks to see, Naught spake he to Lars Porsena, To Sextus naught spake he, But he saw on Palatinus The white porch of his home; And he spake to the noble river That rolls by the towers of Rome.	485
		59
		"O Tiber! father Tiber! To whom the Romans pray, A Roman's life, a Roman's arms, Take thou in charge this day!" So he spake, and speaking sheathed The good sword by his side, And with his harness on his back Plunged headlong in the tide.	495
		60
		No sound of joy or sorrow Was heard from either bank,	500
		488 Palatinus, one of the seven hills of Rome father Tiber, the river-god	492

But friends and foes in dumb surprise,
 With parted lips and straining eyes,
 Stood gazing where he sank;
 And when above the surges
 They saw his crest appear,
 All Rome sent forth a rapturous cry,
 And even the ranks of Tuscany
 Could scarce forbear to cheer.

But fiercely ran the current,
 Swollen high by months of rain;
 And fast his blood was flowing,
 And he was sore in pain,
 And heavy with his armor,
 And spent with changing blows;
 And oft they thought him sinking,
 But still again he rose.

Never, I ween, did swimmer,
 In such an evil case,
 Struggle through such a raging flood
 Safe to the landing-place,
 But his limbs were borne up bravely
 By the brave heart within,
 And our good father Tiber
 Bore bravely up his chin

63

"Curse on him!" quoth false Sextus;
 "Will not the villain drown?
 But for this stay, ere close of day
 We should have sacked the town!"
 "Heaven help him!" quoth Lars Porsena,
 "And bring him safe to shore;
 For such a gallant feat of arms
 Was never seen before "

64

And now he feels the bottom;
 Now on dry earth he stands;
 Now round him throng the Fathers
 To press his gory hands,
 And now, with shouts and clapping,
 And noise of weeping loud,
 He enters through the River-Gate,
 Borne by the joyous crowd.

65

They gave him of the corn-land,
 That was of public right,
 As much as two strong oxen
 Could plow from morn till night;
 And they made a molten image,
 And set it up on high,

And there it stands unto this day
 To witness if I lie.

66

It stands in the Comitium,
 Plain for all folk to see,
 Horatius in his harness,
 Halting upon one knee;
 And underneath is written,
 In letters all of gold,
 How valiantly he kept the bridge
 In the brave days of old.

And still his name sounds stirring
 Unto the men of Rome,
 As the trumpet-blast that cries to them
 To charge the Volscian home,
 And wives still pray to Juno
 For boys with hearts as bold
 As his who kept the bridge so well
 In the brave days of old.

68

And in the nights of winter,
 When the cold north-winds blow,
 And the long howling of the wolves
 Is heard amidst the snow;
 When round the lonely cottage
 Roars loud the tempest's din,
 And the good logs of Algidus
 Roar louder yet within,

69

When the oldest cask is opened,
 And the largest lamp is lit;
 When the chestnuts glow in the embers,
 And the kid turns on the spit,
 When young and old in circle
 Around the firebrands close;
 When the girls are weaving baskets,
 And the lads are shaping bows,

When the goodman mends his armor,
 And trims his helmet's plume;
 When the goodwife's shuttle merrily
 Goes flashing through the loom —
 With weeping and with laughter
 Still is the story told,
 How well Horatius kept the bridge
 In the brave days of old.

EPITAPH ON A JACOBITE

To my true king I offered free from stain Courage and faith vain faith, and courage
 vain

For him, I threw lands, honors, wealth, away,
 And one dear hope, that was more prized than they.

For him I languished in a foreign clime, 5
 Gray-haired with sorrow in my manhood's
 prime;

Heard on Lavernia Scargill's whispering tree,
 And pined by Arno for my lovelier Tees;
 Beheld each night my home in fevered sleep,
 Each morning started from the dream to weep; 10

Till God, who saw me tried too sorely, gave
 The resting-place I asked, an early grave
 O thou, whom chance leads to this nameless
 stone,

From that proud country which was once
 mine own,

By those white cliffs I never more must see,
 By that dear language which I spake like
 thee, 16

Forget all feuds, and shed one English tear
 O'er English dust. A broken heart lies here
 (1845)

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN (1801-1890)

THE SIGN OF THE CROSS

Whene'er across this sinful flesh of mine
 I draw the Holy Sign,
 All good thoughts stir within me, and renew
 Their slumbering strength divine,
 Till there springs up a courage high and true
 To suffer and to do. 6

And who shall say, but hateful spirits around,
 For their brief hour unbound,
 Shudder to see, and wail their overthrow?
 While on far heathen ground 10
 Some lonely Saint hails the fresh odor, though
 Its source he cannot know (1832, 1836)

ENGLAND

Tyre of the West, and glorying in the name
 More than in Faith's pure fame¹

Epitaph on a Jacobite The Jacobites were partisans of King James II of England when he was superseded by William III in 1688. They were supporters also of James's descendants. Some of the Jacobites followed James into exile in France, and others went to Italy.

7 Lavernia, La Vernia (sometimes written Alvernia), a mountain east of Florence. Scargill, a parish in Yorkshire, England. 8 Arno, a river in Italy. Tees, a river in England, between York and Durham.

England 1 Tyre, a famous city of ancient Phœnicia on the Mediterranean coast. It was noted for its worldliness and commercial prosperity. A prophecy of its destruction is recorded in Ezekiel, 26-28, it was destroyed by Malik al Ashraf, ruler of Egypt and Syria, in 1291.

Oh, trust not crafty fort nor rock renowned Earned upon hostile ground, Wielding Trade's master-keys, at thy proud will 5
 To lock or loose its waters, England! trust not still.

Dread thine own power! Since haughty Babel's prime,
 High towers have been man's crime.
 Since her hoar age, when the huge moat lay
 bare,
 Strongholds have been man's snare 10
 Thy nest is in the crags, ah, refuge frail!
 Mad counsel in its hour, or traitors, will prevail.

He who scanned Sodom for His righteous men
 Still spares thee for thy ten,
 But, should vain tongues the Bride of Heaven defy, 15
 He will not pass thee by,
 For, as earth's kings welcome their spotless
 guest,
 So gives He them by turn, to suffer or be blest (1832, 1836)

SENSITIVENESS

Time was, I shrank from what was right
 From fear of what was wrong,
 I would not brave the sacred fight,
 Because the foe was strong.

But now I cast that finer sense 5
 And sorer shame aside;
 Such dread of sin was indolence,
 Such aim at Heaven was pride.

So, when my Savior calls, I rise 10
 And calmly do my best,
 Leaving to Him, with silent eyes
 Of hope and fear, the rest

I step, I mount where He has led,
 Men count my haltings o'er —
 I know them, yet, though self I dread, 15
 I love His precept more (1833, 1836)

3-4 fort ground, a reference to the Rock of Gibraltar, a British naval base and fortification on the coast of Spain at the entrance to the Mediterranean. It was taken from the Spanish in 1704. 7 Babel, a reference to the confusion of tongues at the city and tower of Babel, in the land of Shinar, as related in Genesis, 11 1-9. Because the descendants of Noah attempted to build a tower that would reach to heaven, Jehovah, to prevent its completion, "confounded their language" so that they could not understand one another. 13-14 Sodom . . . ten Sodom was a city in Palestine destroyed because of its wickedness. The Lord had promised Abraham that the city would be saved if ten righteous men could be found in it (Genesis, 18 17-33, 19 1-25).

THE PILLAR OF THE CLOUD

Lead, Kindly Light, amid the encircling
gloom,
Lead Thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home —
Lead Thou me on!
Keep Thou my feet, I do not ask to see 5
The distant scene — one step enough for me

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou Shouldst lead me on.
I loved to choose and see my path, but now
Lead Thou me on! 10
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will; remember not past years
So long Thy power hath blessed me, sure it still
Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone, 16
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile
(1833; 1836)

From THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

Soul

Take me away, and in the lowest deep
There let me be,
And there in hope the lone night-watches
keep,
Told out for me.
There, motionless and happy in my pain, 5
Lone, not forlorn —
There will I sing my sad perpetual strain,
Until the morn.

There will I sing, and soothe my stricken breast,
Which ne'er can cease 10
To throb and pine, and languish, till possess
Of its Sole Peace.
There will I sing my absent Lord and Love —
Take me away,
That sooner I may rise, and go above, 15
And see Him in the truth of everlasting day

Angel

Now let the golden prison ope its gates,
Making sweet music, as each fold revolves

The Pillar of the Cloud This poem was written on shipboard when Newman was returning from Italy. The title refers to the incident of Moses leading the children of Israel out of Egypt—"And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way, and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light" (Exodus, 13 21).

The Dream of Gerontius This is a deeply religious poem that records the thoughts and emotions of Gerontius, an old man, as he lies dying. His soul leaving the body is borne by the Guardian Angel to Purgatory.

Upon its ready hinge. And ye great powers,
Angels of Purgatory, receive from me 20
My charge, a precious soul, until the day,
When, from all bond and forfeiture released,
I shall reclaim it for the courts of light.

Softly and gently, dearly-ransomed soul,
In my most loving arms I now enfold thee,
And, o'er the penal waters, as they roll, 26
I poise thee, and I lower thee, and hold
thee.

And carefully I dip thee in the lake,
And thou, without a sob or a resistance,
Dost through the flood thy rapid passage
take, 30
Sinking deep, deeper into the dim distance

Angels, to whom the willing task is given,
Shall tend, and nurse, and lull thee, as thou liest;
And Masses on the earth, and prayers in
heaven,
Shall aid thee at the Throne of the Most
Highest 35

Farewell, but not forever! brother dear,
Be brave and patient on thy bed of sorrow,
Swiftly shall pass thy night of trial here,
And I will come and wake thee on the morrow (1865; 1865)

THE SHANDON BELLS

With deep affection
And recollection
I often think of Those Shandon bells,
Whose sounds so wild would, 5
In the days of childhood,
Fling round my cradle
Their magic spells.
On this I ponder
Where'er I wander, 10
And thus grow fonder,
Sweet Cork, of thee,
With thy bells of Shandon,
That sound so grand on
The pleasant waters 15
Of the River Lee

The Shandon Bells The Shandon bells are in the Church of St Anne Shandon, in the city of Cork, Ireland, near the River Lee. The bells are justly famous

I've heard bells chiming
 Full many a clime in,
 Tolling sublime in Cathedral shrine, 20
 While at a glibe rate
 Brass tongues would vibrate —
 But all their music
 Spoke naught like thine;
 For memory, dwelling 25
 On each proud swelling
 Of the belfry, knelling
 Its bold notes free,
 Made the bells of Shandon
 Sound far more grand on 30
 The pleasant waters
 Of the River Lee

I've heard bells tolling
 Old Adrian's Mole in,
 Their thunder rolling 35
 From the Vatican,
 And cymbals glorious Swinging uproarious
 In the gorgeous turrets
 Of Notre Dame, 40
 But thy sounds were sweeter
 Than the dome of Peter Flings o'er the Tiber,
 Pealing solemnly
 Oh! the bells of Shandon 45
 Sound far more grand on
 The pleasant waters
 Of the River Lee

There's a bell in Moscow,
 While on tower and kiosk, oh! 50
 In Saint Sophia
 The Turkman gets,
 And loud in air
 Calls men to prayer,
 From the tapering summit 55
 Of tall minarets.
 Such empty phantom
 I freely grant them,
 But there's an anthem 60
 More dear to me
 'Tis the bells of Shandon,
 That sound so grand on
 The pleasant waters
 Of the River Lee (1834)

JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN (1808-1849)

DARK ROSALEEN

O my Dark Rosaleen,
 Do not sigh, do not weep!
 The priests are on the ocean green,
 They march along the deep. 5
 There's wine from the royal Pope
 Upon the ocean green,
 And Spanish ale shall give you hope,
 My Dark Rosaleen!
 My own Rosaleen! 10
 Shall glad your heart, shall give you hope,
 Shall give you health, and help, and hope,
 My Dark Rosaleen!

Over hills and through dales
 Have I roamed for your sake;
 All yesterday I sailed with sails 15
 On river and on lake.
 The Erne, at its highest flood,
 I dashed across unseen,
 For there was lightning in my blood,
 My Dark Rosaleen! 20
 My own Rosaleen!
 Oh! there was lightning in my blood,
 Red lightning lightened through my blood,
 My Dark Rosaleen! 25

All day long, in unrest, 25
 To and fro do I move,
 The very soul within my breast
 Is wasted for you, Love!
 The heart in my bosom faints 30
 To think of you, my Queen,
 My life of life, my saint of saints,
 My Dark Rosaleen!
 My own Rosaleen!
 To hear your sweet and sad complaints, 35
 My life, my love, my saint of saints,
 My Dark Rosaleen!

Woe and pain, pain and woe,
 Are my lot, night and noon,
 To see your bright face clouded so,
 Like to a mournful moon. 40
 But yet will I rear your throne
 Again in golden sheen,
 'Tis you shall reign, shall reign alone,
 My Dark Rosaleen!
 My own Rosaleen! 45
 'Tis you shall have the golden throne,
 'Tis you shall reign, and reign alone,
 My Dark Rosaleen!

17 The Erne, a river and two celebrated lakes in northern Ireland

21 glibe, ready, brisk, a variant of glib, but pronounced with long i. 34 Adrian's Mole, the tomb of the Roman Emperor Hadrian (117-138)—the Castle St. Angelo—in Rome. It is connected by a corridor with the Vatican 40 Notre Dame, the famous cathedral of Paris. 42 dome of Peter, the great dome of St. Peter's Cathedral in Rome, on the River Tiber. 49 bell in Moscow, the Tsar-Kolokol, or "Czar of Bells", it is twenty feet in diameter and weighs 190 tons. 50 kiosk, a Turkish pavilion, often supported by pillars. 51. Saint Sophia, a famous mosque in Constantinople.

Over dews, over sands,
 Will I fly for your weal; 50
 Your holy, delicate white hands
 Shall girdle me with steel.
 At home in your emerald bowers,
 From morning's dawn till e'en,
 You'll pray for me, my flower of flowers, 55
 My Dark Rosaleen!
 My fond Rosaleen!
 You'll think of me through daylight's hours,
 My virgin flower, my flower of flowers,
 My Dark Rosaleen! 60

I could scale the blue air,
 I could plow the high hills,
 Oh, I could kneel all night in prayer,
 To heal your many ills!
 And one beamy smile from you 65
 Would float like light between
 My toils and me, my own, my true,
 My Dark Rosaleen!
 My fond Rosaleen!
 Would give me life and soul anew, 70
 A second life, a soul anew,
 My Dark Rosaleen!

Oh! the Erne shall run red
 With redundancy of blood,
 The earth shall rock beneath our tread, 75
 And flames warp hill and wood,
 And gun-peal and slogan cry
 Wake many a glen serene,
 Ere you shall fade, ere you shall die,
 My Dark Rosaleen! 80
 My own Rosaleen!
 The Judgment Hour must first be nigh,
 Ere you can fade, ere you can die,
 My Dark Rosaleen! (1846)

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON (1809-1892)

LILIAN

Airy, fairy Lilian,
 Flitting, fairy Lilian,
 When I ask her if she love me,
 Claps her tiny hands above me,
 Laughing all she can, 5
 She'll not tell me if she love me,
 Cruel little Lilian.

When my passion seeks Pleasance in love-sighs
 She, looking through and through me 10
 Thoroughly to undo me,
 Smiling, never speaks:

So innocent-arch, so cunning-simple,
 From beneath her gathered wimple
 Glancing with black-beaded eyes, 15
 Till the lightning laughters dimple
 The baby-roses in her cheeks;
 Then away she flies.

3

Prythee weep, May Lilian!
 Gayety without eclipse 20
 Wearieth me, May Lilian.
 Through my very heart it thrilleth
 When from crimson-threaded lips
 Silver-treble laughter trilleth:
 Prythee weep, May Lilian.

4

Praying all I can,
 If prayers will not hush thee,
 Airy Lilian,
 Like a rose-leaf I will crush thee, (1830)
 Fairy Lilian.

CLARIBEL

A MELODY

Where Claribel low-lieth
 The breezes pause and die,
 Letting the rose-leaves fall;
 But the solemn oak-tree sigheth,
 Thick-leaved, ambrosial, 5
 With an ancient melody
 Of an inward agony,
 Where Claribel low-lieth.

At eve the beetle boometh
 Athwart the thicket lone; 10
 At noon the wild bee hummeth
 About the mossed headstone,
 At midnight the moon cometh,
 And looketh down alone.

Her song the lintwhite swelleth, 15
 The clear-voiced mavis dwelleth,
 The callow throstle lispeth,
 The slumbrous wave outwelleth,
 The babbling runnel crispeth,
 The hollow grot replieth 20
 Where Claribel low-lieth. (1830)

THE KRAKEN

Below the thunders of the upper deep,
 Far, far beneath in the abysmal sea,
 His ancient, dreamless, uninvaded sleep

Claribel 15 lintwhite, linnet 16 mavis, a kind of thrush 17 throstle, a kind of thrush 19 runnel crispeth, brook ripples
The Kraken The Kraken was a fabulous Scandinavian sea-monster.

The Kraken sleepeth: faintest sunlights flee
 About his shadowy sides; above him swell 5
 Huge sponges of millennial growth and height,
 And far away into the sickly light,
 From many a wondrous grot and secret cell
 Unnumbered and enormous polypi
 Winnow with giant arms the slumbering
 green. 10

There hath he lain for ages, and will lie
 Battening upon huge sea-worms in his sleep,
 Until the latter fire shall heat the deep,
 Then once by man and angels to be seen,
 In roaring he shall rise and on the surface die.
 (1830)

MARIANA

With blackest moss the flower-plots
 Were thickly crusted, one and all,
 The rusted nails fell from the knots
 That held the pear to the gable-wall.
 The broken sheds looked sad and strange. 5
 Unlifted was the clinking latch;
 Weeded and worn the ancient thatch
 Upon the lonely moated grange.
 She only said, "My life is dreary,
 He cometh not," she said; 10
 She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
 I would that I were dead!"

Her tears fell with the dews at even;
 Her tears fell ere the dews were dried;
 She could not look on the sweet heaven, 15
 Either at morn or eventide.
 After the fitting of the bats,
 When thickest dark did trance the sky,
 She drew her casement-curtain by,
 And glanced athwart the glooming flats 20
 She only said, "The night is dreary,
 He cometh not," she said;
 She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
 I would that I were dead!"

Upon the middle of the night, 25
 Waking she heard the night-fowl crow;
 The cock sung out an hour ere light;
 From the dark fen the oxen's low
 Came to her; without hope of change,
 In sleep she seemed to walk forlorn, 30
 Till cold winds woke the gray-eyed morn
 About the lonely moated grange.

Mariana Mariana is a lady in Shakespeare's Measure for Measure deserted by her lover. She is described as waiting for him "at the moated grange" (III, i, 277). The scenery of the poem is that of Lincolnshire.

8 moated grange, a large country house surrounded by a moat, or ditch. Tennyson states that no particular house is meant. 18 trance, traverse

She only said, "The day is dreary,
 He cometh not," she said,
 She said, "I am aweary, aweary, 35
 I would that I were dead!"

About a stone-cast from the wall
 A sluice with blackened waters slept,
 And o'er it many, round and small,
 The clustered marish-mosses crept. 40
 Hard by a poplar shook alway,
 All silver-green with gnarled bark;
 For leagues no other tree did mark
 The level waste, the rounding gray.
 She only said, "My life is dreary, 45
 He cometh not," she said;
 She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
 I would that I were dead!"

And ever when the moon was low,
 And the shrill winds were up and away, 50
 In the white curtain, to and fro,
 She saw the gusty shadow sway.
 But when the moon was very low,
 And wild winds bound within their cell,
 The shadow of the poplar fell 55
 Upon her bed, across her brow
 She only said, "The night is dreary,
 He cometh not," she said,
 She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
 I would that I were dead!" 60

All day within the dreamy house,
 The doors upon their hinges creaked;
 The blue fly sung in the pane; the mouse
 Behind the moldering wainscot shrieked, 65
 Or from the crevice peered about.
 Old faces glimmered through the doors,
 Old footsteps trod the upper floors,
 Old voices called her from without.
 She only said, "My life is dreary,
 He cometh not," she said; 70
 She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
 I would that I were dead!"

The sparrow's chirrup on the roof,
 The slow clock ticking, and the sound
 Which to the wooing wind aloof 75
 The poplar made, did all confound
 Her sense; but most she loathed the hour
 When the thick-moted sunbeam lay
 Athwart the chambers, and the day
 Was sloping toward his western bower 80
 Then said she, "I am very dreary,
 He will not come," she said,
 She wept, "I am aweary, aweary,
 O God, that I were dead!" (1830)

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE ARABIAN NIGHTS

When the breeze of a joyful dawn blew free
In the silken sail of infancy,
The tide of time flowed back with me,
The forward-flowing tide of time,
And many a sheeny summer-morn, 5
Adown the Tigris I was borne,
By Bagdat's shrines of fretted gold,
High-walled gardens green and old;
True Mussulman was I and sworn,
For it was in the golden prime 10
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Anight my shallop, rustling through
The low and blooméd foliage, drove
The fragrant, glistening deeps, and clove
The citron-shadows in the blue; 15
By garden porches on the brim,
The costly doors flung open wide,
Gold glittering through lamplight dim,
And brodered sofas on each side.
In sooth it was a goodly time, 20
For it was in the golden prime
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Often, where clear-stemmed platans guard
The outlet, did I turn away
The boat-head down a broad canal 25
From the main river sluiced, where all
The sloping of the moonlit sward
Was damask-work, and deep inlay
Of braided blooms unmown, which crept
Adown to where the water slept. 30
A goodly place, a goodly time,
For it was in the golden prime
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

A motion from the river won
Ridged the smooth level, bearing on 35
My shallop through the star-strown calm,
Until another night in night
I entered, from the clearer light,
Embowered vaults of pillared palm,
Imprisoning sweets, which, as they clomb 40
Heavenward, were stayed beneath the dome
Of hollow boughs. A goodly time,
For it was in the golden prime
Of good Haroun Alraschid

Still onward; and the clear canal 45
Is rounded to as clear a lake.

Recollections of the Arabian Nights This poem is based upon descriptive portions of stories found in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments. The chief character in this famous collection is Harun al Rashid, the most renowned of the Bagdad caliphs. Under him, Bagdad, located on the Tigris River, in Mesopotamia, became famous for its poets and scholars and for its many beautiful mosques. He ruled 786-809
23 platans, plane trees

From the green rivage many a fall
Of diamond rillets musical,
Through little crystal arches low
Down from the central fountain's flow 50
Fallen silver-chiming, seemed to shake
The sparkling flints beneath the prow.
A goodly place, a goodly time,
For it was in the golden prime

Above through many a bowery turn
A walk with vari-colored shells
Wandered engrained On either side
All round about the fragrant marge
From fluted vase, and brazen urn 60
In order, eastern flowers large,
Some dropping low their crimson bells
Half-closed, and others studded wide
With disks and tiars, fed the time
With odor in the golden prime 65
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Far off, and where the lemon grove
In closest coverture upsprung,
The living airs of middle night
Died round the bulbul as he sung; 70
Not he, but something which possessed
The darkness of the world, delight,
Life, anguish, death, immortal love,
Ceasing not, mingled, unrepressed,
Apart from place, withholding time, 75
But flattering the golden prime
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Black the garden-bowers and grots
Slumbered, the solemn palms were ranged Above, unwooded of summer wind, 80
A sudden splendor from behind
Flushed all the leaves with rich gold-green,
And, flowing rapidly between
Their interspaces, counterchanged
The level lake with diamond-plots 85
Of dark and bright. A lovely time,
For it was in the golden prime
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Dark-blue the deep sphere overhead,
Distinct with vivid stars inlaid, 90
Grew darker from that under-flame;
So, leaping lightly from the boat,
With silver anchor left afloat,
In marvel whence that glory came Upon me, as in sleep I sank 95
In cool soft turf upon the bank,
Entrancéd with that place and time,
So worthy of the golden prime
Of good Haroun Alraschid.

47 rivage, river bank 58 engrained The walk was unwrought or spotted with shells 64 tiars, crowns 70 bulbul, the Persian nightingale 84 counterchanged, variegated, checkered

Thence through the garden I was drawn —
 A realm of pleasance, many a mound, 101
 And many a shadow-checked lawn
 Full of the city's stilly sound,
 And deep myrrh-thickets blowing round 105
 The stately cedar, tamarisks,
 Thick rosaries of scented thorn,
 Tall orient shrubs, and obelisks
 Graven with emblems of the time,
 In honor of the golden prime
 Of good Haroun Alraschid. 110

With dazed vision unawares
 From the long alley's latticed shade
 Emerged, I came upon the great Pavilion of the Caliphat.
 Right to the carven cedarn doors, 115
 Flung inward over spangled floors,
 Broad-based flights of marble stairs
 Ran up with golden balustrade,
 After the fashion of the time,
 And humor of the golden prime 120
 Of good Haroun Alraschid.

The fourscore windows all alight
 As with the quintessence of flame,
 A million tapers flaring bright
 From twisted silvers looked to shame 125
 The hollow-vaulted dark, and streamed
 Upon the moonéd domes aloof
 In inmost Bagdat, till there seemed
 Hundreds of crescents on the roof
 Of night new-risen, that marvelous time
 To celebrate the golden prime 131
 Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Then stole I up, and trancedly
 Gazed on the Persian girl alone,
 Serene with argent-lidded eyes 135
 Amorous, and lashes like to rays
 Of darkness, and a brow of pearl
 Tressed with redolent ebony,
 In many a dark delicious curl,
 Flowing beneath her rose-hued zone— 140
 The sweetest lady of the time,
 Well worthy of the golden prime
 Of good Haroun Alraschid.

Six columns, three on either side,
 Pure silver, underpropped a rich 145
 Throne of the massive ore, from which Down-drooped, in many a floating fold,
 Engarlanded and diapered

101 pleasance, pleasure 104 blowing, blooming 105 tamarisk, a kind of shrub bearing masses of pink flowers 106 Thick . . . thorn The thorn shrubs formed circles 107 orient, oriental 127 moonéd, bearing the crescent, or Turkish emblem 135 argent, silvery 140 zone, hair-ribbon 148 Engarlanded and diapered, ornamented with inwrought flowers and symmetrical figures

With inwrought flowers, a cloth of gold.
 Thereon, his deep eye laughter-stirred 150
 With merriment of kingly pride,
 Sole star of all that place and time,
 I saw him — in his golden prime,
 THE GOOD HAROUN ALRASCHID. (1830)

SONG

I

A spirit haunts the year's last hours
 Dwelling amid these yellowing bowers
 To himself he talks;
 For at eventide, listening earnestly,
 At his work you may hear him sob and sigh 5
 In the walks;
 Earthward he boweth the heavy stalks
 Of the moldering flowers
 Heavily hangs the broad sunflower
 Over its grave i' the earth so chilly, 10
 Heavily hangs the hollyhock,
 Heavily hangs the tiger-lily

2

The air is damp, and hushed, and close,
 As a sick man's room when he taketh repose
 An hour before death; 15
 My very heart faints and my whole soul
 grieves
 At the moist rich smell of the rotting leaves,
 And the breath
 Of the fading edges of box beneath,
 And the year's last rose. 20
 Heavily hangs the broad sunflower
 Over its grave i' the earth so chilly;
 Heavily hangs the hollyhock,
 Heavily hangs the tiger-lily. (1830)

THE POET

The poet in a golden clime was born,
 With golden stars above,
 Dowered with the hate of hate, the scorn of scorn,
 The love of love.

He saw through life and death, through good and ill, 5
 He saw through his own soul
 The marvel of the everlasting will,
 An open scroll,

Song 19 box, a kind of evergreen shrub
The Poet See Critical Notes

1-4 Tennyson said that when he wrote these lines he meant that the poet is moved by a hatred for the quality of hate, etc., but later he thought it a finer interpretation to regard "hate of hate," etc., as meaning "the quintessence of hate," etc. Hallam Tennyson says, "My father denounced hate and scorn as if they were 'the sins of the Holy Ghost'"

Before him lay; with echoing feet he threaded
 The secretest walks of fame: 10
 The viewless arrows of his thoughts were headed
 And winged with flame,

Like Indian reeds blown from his silver
 tongue,
 And of so fierce a flight,
 From Calpe unto Caucasus they sung, 15
 Filling with light

And vagrant melodies the winds which bore
 Them earthward till they lit,
 Then, like the arrow-seeds of the field flower,
 The fruitful wit 20

Cleaving took root, and springing forth anew
 Where'er they fell, behold,
 Like to the mother plant in semblance, grew
 A flower all gold,

And bravely furnished all abroad to fling 25
 The winged shafts of truth,
 To throng with stately blooms the breathing
 spring
 Of Hope and Youth.

So many minds did gird their orbs with beams,
 Though one did fling the fire; 30
 Heaven flowed upon the soul in many dreams
 Of high desire.

Thus truth was multiplied on truth, the world
 Like one great garden showed,
 And through the wreaths of floating dark upcurled, 35
 Rare sunrise flowed.

And Freedom reared in that august sunrise
 Her beautiful bold brow,
 When rites and forms before his burning eyes
 Melted like snow 40

There was no blood upon her maiden robes
 Sunned by those orient skies;
 But round about the circles of the globes
 Of her keen eyes

And in her raiment's hem was traced in flame 45
 WISDOM, a name to shake

All evil dreams of power — a sacred name
 And when she spake,

Her words did gather thunder as they ran,
 And as the lightning to the thunder 50
 Which follows it, riving the spirit of man,
 Making earth wonder,

So was their meaning to her words. No
 sword
 Of wrath her right arm whirled,
 But one poor poet's scroll, and with his
 word 55
 She shook the world. (1830)

TO J. M. K.

My hope and heart is with thee—thou wilt be
 A latter Luther, and a soldier-priest
 To scare church-harpies from the master's feast;

Our dusted velvets have much need of thee:
 Thou art no Sabbath-drawler of old saws, 5
 Distilled from some worm-cankered homily,
 But spurred at heart with fieriest energy
 To embattail and to wall about thy cause
 With iron-worded proof, hating to hark
 The humming of the drowsy pulpit-drone 10
 Half God's good Sabbath, while the worn-out clerk

Brow-beats his desk below. Thou from a throne

Mounted in heaven wilt shoot into the dark Arrows of lightnings. I will stand and mark

BUONAPARTE

He thought to quell the stubborn hearts of oak,

Madman! — to chain with chains, and bind with bands

That island queen who sways the floods and lands

From Ind to Ind, but in fair daylight woke,
 When from her wooden walls — lit by sure
 hands — 5

To J. M. K. This sonnet is addressed to John Mitchell Kemble (1807-57), who was intended for the church but who devoted his life to the study of Anglo-Saxon history and literature. He was at Cambridge with Tennyson.

Buonaparte This poem refers to four signal victories of the British in the Napoleonic Wars: (1) the Battle of the Nile, in Egypt (Coptic sands, line 8), in 1798, (2) the defeat of the Danish fleet in the harbor of Copenhagen in 1801, (3) Cape Trafalgar, Spain, in 1805, and (4) Waterloo in 1815. Denmark and Norway were allies of Napoleon. Elsinore (line 9) is a seaport on the Danish island of Zealand, at the entrance to the Baltic Sea.

3 island queen, England. 4 From Ind to Ind, from East India to West India. 5 wooden walls, battleships.

With thunders, and with lightnings, and with smoke —
 Peal after peal, the British battle broke,
 Lulling the brine against the Coptic sands
 We taught him lowlier moods, when Elsi-nore
 Heard the war moan along the distant sea, 10
 Rocking with shattered spars, with sudden fires
 Flamed over; at Trafalgar yet once more
 We taught him; late he learned humility
 Perforce, like those whom Gideon schooled with briers.

THE LADY OF SHALOTT

PART I

On either side the river lie
 Long fields of barley and of rye,
 That clothe the wold and meet the sky,
 And through the field the road runs by
 To many-towered Camelot, 5
 And up and down the people go,
 Gazing where the lilies blow
 Round an island there below,
 The island of Shalott
 Willows whiten, aspens quiver, 10
 Little breezes dusk and shiver
 Through the wave that runs forever
 By the island in the river
 Flowing down to Camelot.
 Four gray walls, and four gray towers, 15
 Overlook a space of flowers,
 And the silent isle embowers
 The Lady of Shalott.
 By the margin, willow-veiled,
 Slide the heavy barges trailed 20
 By slow horses; and unhailed
 The shallop flitteth silken-sailed
 Skimming down to Camelot.
 But who hath seen her wave her hand?
 Or at the casement seen her stand? 25
 Or is she known in all the land,
 The Lady of Shalott?

14 Gideon . briers When Gideon was pursuing the Midianites he asked the men of the city of Succoth to give bread to his army. They refused, and when Gideon returned victorious, "he took the elders of the city, and thorns of the wilderness and briers, and with them he taught the men of Succoth" (Judges, 8 16)

5 Camelot, the city of King Arthur's court, in Cornwall
 7 blow, bloom 10 Willows whiten The wind turns up the white underside of the leaves

Only reapers, reaping early
 In among the bearded barley,
 Hear a song that echoes cheerly 30
 From the river winding clearly,
 Down to towered Camelot;
 And by the moon the reaper weary,
 Piling sheaves in uplands airy,
 Listening, whispers, "'Tis the fairy 35
 Lady of Shalott"

PART 2

There she weaves by night and day
 A magic web with colors gay.
 She has heard a whisper say,
 A curse is on her if she stay 40
 To look down to Camelot.
 She knows not what the curse may be,
 And so she weaveth steadily,
 And little other care hath she,
 The Lady of Shalott. 45

And moving through a mirror clear
 That hangs before her all the year,
 Shadows of the world appear.
 There she sees the highway near Winding down to Camelot; 50
 There the river eddy whirls,
 And there the surly village-churls,
 And the red cloaks of market girls,
 Pass onward from Shalott.

Sometimes a troop of damsels glad, 55
 An abbot on an ambling pad,
 Sometimes a curly shepherd-lad,
 Or long-haired page in crimson clad,
 Goes by to towered Camelot;
 And sometimes through the mirror blue 60
 The knights come riding two and two;
 She hath no loyal knight and true,
 The Lady of Shalott.

But in her web she still delights
 To weave the mirror's magic sights, 65
 For often through the silent nights
 A funeral, with plumes and lights
 And music, went to Camelot,
 Or when the moon was overhead,
 Came two young lovers lately wed; 70
 "I am half sick of shadows," said
 The Lady of Shalott.

PART 3

A bow-shot from her bower-eaves,
 He rode between the barley-sheaves;
 The sun came dazzling through the leaves, 75

And flamed upon the brazen greaves
Of bold Sir Lancelot.
A red-cross knight forever kneeled
To a lady in his shield,
That sparkled on the yellow field,
Beside remote Shalott

80

The gemmy bridle glittered free,
Like to some branch of stars we see
Hung in the golden Galaxy
The bridle bells rang merrily
As he rode down to Camelot;
And from his blazoned baldric slung
A mighty silver bugle hung,
And as he rode his armor rung,
Beside remote Shalott.

90

All in the blue unclouded weather
Thick-jewelled shone the saddle-leather,
The helmet and the helmet-feather
Burned like one burning flame together
As he rode down to Camelot;
As often through the purple night,
Below the starry clusters bright,
Some bearded meteor, trailing light,
Moves over still Shalott.

95

His broad clear brow in sunlight glowed;
On burnished hooves his war-horse trode;
From underneath his helmet flowed
His coal-black curls as on he rode,
As he rode down to Camelot.
From the bank and from the river
He flashed into the crystal mirror,
"Tirra lirra," by the river
Sang Sir Lancelot.

100

She left the web, she left the loom,
She made three paces through the room,
She saw the water-lily bloom,
She saw the helmet and the plume,
She looked down to Camelot.
Out flew the web and floated wide;
The mirror cracked from side to side;
"The curse is come upon me," cried
The Lady of Shalott.

110

115

PART 4

In the stormy east-wind straining,
The pale yellow woods were waning,
The broad stream in his banks complaining,
Heavily the low sky raining

121

Over towered Camelot,
Down she came and found a boat
Beneath a willow left afloat,
And round about the prow she wrote
The Lady of Shalott.

125

And down the river's dim expanse
Like some bold seer in a trance,
Seeing all his own mischance —
With a glassy countenance
Did she look to Camelot
And at the closing of the day
She loosed the chain, and down she lay,
The broad stream bore her far away,
The Lady of Shalott

130

135

Lying, robed in snowy white
That loosely flew to left and right —
The leaves upon her falling light —
Through the noises of the night
She floated down to Camelot,
And as the boat-head wound along
The willowy hills and fields among,
They heard her singing her last song,
The Lady of Shalott.

140

Heard a carol, mournful, holy,
Chanted loudly, chanted lowly,
Till her blood was frozen slowly,
And her eyes were darkened wholly,
Turned to towered Camelot.
For ere she reached upon the tide
The first house by the water-side,
Singing in her song she died,
The Lady of Shalott.

145

150

Under tower and balcony,
By garden-wall and gallery,
A gleaming shape she floated by,
Dead-pale between the houses high,
Silent into Camelot.
Out upon the wharfs they came,
Knight and burgher, lord and dame,
And round the prow they read her name,
The Lady of Shalott.

160

Who is this? and what is here?
And in the lighted palace near
Died the sound of royal cheer;
And they crossed themselves for fear,
All the knights at Camelot
But Lancelot mused a little space;
He said, "She has a lovely face;
God in his mercy lend her grace,
The Lady of Shalott."

MARIANA IN THE SOUTH

With one black shadow at its feet,
 The house through all the level shines,
 Close-latticed to the brooding heat,
 And silent in its dusty vines;
 A faint-blue ridge upon the right, 5
 An empty river-bed before,
 And shallows on a distant shore,
 In glaring sand and inlets bright.
 But "Ave Mary," made she moan,
 And "Ave Mary," night and morn, 10
 And "Ah," she sang, "to be all alone,
 To live forgotten, and love forlorn"

She, as her carol sadder grew,
 From brow and bosom slowly down
 Through rosy taper fingers drew 15
 Her streaming curls of deepest brown
 To left and right, and made appear
 Still-lighted in a secret shrine
 Her melancholy eyes divine,
 The home of woe without a tear. 20
 And "Ave Mary," was her moan,
 "Madonna, sad is night and morn,"
 And "Ah," she sang, "to be all alone,
 To live forgotten, and love forlorn"

Till all the crimson changed, and passed 25
 Into deep orange o'er the sea,
 Low on her knees herself she cast,
 Before Our Lady murmured she,
 Complaining, "Mother, give me grace
 To help me of my weary load." 30
 And on the liquid mirror glowed
 The clear perfection of her face
 "Is this the form," she made her moan,
 "That won his praises night and morn?"
 And "Ah," she said, "but I wake alone,
 I sleep forgotten, I wake forlorn." 36

Nor bird would sing, nor lamb would bleat,
 Nor any cloud would cross the vault,
 But day increased from heat to heat,
 On stony drought and steaming salt; 40
 Till now at noon she slept again,
 And seemed knee-deep in mountain grass,
 And heard her native breezes pass,
 And runlets babbling down the glen.
 She breathed in sleep a lower moan, 45
 And murmuring, as at night and morn,
 She thought, "My spirit is here alone,
 Walks forgotten, and is forlorn."

Dreaming, she knew it was a dream;
 She felt he was and was not there. 50
 She woke; the babble of the stream
 Fell, and, without, the steady glare

 9 Ave Mary, in the Bible, the salutation of Gabriel and of Elizabeth to the Virgin Mary; now a prayer to her as Mother of God.

Shrank one sick willow sere and small
 The river-bed was dusty-white;
 And all the furnace of the light 55
 Struck up against the blinding wall.
 She whispered, with a stifled moan
 More inward than at night or morn,
 "Sweet Mother, let me not here alone
 Live forgotten and die forlorn." 60

And, rising, from her bosom drew
 Old letters, breathing of her worth,
 For "Love," they said, "must needs be true,
 To what is loveliest upon earth"
 An image seemed to pass the door, 65
 To look at her with slight, and say
 "But now thy beauty flows away,
 So be alone forevermore"
 "O cruel heart," she changed her tone,
 "And cruel love, whose end is scorn, 70
 Is this the end, to be left alone,
 To live forgotten, and die forlorn?"

But sometimes in the falling day
 An image seemed to pass the door,
 To look into her eyes and say, 75
 "But thou shalt be alone no more."
 And flaming downward over all
 From heat to heat the day decreased,
 And slowly rounded to the east
 The one black shadow from the wall. 80
 "The day to night," she made her moan,
 "The day to night, the night to morn,
 And day and night I am left alone
 To live forgotten, and love forlorn"

At eve a dry cicala sung, 85
 There came a sound as of the sea;
 Backward the lattice-blind she flung,
 And leaned upon the balcony.
 There all in spaces rosy-bright
 Large Hesper glittered on her tears, 90
 And deepening through the silent spheres
 Heaven over heaven rose the night
 And weeping then she made her moan,
 "The night comes on that knows not
 morn,
 When I shall cease to be all alone, 95
 To live forgotten, and love forlorn"

ÆNONE

There lies a vale in Ida, lovelier
 Than all the valleys of Ionian hills.
 The swimming vapor slopes athwart the glen,
 Puts forth an arm, and creeps from pine to Hang rich in flowers, and far below them roars

In cataract after cataract to the sea.

The gorges, opening wide apart, reveal

Hither came at noon

Mournful Ænone, wandering forlorn 15
Of Paris, once her playmate on the hills.
Her cheek had lost the rose, and round her neck
Floated her hair or seemed to float in rest
She, leaning on a fragment twined with vine,
Sang to the stillness, till the mountain-shade
Sloped downward to her seat from the upper

My heart may wander from its deeper woe

hills, 245

Like footsteps upon wool. I dimly see
My far-off doubtful purpose, as a mother
Conjectures of the features of her child
Ere it is born Her child! — a shudder comes Across me; never child be born of me, 250
Unblest, to vex me with his father's eyes!

"O mother, hear me yet before I die
Hear me, O earth. I will not die alone,
Lest their shrill happy laughter come to me
Walking the cold and starless road of death
Uncomforted, leaving my ancient love 256
With the Greek woman. I will rise and go Down into Troy, and ere the stars come forth

Talk with the wild Cassandra, for she says
 A fire dances before her, and a sound 260
 Rings ever in her ears of arméd men.
 What this may be I know not, but I know
 That, wheresoe'er I am by night and day,
 All earth and air seem only burning fire."

THE PALACE OF ART

I built my soul a lordly pleasure-house,
 Wherein at ease for aye to dwell
 I said, "O Soul, make merry and carouse,
 Dear soul, for all is well "

A huge crag-platform, smooth as burnished brass, 5
 I chose. The rangéd ramparts bright
 From level meadow-bases of deep grass
 Suddenly scaled the light

Thereon I built it firm Of ledge or shelf
 The rock rose clear, or winding stair. 10
 My soul would live alone unto herself
 In her high palace there.

And "while the world runs round and round,"
 I said,
 "Reign thou apart, a quiet king,
 Still, as, while Saturn whirls, his steadfast shade 15
 Sleeps on his luminous ring "

To which my soul made answer readily
 "Trust me, in bliss I shall abide
 In this great mansion, that is built for me,
 So royal-rich and wide." 20

Four courts I made, East, West and South and North,
 In each a squaréd lawn, wherefrom
 The golden gorge of dragons spouted forth
 A flood of fountain-foam.

And round the cool green courts there ran a row 25
 Of cloisters, branched like mighty woods,
 Echoing all night to that sonorous flow
 Of spouted fountain-floods,

And round the roofs a gilded gallery
 That lent broad verge to distant lands, 30

 16 Sleeps . . . ring As seen through the telescope, the shadow of the planet Saturn, thrown on the luminous ring surrounding the planet, appears to be motionless 30 lent
 . . . lands, gave a wide view of distant lands

Far as the wild swan wings, to where the sky
 Dipped down to sea and sands.

From those four jets four currents in one swell
 Across the mountain streamed below
 In misty folds, that floating as they fell 35
 Lit up a torrent-bow.

And high on every peak a statue seemed
 To hang on tiptoe, tossing up
 A cloud of incense of all odor steamed
 From out a golden cup. 40

So that she thought, "And who shall gaze
 upon
 My palace with unblinded eyes,
 While this great bow will waver in the sun,
 And that sweet incense rise?"

For that sweet incense rose and never failed,
 And, while day sank or mounted higher, 46
 The light aerial gallery, golden-railed,
 Burnt like a fringe of fire.

Likewise the deep-set windows, stained and traced,
 Would seem slow-flaming crimson fires 50
 From shadowed grots of arches interlaced,
 And tipped with frost-like spires

Full of long-sounding corridors it was,
 That over-vaulted grateful gloom,
 Through which the livelong day my soul did
 pass, 55
 Well-pleased, from room to room

Full of great rooms and small the palace stood,
 All various, each a perfect whole
 From living Nature, fit for every mood
 And change of my still soul. 60

For some were hung with arras green and blue,
 Showing a gaudy summer-morn,
 Where with puffed cheek the belted hunter
 blew
 His wreathéd bugle-horn.

One seemed all dark and red — a tract of
 sand, 65
 And someone pacing there alone,
 Who paced forever in a glimmering land,
 Lit with a low large moon.

One showed an iron coast and angry waves
 You seemed to hear them climb and fall 70
 And roar rock-thwarted under bellowing caves,
 Beneath the windy wall

And one, a full-fed river winding slow
 By herds upon an endless plain,
 The ragged rims of thunder brooding low, 75
 With shadow-streaks of rain.

And one, the reapers at their sultry toil
 In front they bound the sheaves. Behind
 Were realms of upland, prodigal in oil,
 And hoary to the wind. 80

And one a foreground black with stones and slags;
 Beyond, a line of heights; and higher
 All barred with long white cloud the scornful crags;
 And highest, snow and fire.

And one, an English home — gray twilight poured 85
 On dewy pastures, dewy trees,
 Softer than sleep — all things in order stored,
 A haunt of ancient Peace

Nor these alone, but every landscape fair,
 As fit for every mood of mind, 90
 Or gay, or grave, or sweet, or stern, was there,
 Not less than truth designed.

Or the maid-mother by a crucifix,
 In tracts of pasture sunny-warm,
 Beneath branch-work of costly sardonix 95
 Sat smiling, babe in arm.

Or in a clear-walled city on the sea,
 Near gilded organ-pipes, her hair
 Wound with white roses, slept Saint Cecily;
 An angel looked at her 100

Or thronging all one porch of Paradise
 A group of Hours bowed to see
 The dying Islamite, with hands and eyes
 That said, We wait for thee.

Or mythic Uther's deeply-wounded son 105
 In some fair space of sloping greens
 Lay, dozing in the vale of Avalon,
 And watched by weeping queens

Or hollowing one hand against his ear,
 To list a footfall, ere he saw 110

The wood-nymph, stayed the Ausonian king to hear
 Of wisdom and of law.

Or over hills with peaky tops engrailed,
 And many a tract of palm and rice,
 The throne of Indian Cama slowly sailed 115
 A summer fanned with spice.

Or sweet Europa's mantle blew unclasp'd,
 From off her shoulder backward borne;
 From one hand drooped a crocus; one hand grasped
 The mild bull's golden horn. 120

Or else flushed Ganymede, his rosy thigh
 Half-buried in the eagle's down,
 Sole as a flying star shot through the sky
 Above the pillared town.

Nor these alone; but every legend fair 125
 Which the supreme Caucasian mind
 Carved out of Nature for itself was there,
 Not less than life designed.

Then in the towers I placed great bells that swung,
 Moved of themselves, with silver sound, 130
 And with choice paintings of wise men I hung
 The royal dais round.

For there was Milton like a seraph strong,
 Beside him Shakespeare bland and mild;
 And there the world-worn Dante grasped his
 song, 135
 And somewhat grimly smiled.

And there the Ionian father of the rest;
 A million wrinkles carved his skin;
 A hundred winters snowed upon his breast,
 From cheek and throat and chin 140

Above, the fair hall-ceiling stately-set
 Many an arch high up did lift,
 And angels rising and descending met
 With interchange of gift.

Below was all mosaic choicely planned 145
 With cycles of the human tale

Of this wide world, the times of every land
So wrought they will not fail

The people here, a beast of burden slow, Toiled onward, pricked with goads and stings, 150

Here played, a tiger, rolling to and fro
The heads and crowns of kings;

Here rose, an athlete, strong to break or bind
All force in bonds that might endure,
And here once more like some sick man declined, 155
And trusted any cure.

But over these she trod, and those great bells
Began to chime She took her throne,
She sat betwixt the shining oriels,
To sing her songs alone. 160

And through the topmost oriels' colored flame
Two godlike faces gazed below.
Plato the wise, and large-browed Verulam,
The first of those who know

And all those names that in their motion were Full-welling fountain-heads of change, 166
Betwixt the slender shafts were blazoned fair
In diverse raiment strange;

Through which the lights, rose, amber, emerald, blue,
Flushed in her temples and her eyes, 170
And from her lips, as morn from Memnon, drew
Rivers of melodies

No nightingale delighteth to prolong
Her low preamble all alone,
More than my soul to hear her echoed song
Throb through the ribbed stone, 176

Singing and murmuring in her feastful mirth,
Joying to feel herself alive,
Lord over Nature, lord of the visible earth,
Lord of the senses five; 180

Communing with herself "All these are mine,
And let the world have peace or wars,
'Tis one to me." She — when young night
divine
Crowned dying day with stars,

Making sweet close of his delicious toils —
Lit light in wreaths and anadems, 186
And pure quintessences of precious oils
In hollowed moons of gems,

To mimic heaven, and clapped her hands and
cried,
"I marvel if my still delight 190
In this great house so royal-rich and wide
Be flattered to the height

"O all things fair to sate my various eyes!
O shapes and hues that please me well!
O silent faces of the Great and Wise, 195
My gods, with whom I dwell!

"O godlike isolation which art mine,
I can but count thee perfect gain,
What time I watch the darkening droves of swine
That range on yonder plain 200

"In filthy sloughs they roll a prurient skin,
They graze and wallow, breed and sleep,
And oft some brainless devil enters in,
And drives them to the deep."

Then of the moral instinct would she prate
And of the rising from the dead, 206
As hers by right of full-accomplished Fate,
And at the last she said

"I take possession of man's mind and deed
I care not what the sects may brawl 210
I sit as God holding no form of creed,
But contemplating all "

Full oft the riddle of the painful earth
Flashed through her as she sat alone,
Yet not the less held she her solemn mirth,
And intellectual throne. 216

And so she throve and prospered, so three
years
She prospered, on the fourth she fell,
Like Herod, when the shout was in his ears,
Struck through with pangs of hell. 220

Lest she should fail and perish utterly,
God, before whom ever lie bare
The abysmal deeps of personality,
Plagued her with sore despair.

And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine, and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea and perished in the waters." 219 Like Herod, etc. After Herod had spoken to the people from the throne, "the people gave a shout, saying, 'It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.' And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory" (Acts, 12:21-23).

When she would think, where'er she turned her sight 225

The airy hand confusion wrought,
Wrote, "Mene, mene," and divided quite
The kingdom of her thought

Deep dread and loathing of her solitude
Fell on her, from which mood was born 230
Scorn of herself; again, from out that mood
Laughter at her self-scorn.

"What! is not this my place of strength," she
said,
"My spacious mansion built for me,
Whereof the strong foundation-stones were laid 235
Since my first memory?"

But in dark corners of her palace stood
Uncertain shapes, and unawares
On white-eyed phantasms weeping tears of blood,
And horrible nightmares, 240

And hollow shades enclosing hearts of flame,
And, with dim fretted foreheads all,
On corpses three-months-old at noon she
came,
That stood against the wall

A spot of dull stagnation, without light 245
Or power of movement, seemed my soul,
Mid onward-sloping motions infinite
Making for one sure goal,

A still salt pool, locked in with bars of sand,
Left on the shore, that hears all night 250
The plunging seas draw backward from the
land
Their moon-led waters white,

A star that with the choral starry dance
Joined not, but stood, and standing saw
The hollow orb of moving Circumstance 255
Rolled round by one fixed law

Back on herself her serpent pride had curled
"No voice," she shrieked in that lone hall,
"No voice breaks through the stillness of this
world;
One deep, deep silence all!" 260

She, moldering with the dull earth's moldering sod,

Inwrapt tenfold in slothful shame,
Lay there exiled from eternal God,
Lost to her place and name;

And death and life she hated equally, 265
And nothing saw, for her despair,
But dreadful time, dreadful eternity,
No comfort anywhere;

Remaining utterly confused with fears,
And ever worse with growing time, 270
And ever unrelieved by dismal tears,
And all alone in crime.

Shut up as in a crumbling tomb, girt round
With blackness as a solid wall,
Far off she seemed to hear the dully sound
Of human footsteps fall: 276

As in strange lands a traveler walking slow,
In doubt and great perplexity,
A little before moonrise hears the low
Moan of an unknown sea; 280

And knows not if it be thunder, or a sound
Of rocks thrown down, or one deep cry
Of great wild beasts, then thinketh, "I have found
A new land, but I die "

She howled aloud, "I am on fire within 285
There comes no murmur of reply.
What is it that will take away my sin,
And save me lest I die?"

So when four years were wholly finished,
She threw her royal robes away 290
"Make me a cottage in the vale," she said,
"Where I may mourn and pray.

"Yet pull not down my palace towers, that are
So lightly, beautifully built,
Perchance I may return with others there 295
When I have purged my guilt "

LADY CLARA VERE DE VERE

Lady Clara Vere de Vere,
Of me you shall not win renown,
You thought to break a country heart
For pastime, ere you went to town.
For pastime, ere you went to town.
At me you smiled, but unbeguiled
I saw the snare, and I retired;
The daughter of a hundred earls,
You are not one to be desired.

Lady Clara Vere de Vere See Critical Notes.

227 Mene, the first word of the mysterious writing on the wall of Belshazzar's palace, meaning "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it" Daniel interpreted the writing (See Daniel, 5 17-31) 242 fretted, wrinkled 253-256 star law The star represents the soul It stood aloof as the universe swept by, but it saw that life in all its seeming confusion is yet subject to a controlling law

Lady Clara Vere de Vere,
 I know you proud to bear your name, 10
 Your pride is yet no mate for mine,
 Too proud to care from whence I came.
 Nor would I break for your sweet sake
 A heart that dotes on truer charms.
 A simple maiden in her flower 15
 Is worth a hundred coats-of-arms.

Lady Clara Vere de Vere,
 Some meeker pupil you must find,
 For, were you queen of all that is,
 I could not stoop to such a mind. 20
 You sought to prove how I could love,
 And my disdain is my reply.
 The lion on your old stone gates
 Is not more cold to you than I.

Lady Clara Vere de Vere, 25
 You put strange memories in my head
 Not thrice your branching limes have blown
 Since I beheld young Laurence dead
 Oh, your sweet eyes, your low replies!
 A great enchantress you may be; 30
 But there was that across his throat
 Which you had hardly cared to see.

Lady Clara Vere de Vere,
 When thus he met his mother's view,
 She had the passions of her kind, 35
 She spake some certain truths of you
 Indeed I heard one bitter word
 That scarce is fit for you to hear,
 Her manners had not that repose
 Which stamps the caste of Vere de Vere 40

Lady Clara Vere de Vere,
 There stands a specter in your hall,
 The guilt of blood is at your door;
 You changed a wholesome heart to gall.
 You held your course without remorse, 45
 To make him trust his modest worth,
 And, last, you fixed a vacant stare,
 And slew him with your noble birth.

Trust me, Clara Vere de Vere,
 From yon blue heavens above us bent 50
 The gardener Adam and his wife
 Smile at the claims of long descent
 Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
 'Tis only noble to be good.
 Kind hearts are more than coronets, 55
 And simple faith than Norman blood.

I know you, Clara Vere de Vere,
 You pine among your halls and towers,
 The languid light of your proud eyes
 Is wearied of the rolling hours 60

In glowing health, with boundless wealth,
 But sickening of a vague disease,
 You know so ill to deal with time,
 You needs must play such pranks as these.

Clara, Clara Vere de Vere, 65
 If time be heavy on your hands,
 Are there no beggars at your gate,
 Nor any poor about your lands?
 Oh, teach the orphan-boy to read,
 Or teach the orphan-girl to sew; 70
 Pray Heaven for a human heart,
 And let the foolish yeoman go.

THE LOTOS-EATERS

"Courage!" he said, and pointed toward the
 land,
 "This mounting wave will roll us shoreward
 soon "

In the afternoon they came unto a land
 In which it seemed always afternoon.
 All round the coast the languid air did swoon,
 Breathing like one that hath a weary dream 6
 Full-faced above the valley stood the moon,
 And, like a downward smoke, the slender
 stream
 Along the cliff to fall and pause and fall did seem

A land of streams! some, like a downward
 smoke, 10
 Slow-dropping veils of thinnest lawn, did go,
 And some through wavering lights and shadows broke,
 Rolling a slumbrous sheet of foam below
 They saw the gleaming river seaward flow
 From the inner land, far off, three mountaintops, 15
 Three silent pinnacles of aged snow,
 Stood sunset-flushed; and, dewed with show-
 ery drops,
 Up-clomb the shadowy pine above the woven cope.

The charmed sunset lingered low adown
 In the red West, through mountain clefts the dale 20
 Was seen far inland, and the yellow down
 Bordered with palm, and many a winding vale
 And meadow, set with slender galingale,
 A land where all things always seemed the
 same!
 And round about the keel with faces pale, 25
 Dark faces pale against that rosy flame,
 The mild-eyed melancholy Lotos-eaters came

The Lotos-Eaters See Critical Notes
 23. galingale, a kind of grasslike herb

Branches they bore of that enchanted stem, Laden with flower and fruit, whereof they gave
 To each, but whoso did receive of them 30
 And taste, to him the gushing of the wave
 Far far away did seem to mourn and rave
 On alien shores; and if his fellow spake,
 His voice was thin, as voices from the grave,
 And deep-asleep he seemed, yet all awake, 35
 And music in his ears his beating heart did make.

They sat them down upon the yellow sand
 Between the sun and moon upon the shore,
 And sweet it was to dream of Fatherland,
 Of child, and wife, and slave; but evermore 40
 Most weary seemed the sea, weary the oar,
 Weary the wandering fields of barren foam
 Then someone said, "We will return no more",
 And all at once they sang, "Our island home
 Is far beyond the wave; we will no longer roam." 45

CHORIC SONG,

I

There is sweet music here that softer falls
 Than petals from blown roses on the grass,
 Or night-dews on still waters between walls
 Of shadowy granite, in a gleaming pass;
 Music that gentler on the spirit lies, 50
 Than tired eyelids upon tired eyes;
 Music that brings sweet sleep down from the blissful skies.

Here are cool mosses deep,
 And through the moss the ivies creep,
 And in the stream the long-leaved flowers
 weep, 55
 And from the craggy ledge the poppy hangs in sleep

2

Why are we weighed upon with heaviness,
 And utterly consumed with sharp distress,
 While all things else have rest from weariness?
 All things have rest; why should we toil alone,
 We only toil, who are the first of things, 61
 And make perpetual moan,
 Still from one sorrow to another thrown,
 Nor ever fold our wings,
 And cease from wanderings, 65
 Nor steep our brows in slumber's holy balm,
 Nor harken what the inner spirit sings,
 "There is no joy but calm!"—
 Why should we only toil, the roof and crown of things?

3

Lo! in the middle of the wood, 70
 The folded leaf is wooed from out the bud
 With winds upon the branch, and there
 Grows green and broad, and takes no care,
 Sun-steeped at noon, and in the moon
 Nightly dew-fed; and turning yellow 75
 Falls, and floats adown the air.
 Lo! sweetened with the summer light,
 The full-juiced apple, waxing over-mellow,
 Drops in a silent autumn night.
 All its allotted length of days 80
 The flower ripens in its place,
 Ripens and fades, and falls, and hath no toil,
 Fast-rooted in the fruitful soil.

4

Hateful is the dark-blue sky,
 Vaulted o'er the dark-blue sea. 85
 Death is the end of life; ah, why Should life all labor be?
 Let us alone. Time driveth onward fast,
 And in a little while our lips are dumb
 Let us alone. What is it that will last? 90
 All things are taken from us, and become Portions and parcels of the dreadful past
 Let us alone. What pleasure can we have To war with evil? Is there any peace
 In ever climbing up the climbing wave? 95
 All things have rest, and ripen toward the grave
 In silence — ripen, fall, and cease;
 Give us long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease.

5

How sweet it were, hearing the downward
 stream
 With half-shut eyes ever to seem 100
 Falling asleep in a half-dream!
 To dream and dream, like yonder amber light,
 Which will not leave the myrrh-bush on the
 height;
 To hear each other's whispered speech;
 Eating the Lotos day by day, 105
 To watch the crisping ripples on the beach,
 And tender curving lines of creamy spray;
 To lend our hearts and spirits wholly
 To the influence of mild-minded melancholy;
 To muse and brood and live again in memory,
 With those old faces of our infancy 111
 Heaped over with a mound of grass,
 Two handfuls of white dust, shut in an urn of brass!

6

Dear is the memory of our wedded lives,
 And dear the last embraces of our wives 115
 And their warm tears; but all hath suffered change;

For surely now our household hearths are cold,
Our sons inherit us, our looks are strange,
And we should come like ghosts to trouble
joy.
Or else the island princes over-bold 120
Have eat our substance, and the minstrel sings
Before them of the ten years' war in Troy,
And our great deeds, as half-forgotten things.
Is there confusion in the little isle?
Let what is broken so remain. 125
The gods are hard to reconcile;
'Tis hard to settle order once again
There is confusion worse than death,
Trouble on trouble, pain on pain,
Long labor unto aged breath, 130
Sore task to hearts worn out by many wars
And eyes grown dim with gazing on the pilot-stars.

7

But, propped on beds of amaranth and moly,
How sweet — while warm airs lull us, blowing lowly —
With half-dropped eyelid still, 135
Beneath a heaven dark and holy,
To watch the long bright river drawing slowly
His waters from the purple hill —
To hear the dewy echoes calling
From cave to cave through the thick-twined
vine — 140
To watch the emerald-colored water falling
Through many a woven acanthus-wreath
divine!
Only to hear and see the far-off sparkling brine,
Only to hear were sweet, stretched out beneath the pine.

8

The Lotos blooms below the barren peak, 145
The Lotos blows by every winding creek,
All day the wind breathes low with mellow tone,
Through every hollow cave and alley lone
Round and round the spicy downs the yellow
Lotos-dust is blown.
We have had enough of action, and of motion
we, 150
Rolled to starboard, rolled to larboard, when the surge was seething free,
Where the wallowing monster spouted his foam-fountains in the sea.

120 island princes, princes from other islands near Greece 133 amaranth, an imaginary flower supposed never to fade moly, a fabulous herb of magic power It was given by Hermes (the messenger of the gods) to Ulysses as a protection against Circe, the enchantress 142 acanthus-wreath. The acanthus was a plant sacred to the gods

Let us swear an oath, and keep it with an equal mind,
In the hollow Lotos-land to live and lie reclined
On the hills like gods together, careless of mankind. 155
For they lie beside their nectar, and the bolts are hurled
Far below them in the valleys, and the clouds are lightly curled Round their golden houses, girdled with the gleaming world;
Where they smile in secret, looking over wasted lands,
Blight and famine, plague and earthquake,
roaring deeps and fiery sands, 160
Clanging fights, and flaming towns, and sinking ships, and praying hands
But they smile, they find a music centered in a doleful song
Steaming up, a lamentation and an ancient tale of wrong,
Like a tale of little meaning though the words are strong,
Chanted from an ill-used race of men that cleave the soil, 165
Sow the seed, and reap the harvest with enduring toil,
Storing yearly little dues of wheat, and wine
and oil;
Till they perish and they suffer — some, 'tis whispered — down in hell Suffer endless anguish, others in Elysian valleys dwell,
Resting weary limbs at last on beds of asphodel. 170
Surely, surely, slumber is more sweet than toil, the shore
Than labor in the deep mid-ocean, wind and wave and oar,
O rest ye, brother mariners, we will not wander more. (1832, 1842)

A DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN

I read, before my eyelids dropped their shade,
The Legend of Good Women, long ago
Sung by the morning star of song, who made
His music heard below,

Dan Chaucer, the first warbler, whose sweet
breath 5
Preluded those melodious bursts that fill

169-170 Elysian . . . asphodel. The Elysian Fields, the paradise of the Greeks, were said by Homer to be covered with asphodels (daffodils)

A Dream of Fair Women 2 The Legend of Good Women, a poem written by Chaucer about 1385 in praise of women who had proved faithful in love The only one of Chaucer's women appearing in Tennyson's poem is Cleopatra. 5 Dan, master (from Latin dominus)

The spacious times of great Elizabeth
With sounds that echo still.

And, for a while, the knowledge of his art
Held me above the subject, as strong gales Hold swollen clouds from raining, though my
heart, 11
Brimful of those wild tales,

Charged both mine eyes with tears. In every
land
I saw, wherever light illumineth,
Beauty and anguish walking hand in hand 15
The downward slope to death.

Those far-renowned brides of ancient song
Peopled the hollow dark, like burning stars,
And I heard sounds of insult, shame, and
wrong,
And trumpets blown for wars; 20

And clattering flints battered with clanging hoofs;
And I saw crowds in columned sanctuaries,
And forms that passed at windows and on roofs
Of marble palaces;

Corpses across the threshold, heroes tall 25
Dislodging pinnacle and parapet
Upon the tortoise creeping to the wall,
Lances in ambush set,

And high shrine-doors burst through with heated blasts
That run before the fluttering tongues of fire, 30
White surf wind-scattered over sails and masts,
And ever climbing higher;

Squadrons and squares of men in brazen plates,
Scaffolds, still sheets of water, divers woes,
Ranges of glimmering vaults with iron grates,
And hushed seraglios. 36

So shape chased shape as swift as, when to
land
Bluster the winds and tides the selfsame
way,
Crisp foam-flakes scud along the level sand,
Torn from the fringe of spray 40

7 spacious times The period of Queen Elizabeth (1558-1603) is noted for its tremendous literary activity. 27 tortoise . . . wall, shields interlocked over the soldiers' heads, and used in Roman warfare as a protection against missiles thrown from the walls. A movable shed was also used for this purpose. Pinnacles and parapets (line 26) are parts of walls used as battlements.

I started once, or seemed to start in pain,
Resolved on noble things, and strove to
speak,
As when a great thought strikes along the brain
And flushes all the cheek.

And once my arm was lifted to hew down 45
A cavalier from off his saddle-bow,
That bore a lady from a leaguered town;
And then, I know not how,

All those sharp fancies, by down-lapsing
thought
Streamed onward, lost their edges, and did creep 50
Rolled on each other, rounded, smoothed, and brought
Into the gulfs of sleep.

At last methought that I had wandered far
In an old wood, fresh-washed in coolest dew
The maiden splendors of the morning star 55
Shook in the steadfast blue.

Enormous elm-tree boles did stoop and lean
Upon the dusky brushwood underneath
Their broad curved branches, fledged with clearest green,
New from its silken sheath. 60

The dim red Morn had died, her journey done,
And with dead lips smiled at the twilight
plain,
Half-fallen across the threshold of the sun,
Never to rise again.

There was no motion in the dumb dead air,
Not any song of bird or sound of rill; 66
Gross darkness of the inner sepulcher
Is not so deadly still

As that wide forest Growths of jasmine
turned
Their humid arms festooning tree to tree,
And at the root through lush green grasses burned 71
The red anemone.

I knew the flowers, I knew the leaves, I knew
The tearful glimmer of the languid dawn
On those long, rank, dark wood-walks drenched in dew, 75
Leading from lawn to lawn.

The smell of violets, hidden in the green,
Poured back into my empty soul and frame

72 anemone The Greeks believed that the anemone sprang from tears dropped by Venus as she wept in the forest over the death of her lover Adonis. 76 lawn, an open place in a forest.

The times when I remember to have been Joyful and free from blame. 80

And from within me a clear undertone Thrilled through mine ears in that unbliss-ful clime,
"Pass freely through; the wood is all thine
own
Until the end of time."

At length I saw a lady within call, 85
Stillter than chiseled marble, standing there,
A daughter of the gods, divinely tall,
And most divinely fair.

Her loveliness with shame and with surprise Froze my swift speech; she turning on my
face 90

The star-like sorrows of immortal eyes,
Spoke slowly in her place:

"I had great beauty; ask thou not my name,
No one can be more wise than destiny.
Many drew swords and died. Where'er I
came 95
I brought calamity."

"No marvel, sovereign lady; in fair field Myself for such a face had boldly died,"
I answered free, and turning I appealed
To one that stood beside. 100

But she, with sick and scornful looks averse,
To her full height her stately stature draws,
"My youth," she said, "was blasted with a curse;
This woman was the cause

"I was cut off from hope in that sad place 105
Which men called Aulis in those iron years;
My father held his hand upon his face;
I, blinded with my tears,

"Still strove to speak; my voice was thick with sighs
As in a dream Dimly I could descry 110
The stern black-bearded kings with wolfish
eyes,
Waiting to see me die.

"The high masts flickered as they lay afloat;
The crowds, the temples, wavered, and the
shore;

85 a lady, Helen of Troy, the wife of Menelaus She was beguiled away by Paris, the son of Priam, and thus became the cause of the Trojan War (See Ænone, page 20) 100 one, Iphigenia, daughter of Agamemnon, the leader of the Greeks in the expedition against Troy She was doomed to be sacrificed because her father had slain a stag sacred to Diana The sacrifice took place at Aulis (line 106), on the Boeotian coast, where the goddess becalmed the Greek fleet until her wrath was appeased According to other versions of the story, Diana allowed a hind to be substituted in Iphigenia's place 101 averse, turned away

The bright death quivered at the victim's throat — 115
Touched — and I knew no more."

Whereto the other with a downward brow.
"I would the white cold heavy-plunging foam,
Whirled by the wind, had rolled me deep below,
Then when I left my home." 120

Her slow full words sank through the silence
drear,
As thunder-drops fall on a sleeping sea.
Sudden I heard a voice that cried, "Come
here,
That I may look on thee."

I turning saw, throned on a flowery rise, 125
One sitting on a crimson scarf unrolled
A queen, with swarthy cheeks and bold black
eyes,
Brow-bound with burning gold

She, flashing forth a haughty smile, began
"I governed men by change, and so I swayed 130
All moods 'Tis long since I have seen a man
Once, like the moon, I made

"The ever-shifting currents of the blood
According to my humor ebb and flow.
I have no men to govern in this wood, 135
That makes my only woe

"Nay — yet it chafes me that I could not bend
One will, nor tame and tutor with mine eye
That dull cold-blooded Cæsar. Prythee frind,
Where is Mark Antony? 140

"The man, my lover, with whom I rode sublime
On Fortune's neck; we sat as god by god,
The Nilus would have risen before his time
And flooded at our nod.

"We drank the Libyan Sun to sleep, and lit Lamps which out-burned Canopus. Oh,
my life 146
In Egypt! Oh, the dalliance and the wit,
The flattery and the strife,

127 A queen, Cleopatra, queen of Egypt (69-30 B.C.)
The description was suggested largely by Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra The historical Cleopatra was a Greek and hence probably fair and blue-eyed She is here presented artistically, not historically 139 Cæsar, Octavius Cæsar, whom she could not captivate She did captivate Julius Cæsar and Mark Antony 145 Libyan Libya was the name given to Africa by the ancient Greeks 146 Canopus, one of the brightest stars in the heavens

"And the wild kiss, when fresh from war's alarms,
My Hercules, my Roman Antony, 150
My mailed Bacchus leapt into my arms,
Contented there to die!

"And there he died; and when I heard my
name
Sighed forth with life, I would not brook
my fear
Of the other, with a worm I balked his fame
What else was left? look here!"— 156

With that she tore her robe apart, and half
The polished argent of her breast to sight
Laid bare. Thereto she pointed with a laugh,
Showing the aspick's bite. — 160

"I died a Queen The Roman soldier found
Me lying dead, my crown about my brows,
A name forever!— lying robed and crowned,
Worthy a Roman spouse." 164

Her warbling voice, a lyre of widest range Struck by all passion, did fall down and glance
From tone to tone, and glided through all
change
Of liveliest utterance

When she made pause I knew not for delight;
Because with sudden motion from the
ground 170
She raised her piercing orbs, and filled with light
The interval of sound.

Still with their fires Love tipped his keenest
darts,
As once they drew into two burning rings
All beams of Love, melting the mighty hearts
Of captains and of kings. 176

Slowly my sense undazzled. Then I heard A noise of someone coming through the lawn,
And singing clearer than the crested bird
That claps his wings at dawn: 180

"The torrent brooks of hallowed Israel
From craggy hollows pouring, late and soon, Sound all night long, in falling through the
dell,
Far-heard beneath the moon.

"The balmy moon of blessed Israel 185
Floods all the deep-blue gloom with beams
divine;
All night the splintered crags that wall the
dell
With spires of silver shine."

As one that museth where broad sunshine
laves
The lawn by some cathedral, through the door 190
Hearing the holy organ rolling waves
Of sound on roof and floor

Within, and anthem sung, is charmed and tied
To where he stands — so stood I, when that flow
Of music left the lips of her that died 195
To save her father's vow;

The daughter of the warrior, Gileadite,
A maiden pure; as when she went along
From Mizpeh's towered gate with welcome
light,
With timbrel and with song 200

My words leapt forth. "Heaven heads the count of crimes
With that wild oath." She rendered answer
high:

"Not so, nor once alone; a thousand times
I would be born and die.

"Single I grew, like some green plant, whose root 205
Creeps to the garden water-pipes beneath,
Feeding the flower, but ere my flower to fruit
Changed, I was ripe for death

"My God, my land, my father — these did move
Me from my bliss of life that Nature gave,
Lowered softly with a threefold cord of love
Down to a silent grave. 212

"And I went mourning, 'No fair Hebrew boy Shall smile away my maiden blame among
The Hebrew mothers' — emptied of all joy,
Leaving the dance and song, 216

150 Hercules . . . Antony Antony claimed to be descended from Hercules, and imitated him in dress 155 worm . fame Antony was defeated in a naval engagement with Octavius in 31 B.C. A year later he committed suicide. After his death Cleopatra committed suicide by the bite of a snake (worm) rather than be carried captive to Rome by Octavius 158 argent, whiteness 178 some-one, the daughter of Jephthah, a mighty warrior of Gilead (Judges, 11) He led the Israelites against the Ammonites and vowed that if he were victorious he would sacrifice to God the first thing that came out of his house to meet him on his return to his home in Mizpeh. His daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances Mizpeh means watchtower 179 crested bird, probably the lark

203-204 a thousand times die She means that she would die a thousand times rather than allow her father to break his vow 213 mourning She retired to the mountains with her companions to bewail her virginity, for it was considered a disgrace for a Hebrew woman to die without a son

"Leaving the olive-gardens far below,
Leaving the promise of my bridal bower,
The valleys of grape-loaded vines that glow
Beneath the battled tower. 220

"The light white cloud swam over us Anon
We heard the lion roaring from his den,
We saw the large white stars rise one by one,
Or, from the darkened glen,

"Saw God divide the night with flying flame,
And thunder on the everlasting hills 226
I heard Him, for He spake, and grief became
A solemn scorn of ills.

"When the next moon was rolled into the sky, Strength came to me that equaled my desire. 230

How beautiful a thing it was to die
For God and for my sire!

"It comforts me in this one thought to dwell,
That I subdued me to my father's will,
Because the kiss he gave me, ere I fell, 235
Sweetens the spirit still.

"Moreover it is written that my race
Hewed Ammon, hip and thigh, from Aroer
On Arnon unto Minneth." Here her face
Glowed, as I looked at her. 240

She locked her lips, she left me where I stood:
"Glory to God," she sang, and passed afar,
Thridding the somber boskage of the wood,
Toward the morning-star

Losing her carol I stood pensively, 245
As one that from a casement leans his head,
When midnight bells cease ringing suddenly,
And the old year is dead.

"Alas! alas!" a low voice, full of care,
Murmured beside me: "Turn and look on
me; 250
I am that Rosamond, whom men call fair,
If what I was I be.

"Would I had been some maiden coarse and
poor!
O me, that I should ever see the light!
Those dragon eyes of angered Eleanor 255
Do hunt me, day and night."

She ceased in tears, fallen from hope and trust,
To whom the Egyptian "Oh, you tamely
died!

You should have clung to Fulvia's waist, and thrust
The dagger through her side " 260

With that sharp sound the white dawn's creeping beams,
Stolen to my brain, dissolved the mystery
Of folded sleep. The captain of my dreams
Ruled in the eastern sky. 264

Morn broadened on the borders of the dark
Ere I saw her who clasped in her last trance
Her murdered father's head, or Joan of Arc,
A light of ancient France;

Or her who knew that Love can vanquish
Death,
Who kneeling, with one arm about her
king, 270
Drew forth the poison with her balmy breath,
Sweet as new buds in spring

No memory labors longer from the deep
Gold-mines of thought to lift the hidden ore
That glimpses, moving up, than I from sleep
To gather and tell o'er 276

Each little sound and sight. With what dull
pain
Compassed, how eagerly I sought to strike
Into that wondrous track of dreams again!
But no two dreams are like 280

As when a soul laments, which hath been blessed,
Desiring what is mingled with past years,
In yearnings that can never be expressed
By sighs or groans or tears;

Because all words, though culled with choicest
art, 285
Failing to give the bitter of the sweet,
Wither beneath the palate, and the heart
Faints, faded by its heat. (1832, 1842)

SAINT AGNES' EVE

Deep on the convent-roof the snows
 Are sparkling to the moon;
 My breath to heaven like vapor goes;
 May my soul follow soon!
 The shadows of the convent-towers 5
 Slant down the snowy sward,
 Still creeping with the creeping hours
 That lead me to my Lord.
 Make Thou my spirit pure and clear
 As are the frosty skies, 10
 Or this first snowdrop of the year
 That in my bosom lies.

As these white robes are soiled and dark,
 To yonder shining ground;
 As this pale taper's earthly spark, 15
 To yonder argent round;
 So shows my soul before the Lamb,
 My spirit before Thee;
 So in mine earthly house I am,
 To that I hope to be. 20
 Break up the heavens, O Lord' and far,
 Through all yon starlight keen,
 Draw me, thy bride, a glittering star,
 In raiment white and clean

He lifts me to the golden doors, 25
 The flashes come and go;
 All heaven bursts her starry floors,
 And strows her lights below,
 And deepens on and up! the gates
 Roll back, and far within 30
 For me the Heavenly Bridegroom waits,
 To make me pure of sin
 The Sabbaths of Eternity,
 One Sabbath deep and wide —
 A light upon the shining sea — 35
 The Bridegroom with his bride! (1837)

You ask me, why, though ill at ease,
 Within this region I subsist,
 Whose spirits falter in the mist,
 And languish for the purple seas.

 The land where, girt with friends or foes,
 A man may speak the thing he will,

Saint Agnes' Eve St Agnes was a Roman virgin who suffered martyrdom about the year 300. According to ancient legend it was possible for a pure maiden on St Agnes' Eve (January 21) to have a vision of her future husband. The poem is supposed to be spoken by a nun who embodies the spirit of St Agnes. Here it is the Heavenly Bridegroom that the maiden longs to see. For a different treatment of the legend see Keats's The Eve of St Agnes.

A land of settled government,
 A land of just and old renown, 10

 From precedent to precedent,

Where faction seldom gathers head,
 But, by degrees to fullness wrought,

 When single thought is civil crime,

 The name of Britain trebly great —
 Though every channel of the State

 And I will see before I die

OF OLD SAT FREEDOM ON THE HEIGHTS

Of old sat Freedom on the heights,
 The thunders breaking at her feet;
 Above her shook the starry lights,
 She heard the torrents meet

There in her place she did rejoice, 5
 Self-gathered in her prophet-mind,
 But fragments of her mighty voice
 Came rolling on the wind.

Then stepped she down through town and
 field
 To mingle with the human race, 10
 And part by part to men revealed
 The fullness of her face —

Grave mother of majestic works,
 From her isle-altar gazing down,
 Who, godlike, grasps the triple forks, 15
 And, king-like, wears the crown

Her open eyes desire the truth
 The wisdom of a thousand years
 Is in them. May perpetual youth
 Keep dry their light from tears, 20

ENGLAND AND AMERICA IN 1782

O thou that sendest out the man
To rule by land and sea,
Strong mother of a Lion-line,
Be proud of those strong sons of thine
Who wrenched their rights from thee! 5

What wonder if in noble heat
Those men thine arms withstood,
Retaught the lesson thou hadst taught,
And in thy spirit with thee fought —
Who sprang from English blood! 10

But thou rejoice with liberal joy,
Lift up thy rocky face,
And shatter, when the storms are black,
In many a streaming torrent back,
The seas that shock thy base! 15

Whatever harmonies of law
The growing world assume,
Thy work is thine — the single note
From that deep chord which Hampden smote
Will vibrate to the doom. 20

THE EPIC

At Francis Allen's on the Christmas-eve —
The game of forfeits done — the girls all kissed
Beneath the sacred bush and passed away —
The parson Holmes, the poet Everard Hall,
The host, and I sat round the wassail-bowl, 5
Then half-way ebbd; and there we held a talk,

England and America in 1782 Tennyson states that this poem is supposed to be spoken by a liberal Englishman at the time of the recognition of American independence

19 Hampden, John Hampden (1594-1643), a Parliamentary leader who in 1635 refused to pay taxes to build warships on the principle that taxation without representation is tyranny. This was the cry of the American revolutionists

How all the old honor had from Christmas
gone,
Or gone or dwindled down to some odd games
In some odd nooks like this, till I, tired out
With cutting eights that day upon the pond,
Where, three times slipping from the outer edge, 11

I bumped the ice into three several stars,
Fell in a doze; and half-awake I heard
The parson taking wide and wider sweeps,
Now harping on the church-commissioners,
Now hawking at geology and schism; 16
Until I woke, and found him settled down
Upon the general decay of faith Right through the world: "at home was little left,

And none abroad, there was no anchor, none,
To hold by." Francis, laughing, clapped his
hand 21
On Everard's shoulder, with "I hold by him "
"And I," quoth Everard, "by the wassailbowl"

"Why yes," I said, "we knew your gift that
way

At college; but another which you had — 25
I mean of verse (for so we held it then) —
What came of that?" "You know," said
Frank, "he burnt

His epic, his King Arthur, some twelve books" —

And then to me, demanding why: "Oh, sir,
He thought that nothing new was said, or else 30

Something so said 'twas nothing — that a
truth

Looks freshest in the fashion of the day,
God knows, he has a mint of reasons, ask.
It pleased me well enough." "Nay, nay,"
said Hall,

"Why take the style of those heroic times? 35
For nature brings not back the mastodon,
Nor we those times, and why should any man
Remodel models? These twelve books of mine
Were faint Homeric echoes, nothing-worth,
Mere chaff and draff, much better burnt."

"But I," 40
Said Francis, "picked the eleventh from this hearth,

And have it, keep a thing, its use will come.
I hoard it as a sugar-plum for Holmes "

He laughed, and I, though sleepy, like a horse
That hears the corn-bin open, pricked my ears,
For I remembered Everard's college fame 46
When we were freshmen. Then at my request
He brought it; and the poet, little urged,

MORTE D'ARTHUR

So all day long the noise of battle rolled
Among the mountains by the winter sea,
Until King Arthur's table, man by man,
Had fallen in Lyonness about their lord,
King Arthur; then, because his wound was 5
deep,

The bold Sir Bedivere uplifted him,
Sir Bedivere, the last of all his knights,
And bore him to a chapel nigh the field,
A broken chancel with a broken cross,
That stood on a dark strait of barren land 10
On one side lay the ocean, and on one
Lay a great water, and the moon was full.

Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere:
"The sequel of today unsolders all
The goodliest fellowship of famous knights Whereof this world holds record. Such a 16
sleep
They sleep — the men I loved. I think that we

Shall never more, at any future time,
Delight our souls with talk of knightly deeds,
Walking about the gardens and the halls 20
Of Camelot, as in the days that were
I perish by this people which I made — Though Merlin sware that I should come
again

To rule once more — but let what will be be,
I am so deeply smitten through the helm 25
That without help I cannot last till morn.
Thou therefore take my brand Excalibur,
Which was my pride; for thou rememberest
how

In those old days, one summer noon, an arm
Rose up from out the bosom of the lake, 30
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
Holding the sword — and how I rowed across
And took it, and have worn it, like a king;
And, whosoever I am sung or told
In aftertime, this also shall be known. 35
But now delay not, take Excalibur,
And fling him far into the middle mere;
Watch what thou seest, and lightly bring me
word "

To him replied the bold Sir Bedivere:
"It is not meet, Sir King, to leave thee thus,

Morte d'Arthur See Critical Notes

4 Lyonness, a district often mentioned in Arthurian romance. According to tradition it sank beneath the sea, its position being thereafter marked only by islands off the extreme point of Cornwall. 21. Camelot, the city of King Arthur's court. 23 Merlin, the magician and prophet of Arthur's court. 31 samite, a kind of heavy silk stuff

Aidless, alone, and smitten through the helm
A little thing may harm a wounded man. 42
Yet I thy best will all perform at full,
Watch what I see, and lightly bring thee
word "

So saying, from the ruined shrine he stepped 45
And in the moon athwart the place of tombs,
Where lay the mighty bones of ancient men,
Old knights, and over them the sea-wind sang Shrill, chill, with flakes of foam. He, stepping down

By zigzag paths and juts of pointed rock, 50
Came on the shining levels of the lake

There drew he forth the brand Excalibur,
And o'er him, drawing it, the winter moon,
Brightening the skirts of a long cloud, ran forth

And sparkled keen with frost against the hilt; 55

For all the haft twinkled with diamond sparks,
Myriads of topaz-lights, and jacinth-work
Of subtlest jewelry. He gazed so long
That both his eyes were dazzled, as he stood,
This way and that dividing the swift mind, 60
In act to throw; but at the last it seemed Better to leave Excalibur concealed

There in the many-knotted water-flags,
That whistled stiff and dry about the marge
So strode he back slow to the wounded king

Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere 66
"Hast thou performed my mission which I gave?

What is it thou hast seen, or what hast
heard?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere
"I heard the ripple washing in the reeds, 70
And the wild water lapping on the crag "

To whom replied King Arthur, faint and
pale,
"Thou hast betrayed thy nature and thy
name,

Nor rendering true answer, as beseemed
Thy fealty, nor like a noble knight; 75
For surer sign had followed, either hand,
Or voice, or else a motion of the mere
This is a shameful thing for men to lie
Yet now, I charge thee, quickly go again
As thou art lief and dear, and do the thing 80
I bade thee, watch, and lightly bring me
word "

Then went Sir Bedivere the second time
Across the ridge, and paced beside the mere,
Counting the dewy pebbles, fixed in thought,
But when he saw the wonder of the hilt, 85
How curiously and strangely chased, he smote
His palms together, and he cried aloud.

"And if indeed I cast the brand away,

80 lief, beloved 86 curiously, elaborately, elegantly

Surely a precious thing, one worthy note,
Should thus be lost forever from the earth, 90
Which might have pleased the eyes of many men.

What good should follow this, if this were
done?

What harm, undone? deep harm to disobey,
Seeing obedience is the bond of rule.

Were it well to obey then, if a king demand
An act unprofitable, against himself? 96

The king is sick, and knows not what he does.
What record, or what relic of my lord

Should be to aftertime, but empty breath
And rumors of a doubt? But were this kept,

Stored in some treasure-house of mighty
kings, 101

Someone might show it at a just of arms,
Saying, 'King Arthur's sword, Excalibur,

Wrought by the lonely maiden of the lake;
Nine years she wrought it, sitting in the deeps 105

Upon the hidden bases of the hills.'

So might some old man speak in the after-
time

To all the people, winning reverence;
But now much honor and much fame were lost "

So spake he, clouded with his own conceit,
And hid Excalibur the second time, 111

And so strode back slow to the wounded king.

Then spoke King Arthur, breathing heavily,
"What is it thou hast seen, or what hast
heard?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere:
"I heard the water lapping on the crag, 116

And the long ripple washing in the reeds "

To whom replied King Arthur, much in wrath,

"Ah, miserable and unkind, untrue,
Unknightly, traitor-hearted! Woe is me! 120

Authority forgets a dying king,
Laid widowed of the power in his eye

That bowed the will I see thee what thou
art,

For thou, the latest-left of all my knights,
In whom should meet the offices of all, 125

Thou wouldst betray me for the precious hilt;
Either from lust of gold, or like a girl

Valuing the giddy pleasure of the eyes.
Yet, for a man may fail in duty twice,

And the third time may prosper, get thee
hence, 130

But, if thou spare to fling Excalibur,
I will arise and slay thee with my hands "

Then quickly rose Sir Bedivere, and ran,
And, leaping down the ridges lightly, plunged

Among the bulrush-beds, and clutched the
sword, 135

And strongly wheeled and threw it. The great brand

Made lightnings in the splendor of the moon,
And flashing round and round, and whirled
in an arch,

Shot like a streamer of the northern morn,
Seen where the moving isles of winter shock

By night, with noises of the northern sea. 141

So flashed and fell the brand Excalibur;
But ere he dipped the surface, rose an arm

Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,

And caught him by the hilt, and brandished
him 145

Three times, and drew him under in the mere.
And lightly went the other to the king

Then spoke King Arthur, drawing thicker
breath:

"Now see I by thine eyes that this is done.
Speak out, what is it thou hast heard, or seen?" 150

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere:
"Sir King, I closed mine eyelids, lest the gems

Should blind my purpose, for I never saw,
Nor shall see, here or elsewhere, till I die,

Not though I live three lives of mortal men,
So great a miracle as yonder hilt. 156

Then with both hands I flung him, wheeling
him,

But when I looked again, behold an arm,
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,

That caught him by the hilt, and brandished
him 160

Three times, and drew him under in the mere."

And answer made King Arthur, breathing hard:

"My end draws nigh; 'tis time that I were
gone.

Make broad thy shoulders to receive my weight,

And bear me to the margin, yet I fear 165
My wound hath taken cold, and I shall die "

So saying, from the pavement he half rose,
Slowly, with pain, reclining on his arm,

And looking wistfully with wide blue eyes
As in a picture Him Sir Bedivere 170

Remorsefully regarded through his tears,
And would have spoken, but he found not

words,
Then took with care, and kneeling on one

knee,
O'er both his shoulders drew the languid

hands,
And rising bore him through the place of tombs. 175

But, as he walked, King Arthur panted hard,
Like one that feels a nightmare on his bed

When all the house is mute So sighed the
king,

139 streamer morn, the Northern lights 140 isles of winter, icebergs

Muttering and murmuring at his ear, "Quick,
quick!
I fear it is too late, and I shall die " 180
But the other swiftly strode from ridge to ridge,
Clothed with his breath, and looking, as he walked,
Larger than human on the frozen hills
He heard the deep behind him, and a cry
Before. His own thought drove him like a goad 185
Dry clashed his harness in the icy caves
And barren chasms, and all to left and right
The bare black cliff clanged round him, as he based
His feet on juts of slippery crag that rang
Sharp-smitten with the dint of arméd heels —
And on a sudden, lo! the level lake, 191
And the long glories of the winter moon
Then saw they how there hove a dusky
barge,
Dark as a funeral scarf from stem to stern,
Beneath them; and descending they were ware 195
That all the decks were dense with stately forms
Black-stoled, black-hooded, like a dream — by these Three queens with crowns of gold — and from them rose
A cry that shivered to the tingling stars,
And, as it were one voice, an agony 200
Of lamentation, like a wind that shrills
All night in a waste land, where no one comes,
Or hath come, since the making of the world
Then murmured Arthur, "Place me in the barge,"
And to the barge they came There those three queens 205
Put forth their hands, and took the king, and wept.
But she that rose the tallest of them all
And fairest laid his head upon her lap,
And loosed the shattered casque, and chafed
his hands,
And called him by his name, complaining loud, 210
And dropping bitter tears against his brow Striped with dark blood, for all his face was white
And colorless, and like the withered moon
Smote by the fresh beam of the springing east;
And all his greaves and cuisses dashed with drops 215
Of onset, and the light and lustrous curls —
That made his forehead like a rising sun
High from the dais-throne — were parched with dust,

186. Dry, a classical use of the word, meaning grating

Or, clotted into points and hanging loose,
Mixed with the knightly growth that fringed his lips 220
So like a shattered column lay the king;
Not like that Arthur who, with lance in rest,
From spur to plume a star of tournament,
Shot through the lists at Camelot, and charged
Before the eyes of ladies and of kings. 225
Then loudly cried the bold Sir Bedivere.
"Ah! my Lord Arthur, whither shall I go?
Where shall I hide my forehead and my eyes?
For now I see the true old times are dead,
When every morning brought a noble chance,
And every chance brought out a noble knight
Such times have been not since the light that led 232
The holy Elders with the gift of myrrh.
But now the whole ROUND TABLE is dissolved
Which was an image of the mighty world;
And I, the last, go forth companionless, 236
And the days darken round me, and the years,
Among new men, strange faces, other minds "
And slowly answered Arthur from the
barge:
"The old order changeth, yielding place to
new, 240
And God fulfills himself in many ways, Lest one good custom should corrupt the
world.
Comfort thyself; what comfort is in me?
I have lived my life, and that which I have
done
May He within himself make pure! but thou,
If thou shouldst never see my face again, 246
Pray for my soul. More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of Wherefore, let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain, 251
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them
friend?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God
But now farewell. I am going a long way 256
With these thou seest — if indeed I go —
For all my mind is clouded with a doubt —
To the island-valley of Avilion;
Where falls not hail, or rain, or any snow, 260
Nor ever wind blows loudly, but it lies here is a familiar one in literature, being found in Homer,

Deep-meadowed, happy, fair with orchard lawns
And bowery hollows crowned with summer
sea,
Where I will heal me of my grievous wound "
So said he, and the barge with oar and sail
Moved from the brink, like some full-breasted swan 266
That, fluting a wild carol ere her death, Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs. Long stood Sir Bedivere
Revolving many memories, till the hull 270 Looked one black dot against the verge of dawn,
And on the mere the wailing died away.

Here ended Hall, and our last light, that long
Had winked and threatened darkness, flared
and fell,
At which the parson, sent to sleep with
sound, 275
And waked with silence, grunted "Good!"
but we Sat rapt; it was the tone with which he read —
Perhaps some modern touches here and there
Redeemed it from the charge of nothingness —
Or else we loved the man, and prized his work; 280
I know not, but we sitting, as I said,
The cock crew loud, as at that time of year
The lusty bird takes every hour for dawn.
Then Francis, muttering, like a man ill-used,
"There now — that's nothing!" drew a little back, 285
And drove his heel into the smoldered log,
That sent a blast of sparkles up the flue.
And so to bed, where yet in sleep I seemed
To sail with Arthur under looming shores, Point after point, till on to dawn, when dreams 290
Begin to feel the truth and stir of day,
To me, methought, who waited with the crowd,
There came a bark that, blowing forward,
bore
King Arthur, like a modern gentleman
Of stateliest port, and all the people cried,
"Arthur is come again; he cannot die " 296
Then those that stood upon the hills behind
Repeated — "Come again, and thrice as fair",

266-267 swan death According to ancient tradition the swan always sang just before death. 278 modern touches See line 240 and note. And, further inland, voices echoed — "Come
With all good things, and war shall be no
more " 300

At this a hundred bells began to peal,
That with the sound I woke, and heard indeed
The clear church-bells ring in the Christmas morn. (c. 1835; 1842)

DORA

With farmer Allan at the farm abode
William and Dora William was his son,
And she his niece. He often looked at them,
And often thought, "I'll make them man and wife."

Now Dora felt her uncle's will in all, 5
And yearned toward William; but the youth, because

He had been always with her in the house,
Thought not of Dora.

Then there came a day
When Allan called his son, and said: "My
son,

I married late, but I would wish to see 10
My grandchild on my knees before I die;
And I have set my heart upon a match
Now therefore look to Dora; she is well
To look to; thrifty too beyond her age.
She is my brother's daughter, he and I 15
Had once hard words, and parted, and he
died

In foreign lands; but for his sake I bred
His daughter Dora Take her for your wife,
For I have wished this marriage, night and
day,

For many years " But William answered
short: 20

"I cannot marry Dora; by my life,
I will not marry Dora." Then the old man
Was wroth, and doubled up his hands, and
said:

"You will not, boy! you dare to answer thus!
But in my time a father's word was law, 25
And so it shall be now for me Look to it,
Consider, William, take a month to think,
And let me have an answer to my wish,
Or, by the Lord that made me, you shall pack,
And never more darken my doors again " 30
But William answered madly, bit his lips,
And broke away. The more he looked at her
The less he liked her, and his ways were harsh,
But Dora bore them meekly. Then before
The month was out he left his father's house,
And hired himself to work within the fields, 36
And half in love, half spite, he wooed and wed
A laborer's daughter, Mary Mornison

Then, when the bells were ringing, Allan called

Dora See Critical Notes.

His niece and said. "My girl, I love you well,
But if you speak with him that was my son,
Or change a word with her he calls his wife, 42
My home is none of yours. My will is law"
And Dora promised, being meek She thought,
"It cannot be; my uncle's mind will change!"

And days went on, and there was born a boy 46

To William, then distresses came on him,
And day by day he passed his father's gate,
Heart-broken, and his father helped him not
But Dora stored what little she could save, 50
And sent it them by stealth, nor did they
know

Who sent it; till at last a fever seized
On William, and in harvest time he died.

Then Dora went to Mary Mary sat
And looked with tears upon her boy, and
thought 55

Hard things of Dora Dora came and said:

"I have obeyed my uncle until now,
And I have sinned, for it was all through me
This evil came on William at the first.

But, Mary, for the sake of him that's gone, 60
And for your sake, the woman that he chose,
And for this orphan, I am come to you
You know there has not been for these five

years
So full a harvest. Let me take the boy,
And I will set him in my uncle's eye 65

Among the wheat, that when his heart is glad
Of the full harvest, he may see the boy,
And bless him for the sake of him that's
gone "

And Dora took the child, and went her way
Across the wheat, and sat upon a mound 70
That was unswon, where many poppies grew.
Far off the farmer came into the field

And spied her not, for none of all his men
Dare tell him Dora waited with the child,
And Dora would have risen and gone to him,
But her heart failed her; and the reapers
reaped, 76

And the sun fell, and all the land was dark
But when the morrow came, she rose and took

The child once more, and sat upon the mound; 79

And made a little wreath of all the flowers
That grew about, and tied it round his hat
To make him pleasing in her uncle's eye
Then when the farmer passed into the field
He spied her, and he left his men at work,
And came and said: "Where were you yester-
day? 85

Whose child is that? What are you doing
here?"

So Dora cast her eyes upon the ground,
And answered softly, "This is William's
child!"

"And did I not," said Allan, "did I not Forbid you, Dora?" Dora said again 90
"Do with me as you will, but take the child,
And bless him for the sake of him that's
gone!"

And Allan said. "I see it is a trick
Got up betwixt you and the woman there
I must be taught my duty, and by you! 95

You knew my word was law, and yet you dared

To slight it Well — for I will take the boy;
But go you hence, and never see me more."

So saying, he took the boy that cried aloud
And struggled hard. The wreath of flowers fell 100

At Dora's feet. She bowed upon her hands,
And the boy's cry came to her from the field
More and more distant She bowed down her
head,

Remembering the day when first she came,
And all the things that had been She bowed
down 105

And wept in secret, and the reapers reaped,
And the sun fell, and all the land was dark

Then Dora went to Mary's house, and stood

Upon the threshold. Mary saw the boy
Was not with Dora She broke out in praise
To God, that helped her in her widowhood
And Dora said "My uncle took the boy; 112
But, Mary, let me live and work with you
He says that he will never see me more "

Then answered Mary "This shall never be,
That thou shouldst take my trouble on thy-
self; 116

And, now I think, he shall not have the boy,
For he will teach him hardness, and to slight
His mother Therefore thou and I will go,
And I will have my boy, and bring him home,
And I will beg of him to take thee back. 121
But if he will not take thee back again,
Then thou and I will live within one house,
And work for William's child, until he grows
Of age to help us."

So the women kissed 125
Each other, and set out, and reached the farm
The door was off the latch, they peeped, and saw

The boy set up betwixt his grandsire's knees,
Who thrust him in the hollows of his arm,
And clapped him on the hands and on the cheeks, 130

Like one that loved him, and the lad stretched
out

And babbled for the golden seal that hung
From Allan's watch and sparkled by the fire
Then they came in, but when the boy beheld
His mother, he cried out to come to her, 135
And Allan set him down, and Mary said

"O father! — if you let me call you so —

I never came a-begging for myself,
 Or William, or this child; but now I come
 For Dora; take her back, she loves you well.
 O sir, when William died, he died at peace 141
 With all men, for I asked him, and he said,
 He could not ever rue his marrying me —
 I had been a patient wife; but, sir, he said
 That he was wrong to cross his father thus
 'God bless him!' he said, 'and may he never
 know 146
 The troubles I have gone through!' Then he turned
 His face and passed — unhappy that I am!
 But now, sir, let me have my boy, for you Will make him hard, and he will learn to slight 150
 His father's memory; and take Dora back,
 And let all this be as it was before "
 So Mary said, and Dora hid her face
 By Mary. There was silence in the room;
 And all at once the old man burst in sobs: 155
 "I have been to blame — to blame. I have killed my son
 I have killed him — but I loved him — my dear son
 May God forgive me! — I have been to blame.
 Kiss me, my children "
 Then they clung about
 The old man's neck, and kissed him many times. 160
 And all the man was broken with remorse;
 And all his love came back a hundredfold;
 And for three hours he sobbed o'er William's
 child
 Thinking of William
 So those four abode
 Within one house together, and as years 165
 Went forward Mary took another mate,
 But Dora lived unmarried till her death

ULYSSES

It little profits that an idle king,
 By this still hearth, among these barren crags,
 Matched with an aged wife, I mete and dole
 Unequal laws unto a savage race,
 That hoard, and sleep, and feed, and know not me 5
 I cannot rest from travel, I will drink
 Life to the lees. All times I have enjoyed Greatly, have suffered greatly, both with those
 That loved me, and alone, on shore, and when
 Through scudding drifts the rainy Hyades 10

The woods decay, the woods decay and fall,
 The vapors weep their burthen to the ground,
 Man comes and tills the field and lies beneath,
 And after many a summer dies the swan
 Me only cruel immortality 5
 Consumes, I wither slowly in thine arms,
 Here at the quiet limit of the world,
 A white-haired shadow roaming like a dream
 The ever-silent spaces of the East,
 Far-folded mists, and gleaming halls of morn
 Alas! for this gray shadow, once a man —
 So glorious in his beauty and thy choice, 12
 Who madest him thy chosen, that he seemed
 To his great heart none other than a god!
 I asked thee, "Give me immortality" 15
 Then didst thou grant mine asking with a smile,
 Like wealthy men who care not how they give
 But thy strong Hours indignant worked their wills,
 And beat me down and marred and wasted
 me,
 And though they could not end me, left me
 maimed 20

These lines contain Tennyson's favorite doctrine of the unconquerable will

Tithonus Tithonus was the son of Laomedon, king of Troy, and the husband of Aurora, goddess of the dawn. Aurora asked the gods to grant Tithonus immortality, but she neglected to ask for him also eternal youth, and he became so withered and ugly that she turned him into a grasshopper. Cf. the fate of the Struldbrugs in Swift's Gulliver's Travels, III, 10

18 Hours, the goddesses who cause all things to come into being, to ripen, and to decay at the appointed time

Immortal age beside immortal youth,
 And all I was in ashes. Can thy love,
 Thy beauty, make amends, though even now,
 Close over us, the silver star, thy guide, 25 Shines in those tremulous eyes that fill with tears
 To hear me? Let me go; take back thy gift
 Why should a man desire in any way
 To vary from the kindly race of men,
 Or pass beyond the goal of ordinance 30
 Where all should pause, as is most meet for
 all?
 A soft air fans the cloud apart; there comes A glimpse of that dark world where I was born
 Once more the old mysterious glimmer steals
 From thy pure brows, and from thy shoulders
 pure, 35
 And bosom beating with a heart renewed.
 Thy cheek begins to redden through the
 gloom,
 Thy sweet eyes brighten slowly close to mine,
 Ere yet they blind the stars, and the wild team
 Which love thee, yearning for thy yoke, arise,
 And shake the darkness from their loosened
 manes, 41
 And beat the twilight into flakes of fire.
 Lo! ever thus thou growest beautiful
 In silence, then, before thine answer given,
 Departest, and thy tears are on my cheek. 45
 Why wilt thou ever scare me with thy tears,
 And make me tremble lest a saying learnt,
 In days far-off, on that dark earth, be true?
 "The gods themselves cannot recall their gifts."
 Ay me! ay me! with what another heart 50
 In days far-off, and with what other eyes
 I used to watch — if I be he that watched —
 The lucid outline forming round thee; saw
 The dim curls kindle into sunny rings;
 Changed with thy mystic change, and felt my
 blood 55
 Glow with the glow that slowly crimsoned all
 Thy presence and thy portals, while I lay,
 Mouth, forehead, eyelids, growing dewy-warm
 With kisses balmier than half-opening buds
 Of April, and could hear the lips that kissed Whispering I knew not what of wild and sweet, 61
 Like that strange song I heard Apollo sing,
 While Ithone like a mist rose into towers
 Yet hold me not forever in thine East;
 How can my nature longer mix with thine?
 Coldly thy rosy shadows bathe me, cold 66

Are all thy lights, and cold my wrinkled feet Upon thy glimmering thresholds, when the steam
Floats up from those dim fields about the homes
Of happy men that have the power to die, 70
And grassy barrows of the happier dead.
Release me, and restore me to the ground.
Thou seest all things, thou wilt see my grave;
Thou wilt renew thy beauty morn by morn,
I earth in earth forget these empty courts, 75
And thee returning on thy silver wheels.

LOCKSLEY HALL

Comrades, leave me here a little, while as yet
'tis early morn;
Leave me here, and when you want me, sound
upon the bugle-horn

'Tis the place, and all around it, as of old,
the curlews call,
Dreary gleams about the moorland flying over
Locksley Hall;

Locksley Hall, that in the distance overlooks the sandy tracts, 5
And the hollow ocean-ridges roaring into cataracts.

Many a night from yonder ivied casement,
ere I went to rest,
Did I look on great Orion sloping slowly to the west.

Many a night I saw the Pleiads, rising through the mellow shade,
Glitter like a swarm of fireflies tangled in a silver braid 10

Here about the beach I wandered, nourishing
a youth sublime
With the fairy tales of science, and the long result of time,

When the centuries behind me like a fruitful land reposed,
When I clung to all the present for the promise that it closed,

When I dipped into the future far as human eye could see, 15
Saw the vision of the world and all the wonder that would be —

In the spring a fuller crimson comes upon the robin's breast;
In the spring the wanton lapwing gets himself another crest;

In the spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished dove;
In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. 20

Then her cheek was pale and thinner than should be for one so young,
And her eyes on all my motions with a mute observance hung.

And I said, "My cousin Amy, speak and speak the truth to me;
Trust me, cousin, all the current of my being sets to thee."

On her pallid cheek and forehead came a color and a light, 25
As I have seen the rosy red flushing in the northern night.

And she turned — her bosom shaken with a sudden storm of sighs —
All the spirit deeply dawning in the dark of hazel eyes —

Saying, "I have hid my feelings, fearing they should do me wrong",
Saying, "Dost thou love me, cousin?" weeping, "I have loved thee long " 30

Love took up the glass of Time, and turned it in his glowing hands;
Every moment, lightly shaken, ran itself in golden sands.

Love took up the harp of Life, and smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the chord of Self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight

Many a morning on the moorland did we hear the copses ring, 35
And her whisper thronged my pulses with the fullness of the spring.

Many an evening by the waters did we watch
the stately ships,
And our spirits rushed together at the touching of the lips.

O my cousin, shallow-hearted! O my Amy, mine no more!

truth the poet sings, 75
That a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remem-

Hide me from my deep emotion, O thou wondrous Mother-Age!

Make me feel the wild pulsation that I felt before the strife,
When I heard my days before me, and the tumult of my life; 110

Yearning for the large excitement that the coming years would yield,
Eager-hearted as a boy when first he leaves
his father's field,

And at night along the dusky highway near
and nearer drawn,
Sees in heaven the light of London flaring like a dreary dawn;

And his spirit leaps within him to be gone before him then, 115
Underneath the light he looks at, in among the throngs of men,

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new;
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do.

For I dipped into the future, far as human eye

Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be, 120

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies
of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down
with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue,

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm, 125
With the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunder-storm,

Till the war-drum throbbed no longer, and the battle-flags were furled

GODIVA

*I waited for the train at Coventry;
I hung with grooms and porters on the bridge,
To watch the three tall spires, and there I shaped
The city's ancient legend into this:*

Not only we, the latest seed of Time, 5
New men, that in the flying of a wheel
Cry down the past, not only we, that prate
Of rights and wrongs, have loved the people
well,
And loathed to see them overtaxed; but she Did more, and underwent, and overcame, 10
The woman of a thousand summers back,
Godiva, wife to that grim Earl, who ruled
In Coventry; for when he laid a tax
Upon his town, and all the mothers brought Their children, clamoring, "If we pay, we starve!" 15

She sought her lord, and found him, where he strode

About the hall, among his dogs, alone,
His beard a foot before him, and his hair
A yard behind She told him of their tears,
And prayed him, "If they pay this tax, they starve." 20

Whereat he stared, replying, half-amazed,
"You would not let your little finger ache
For such as these?" — "But I would die," said she

He laughed, and swore by Peter and by Paul,
Then filiped at the diamond in her ear: 25
"Oh, ay, ay, ay, you talk!" — "Alas!" she
said,

"But prove me what it is I would not do"
And from a heart as rough as Esau's hand,
He answered, "Ride you naked through the town, 29

And I repeat it"; and nodding, as in scorn,
He parted, with great strides among his dogs

So left alone, the passions of her mind,
As winds from all the compass shift and blow,
Made war upon each other for an hour,
Till pity won. She sent a herald forth, 35

And bade him cry, with sound of trumpet, all
The hard condition, but that she would loose
The people; therefore, as they loved her well,
From then till noon no foot should pace the
street, 39

No eye look down, she passing, but that all Should keep within, door shut, and window barred.

Godiva According to the legend here recorded, probably partly true, Godiva was the wife of Leofric, who was Earl of Mercia and Lord of Coventry about 1040, she rode naked through the town as the price of remitting a burdensome tax on her people

3 tall spires, those of St. Michael's Church, Trinity Church, and Christ Church 28 Esau, the son of Isaac and Rebekah His hands and body were covered with hair See Genesis, 25 21-34

Then fled she to her inmost bower, and
there
Unclassed the wedded eagles of her belt,
The grim earl's gift, but ever at a breath
She lingered, looking like a summer moon 45
Half-dipped in cloud Anon she shook her
head,
And showered the rippled ringlets to her knee;
Unclad herself in haste; adown the stair
Stole on, and like a creeping sunbeam slid
From pillar unto pillar, until she reached 50
The gateway, there she found her palfrey trapped
In purple blazoned with armorial gold
Then she rode forth, clothed on with chastity.
The deep air listened round her as she rode,
And all the low wind hardly breathed for fear 55
The little wide-mouthed heads upon the spout
Had cunning eyes to see, the barking cur
Made her cheek flame, her palfrey's footfall shot
Light horrors through her pulses, the blind walls
Were full of chinks and holes; and over-
head
Fantastic gables, crowding, stared, but she 61
Not less through all bore up, till, last, she saw
The white-flowered elder-thicket from the
field
Gleam through the Gothic archway in the wall.
Then she rode back, clothed on with
chastity. 65
And one low churl, compact of thankless
earth,
The fatal byword of all years to come,
Boring a little auger-hole in fear, Peeped — but his eyes, before they had their
will,
Were shriveled into darkness in his head, 70
And dropped before him. So the Powers, who wait
On noble deeds, canceled a sense misused;
And she, that knew not, passed; and all at
once,
With twelve great shocks of sound, the shameless noon
Was clashed and hammered from a hundred towers, 75
One after one; but even then she gained
Her bower, whence reissuing, robed and crowned,
To meet her lord, she took the tax away
And built herself an everlasting name.

SIR GALAHAD

My good blade carves the casques of men,
My tough lance thrusteth sure,
My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure
The shattering trumpet shrilleth high, 5
The hard brands shiver on the steel,
The splintered spear-shafts crack and fly,
The horse and rider reel,
They reel, they roll in clanging lists,
And when the tide of combat stands, 10
Perfume and flowers fall in showers,
That lightly rain from ladies' hands.

How sweet are looks that ladies bend
On whom their favors fall!
For them I battle till the end, 15
To save from shame and thrall;
But all my heart is drawn above,
My knees are bowed in crypt and shrine;
I never felt the kiss of love,
Nor maiden's hand in mine 20
More bounteous aspects on me beam,
Me mightier transports move and thrill;
So keep I fair through faith and prayer
A virgin heart in work and will.

When down the stormy crescent goes, 25
A light before me swims,
Between dark stems the forest glows,
I hear a noise of hymns.
Then by some secret shrine I ride;
I hear a voice, but none are there; 30
The stalls are void, the doors are wide,
The tapers burning fair.
Fair gleams the snowy altar-cloth,
The silver vessels sparkle clean,
The shrill bell rings, the censer swings, 35
And solemn chaunts resound between.

Sometimes on lonely mountain-meres
I find a magic bark.
I leap on board, no helmsman steers;
I float till all is dark. 40
A gentle sound, an awful light!
Three angels bear the Holy Grail;
With folded feet, in stoles of white,
On sleeping wings they sail.
Ah, blessed vision! blood of God! 45
My spirit beats her mortal bars,
As down dark tides the glory slides,
And starlike mingles with the stars.

When on my goodly charger borne
Through dreaming towns I go, 50

The cock crows ere the Christmas morn,
 The streets are dumb with snow.
 The tempest crackles on the leads,
 And, ringing, springs from brand and mail,
 But o'er the dark a glory spreads, 55
 And gilds the driving hail.
 I leave the plain, I climb the height;
 No branchy thicket shelter yields;
 But blessed forms in whistling storms
 Fly o'er waste fens and windy fields. 60

A maiden knight — to me is given
 Such hope, I know not fear;
 I yearn to breathe the airs of heaven
 That often meet me here.
 I muse on joy that will not cease, 65
 Pure spaces clothed in living beams,
 Pure lilies of eternal peace,
 Whose odors haunt my dreams;
 And, stricken by an angel's hand,
 This mortal armor that I wear, 70
 This weight and size, this heart and eyes,
 Are touched, are turned to finest air.

The clouds are broken in the sky,
 And through the mountain-walls
 A rolling organ-harmony 75
 Swells up and shakes and falls.
 Then move the trees, the copses nod,
 Wings flutter, voices hover clear:
 "O just and faithful knight of God!
 Ride on! the prize is near " 80
 So pass I hostel, hall, and grange;
 By bridge and ford, by park and pale,
 All-armed I ride, whate'er betide,
 Until I find the Holy Grail. (1842)

 She was more fair than words can say;
 Barefooted came the beggar maid

 "She is more beautiful than day."

THE VISION OF SIN

I

I had a vision when the night was late;
 A youth came riding toward a palace-gate.
 He rode a horse with wings, that would have flown,
 But that his heavy rider kept him down.
 And from the palace came a child of sin, 5
 And took him by the curls, and led him in,
 Where sat a company with heated eyes,
 Expecting when a fountain should arise.
 A sleepy light upon their brows and lips—
 As when the sun, a crescent of eclipse, 10 Dreams over lake and lawn, and isles and capes —
 Suffused them, sitting, lying, languid shapes,
 By heaps of gourds, and skins of wine and piles of grapes.

Then methought I heard a mellow sound,
 Gathering up from all the lower ground, 15
 Narrowing in to where they sat assembled,
 Low voluptuous music winding trembled,
 Woven in circles. They that heard it sighed,
 Panted hand-in-hand with faces pale,
 Swung themselves, and in low tones replied.
 Till the fountain spouted, showering wide 21
 Sleet of diamond-drift and pearly hail
 Then the music touched the gates and died,
 Rose again from where it seemed to fail.
 Stormed in orbs of song, a growing gale, 25
 Till thronging in and in, to where they waited,
 As 'twere a hundred-throated nightingale,
 The strong tempestuous treble throbbed and palpitated;
 Ran into its giddiest whirl of sound,
 Caught the sparkles, and in circles, 30
 Purple gauzes, golden hazes, liquid mazes,
 Flung the torrent rainbow round
 Then they started from their places,
 Moved with violence, changed in hue,
 Caught each other with wild grimaces, 35
 Half-invisible to the view,
 Wheeling with precipitate paces
 To the melody, till they flew,
 Hair and eyes and limbs and faces,
 Twisted hard in fierce embraces, 40

And then I looked up toward a mountain-

That girt the region with high cliff and lawn
I saw that every morning, far withdrawn
Beyond the darkness and the cataract,
God made Himself an awful rose of dawn, 50
Unheeded, and detaching, fold by fold,
From those still heights, and, slowly drawing near,
A vapor heavy, hueless, formless, cold,
Came floating on for many a month and year.

And warned that madman ere it grew too
late,
But, as in dreams, I could not. Mine was broken,
When that cold vapor touched the palace

And linked again I saw within my head
A gray and gap-toothed man as lean as death,
Who slowly rode across a withered heath, 61

 And one: "He had not wholly quenched his

 A little grain of conscience made him sour "
 At last I heard a voice upon the slope
 Cry to the summit, "Is there any hope?" 220
 To which an answer pealed from that high
 land,
 But in a tongue no man could understand,
 And on the glimmering limit far withdrawn
 God made Himself an awful rose of dawn.

 On thy cold gray stones, O Sea!
 And I would that my tongue could utter
 The thoughts that arise in me.
 O well for the fisherman's boy, 5
 That he shouts with his sister at play!
 O well for the sailor lad,
 That he sings in his boat on the bay!

And the stately ships go on
 To their haven under the hill, 10
 But O for the touch of a vanished hand,
 And the sound of a voice that is still!

Break, break, break,
 At the foot of thy crags, O Sea!
 But the tender grace of a day that is dead 15
 Will never come back to me (1842)

THE POET'S SONG

The rain had fallen, the poet arose,
 He passed by the town and out of the
 street;
 A light wind blew from the gates of the sun,
 And waves of shadow went over the wheat, 5
 And he sat him down in a lonely place,
 And chanted a melody loud and sweet,
 That made the wild-swan pause in her cloud,
 And the lark drop down at his feet

The swallow stopped as he hunted the fly,
 The snake slipped under a spray, 10
 The wild hawk stood with the down on his beak,
 And stared, with his foot on the prey;

Break, Break, Break This is one of the poems inspired by the death of Tennyson's intimate friend, Arthur Hallam. See

SONGS FROM THE PRINCESS

AS THROUGH THE LAND AT EVE WE WENT

As through the land at eve we went,
 And plucked the ripened ears,
 We fell out, my wife and I,
 O we fell out, I know not why, 5
 And kissed again with tears
 And blessings on the falling out
 That all the more endears,
 When we fall out with those we love
 And kiss again with tears!
 For when we came where lies the child 10
 We lost in other years,
 There above the little grave,
 O there above the little grave,
 We kissed again with tears

SWEET AND LOW

Sweet and low, sweet and low,
 Wind of the western sea,
 Low, low, breathe and blow,
 Wind of the western sea!
 Over the rolling waters go, 5
 Come from the dying moon, and blow,
 Blow him again to me;
 While my little one, while my pretty one,
 sleeps.

Sleep and rest, sleep and rest,
 Father will come to thee soon; 10
 Rest, rest, on mother's breast,
 Father will come to thee soon;
 Father will come to his babe in the nest,
 Silver sails all out of the west
 Under the silver moon; 15
 Sleep, my little one, sleep, my pretty one,
 sleep.

Songs from The Princess See Critical Notes
As through the Land This song stands between Part I and Part II. It is in contrast with Ida's ideas about the worth of children
Sweet and Low This song stands between Part II and Part III. It emphasizes the love for children
The Splendor Falls This song stands between Part III and Part IV. It emphasizes the immortality of the influence of love. The song was suggested by the echoes from a bugle heard by Tennyson on the Lakes of Killarney, in Ireland, in 1848

And the wild cataract leaps in glory.
 Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying.
 Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, 6
 dying.

O hark, O hear! how thin and clear,
 And thinner, clearer, farther going!
 O sweet and far from cliff and scar
 The horns of Elfland faintly blowing! 10
 Blow, let us hear the purple glens reply-
 ing,
 Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying,
 dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky,
 They faint on hill or field or river;
 Our echoes roll from soul to soul, 15
 And grow forever and forever.
 Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes fly-
 ing,
 And answer, echoes, answer, dying, dying,
 dying.

TEARS, IDLE TEARS

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
 Tears from the depth of some divine despair
 Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
 In looking on the happy autumn-fields,
 And thinking of the days that are no more. 5

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail,
 That brings our friends up from the underworld, rather than the first
 Sad as the last which reddens over one
 That sinks with all we love below the verge;
 So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more. 10

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer
 dawns
 The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
 To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
 The casement slowly grows a glimmering
 square;
 So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remembered kisses after death, 16
 And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feigned
 On lips that are for others; deep as love,
 Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
 O Death in Life, the days that are no more! 20

10 Elfland The echoes sound as if they came from fairyland, which in Ireland is always close to the world of mortals.
Tears, Idle Tears This song, from Part IV, is sung by one of the maidens in Ida's tent, in the presence of Ida and her maidens and of the three men disguised as women. It expresses the maiden's longing for the past. See Critical Notes.

O SWALLOW, SWALLOW

O Swallow, Swallow, flying, flying south,
 Fly to her, and fall upon her gilded eaves,
 And tell her, tell her, what I tell to thee.

O tell her, Swallow, thou that knowest each,
 That bright and fierce and fickle is the South,
 And dark and true and tender is the North. 6

O Swallow, Swallow, if I could follow, and
 light
 Upon her lattice, I would pipe and trill,
 And cheep and twitter twenty million loves.

O were I thou that she might take me in, 10
 And lay me on her bosom, and her heart
 Would rock the snowy cradle till I died!

Why lingereth she to clothe her heart with
 love,
 Delaying as the tender ash delays
 To clothe herself, when all the woods are
 green? 15

O tell her, Swallow, that thy brood is flown,
 Say to her, I do but wanton in the South,
 But in the North long since my nest is made

O tell her, brief is life but love is long,
 And brief the sun of summer in the North, 20
 And brief the moon of beauty in the South

O Swallow, flying from the golden woods,
 Fly to her, and pipe and woo her, and make her mine,
 And tell her, tell her, that I follow thee.

THY VOICE IS HEARD

Thy voice is heard through rolling drums
 That beat to battle where he stands;
 Thy face across his fancy comes,
 And gives the battle to his hands.
 A moment, while the trumpets blow, 5
 He sees his brood about thy knee;
 The next, like fire he meets the foe,
 And strikes him dead for thine and thee.

O Swallow, Swallow This song is sung by the disguised prince in response to Ida's request for a song of promise rather than one of retrospect like the one she had just heard, Tears, Idle Tears. It is a song of a lover of the North as he watches a swallow speed southward in the autumn.
 His lady-love is in the South. In The Princess Ida is referred to as the Princess "from the South."

4 thou that knowest each. The swallow knows both the North and the South since it migrates from one to the other according to the season of the year. 4-6 He fears a rival in the South.

Thy Voice Is Heard This song is sung by one of the maid-ens at the end of Part IV. It is a song of courage inspired by domestic love, and strikes the keynote of the warlike section that follows it.

HOME THEY BROUGHT HER WARRIOR DEAD

Home they brought her warrior dead,
 She nor swooned nor uttered cry.
 All her maidens, watching, said,
 "She must weep or she will die"

Then they praised him, soft and low, 5
 Called him worthy to be loved,
 Truest friend and noblest foe;
 Yet she neither spoke nor moved.

Stole a maiden from her place,
 Lightly to the warrior stepped, 10
 Took the face-cloth from the face;
 Yet she neither moved nor wept.

Rose a nurse of ninety years,
 Set his child upon her knee —
 Like summer tempest came her tears — 15
 "Sweet my child, I live for thee."

OUR ENEMIES HAVE FALLEN

Our enemies have fallen, have fallen; the seed,
 The little seed they laughed at in the dark,
 Has risen and cleft the soil, and grown a bulk
 Of spanless girth, that lays on every side
 A thousand arms and rushes to the sun 5

Our enemies have fallen, have fallen They
 came;
 The leaves were wet with women's tears, they
 heard
 A noise of songs they would not understand;
 They marked it with the red cross to the fall,
 And would have strown it, and are fallen themselves 10

Our enemies have fallen, have fallen; they
 came,
 The woodmen with their axes, lo, the tree!
 But we will make it faggots for the hearth,
 And shape it plank and beam for roof and floor,
 And boats and bridges for the use of men 15

Our enemies have fallen, have fallen; they struck;
 With their own blows they hurt themselves, nor knew

Home They Brought Her Warrior Dead This song stands between Part V and Part VI. It comes after the battle and fittingly stresses the duty and the joy of motherhood.

Our Enemies Have Fallen This song is sung by Ida in Part VI, as she holds Psyche's babe in her arms. The battle is over, the Prince's warriors have been defeated, many have been wounded on both sides, and Ida has generously offered "the tender ministries of female hands and hospitality."

There dwelt an iron nature in the grain,
 The glittering ax was broken in their arms,
 Their arms were shattered to the shoulder blade. 20

Our enemies have fallen, but this shall grow
 A night of summer from the heat, a breadth
 Of autumn, dropping fruits of power; and rolled
 With music in the growing breeze of Time,
 The tops shall strike from star to star, the fangs 25
 Shall move the stony bases of the world

ASK ME NO MORE

Ask me no more—the moon may draw the sea;
 The cloud may stoop from heaven and take the shape,
 With fold to fold, of mountain or of cape;
 But O too fond, when have I answered thee?
 Ask me no more. 5

Ask me no more—what answer should I give?
 I love not hollow cheek or faded eye,
 Yet, O my friend, I will not have thee die!
 Ask me no more, lest I should bid thee live;
 Ask me no more. 10

Ask me no more—thy fate and mine are sealed,
 I strove against the stream and all in vain,
 Let the great river take me to the main
 No more, dear love, for at a touch I yield;
 Ask me no more. 15

NOW SLEEPS THE CRIMSON PETAL

Now sleeps the crimson petal, now the
 white;
 Nor waves the cypress in the palace walk;
 Nor winks the gold fin in the porphyry font
 The firefly wakens; waken thou with me

Now droops the milk-white peacock like a ghost, 5
 And like a ghost she glimmers on to me.

Now lies the Earth all Danaë to the stars,
 And all thy heart lies open unto me.

Ask Me No More This song stands between Part VI and Part VII. It is an expression of the slow yielding of reluctant love. The college has been turned into a hospital, Ida's purpose has been abandoned, and many maidens have gone home.

Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal This song was read aloud by the Princess as she watched at night by the wounded Prince, in Part VII.

7 The earth is compared to Danaë, the princess whom Zeus in the form of a golden shower visited in a tower of brass in which her father had imprisoned her.

Now slides the silent meteor on, and leaves
A shining furrow, as thy thoughts in me. 10

Now folds the lily all her sweetness up,
And slips into the bosom of the lake
So fold thyself, my dearest, thou, and slip
Into my bosom and be lost in me.

COME DOWN, O MAID

Come down, O maid, from yonder mountain
height.
What pleasure lives in height (the shepherd sang),
In height and cold, the splendor of the hills?
But cease to move so near the heavens, and cease
To glide a sunbeam by the blasted pine, 5
To sit a star upon the sparkling spire;
And come, for Love is of the valley, come,
For Love is of the valley, come thou down
And find him, by the happy threshold, he,
Or hand in hand with Plenty in the maize, 10
Or red with spirted purple of the vats,
Or foxhke in the vine; nor cares to walk
With Death and Morning on the Silver Horns, Nor wilt thou snare him in the white ra-
vine,
Nor find him dropped upon the firths of ice;
That huddling slant in furrow-cloven falls 16
To roll the torrent out of dusky doors.
But follow; let the torrent dance thee down
To find him in the valley, let the wild
Lean-headed eagles yelp alone, and leave 20
The monstrous ledges there to slope, and spill
Their thousand wreaths of dangling water-
smoke,
That like a broken purpose waste in air.
So waste not thou, but come; for all the vales
Await thee, azure pillars of the hearth 25
Arise to thee; the children call, and I, Thy shepherd, pipe, and sweet is every
sound,
Sweeter thy voice, but every sound is sweet;
Myriads of rivulets hurrying through the lawn,
The moan of doves in immemorial elms, 30
And murmuring of innumerable bees.

(1850)

Come Down, O Maid. This song also was read aloud by the Princess. It is a call for her to forsake a life of isolation and lonely thought and to ally herself with natural human needs and loves.

12 foxlike in the vine. Cf. The Song of Solomon, 2 15—our vines have tender grapes." 13 the Silver Horns, the peaks of the mountains. The Silberhorn is a spur of the Jungfrau, in the Alps 15 firths of ice, glaciers 16 furrow-cloven, split by crevasses 17 dusky doors, the piled-up mass of refuse through which the stream emerges

IN MEMORIAM A. H. H

OBIT 1833

PROLOGUE

Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove;

Thine are these orbs of light and shade; 5
Thou madest Life in man and brute;
Thou madest Death, and lo, thy foot
Is on the skull which thou hast made.

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust:
Thou madest man, he knows not why, 10
He thinks he was not made to die;
And thou hast made him; thou art just

Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, thou
Our wills are ours, we know not how; 15
Our wills are ours, to make them thine.

Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they. 20

We have but faith; we cannot know,
For knowledge is of things we see;
And yet we trust it comes from thee,
A beam in darkness, let it grow.

Let knowledge grow from more to more, 25
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music as before,

But vaster We are fools and slight;
We mock thee when we do not fear 30
But help thy foolish ones to bear;
Help thy vain worlds to bear thy light.

Forgive what seemed my sin in me,
What seemed my worth since I began;
For merit lives from man to man, 35
And not from man, O Lord, to thee.

Forgive my grief for one removed,
Thy creature, whom I found so fair.

in the light of the sun and partly in shadow. 17 systems,
i.e., systems of theology and philosophy 28 as before, before mind and soul had become separated by the modern movement of science and skepticism 32 thy light, the light of knowledge.

I trust he lives in thee, and there
I find him worthier to be loved 40

Forgive these wild and wandering cries,
Confusions of a wasted youth,
Forgive them where they fail in truth,
And in thy wisdom make me wise

—

I

I held it truth, with him who sings
To one clear harp in divers tones,
That men may rise on stepping-stones
Of their dead selves to higher things

But who shall so forecast the years
And find in loss a gain to match?
Or reach a hand through time to catch
The far-off interest of tears?

5

Let Love clasp Grief lest both be drowned,
Let darkness keep her raven gloss
Ah, sweeter to be drunk with loss,
To dance with Death, to beat the ground,

10

Than that the victor Hours should scorn
The long result of love, and boast,
"Behold the man that loved and lost,
But all he was is overworn."

15

2

Old yew, which graspest at the stones
That name the underlying dead,
Thy fibers net the dreamless head,
Thy roots are wrapped about the bones

The seasons bring the flower again,
And bring the firstling to the flock;
And in the dusk of thee the clock
Beats out the little lives of men.

5

O not for thee the glow, the bloom,
Who changest not in any gale,
Nor branding summer suns avail
To touch thy thousand years of gloom;

10

And gazing on thee, sullen tree,
Sick for thy stubborn hardihood,
I seem to fail from out my blood
And grow incorporate into thee.

15

3

O Sorrow, cruel fellowship,
O Priestess in the vaults of Death,

Prologue 42 wasted, made desolate
Section 1 1 him, Goethe, whom Tennyson ranked highest among modern lyric poets because he was "consum-mate in so many different styles" (Memoir, II, 391)

O sweet and bitter in a breath,
What whispers from thy lying lip?

"The stars," she whispers, "blindly run;
A web is woven across the sky,
From out waste places comes a cry,
And murmurs from the dying sun;

5

"And all the phantom, Nature, stands —
With all the music in her tone,
A hollow echo of my own —
A hollow form with empty hands "

10

And shall I take a thing so blind,
Embrace her as my natural good,
Or crush her, like a vice of blood,
Upon the threshold of the mind?

To Sleep I give my powers away;
My will is bondsman to the dark;
I sit within a helmless bark,
And with my heart I muse and say:

O heart, how fares it with thee now,
That thou shouldst fail from thy desire,
Who scarcely darest to inquire,
"What is it makes me beat so low?"

5

Something it is which thou hast lost,
Some pleasure from thine early years
Break, thou deep vase of chilling tears,
That grief hath shaken into frost!

10

Such clouds of nameless trouble cross
All night below the darkened eyes,
With morning wakes the will, and cries,
"Thou shalt not be the fool of loss "

15

5

I sometimes hold it half a sin
To put in words the grief I feel,
For words, like Nature, half reveal
And half conceal the Soul within

But, for the unquiet heart and brain,
A use in measured language lies,
The sad mechanic exercise,
Like dull narcotics, numbing pain

5

In words, like weeds, I'll wrap me o'er,
Like coarsest clothes against the cold,
But that large grief which these enfold
Is given in outline and no more 10

6

One writes that "other friends remain,"
That "loss is common to the race" —

Section 5 9 weeds, garments

And common is the commonplace,
And vacant chaff well meant for grain

That loss is common would not make
My own less bitter, rather more.
Too common! Never morning wore
To evening but some heart did break.

O father, wheresoe'er thou be,
Who pledgest now thy gallant son,
A shot, ere half thy draft be done,
Hath stilled the life that beat from thee.

O mother, praying God will save
Thy sailor — while thy head is bowed,
His heavy-shotted hammock-shroud
Drops in his vast and wandering grave.

Ye know no more than I who wrought
At that last hour to please him well;
Who mused on all I had to tell,
And something written, something thought;

Expecting still his advent home;
And ever met him on his way
With wishes, thinking, "here today,"
Or "here tomorrow will he come "

O somewhere, meek, unconscious dove,
That sittest ranging golden hair;
And glad to find thyself so fair,
Poor child, that waitest for thy love!

For now her father's chimney glows
In expectation of a guest;
And thinking "this will please him best,"
She takes a riband or a rose;

For he will see them on tonight;
And with the thought her color burns;
And, having left the glass, she turns
Once more to set a ringlet right;

And, even when she turned, the curse
Had fallen, and her future lord
Was drowned in passing through the ford,
Or killed in falling from his horse.

O what to her shall be the end?
And what to me remains of good?
To her perpetual maidenhood,
And unto me no second friend.

Dark house, by which once more I stand
Here in the long unlovely street,

Section 6 43 perpetual maidenhood Emily Tennyson
later married Captain Jesse, of the Royal Navy

Section 7 1 Dark house, the house in London where Hallam lived while studying law.

Doors, where my heart was used to beat
So quickly, waiting for a hand,

A hand that can be clasped no more —
Behold me, for I cannot sleep,
And like a guilty thing I creep
At earliest morning to the door.

He is not here, but far away
The noise of life begins again,
And ghastly through the drizzling rain
On the bald street breaks the blank day

8

A happy lover who has come
To look on her that loves him well,
Who 'lights and rings the gateway bell,
And learns her gone and far from home;

He saddens, all the magic light
Dies off at once from bower and hall,
And all the place is dark, and all
The chambers emptied of delight:

So find I every pleasant spot
In which we two were wont to meet —
The field, the chamber, and the street —
For all is dark where thou art not.

Yet as that other, wandering there
In those deserted walks, may find
A flower beat with rain and wind,
Which once she fostered up with care;

So seems it in my deep regret,
O my forsaken heart, with thee
And this poor flower of poesy
Which, little cared for, fades not yet.

But since it pleased a vanished eye,
I go to plant it on his tomb,
That if it can it there may bloom,
Or, dying, there at least may die.

9

Fair ship, that from the Italian shore
Saiest the placid ocean-plains
With my lost Arthur's loved remains,
Spread thy full wings, and waft him o'er.

So draw him home to those that mourn
In vain, a favorable speed
Ruffle thy mirrored mast, and lead
Through prosperous floods his holy urn

All night no ruder air perplex
Thy sliding keel, till Phosphor, bright

Section 9 1 Fair ship, etc Hallam's body was brought to England and buried at Clevedon, on the Severn River
10. Phosphor, Lucifer, the morning star

As our pure love, through early light
Shall glimmer on the dewy decks.

Sphere all your lights around, above;
Sleep, gentle heavens, before the prow;
Sleep, gentle winds, as he sleeps now, 15
My friend, the brother of my love;

My Arthur, whom I shall not see
Till all my widowed race be run;
Dear as the mother to the son,
More than my brothers are to me. 20

10

I hear the noise about thy keel;
I hear the bell struck in the night,
I see the cabin-window bright;
I see the sailor at the wheel.

Thou bring'st the sailor to his wife, 5
And traveled men from foreign lands;
And letters unto trembling hands;
And, thy dark freight, a vanished life.

So bring him, we have idle dreams;
This look of quiet flatters thus 10
Our home-bred fancies. O to us,
The fools of habit, sweeter seems

To rest beneath the clover sod,
That takes the sunshine and the rains,
Or where the kneeling hamlet drains 15
The chalice of the grapes of God,

Than if with thee the roaring wells
Should gulf him fathom-deep in brine,
And hands so often clasped in mine,
Should toss with tangle and with shells 20 11

Calm is the morn without a sound,
Calm as to suit a calmer grief,
And only through the faded leaf
The chestnut pattering to the ground,

Calm and deep peace on this high wold, 5
And on these dewes that drench the furze,
And all the silvery gossamers
That twinkle into green and gold,

Calm and still light on yon great plain
That sweeps with all its autumn bowers, 10
And crowded farms and lessening towers,
To mingle with the bounding main;

Section 10 15-16 where . God, in the church, where the people kneel at the altar for the communion service People were sometimes buried in English churches near or under the altar 20 tangle, a kind of seaweed

Section 11. 7 gossamers, cobwebs seen on grass and low bushes 11 lessening, diminishing by distance 12 bounding main, bordering sea

Calm and deep peace in this wide air,
These leaves that redden to the fall —
And in my heart, if calm at all, 15
If any calm, a calm despair;

Calm on the seas, and silver sleep,
And waves that sway themselves in rest,
And dead calm in that noble breast
Which heaves but with the heaving deep. 20 12

Lo, as a dove when up she springs
To bear through heaven a tale of woe,
Some dolorous message knit below
The wild pulsation of her wings,

Like her I go; I cannot stay; 5
I leave this mortal ark behind,
A weight of nerves without a mind,
And leave the cliffs, and haste away

O'er ocean-mirrors rounded large,
And reach the glow of southern skies, 10
And see the sails at distance rise,
And linger weeping on the marge,

And saying: "Comes he thus, my friend?
Is this the end of all my care?"
And circle moaning in the air 15
"Is this the end? Is this the end?"

And forward dart again, and play
About the prow, and back return
To where the body sits, and learn
That I have been an hour away. 20 13

Tears of the widower, when he sees
A late-lost form that sleep reveals,
And moves his doubtful arms, and feels
Her place is empty, fall like these;

Which weep a loss forever new, 5
A void where heart on heart reposed,
And, where warm hands have pressed and closed,

Silence, till I be silent too;

Which weep the comrade of my choice,
An awful thought, a life removed, 10
The human-hearted man I loved,
A Spirit, not a breathing voice.

Come Time, and teach me, many years,
I do not suffer in a dream;
For now so strange do these things seem, 15
Mine eyes have leisure for their tears,

My fancies time to rise on wing,
And glance about the approaching sails,

Section 13 13 many years, in apposition with Time

As though they brought but merchants'
bales,
And not the burthen that they bring. 20

14

If one should bring me this report,
That thou hadst touched the land today,
And I went down unto the quay,
And found thee lying in the port;

And standing, muffled round with woe, 5
Should see thy passengers in rank
Come stepping lightly down the plank,
And beckoning unto those they know;

And if along with these should come 10
The man I held as half-divine;
Should strike a sudden hand in mine,
And ask a thousand things of home;

And I should tell him all my pain, 15
And how my life had drooped of late,
And he should sorrow o'er my state
And marvel what possessed my brain;

And I perceived no touch of change, 20
No hint of death in all his frame,
But found him all in all the same,
I should not feel it to be strange.

15

Tonight the winds begin to rise
And roar from yonder dropping day;
The last red leaf is whirled away,
The rooks are blown about the skies;

The forest cracked, the waters curled, 5
The cattle huddled on the lea;
And wildly dashed on tower and tree
The sunbeam strikes along the world.

And but for fancies, which aver 10
That all thy motions gently pass
Athwart a plane of molten glass,
I scarce could brook the strain and stir

That makes the barren branches loud; 15
And but for fear it is not so,
The wild unrest that lives in woe
Would dote and pore on yonder cloud

That rises upward always higher,
And onward drags a laboring breast,
And topples round the dreary west,
A looming bastion fringed with fire. 20

Section 15 Compare this section with Section 11 10
thy motions, the motions of the ship

16

What words are these have fallen from me?
Can calm despair and wild unrest
Be tenants of a single breast,
Or Sorrow such a changeling be?

Or doth she only seem to take 5
The touch of change in calm or storm,
But knows no more of transient form
In her deep self, than some dead lake

That holds the shadow of a lark 10
Hung in the shadow of a heaven?
Or has the shock, so harshly given,
Confused me like the unhappy bark

That strikes by night a craggy shelf, 16
And staggers blindly ere she sink?
And stunned me from my power to think
And all my knowledge of myself;

And made me that delirious man 20
Whose fancy fuses old and new,
And flashes into false and true,
And mingles all without a plan?

17

Thou comest, much wept for, such a breeze
Compelled thy canvas, and my prayer
Was as the whisper of an air
To breathe thee over lonely seas.

For I in spirit saw thee move 5
Through circles of the bounding sky,
Week after week; the days go by,
Come quick, thou bringest all I love.

Henceforth, wherever thou mayst roam, 10
My blessing, like a line of light,
Is on the waters day and night,
And like a beacon guards thee home.

So may whatever tempest mars 15
Mid-ocean spare thee, sacred bark,
And balmy drops in summer dark
Slide from the bosom of the stars;

So kind an office hath been done, 20
Such precious relics brought by thee,
The dust of him I shall not see
Till all my widowed race be run.

18

'Tis well; 'tis something; we may stand
Where he in English earth is laid,

Section 16 2 calm despair and wild unrest, as expressed in Sections 11 and 15 respectively
Section 18 2 Where laid, in St Andrew's Church,
Clevedon, in the west of England

And from his ashes may be made
The violet of his native land.

'Tis little; but it looks in truth 5
As if the quiet bones were blest
Among familiar names to rest
And in the places of his youth.

Come then, pure hands, and bear the head
That sleeps or wears the mask of sleep, 10
And come, whatever loves to weep,
And hear the ritual of the dead.

Ah yet, even yet, if this might be,
I, falling on his faithful heart,
Would breathing through his lips impart 15
The life that almost dies in me;

That dies not, but endures with pain,
And slowly forms the firmer mind,
Treasuring the look it cannot find,
The words that are not heard again. 20

19

The Danube to the Severn gave
The darkened heart that beat no more;
They laid him by the pleasant shore,
And in the hearing of the wave.

There twice a day the Severn fills, 5
The salt sea-water passes by,
And hushes half the babbling Wye,
And makes a silence in the hills.

The Wye is hushed nor moved along,
And hushed my deepest grief of all, 10
When filled with tears that cannot fall,
I brim with sorrow drowning song.

The tide flows down, the wave again
Is vocal in its wooded walls;
My deeper anguish also falls, 15
And I can speak a little then.

20

The lesser griefs that may be said,
That breathe a thousand tender vows,
Are but as servants in a house
Where lies the master newly dead; 20

Section 18 9 pure hands. The bearers at the funeral were farmers on the Clevedon estate. 13-16 This stanza was suggested by the restoring of the Shunammite's son by Elisha, 2 Kings, 4 32-37 — "And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, the child was dead and laid upon his bed. And he went up and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and he stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm."

Section 19 1 Vienna, where Hallam died, is on the Danube River. Clevedon overlooks the Severn where it flows into the Bristol Channel. The Wye (line 7) joins the Severn a short distance above Clevedon.

Who speak their feeling as it is, 5
And weep the fullness from the mind.
"It will be hard," they say, "to find Another service such as this,"

My lighter moods are like to these,
That out of words a comfort win; 10
But there are other griefs within,
And tears that at their fountain freeze;

For by the hearth the children sit
Cold in that atmosphere of death,
And scarce endure to draw the breath, 15
Or like to noiseless phantoms flit;

But open converse is there none,
So much the vital spirits sink
To see the vacant chair, and think,
"How good! how kind! and he is gone." 20 21

I sing to him that rests below,
And, since the grasses round me wave,
I take the grasses of the grave,
And make them pipes whereon to blow.

The traveler hears me now and then, 5
And sometimes harshly will he speak:
"This fellow would make weakness weak,
And melt the waxen hearts of men."

Another answers: "Let him be,
He loves to make parade of pain, 10
That with his piping he may gain
The praise that comes to constancy"

A third is wroth: "Is this an hour
For private sorrow's barren song,
When more and more the people throng 15
The chairs and thrones of civil power?"

"A time to sicken and to swoon,
When Science reaches forth her arms
To feel from world to world, and charms
Her secret from the latest moon?" 20

Behold, ye speak an idle thing;
Ye never knew the sacred dust.
I do but sing because I must,
And pipe but as the linnets sing;

And one is glad; her note is gay, 25
For now her little ones have ranged;

Section 21 1-4 Tennyson did not visit Clevedon until after the poem was published, and he probably thought that Hallam was buried in the churchyard. He was buried in the church. 13-16 These lines may refer to the Chartist movement of 1836-48, which demanded radical reforms in social and industrial conditions. The platform was stated in a document called The People's Charter, 18-20 These lines may refer to the discovery of Neptune in 1846 and of the eighth satellite of Saturn in 1848. 24. Cf. Goethe's Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre, II, 11 "I sing but as the linnet sings"

And one is sad; her note is changed,
Because her brood is stolen away.

22

The path by which we twain did go,
Which led by tracts that pleased us well,
Through four sweet years arose and fell,
From flower to flower, from snow to snow,

And we with singing cheered the way, 5
And, crowned with all the season lent,
From April on to April went,
And glad at heart from May to May.

But where the path we walked began 10
To slant the fifth autumnal slope,
As we descended following Hope,
There sat the Shadow feared of man;

Who broke our fair companionship,
And spread his mantle dark and cold,
And wrapped thee formless in the fold, 15
And dulled the murmur on thy lip,

And bore thee where I could not see
Nor follow, though I walk in haste,
And think that somewhere in the waste
The Shadow sits and waits for me. 20

23

Now, sometimes in my sorrow shut,
Or breaking into song by fits,
Alone, alone, to where he sits,
The Shadow cloaked from head to foot,

Who keeps the keys of all the creeds, 5
I wander, often falling lame,
And looking back to whence I came,
Or on to where the pathway leads,

And crying, How changed from where it ran Through lands where not a leaf was dumb,
But all the lavish hills would hum 11
The murmur of a happy Pan;

When each by turns was guide to each,
And Fancy light from Fancy caught,
And Thought leapt out to wed with
Thought 15
Ere Thought could wed itself with Speech;

And all we met was fair and good,
And all was good that Time could bring,
And all the secret of the spring
Moved in the chambers of the blood; 20

And many an old philosophy
On Argive heights divinely sang,

Section 23 2 Or breaking, etc., a reference to the casual composition of the various sections of the poem at different times and at different places 12 Pan, the god of flocks and shepherds and the symbol of nature 22 Argive, Greek

And round us all the thicket rang
To many a flute of Arcady.

24

And was the day of my delight
As pure and perfect as I say?
The very source and fount of day
Is dashed with wandering isles of night.

If all was good and fair we met, 5
This earth had been the Paradise
It never looked to human eyes
Since our first sun arose and set.

And is it that the haze of grief 10
Makes former gladness loom so great? 10
The lowness of the present state,
That sets the past in this relief?

Or that the past will always win
A glory from its being far,
And orb into the perfect star 15
We saw not when we moved therein?

25

I know that this was Life — the track
Whereon with equal feet we fared;
And then, as now, the day prepared
The daily burden for the back.

But this it was that made me move 5
As light as carrier-birds in air,
I loved the weight I had to bear,
Because it needed help of Love;

Nor could I weary, heart or limb,
When mighty Love would cleave in twain
The lading of a single pain, 11
And part it, giving half to hum.

26

Still onward winds the dreary way;
I with it, for I long to prove
No lapse of moons can canker Love,
Whatever fickle tongues may say.

And if that eye which watches guilt 5
And goodness, and hath power to see
Within the green the moldered tree,
And towers fallen as soon as built —

O if indeed that eye foresee 10
Or see — in Him is no before —
In more of life true life no more
And Love the indifference to be,

Section 23 24 flute of Arcady, probably a reference to Greek pastoral poetry

Section 24 4 wandering isles of night, a reference to the spots on the sun

Section 25 11. lading, burden, weight.

Then might I find, ere yet the morn
Breaks hither over Indian seas,
That Shadow waiting with the keys, 15
To shroud me from my proper scorn.

27

I envy not in any moods
The captive void of noble rage,
The linnet born within the cage,
That never knew the summer woods;

I envy not the beast that takes 5
His license in the field of time,
Unfettered by the sense of crime,
To whom a conscience never wakes;

Nor, what may count itself as blest,
The heart that never plighted troth 10
But stagnates in the weeds of sloth;
Nor any want-begotten rest.

I hold it true, whate'er befall;
I feel it, when I sorrow most —
'Tis better to have loved and lost 15
Than never to have loved at all.

28

The time draws near the birth of Christ.
The moon is hid, the night is still;
The Christmas bells from hill to hill
Answer each other in the mist.

Four voices of four hamlets round, 5
From far and near, on mead and moor,
Swell out and fail, as if a door
Were shut between me and the sound;

Each voice four changes on the wind,
That now dilate, and now decrease, 10
Peace and goodwill, goodwill and peace,
Peace and goodwill, to all mankind

This year I slept and woke with pain,
I almost wished no more to wake,
And that my hold on life would break 15
Before I heard those bells again.

But they my troubled spirit rule,
For they controlled me when a boy;
They bring me sorrow touched with joy,
The merry merry bells of Yule. 20

Section 26. 16. my proper scorn, scorn of myself

Section 27. 15-16. 'Tis better . . . all Cf Thomas

Than never be courted at all"

Section 28. 5 hamlets round, hamlets near Somersby, where Tennyson lived. 9 Each church has four bells. It may be that the poet only imagined the sounds. 13 This year, 1833 Hallam died in September of that year

29

With such compelling cause to grieve
As daily vexes household peace,
And chains regret to his decease,
How dare we keep our Christmas Eve;

Which brings no more a welcome guest 5
To enrich the threshold of the night
With showered largess of delight
In dance and song and game and jest?

Yet go, and while the holly boughs
Entwine the cold baptismal font, 10
Make one wreath more for Use and Wont,
That guard the portals of the house;

Old sisters of a day gone by,
Gray nurses, loving nothing new;
Why should they miss their yearly due 15
Before their time? They too will die.

30

With trembling fingers did we weave
The holly round the Christmas hearth;
A rainy cloud possessed the earth,
And sadly fell our Christmas Eve.

At our old pastimes in the hall 5
We gamboled, making vain pretense
Of gladness, with an awful sense
Of one mute Shadow watching all.

We paused. The winds were in the beech,
We heard them sweep the winter land; 10
And in a circle hand-in-hand
Sat silent, looking each at each.

Then echo-like our voices rang,
We sung, though every eye was dim,
A merry song we sang with him 15
Last year; impetuously we sang.

We ceased; a gentler feeling crept
Upon us: surely rest is meet.
"They rest," we said, "their sleep is sweet," 20
And silence followed, and we wept.

Our voices took a higher range;
Once more we sang: "They do not die
Nor lose their mortal sympathy,
Nor change to us, although they change;

"Rapt from the fickle and the frail 25
With gathered power, yet the same,
Pierces the keen seraphic flame
From orb to orb, from veil to veil."

Rise, happy morn, rise, holy morn,
Draw forth the cheerful day from night; 30

Section 29. 13. Old sisters, Use and Wont of line 11.

O Father, touch the east, and light
The light that shone when Hope was born.

31

When Lazarus left his charnel-cave,
And home to Mary's house returned,
Was this demanded — if he yearned
To hear her weeping by his grave?

"Where wert thou, brother, those four days?"
There lives no record of reply, 6
Which telling what it is to die
Had surely added praise to praise.

From every house the neighbors met,
The streets were filled with joyful sound,
A solemn gladness even crowned 11
The purple brows of Olivet.

Behold a man raised up by Christ!
The rest remaineth unrevealed;
He told it not; or something sealed 15
The lips of that Evangelist.

32

Her eyes are homes of silent prayer,
Nor other thought her mind admits
But, he was dead, and there he sits,
And he that brought him back is there.

Then one deep love doth supersede 5
All other, when her ardent gaze
Roves from the living brother's face,
And rests upon the Life indeed.

All subtle thought, all curious fears,
Borne down by gladness so complete, 10
She bows, she bathes the Savior's feet
With costly spikenard and with tears

Thrice blest whose lives are faithful prayers,
Whose loves in higher love endure;
What souls possess themselves so pure, 15
Or is there blessedness like theirs?

33

O thou that after toil and storm
Mayst seem to have reached a purer air,
Whose faith has center everywhere,
Nor cares to fix itself to form,

Leave thou thy sister when she prays, 5
Her early Heaven, her happy views;

Section 31 1-2 Lazarus, Mary Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha, was raised by Christ from the dead. He had been buried in a cave. See John, 11 32-44. 12 Olivet, a hill near Jerusalem. 16 that Evangelist, St John, who alone records the miracle of the raising of Lazarus.

Section 32 11-12 She bows . . . tears, a reference to Christ's visit in the home of Lazarus. See John, 12 1-3 — "Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair."

Section 33 This section is a plea for sympathy toward persons who cling to their simple traditional faith.

Nor thou with shadowed hint confuse
A life that leads melodious days.

Her faith through form is pure as thine,
Her hands are quicker unto good; 10
Oh, sacred be the flesh and blood
To which she links a truth divine!

See thou, that countest reason ripe
In holding by the law within,
Thou fail not in a world of sin, 15
And ev'n for want of such a type

34

My own dim life should teach me this,
That life shall live for evermore,
Else earth is darkness at the core,
And dust and ashes all that is;

This round of green, this orb of flame, 5
Fantastic beauty, such as lurks
In some wild poet, when he works
Without a conscience or an aim.

What then were God to such as I?
'Twere hardly worth my while to choose 10
Of things all mortal, or to use
A little patience ere I die;

'Twere best at once to sink to peace,
Like birds the charming serpent draws,
To drop head-foremost in the jaws 15
Of vacant darkness and to cease.

35

Yet if some voice that man could trust
Should murmur from the narrow house,
"The cheeks drop in; the body bows;
Man dies, nor is there hope in dust" —

Might I not say, "Yet even here, 5
But for one hour, O Love, I strive
To keep so sweet a thing alive"?
But I should turn mine ears and hear

The moanings of the homeless sea,
The sound of streams that swift or slow 10
Draw down Æonian hills, and sow
The dust of continents to be;

And Love would answer with a sigh,
"The sound of that forgetful shore
Will change my sweetness more and more,
Half-dead to know that I shall die." 16

Section 34 5 This flame, the earth and the sun. 14 charming serpent. The boom-slang, a South-African snake, has power to attract birds to its mouth.

Section 35. 11 Æonian hills, hills that have existed for ages.

O me, what profits it to put
 An idle case? If Death were seen
 At first as Death, Love had not been,
 Or been in narrowest working shut, 20

Mere fellowship of sluggish moods,
 Or in his coarsest Satyr-shape
 Had bruised the herb and crushed the grape,
 And basked and battered in the woods.

36

Though truths in manhood darkly jom,
 Deep-seated in our mystic frame,
 We yield all blessing to the name
 Of Him that made them current coin,

For Wisdom dealt with mortal powers, 5
 Where truth in closest words shall fail,
 When truth embodied in a tale
 Shall enter in at lowly doors

And so the Word had breath, and wrought
 With human hands the creed of creeds 10
 In loveliness of perfect deeds,
 More strong than all poetic thought;

Which he may read that binds the sheaf,
 Or builds the house, or digs the grave,
 And those wild eyes that watch the wave
 In roarings round the coral reef. 16

 This faith has many a purer priest,
 And many an abler voice than thou.

"Go down beside thy native rill, 5
 On thy Parnassus set thy feet,
 And hear thy laurel whisper sweet
 About the ledges of the hill."

And my Melpomene replies,
 A touch of shame upon her cheek: 10

 Of thy prevailing mysteries;

"For I am but an earthly Muse,
 And owning but a little art
 To lull with song an aching heart, 15

 To dying lips is all he said — 20

"I murmured, as I came along,
 Of comfort clasped in truth revealed,
 And loitered in the master's field,
 And darkened sanctities with song."

38

With weary steps I loiter on,
 Though always under altered skies
 The purple from the distance dies,
 My prospect and horizon gone

No joy the blowing season gives, 5
 The herald melodies of spring,
 But in the songs I love to sing
 A doubtful gleam of solace lives.

If any care for what is here
 Survive in spirits rendered free, 10
 Then are these songs I sing of thee
 Not all ungrateful to thine ear.

39

Old warder of these buried bones,
 And answering now my random stroke
 With fruitful cloud and living smoke,
 Dark yew, that graspest at the stones

And dippest toward the dreamless head, 5
 To thee too comes the golden hour
 When flower is feeling after flower;
 But Sorrow — fixed upon the dead,

And darkening the dark graves of men —
 What whispered from her lying lips? 10
 Thy gloom is kindled at the tips,
 And passes into gloom again.

40

Could we forget the widowed hour
 And look on Spirits breathed away,
 As on a maiden in the day
 When first she wears her orange-flower!

When crowned with blessing she doth rise 5
 To take her latest leave of home,
 And hopes and light regrets that come
 Make April of her tender eyes;

And doubtful joys the father move,
 And tears are on the mother's face, 10
 As parting with a long embrace
 She enters other realms of love;

Her office there to rear, to teach,
 Becoming as is meet and fit
 A link among the days, to knit
 The generations each with each;

And, doubtless, unto thee is given
 A life that bears immortal fruit
 In those great offices that suit
 The full-grown energies of heaven.

Ay me, the difference I discern!
 How often shall her old fireside
 Be cheered with tidings of the bride,
 How often she herself return,

And tell them all they would have told,
 And bring her babe, and make her boast,
 Till even those that missed her most
 Shall count new things as dear as old;

But thou and I have shaken hands,
 Till growing winters lay me low;
 My paths are in the fields I know,
 And thine in undiscovered lands.

41

Thy spirit ere our fatal loss
 Did ever rise from high to higher,
 As mounts the heavenward altar-fire,
 As flies the lighter through the gross.

But thou art turned to something strange,
 And I have lost the links that bound
 Thy changes; here upon the ground,
 No more partaker of thy change.

Deep folly! yet that this could be —
 That I could wing my will with might
 To leap the grades of life and light,
 And flash at once, my friend, to thee!

For though my nature rarely yields
 To that vague fear implied in death,
 Nor shudders at the gulfs beneath,
 The howlings from forgotten fields;

Yet oft when sundown skirts the moor
 An inner trouble I behold,
 A spectral doubt which makes me cold,
 That I shall be thy mate no more,

Though following with an upward mind
 The wonders that have come to thee,
 Through all the secular to-be,
 But evermore a life behind.

Section 40 17 thee, Hallam

Section 41 15-16 These lines probably refer to the miseries of the Inferno, as described by Dante 23 to-be, the age-long future

42

I vex my heart with fancies dim.
 He still outstripped me in the race;
 It was but unity of place
 That made me dream I ranked with him.

And so may Place retain us still,
 And he the much-beloved again,
 A lord of large experience, train
 To ripper growth the mind and will;

And what delights can equal those
 That stir the spirit's inner deeps,
 When one that loves, but knows not, reaps
 A truth from one that loves and knows?

43

If Sleep and Death be truly one,
 And every spirit's folded bloom
 Through all its intervital gloom
 In some long trance should slumber on;

Unconscious of the sliding hour,
 Bare of the body, might it last,
 And silent traces of the past
 Be all the color of the flower:

So then were nothing lost to man;
 So that still garden of the souls
 In many a figured leaf enrolls
 The total world since life began,

And love will last as pure and whole
 As when he loved me here in Time,
 And at the spiritual prime
 Rewaken with the dawning soul.

44

How fares it with the happy dead?
 For here the man is more and more;
 But he forgets the days before
 God shut the doorways of his head.

The days have vanished, tone and tint,
 And yet perhaps the hoarding sense
 Gives out at times—he knows not whence—
 A little flash, a mystic hint;

And in the long harmonious years —
 If Death so taste Lethean springs —
 May some dim touch of earthly things
 Surprise thee ranging with thy peers.

Section 42 2 still, always

Section 43 3 intervital gloom, the period between death and the Resurrection. 15 the spiritual prime, the resurrection morning

Section 44 2-4 here . . . head, the living man increases in stored-up experience as he goes on, but the dead man cannot remember the days of his life on earth 10 Lethean Lethe was the mythical river of forgetfulness

If such a dreamy touch should fall,
 O turn thee round, resolve the doubt,
 My guardian angel will speak out
 In that high place, and tell thee all. 15

45

The baby new to earth and sky,
 What time his tender palm is prest
 Against the circle of the breast,
 Has never thought that "this is I",

But as he grows he gathers much, 5
 And learns the use of "I" and "me,"
 And finds "I am not what I see,
 And other than the things I touch "

So rounds he to a separate mind
 From whence clear memory may begin, 10
 As through the frame that binds him in His isolation grows defined.

This use may lie in blood and breath,
 Which else were fruitless of their due,
 Had man to learn himself anew 15
 Beyond the second birth of death.

46

We ranging down this lower track,
 The path we came by, thorn and flower,
 Is shadowed by the growing hour,
 Lest life should fail in looking back

So be it. There no shade can last 5
 In that deep dawn behind the tomb,
 But clear from marge to marge shall bloom
 The eternal landscape of the past;

A lifelong tract of time revealed,
 The fruitful hours of still increase, 10
 Days ordered in a wealthy peace,
 And those five years its richest field

O Love, thy province were not large,
 A bounded field, nor stretching far,
 Look also, Love, a brooding star, 15
 A rosy warmth from marge to marge.

47

That each, who seems a separate whole,
 Should move his rounds, and fusing all
 The skirts of self again, should fall
 Remerging in the general Soul,

Is faith as vague as all unsweet. 5
 Eternal form shall still divide
 The eternal soul from all beside;
 And I shall know him when we meet;

Section 47 In this section Tennyson rejects the doctrine that in the next life the individual will be merged into the general soul, and asserts the persistence of individuality

And we shall sit at endless feast,
 Enjoying each the other's good. 10
 What vaster dream can hit the mood
 Of Love on earth? He seeks at least

Upon the last and sharpest height,
 Before the spirits fade away,
 Some landing-place, to clasp and say, 15
 "Farewell! We lose ourselves in light "

48

If these brief lays, of Sorrow born,
 Were taken to be such as closed
 Grave doubts and answers here proposed,
 Then these were such as men might scorn

Her care is not to part and prove; 5
 She takes, when harsher moods remit,
 What slender shade of doubt may flit,
 And makes it vassal unto Love;

And hence, indeed, she sports with words,
 But better serves a wholesome law, 10
 And holds it sin and shame to draw
 The deepest measure from the chords;

Nor dare she trust a larger lay,
 But rather loosens from the lip
 Short swallow-flights of song, that dip 15
 Their wings in tears, and skim away.

49

From art, from nature, from the schools,
 Let random influences glance,
 Like light in many a shivered lance
 That breaks about the dappled pools.

The lightest wave of thought shall lisp, 5
 The fancy's tenderest eddy wreath,
 The slightest air of song shall breathe
 To make the sullen surface crisp.

And look thy look, and go thy way,
 But blame not thou the winds that make
 The seeming-wanton ripple break, 11
 The tender-penciled shadow play.

Beneath all fancied hopes and fears
 Ay me, the sorrow deepens down,
 Whose muffled motions blindly drown 15
 The bases of my life in tears.

50

Be near me when my light is low,
 When the blood creeps, and the nerves
 prick
 And tingle; and the heart is sick,
 And all the wheels of being slow.

Section 48 13-16 Nor away, a reference to Tennyson's "spasmodic" method of writing the various sections

Be near me when the sensuous frame 5
Is racked with pangs that conquer trust;
And Time, a maniac scattering dust,
And Life, a Fury slinging flame.

Be near me when my faith is dry,
And men the flies of latter spring, 10
That lay their eggs, and sting and sing
And weave their petty cells and die.

Be near me when I fade away,
To point the term of human strife,
And on the low dark verge of life 15
The twilight of eternal day.

51

Do we indeed desire the dead
Should still be near us at our side?
Is there no baseness we would hide?
No inner vileness that we dread?

Shall he for whose applause I strove, 5
I had such reverence for his blame,
See with clear eye some hidden shame
And I be lessened in his love?

I wrong the grave with fears untrue.
Shall love be blamed for want of faith? 10
There must be wisdom with great Death;
The dead shall look me through and through.

Be near us when we climb or fall;
Ye watch, like God, the rolling hours
With larger other eyes than ours, 15
To make allowance for us all.

52

I cannot love thee as I ought,
For love reflects the thing beloved;
My words are only words, and moved
Upon the topmost froth of thought.

"Yet blame not thou thy plaintive song," 5
The Spirit of true love replied;
"Thou canst not move me from thy side,
Nor human frailty do me wrong.

"What keeps a spirit wholly true
To that ideal which he bears? 10
What record? not the sinless years
That breathed beneath the Syrian blue;

"So fret not, like an idle girl,
That life is dashed with flecks of sin.
Abide; thy wealth is gathered in, 15
When Time hath sundered shell from pearl."

Section 50. 8 Fury slinging flame The Furies are represented as bearing torches
Section 52. 11. the sinless years, the life of Christ.

53

How many a father have I seen,
A sober man, among his boys,
Whose youth was full of foolish noise,
Who wears his manhood hale and green;

And dare we to this fancy give, 5
That had the wild oat not been sown,
The soil, left barren, scarce had grown
The grain by which a man may live?

Or, if we held the doctrine sound
For life outliving heats of youth, 10
Yet who would preach it as a truth
To those that eddy round and round?

Hold thou the good, define it well,
For fear divine Philosophy
Should push beyond her mark, and be 15
Procuress to the Lords of Hell.

54

O yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;

That nothing walks with aimless feet; 5
That not one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain;
That not a moth with vain desire 10
Is shriveled in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

Behold, we know not anything;
I can but trust that good shall fall
At last — far off — at last, to all, 15
And every winter change to spring.

So runs my dream; but what am I?
An infant crying in the night;
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry. 20

55

The wish, that of the living whole
No life may fail beyond the grave,
Derives it not from what we have
The likeliest God within the soul?

Are God and Nature then at strife, 5
That Nature lends such evil dreams?

Section 53. 5 give, yield, give in Section 55. 5 at strife. Tennyson attempts to reconcile the apparent conflict between science and faith then agitating the public

So careful of the type she seems,
So careless of the single life,

That I, considering everywhere
Her secret meaning in her deeds, 10
And finding that of fifty seeds
She often brings but one to bear,

I falter where I firmly trod,
And falling with my weight of cares
Upon the great world's altar-stairs 15
That slope through darkness up to God,

I stretch lame hands of faith, and grope,
And gather dust and chaff, and call
To what I feel is Lord of all, 20
And faintly trust the larger hope.

56

"So careful of the type?" but no.
From scarpéd cliff and quarried stone
She cries, "A thousand types are gone,
I care for nothing, all shall go.

"Thou makest thine appeal to me. 5
I bring to life, I bring to death;
The spirit does but mean the breath.
I know no more " And he, shall he,

Man, her last work, who seemed so fair,
Such splendid purpose in his eyes, 10
Who rolled the psalm to wintry skies,
Who built him fanes of fruitless prayer,

Who trusted God was love indeed
And love Creation's final law —
Though Nature, red in tooth and claw 15
With ravine, shrieked against his creed —

Who loved, who suffered countless ills,
Who battled for the True, the Just,
Be blown about the desert dust,
Or sealed within the iron hills? 20

No more? A monster then, a dream,
A discord. Dragons of the prime,
That tare each other in their slime,
Were mellow music matched with him.

O life as futile, then, as frail! 25
O for thy voice to soothe and bless!
What hope of answer, or redress?
Behind the veil, behind the veil.

Section 55 7-8 So careful . . . life. This doctrine of selection was explained later (1859) by Darwin in his Origin of Species. 20 the larger hope, i.e., that all humanity will eventually be purified and saved. (See Memoir, I, 321.)

57

Peace; come away· the song of woe
Is after all an earthly song
Peace, come away: we do him wrong
To sing so wildly; let us go.

Come, let us go; your cheeks are pale; 5
But half my life I leave behind.
Methinks my friend is richly shrined,
But I shall pass, my work will fail.

Yet in these ears, till hearing dies,
One set slow bell will seem to toll 10
The passing of the sweetest soul
That ever looked with human eyes.

I hear it now, and o'er and o'er,
Eternal greetings to the dead;
And "Ave, Ave, Ave," said, 15
"Adieu, adieu," forevermore.

58

In those sad words I took farewell.
Like echoes in sepulchral halls,
As drop by drop the water falls
In vaults and catacombs, they fell;

And, falling, idly broke the peace 5
Of hearts that beat from day to day,
Half-conscious of their dying clay,
And those cold crypts where they shall cease.

The high Muse answered: "Wherefore grieve
Thy brethren with a fruitless tear? 10
Abide a little longer here,
And thou shalt take a nobler leave."

59

O Sorrow, wilt thou live with me
No casual mistress, but a wife,
My bosom-friend and half of life;
As I confess it needs must be?

O Sorrow, wilt thou rule my blood, 5
Be sometimes lovely like a bride,
And put thy harsher moods aside,
If thou wilt have me wise and good?

My centered passion cannot move,
Nor will it lessen from today, 10
But I'll have leave at times to play
As with the creature of my love;

And set thee forth, for thou art mine,
With so much hope for years to come,

Section 57 This section may have been addressed to Tennyson's sister, who was betrothed to Hallam. 15 Ave, Ave, Ave, words of farewell to the dead, used by the Romans.

Section 58. 9 The high Muse, Urania, the muse of loftiest poetry.

He passed, a soul of nobler tone;
My spirit loved and loves him yet,
Like some poor girl whose heart is set
On one whose rank exceeds her own.

He mixing with his proper sphere,
She finds the baseness of her lot,
Half jealous of she knows not what,
And envying all that meet him there.

The little village looks forlorn;
She sighs amid her narrow days,
Moving about the household ways,
In that dark house where she was born

The foolish neighbors come and go,
And tease her till the day draws by,
At night she weeps, "How vain am I!
How should he love a thing so low?"

61

If, in thy second state sublime,
Thy ransomed reason change replies
With all the circle of the wise,
The perfect flower of human time;

And if thou cast thine eyes below,
How dimly characterized and slight,
How dwarfed a growth of cold and night,
How blanched with darkness must I grow!

5

Yet turn thee to the doubtful shore,
Where thy first form was made a man,
I loved thee, Spirit, and love, nor can
The soul of Shakespeare love thee more 10

62

Though if an eye that's downward cast
Could make thee somewhat blench or fail,
Then be my love an idle tale
And fading legend of the past;

And thou, as one that once declined,
When he was little more than boy,
On some unworthy heart with joy,
But lives to wed an equal mind,

His other passion wholly dies,

Yet pity for a horse o'er-driven,
And love in which my hound has part,
Can hang no weight upon my heart
In its assumptions up to heaven;

And I am so much more than these,
As thou, perchance, art more than I,
And yet I spare them sympathy,
And I would set their pains at ease.

5

So mayst thou watch me where I weep,
As, unto vaster motions bound,
The circuits of thine orbit round
A higher height, a deeper deep.

64

Dost thou look back on what hath been,
As some divinely gifted man,
Whose life in low estate began
And on a simple village green;

Who breaks his birth's invidious bar,
And grasps the skirts of happy chance,
And breasts the blows of circumstance,
And grapples with his evil star;

5

Who makes by force his merit known
And lives to clutch the golden keys,
To mold a mighty state's decrees,
And shape the whisper of the throne;

10

And moving up from high to higher,
Becomes on Fortune's crowning slope
The pillar of a people's hope,
The center of a world's desire;

15

Yet feels, as in a pensive dream,
When all his active powers are still,
A distant dearness in the hill,
A secret sweetness in the stream,

20

The limit of his narrower fate,
While yet beside its vocal springs
He played at counselors and kings,
With one that was his earliest mate;

Who plows with pain his native lea
And reaps the labor of his hands,
Or in the furrow musing stands
"Does my old friend remember me?"

65

Sweet soul, do with me as thou wilt,
 I lull a fancy trouble-tost
 With "Love's too precious to be lost,
 A little grain shall not be spilt."

And in that solace can I sing, 5
 Till out of painful phases wrought
 There flutters up a happy thought,
 Self-balanced on a lightsome wing,

Since we deserved the name of friends,
 And thine effect so lives in me, 10
 A part of mine may live in thee
 And move thee on to noble ends.

66

You thought my heart too far diseased,
 You wonder when my fancies play
 To find me gay among the gay,
 Like one with any trifle pleased

The shade by which my life was crost, 5
 Which makes a desert in the mind,
 Has made me kindly with my kind,
 And like to him whose sight is lost,

Whose feet are guided through the land,
 Whose jest among his friends is free, 10
 Who takes the children on his knee,
 And winds their curls about his hand

He plays with threads, he beats his chair
 For pastime, dreaming of the sky,
 His inner day can never die, 15
 His night of loss is always there

67

When on my bed the moonlight falls,
 I know that in thy place of rest
 By that broad water of the west
 There comes a glory on the walls;

Thy marble bright in dark appears, 5
 As slowly steals a silver flame
 Along the letters of thy name,
 And o'er the number of thy years.

The mystic glory swims away,
 From off my bed the moonlight dies, 10
 And closing eaves of wearied eyes
 I sleep till dusk is dipped in gray;

And then I know the mist is drawn,
 A lucid veil from coast to coast,

Section 66 1 diseased, made uneasy
Section 67 2 thy place of rest, in the church at Clevedon

And in the dark church like a ghost 15

68

When in the down I sink my head, Sleep, Death's twin-brother, times my
 breath;
 Sleep, Death's twin-brother, knows not
 Death,
 Nor can I dream of thee as dead

I walk as ere I walked forlorn, 5
 When all our path was fresh with dew,
 And all the bugle breezes blew
 Reveillé to the breaking morn.

But what is this? I turn about,
 I find a trouble in thine eye, 10
 Which makes me sad I know not why,
 Nor can my dream resolve the doubt,

But ere the lark hath left the lea
 I wake, and I discern the truth,
 It is the trouble of my youth 15
 That foolish sleep transfers to thee.

69

I dreamed there would be spring no more,
 That Nature's ancient power was lost,
 The streets were black with smoke and frost,
 They chattered trifles at the door,

I wandered from the noisy town, 5
 I found a wood with thorny boughs;
 I took the thorns to bind my brows,
 I wore them like a civic crown;

I met with scoffs, I met with scorns
 From youth and babe and hoary hairs; 10
 They called me in the public squares
 The fool that wears a crown of thorns

They called me fool, they called me child.
 I found an angel of the night;
 The voice was low, the look was bright, 15
 He looked upon my crown and smiled.

He reached the glory of a hand,
 That seemed to touch it into leaf;
 The voice was not the voice of grief,
 The words were hard to understand 20

70

I cannot see the features right,
 When on the gloom I strive to paint

Section 69 14 an angel of the night Explained by Tennyson as "the divine Thing in the gloom"

The face I know; the hues are faint
And mix with hollow masks of night:

Cloud-towers by ghostly masons wrought, 5
A gulf that ever shuts and gapes,
A hand that points, and palléd shapes
In shadowy thoroughfares of thought,

And crowds that stream from yawning doors,
And shoals of puckered faces drive, 10
Dark bulks that tumble half alive,
And lazy lengths on boundless shores,

Till all at once beyond the will
I hear a wizard music roll,
And through a lattice on the soul 15
Looks thy fair face and makes it still 71

Sleep, kinsman thou to death and trance
And madness, thou hast forged at last
A night-long present of the past
In which we went through summer France.

Hadst thou such credit with the soul? 5
Then bring an opiate trebly strong,
Drug down the blindfold sense of wrong,
That so my pleasure may be whole,

While now we talk as once we talked
Of men and minds, the dust of change, 10
The days that grow to something strange,
In walking as of old we walked

Beside the river's wooded reach,
The fortress, and the mountain ridge,
The cataract flashing from the bridge, 15
The breaker breaking on the beach

72

Risest thou thus, dim dawn, again,
And howlest, issuing out of night,
With blasts that blow the poplar white,
And lash with storm the streaming pane?

Day, when my crowned estate begun 5
To pine in that reverse of doom,
Which sickened every living bloom,
And blurred the splendor of the sun;

Who usherest in the dolorous hour

Tennyson by the adverse criticism of his first important volume of verse, published in 1832 Cf Merlin and the Gleam, st 3 and note, page 163

Who mightest have heaved a windless flame
Up the deep East, or, whispering, played
A checker-work of beam and shade 15
Along the hills, yet looked the same,

As wan, as chill, as wild as now,
Day, marked as with some hideous crime,
When the dark hand struck down through
time,
And canceled nature's best but thou, 20

Lift as thou mayst thy burthened brows
Through clouds that drench the morning
star,
And whirl the ungarnered sheaf afar,
And sow the sky with flying boughs,

And up thy vault with roaring sound 25
Climb thy thick noon, disastrous day,
Touch thy dull goal of joyless gray,
And hide thy shame beneath the ground

73

So many worlds, so much to do,
So little done, such things to be,
How know I what had need of thee,
For thou wert strong as thou wert true?

The fame is quenched that I foresaw, 5
The head hath missed an earthly wreath,
I curse not Nature, no, nor Death,
For nothing is that errs from law.

We pass; the path that each man trod
Is dim, or will be dim, with weeds 10
What fame is left for human deeds
In endless age? It rests with God

O hollow wraith of dying fame,
Fade wholly, while the soul exults,
And self-infolds the large results 15
Of force that would have forged a name.

74

As sometimes in a dead man's face,
To those that watch it more and more,
A likeness, hardly seen before,
Comes out — to someone of his race;

So, dearest, now thy brows are cold, 5
I see thee what thou art, and know
Thy likeness to the wise below,
Thy kindred with the great of old.

But there is more than I can see,
And what I see I leave unsaid, 10
Nor speak it, knowing Death has made
His darkness beautiful with thee

75

I leave thy praises unexpressed
 In verse that brings myself relief,
 And by the measure of my grief
 I leave thy greatness to be guessed;

What practice howsoe'er expert 5
 In fitting aptest words to things,
 Or voice the richest-toned that sings,
 Hath power to give thee as thou wert?

I care not in these fading days
 To raise a cry that lasts not long, 10
 And round thee with the breeze of song
 To stir a little dust of praise

Thy leaf has perished in the green,
 And, while we breathe beneath the sun,
 The world which credits what is done 15
 Is cold to all that might have been

So here shall silence guard thy fame;
 But somewhere, out of human view,
 Whate'er thy hands are set to do
 Is wrought with tumult of acclaim 20

76

Take wings of fancy, and ascend,
 And in a moment set thy face
 Where all the starry heavens of space
 Are sharpened to a needle's end,

Take wings of foresight, lighten through 5
 The secular abyss to come,
 And lo, thy deepest lays are dumb
 Before the moldering of a yew,

And if the matin songs, that woke
 The darkness of our planet, last, 10
 Thine own shall wither in the vast,
 Ere half the lifetime of an oak.

Ere these have clothed their branchy bowers
 With fifty Mays, thy songs are vain,

What hope is here for modern rime
 To him who turns a musing eye
 On songs, and deeds, and lives, that lie
 Foreshortened in the tract of time?

Again at Christmas did we weave
 The holly round the Christmas hearth;
 The silent snow possessed the earth;
 And calmly fell our Christmas Eve.

The yule-clog sparkled keen with frost, 5
 No wing of wind the region swept,
 But over all things brooding slept
 The quiet sense of something lost.

As in the winters left behind,
 Again our ancient games had place, 10
 The mimic picture's breathing grace,
 And dance and song and hoodman-blind

Who showed a token of distress?
 No single tear, no mark of pain:
 O sorrow, then can sorrow wane? 15
 O grief, can grief be changed to less?

O last regret, regret can die!
 No — mixed with all this mystic frame,
 Her deep relations are the same,
 But with long use her tears are dry. 20

"More than my brothers are to me" —
 Let this not vex thee, noble heart!
 I know thee of what force thou art
 To hold the costliest love in fee.

But thou and I are one in kind, 5
 As molded like in Nature's mint;
 And hill and wood and field did print
 The same sweet forms in either mind.

For us the same cold streamlet curled
 Through all his eddying coves, the same 10

If any vague desire should rise,
That holy Death ere Arthur died
Had moved me kindly from his side,
And dropped the dust on tearless eyes;

Then fancy shapes, as fancy can,
The grief my loss in him had wrought,
A grief as deep as life or thought,
But stayed in peace with God and man.

5

I make a picture in the brain;
I hear the sentence that he speaks,
He bears the burthen of the weeks,
But turns his burthen into gain.

His credit thus shall set me free;
And, influence-rich to soothe and save,
Unused example from the grave
Reach out dead hands to comfort me.

Could I have said while he was here,
"My love shall now no further range;
There cannot come a mellow change,
For now is love mature in ear?"

Love, then, had hope of richer store;
What end is here to my complaint?
This haunting whisper makes me faint,
"More years had made me love thee more."

But Death returns an answer sweet:
"My sudden frost was sudden gain,
And gave all ripeness to the grain
It might have drawn from after-heat."

I wage not any feud with Death
For changes wrought on form and face,
No lower life that earth's embrace
May breed with him can fright my faith.

Eternal process moving on,
From state to state the spirit walks,
And these are but the shattered stalks,
Or ruined chrysalis of one.

Nor blame I Death, because he bare
The use of virtue out of earth;

This truth came borne with bier and pall,
I felt it, when I sorrowed most:
'Tis better to have loved and lost,
Than never to have loved at all —

O true in word, and tried in deed, 5
Demanding, so to bring relief
To this which is our common grief,
What kind of life is that I lead;

And whether trust in things above
Be dimmed of sorrow, or sustained; 10
And whether love for him have drained
My capabilities of love;

Your words have virtue such as draws
A faithful answer from the breast,
Through light reproaches, half expressed, 15
And loyal unto kindly laws

Till on mine ear this message falls,
That in Vienna's fatal walls
God's finger touched him, and he slept 20

That range above our mortal state,
In circle round the blessed gate,
Received and gave him welcome there,

And led him through the blissful climes, 25

Shall gather in the cycled times.

But I remained, whose hopes were dim,
Whose life, whose thoughts were little

To wander on a darkened earth,
Where all things round me breathed of him.

O friendship, equal-poised control,
O heart, with kindest motion warm,
O sacred essence, other form, 35

Yet none could better know than I,
How much of act at human hands
The sense of human will demands
By which we dare to live or die. 40

Whatever way my days decline,
I felt and feel, though left alone,
His being working in mine own,
The footsteps of his life in mine;

A life that all the Muses decked 45

Yea, though it spake and bared to view

Should prove the phantom-warning true,

They might not seem thy prophecies,

Except, like them, thou too canst say,

By night we lingered on the lawn,
For underfoot the herb was dry;
And genial warmth, and o'er the sky
The silvery haze of summer drawn;

And calm that let the tapers burn 5
Unwavering Not a cricket churred;
The brook alone far-off was heard,
And on the board the fluttering urn

And bats went round in fragrant skies,
And wheeled or lit the filmy shapes 10
That haunt the dusk, with ermine capes
And woolly breasts and beaded eyes,

While now we sang old songs that pealed
From knoll to knoll, where, couched at ease,
The white kine glimmered, and the trees 15
Laid their dark arms about the field

But when those others, one by one,
Withdrew themselves from me and night,
And in the house light after light
Went out, and I was all alone, 20

A hunger seized my heart; I read
Of that glad year which once had been,
In those fallen leaves which kept their
green,
The noble letters of the dead.

And strangely on the silence broke 25
The silent-speaking words, and strange
Was love's dumb cry defying change
To test his worth; and strangely spoke

The faith, the vigor, bold to dwell
On doubts that drive the coward back, 30
And keen through wordy snares to track
Suggestion to her inmost cell.

Section 95 Andrew Lang regards this section as "the crown of In Memoriam, expressing almost such things as are not given to men to utter"

8 the fluttering urn, the boiling tea-urn 10 filmy shapes, night moths

So word by word, and line by line,
The dead man touched me from the past,
And all at once it seemed at last 35
The living soul was flashed on mine,

And mine in his was wound, and whirled
About empyreal heights of thought,
And came on that which is, and caught
The deep pulsations of the world, 40

Æonian music measuring out
The steps of Time—the shocks of Chance—
The blows of Death. At length my trance
Was canceled, stricken through with doubt.

Vague words! but ah, how hard to frame 45
In matter-molded forms of speech,
Or even for intellect to reach
Through memory that which I became;

Till now the doubtful dusk revealed
The knolls once more where, couched at ease, 50
The white kine glimmered, and the trees
Laid their dark arms about the field,

And sucked from out the distant gloom
A breeze began to tremble o'er
The large leaves of the sycamore, 55
And fluctuate all the still perfume,

And gathering fresher overhead,
Rocked the full-foliaged elms, and swung
The heavy-folded rose, and flung
The lilies to and fro, and said, 60

"The dawn, the dawn," and died away;
And East and West, without a breath,
Mixed their dim lights, like life and death,
To broaden into boundless day.

You say, but with no touch of scorn,
Sweet-hearted, you, whose light-blue eyes
Are tender over drowning flies,
You tell me, doubt is Devil-born

I know not. One indeed I knew 5
In many a subtle question versed,
Who touched a jarring lyre at first,
But ever strove to make it true;

Perplexed in faith, but pure in deeds,
At last he beat his music out. 10

Section 95 36-40 In a trance the poet is carried to empyreal heights, where he could see the truth and purpose of God in the universe. Tennyson states that he frequently experienced "a kind of walking trance quite up from boyhood" (Memoir, I, 320) 41 Æonian music, music or harmony of the ages

Section 96 1 You, some woman of simple faith 5. One, Hallam

There lives more faith in honest doubt, 11
Believe me, than in half the creeds.

He fought his doubts and gathered strength,
He would not make his judgment blind,
He faced the specters of the mind 15
And laid them; thus he came at length

To find a stronger faith his own,
And Power was with him in the night,
Which makes the darkness and the light,
And dwells not in the light alone, 20

As over Sinai's peaks of old,
While Israel made their gods of gold,
Although the trumpet blew so loud.

My Love has talked with rocks and trees;
He finds on misty mountain-ground
His own vast shadow glory-crowned;
He sees himself in all he sees.

Two partners of a married life — 5
I looked on these and thought of thee
In vastness and in mystery,
And of my spirit as of a wife.

These two — they dwelt with eye on eye,
Their hearts of old have beat in tune, 10
Their meetings made December June,
Their every parting was to die.

Their love has never passed away;
The days she never can forget
Are earnest that he loves her yet, 15
Whate'er the faithless people say.

Her life is lone, he sits apart;
He loves her yet, she will not weep,
Though rapt in matters dark and deep
He seems to slight her simple heart. 20

He thrids the labyrinth of the mind,
He reads the secret of the star,
He seems so near and yet so far,
He looks so cold; she thinks him kind.

She keeps the gift of years before, 25
A withered violet is her bliss;

Section 96 11-12 There lives creeds Tennyson regards honest doubt as a reverent search for the truth 21-24 But . . . loud God appeared to Moses on Mt Sinai and gave him the Ten Commandments. The people could not see God, as he was hid in a cloud of fire and smoke, but they saw the lightning and heard the thunder and the loud noise of the trumpet. They disobeyed God's instructions by making and worshiping a golden calf. See Exodus, 19:16-25, 32:1-6.

Section 97 1 My Love, not a reference to Hallam, but simply a personification of love 6 thee, Hallam 15 earnest, assurance, proof 21 thrids, threads, wanders through

She knows not what his greatness is,
For that, for all, she loves him more.

For him she plays, to him she sings
Of early faith and plighted vows; 30
She knows but matters of the house,
And he, he knows a thousand things.

Her faith is fixed and cannot move,
She darkly feels him great and wise,
She dwells on him with faithful eyes, 35

You leave us. You will see the Rhine,
And those fair hills I sailed below,
When I was there with him; and go
By summer belts of wheat and vine

To where he breathed his latest breath, 5
That city. All her splendor seems
No livelier than the wisp that gleams
On Lethe in the eyes of Death.

Let her great Danube rolling fair
Enwind her isles, unmarked of me, 10
I have not seen, I will not see Vienna; rather dream that there,

A treble darkness, Evil haunts
The birth, the bridal, friend from friend
Is oftener parted, fathers bend 15
Above more graves, a thousand wants

Gnarr at the heels of men, and prey
By each cold hearth, and sadness flings
Her shadow on the blaze of kings
And yet myself have heard him say 20

That not in any mother town
With statelier progress to and fro
The double tides of chariots flow
By park and suburb under brown

Of lustier leaves; nor more content, 25
He told me, lives in any crowd,
When all is gay with lamps, and loud
With sport and song, in booth and tent,

Imperial halls, or open plain;
And wheels the circled dance, and breaks 30
The rocket molten into flakes
Of crimson or in emerald rain.

Section 98 1 You. Section 98 is addressed to Tennyson's brother Charles, who planned to visit Vienna on his wedding tour. Tennyson and Hallam made a tour of the Rhine in July, 1832. 8 Lethe, the fabulous river of forgetfulness 21 mother town, a literal translation of metropolis

99

Risest thou thus, dim dawn, again,
 So loud with voices of the birds,
 So thick with lowings of the herds,
 Day, when I lost the flower of men;

Who tremblest through thy darkling red 5
 On yon swollen brook that bubbles fast
 By meadows breathing of the past,
 And woodlands holy to the dead,

Who murmurest in the foliaged eaves 10
 A song that slights the coming care,
 And Autumn laying here and there
 A fiery finger on the leaves;

Who wakenest with thy balmy breath 15
 To myriads on the genial earth,
 Memories of bridal, or of birth,
 And unto myriads more, of death.

O wheresoever those may be, 20
 Betwixt the slumber of the poles,
 Today they count as kindred souls;
 They know me not, but mourn with me

100

I climb the hill. From end to end
 Of all the landscape underneath,
 I find no place that does not breathe
 Some gracious memory of my friend,

No gray old grange, or lonely fold, 5
 Or low morass and whispering reed,
 Or simple stile from mead to mead,
 Or sheepwalk up the windy wold,

Nor hoary knoll of ash and haw 10
 That hears the latest linnet trill,
 Nor quarry trenched along the hill
 And haunted by the wrangling daw,

Nor runlet tinkling from the rock;
 Nor pastoral rivulet that swerves
 To left and right through meadowy curves,
 That feed the mothers of the flock, 16

But each has pleased a kindred eye,
 And each reflects a kindlier day;
 And, leaving these, to pass away,
 I think once more he seems to die. 20

Unwatched, the garden bough shall sway,
 The tender blossom flutter down,

Section 99. 1 dim dawn, the second anniversary of Hallam's death. Compare Section 72
Section 100. Sections 100, 101, and 102 were suggested by the removal of the Tennysons from Somersby in 1837 to High Beech, in Epping Forest, a few miles north of London

Unloved, that beech will gather brown,
 This maple burn itself away;

Unloved, the sunflower, shining fair, 5
 Ray round with flames her disk of seed,
 And many a rose-carnation feed
 With summer spice the humming air;

Unloved, by many a sandy bar, 10
 The brook shall babble down the plain,
 At noon or when the Lesser Wain
 Is twisting round the polar star;

Uncared for, gird the windy grove, 15
 And flood the haunts of hern and crake,
 Or into silver arrows break
 The sailing moon in creek and cove;

Till from the garden and the wild 20
 A fresh association blow,
 And year by year the landscape grow
 Familiar to the stranger's child;

As year by year the laborer tills
 His wonted glebe, or lops the glades,
 And year by year our memory fades
 From all the circle of the hills

102

We leave the well-beloved place
 Where first we gazed upon the sky;
 The roofs that heard our earliest cry
 Will shelter one of stranger race

We go, but ere we go from home, 5
 As down the garden-walks I move,
 Two spirits of a diverse love
 Contend for loving masterdom.

One whispers, "Here thy boyhood sung 10
 Long since its matin song, and heard
 The low love-language of the bird
 In native hazels tassel-hung."

The other answers, "Yea, but here 15
 Thy feet have strayed in after hours
 With thy lost friend among the bowers,
 And this hath made them trebly dear."

These two have striven half the day,
 And each prefers his separate claim,
 Poor rivals in a losing game,
 That will not yield each other way. 20

Section 102. 7 Two spirits "First, the love of the native place, the second, this enhanced by the memory of A H H" (Tennyson's note) 10 matin song, a reference to Tennyson's first poems, published in 1827.

I turn to go, my feet are set
 To leave the pleasant fields and farms;
 They mix in one another's arms
 To one pure image of regret.

103

On that last night before we went
 From out the doors where I was bred,
 I dreamed a vision of the dead,
 Which left my after-morn content

Methought I dwelt within a hall, 5
 And maidens with me; distant hills
 From hidden summits fed with rills
 A river sliding by the wall

The hall with harp and carol rang.
 They sang of what is wise and good 10
 And graceful. In the center stood
 A statue veiled, to which they sang;

And which, though veiled, was known to me,
 The shape of him I loved, and love
 Forever. Then flew in a dove 15
 And brought a summons from the sea;

And when they learnt that I must go,
 They wept and wailed, but led the way
 To where a little shallop lay
 At anchor in the flood below; 20

And on by many a level mead,
 And shadowing bluff that made the banks,
 We glided winding under ranks
 Of iris and the golden reed;

And still as vaster grew the shore 25
 And rolled the floods in grander space,
 The maidens gathered strength and grace
 And presence, lordlier than before,

And I myself, who sat apart
 And watched them, waxed in every limb;
 I felt the thews of Anakim, 31
 The pulses of a Titan's heart;

As one would sing the death of war,
 And one would chant the history
 Of that great race which is to be, 35
 And one the shaping of a star;

Section 103. This section is an allegory. The maidens of line 6 are explained by Tennyson as "the Muses, poetry, arts—all that make life beautiful here, which we hope will pass with us beyond the grave." He also said that the maidens are "all the human powers and talents that do not pass with life but go along with it." The hidden summits (line 7) are the divine source, the river (line 8) is life, the sea (line 16) is eternity.

31 Anakim. See Numbers, 13:33—"And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight." 32 Titan's The Titans were fabulous giants of Greek mythology

Until the forward-creeping tides
 Began to foam, and we to draw
 From deep to deep, to where we saw
 A great ship lift her shining sides. 40

The man we loved was there on deck,
 But thrice as large as man he bent
 To greet us. Up the side I went,
 And fell in silence on his neck;

Whereat those maidens with one mind 45
 Bewailed their lot; I did them wrong
 "We served thee here," they said, "so long,
 And wilt thou leave us now behind?"

So rapt I was, they could not win
 An answer from my lips; but he 50
 Replying, "Enter likewise ye
 And go with us," they entered in.

And while the wind began to sweep
 A music out of sheet and shroud,
 We steered her toward a crimson cloud 55
 That landlike slept along the deep 104

The time draws near the birth of Christ;
 The moon is hid, the night is still,
 A single church below the hill
 Is pealing, folded in the mist

A single peal of bells below, 5
 That wakens at this hour of rest
 A single murmur in the breast,
 That these are not the bells I know.

Like strangers' voices here they sound,
 In lands where not a memory strays, 10
 Nor landmark breathes of other days,
 But all is new unhallowed ground.

105

Tonight ungathered let us leave
 This laurel, let this holly stand;
 We live within the stranger's land,
 And strangely falls our Christmas Eve.

Our father's dust is left alone 5
 And silent under other snows;
 There in due time the woodbine blows,
 The violet comes, but we are gone.

No more shall wayward grief abuse
 The genial hour with mask and mime, 10
 For change of place, like growth of time,
 Has broke the bond of dying use.

Let cares that petty shadows cast,
By which our lives are chiefly proved,
A little spare the night I loved, 15
And hold it solemn to the past.

But let no footstep beat the floor,
Nor bowl of wassail mantle warm;
For who would keep an ancient form
Through which the spirit breathes no more?

Be neither song, nor game, nor feast; 21
Nor harp be touched, nor flute be blown;
No dance, no motion, save alone
What lightens in the lucid East

Of rising worlds by yonder wood. 25
Long sleeps the summer in the seed;
Run out your measured arcs, and lead
The closing cycle rich in good.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new, 5
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go,
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind, 10
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind

Ring out a slowly dying cause, 15
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin, 20
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rimes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood, 25
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring in the thousand years of peace.

It is the day when he was born,
A bitter day that early sank
Behind a purple-frosty bank
Of vapor, leaving night forlorn.

The time admits not flowers or leaves 5
To deck the banquet. Fiercely flies
The blast of North and East, and ice
Makes daggers at the sharpened eaves,

And bristles all the brakes and thorns 10
To yon hard crescent, as she hangs
Above the wood which grides and clangs
Its leafless ribs and iron horns

Together, in the drifts that pass
To darken on the rolling brine
That breaks the coast But fetch the wine,
Arrange the board and brim the glass; 16

Bring in great logs and let them lie, 5
To make a solid core of heat;
Be cheerful-minded, talk and treat
Of all things even as he were by; 20

We keep the day. With festal cheer,
With books and music, surely we
Will drink to him, whate'er he be,
And sing the songs he loved to hear 108

I will not shut me from my kind, 15
And, lest I stiffen into stone,
I will not eat my heart alone,
Nor feed with sighs a passing wind;

What profit lies in barren faith, 5
And vacant yearning, though with might
To scale the heaven's highest height,
Or dive below the wells of death?

What find I in the highest place, 11
But mine own phantom chanting hymns?
And on the depths of death there swims
The reflex of a human face.

I'll rather take what fruit may be
Of sorrow under human skies;

Tennyson said, to a time "when Christianity without big-

Heart-affluence in discursive talk
From household fountains never dry;
The critic clearness of an eye
That saw through all the Muses' walk;

Seraphic intellect and force 5
To seize and throw the doubts of man,
Impassioned logic, which outran
The hearer in its fiery course;

High nature amorous of the good, 10
But touched with no ascetic gloom,
And passion pure in snowy bloom
Through all the years of April blood;

A love of freedom rarely felt, 15
Of freedom in her regal seat
Of England; not the schoolboy heat,
The blind hysterics of the Celt;

And manhood fused with female grace 20
In such a sort, the child would twine
A trustful hand, unasked, in thine,
And find his comfort in thy face—

All these have been, and thee mine eyes
Have looked on; if they looked in vain,
My shame is greater who remain,
Nor let thy wisdom make me wise.

110

Thy converse drew us with delight,
The men of rathe and riper years;
The feeble soul, a haunt of fears,
Forgot his weakness in thy sight.

On thee the loyal-hearted hung, 5
The proud was half disarmed of pride,
Nor cared the serpent at thy side
To flicker with his double tongue.

The stern were mild when thou wert by, 10
The flippant put himself to school
And heard thee, and the brazen fool
Was softened, and he knew not why;

While I, thy nearest, sat apart,
And felt thy triumph was as mine;
And loved them more, that they were
thine, 15
The graceful tact, the Christian art,

The churl in spirit, up or down
Along the scale of ranks, through all,
To him who grasps a golden ball,
By blood a king, at heart a clown—

The churl in spirit, howe'er he veil 5
His want in forms for fashion's sake,
Will let his coltish nature break
At seasons through the gilded pale;

For who can always act? but he, 10
To whom a thousand memories call,
Not being less but more than all
The gentleness he seemed to be,

Best seemed the thing he was, and joined
Each office of the social hour
To noble manners, as the flower 15
And native growth of noble mind;

Nor ever narrowness or spite, 20
Or villain fancy fleeting by,
Drew in the expression of an eye
Where God and Nature met in light;

And thus he bore without abuse
The grand old name of gentleman,
Defamed by every charlatan,
And soiled with all ignoble use.

High wisdom holds my wisdom less,
That I, who gaze with temperate eyes
On glorious insufficiencies,
Set light by narrower perfectness.

But thou, that fillest all the room 5
Of all my love, art reason why
I seem to cast a careless eye
On souls, the lesser lords of doom.

For what wert thou? some novel power 10
Sprang up forever at a touch,
And hope could never hope too much,
In watching thee from hour to hour,

'Tis held that sorrow makes us wise;
 Yet how much wisdom sleeps with thee
 Which not alone had guided me,
 But served the seasons that may rise;

For can I doubt, who knew thee keen 5
 In intellect, with force and skill
 To strive, to fashion, to fulfill —
 I doubt not what thou wouldst have been.

A life in civic action warm,
 A soul on highest mission sent, 10
 A potent voice of Parliament,
 A pillar steadfast in the storm,

Should licensed boldness gather force,
 Becoming, when the time has birth,
 A lever to uplift the earth 15
 And roll it in another course,

With thousand shocks that come and go,
 With agonies, with energies,
 With overthrowings, and with cries, 20
 And undulations to and fro

114

Who loves not Knowledge? Who shall rail
 Against her beauty? May she mix
 With men and prosper! Who shall fix
 Her pillars? Let her work prevail.

But on her forehead sits a fire; 5
 She sets her forward countenance
 And leaps into the future chance,
 Submitting all things to desire.

Half-grown as yet, a child, and vain —
 She cannot fight the fear of death 10
 What is she, cut from love and faith,
 But some wild Pallas from the brain

Of demons? fiery-hot to burst
 All barriers in her onward race
 For power. Let her know her place; 15
 She is the second, not the first.

A higher hand must make her mild,
 If all be not in vain, and guide
 Her footsteps, moving side by side
 With Wisdom, like the younger child; 20

Section 114 12 Pallas In Greek mythology Pallas Athena (Minerva), the goddess of wisdom, sprang full-armed from the brain of Zeus

For she is earthly of the mind,
 But Wisdom heavenly of the soul.
 O friend, who camest to thy goal
 So early, leaving me behind,

I would the great world grew like thee, 25
 Who grewest not alone in power
 And knowledge, but by year and hour
 In reverence and in charity.

Now fades the last long streak of snow,
 Now burgeons every maze of quick
 About the flowering squares, and thick
 By ashen roots the violets blow.

Now rings the woodland loud and long, 5
 The distance takes a lovelier hue,
 And drowned in yonder living blue
 The lark becomes a sightless song.

Now dance the lights on lawn and lea,
 The flocks are whiter down the vale, 10
 And milkier every milky sail
 On winding stream or distant sea;

Where now the seamew pipes, or dives
 In yonder greening gleam, and fly
 The happy birds, that change their sky 15
 To build and brood, that live their lives

From land to land, and in my breast
 Spring wakens too, and my regret
 Becomes an April violet,
 And buds and blossoms like the rest. 20

Is it, then, regret for buried time
 That keenlier in sweet April wakes,
 And meets the year, and gives and takes
 The colors of the crescent prime?

Not all. the songs, the stirring air, 5
 The life re-orient out of dust,
 Cry through the sense to hearten trust
 In that which made the world so fair.

Not all regret the face will shine

 Still speak to me of me and mine

Yet less of sorrow lives in me

O days and hours, your work is this,
To hold me from my proper place,
A little while from his embrace,
For fuller gain of after bliss;

That out of distance might ensue
Desire of nearness doubly sweet,
And unto meeting, when we meet,
Delight a hundredfold accrue,

For every grain of sand that runs,
And every span of shade that steals,
And every kiss of toothéd wheels,
And all the courses of the suns.

Contemplate all this work of Time,
The giant laboring in his youth;
Nor dream of human love and truth,
As dying Nature's earth and lime;

But trust that those we call the dead
Are breathers of an ampler day
For ever nobler ends. They say
The solid earth whereon we tread

In tracts of fluent heat began,
And grew to seeming-random forms,
The seeming prey of cyclic storms,
Till at the last arose the man;

Who throve and branched from clime to clime,
The herald of a higher race,
And of himself in higher place,
If so he type this work of time

Within himself, from more to more,
Or, crowned with attributes of woe
Like glories, move his course, and show
That life is not as idle ore,

But iron dug from central gloom,
And heated hot with burning fears,
And dipped in baths of hissing tears,
And battered with the shocks of doom

To shape and use. Arise and fly

Doors, where my heart was used to beat
So quickly, not as one that weeps
I come once more; the city sleeps;
I smell the meadow in the street;

I hear a chirp of birds, I see
Betwixt the black fronts long-withdrawn
A light-blue lane of early dawn,
And think of early days and thee,

And bless thee, for thy lips are bland,
And bright the friendship of thine eye,
And in my thoughts with scarce a sigh
I take the pressure of thine hand.

120

I trust I have not wasted breath.
I think we are not wholly brain,
Magnetic mockeries; not in vain,
Like Paul with beasts, I fought with Death,

Not only cunning casts in clay.
Let Science prove we are, and then
What matters Science unto men,
At least to me? I would not stay.

Let him, the wiser man who springs
Hereafter, up from childhood shape
His action like the greater ape,
But I was born to other things.

And ready, thou, to die with him,
Thou watchest all things ever dim

Thou listenest to the closing door,
And life is darkened in the brain.

1 Hesper is the Greek name for Venus as the evening star, Phosphor (line 9), for Venus as the morning star

Beginning, and the wakeful bird;
Behind thee comes the greater light.

11

The market boat is on the stream,
And voices hail it from the brink;
Thou hear'st the village hammer clink,
And see'st the moving of the team.

15

Sweet Hesper-Phosphor, double name
For what is one, the first, the last,
Thou, like my present and my past,
Thy place is changed; thou art the same.

20

122

O wast thou with me, dearest, then,
While I rose up against my doom,
And yearned to burst the folded gloom,
To bare the eternal heavens again,

To feel once more, in placid awe,
The strong imagination roll
A sphere of stars about my soul,
In all her motion one with law?

5

If thou wert with me, and the grave
Divide us not, be with me now,
And enter in at breast and brow,
Till all my blood, a fuller wave,

10

Be quickened with a livelier breath,
And like an inconsiderate boy,
As in the former flash of joy,
I slip the thoughts of life and death;

15

And all the breeze of Fancy blows,
And every dewdrop paints a bow,
The wizard lightnings deeply glow,
And every thought breaks out a rose.

20

123

There rolls the deep where grew the tree.
O earth, what changes hast thou seen!
There where the long street roars hath been
The stillness of the central sea.

The hills are shadows, and they flow
From form to form, and nothing stands;
They melt like mist, the solid lands,
Like clouds they shape themselves and go.

5

But in my spirit will I dwell,
And dream my dream, and hold it true;
For though my lips may breathe adieu,
I cannot think the thing farewell.

That which we dare invoke to bless;
Our dearest faith; our ghastliest doubt;
He, They, One, All; within, without,
The Power in darkness whom we guess —

I found Him not in world or sun,
Or eagle's wing, or insect's eye,
Nor through the questions men may try,
The petty cobwebs we have spun.

5

If e'er when faith had fallen asleep,
I heard a voice, "believe no more,"
And heard an ever-breaking shore
That tumbled in the Godless deep,

10

A warmth within the breast would melt
The freezing reason's colder part,
And like a man in wrath the heart
Stood up and answered, "I have felt."

15

No, like a child in doubt and fear:
But that blind clamor made me wise;
Then was I as a child that cries,
But, crying, knows his father near;

20

And what I am beheld again
What is, and no man understands;
And out of darkness came the hands
That reach through nature, molding men.

125

Whatever I have said or sung,
Some bitter notes my harp would give,
Yea, though there often seemed to live
A contradiction on the tongue

Yet Hope had never lost her youth;
She did but look through dimmer eyes;
Or Love but played with gracious lies,
Because he felt so fixed in truth.

5

And if the song were full of care,
He breathed the spirit of the song,
And if the words were sweet and strong
He set his royal signet there;

Abiding with me till I sail
To seek thee on the mystic deeps,
And this electric force, that keeps
A thousand pulses dancing, fail.

15

126

Love is and was my lord and king,
And in his presence I attend
To hear the tidings of my friend,
Which every hour his couriers bring.

Section 124 9-12 This stanza refers to the materialistic philosophy condemned in Section 120. 16 "I have felt."
Tennyson believed that the deepest revelation of God comes not through science or through reason, but through the heart.

Love is and was my king and lord,
And will be, though as yet I keep Within the court on earth, and sleep
Encompassed by his faithful guard,

And hear at times a sentinel
Who moves about from place to place,
And whispers to the worlds of space,
In the deep night, that all is well.

127

And all is well, though faith and form
Be sundered in the night of fear;
Well roars the storm to those that hear
A deeper voice across the storm,

Proclaiming social truth shall spread,
And justice, even though thrice again
The red fool-fury of the Seine
Should pile her barricades with dead.

But ill for him that wears a crown,
And him, the lazar, in his rags!
They tremble, the sustaining crags;
The spires of ice are toppled down,

And molten up, and roar in flood,
The fortress crashes from on high,
The brute earth lightens to the sky,
And the great Æon sinks in blood,

And compassed by the fires of hell;
While thou, dear spirit, happy star,
O'erlook'st the tumult from afar,
And smilest, knowing all is well.

The love that rose on stronger wings,
Unpalsied when he met with Death,
Is comrade of the lesser faith
That sees the course of human things.

No doubt vast eddies in the flood
Of onward time shall yet be made,
And thronéd races may degrade;
Yet, O ye mysteries of good,

Wild Hours that fly with Hope and Fear,
If all your office had to do
With old results that look like new —
If this were all your mission here,

To draw, to sheathe a useless sword,
To fool the crowd with glorious lies,
To cleave a creed in sects and cries,
To change the bearing of a word,

To shift an arbitrary power,
To cramp the student at his desk,
To make old bareness picturesque
And tuft with grass a feudal tower,

Why, then my scorn might well descend
On you and yours. I see in part
That all, as in some piece of art,
Is toil cooperant to an end.

129

Dear friend, far off, my lost desire,
So far, so near in woe and weal,
O loved the most, when most I feel
There is a lower and a higher;

Known and unknown, human, divine;
Sweet human hand and lips and eye;
Dear heavenly friend that canst not die,
Mine, mine, forever, ever mine;

Strange friend, past, present, and to be,
Loved deeper, darklier understood;
Behold, I dream a dream of good,
And mingle all the world with thee.

130

Thy voice is on the rolling air;
I hear thee where the waters run;
Thou standest in the rising sun,
And in the setting thou art fair

What art thou then? I cannot guess,
But though I seem in star and flower
To feel thee some diffusive power,
I do not therefore love thee less.

My love involves the love before;
My love is vaster passion now;
Though mixed with God and Nature thou,
I seem to love thee more and more.

Far off thou art, but ever nigh,
I have thee still, and I rejoice;
I prosper, circled with thy voice;
I shall not lose thee though I die.

O living will that shalt endure
When all that seems shall suffer shock,
Rise in the spiritual rock,
Flow through our deeds and make them pure,

That we may lift from out of dust
A voice as unto him that hears,

Section 131 1 living will, explained by Tennyson as "free-will, the higher and enduring part of man" 3 the spiritual rock. See 1 Corinthians, 10 4—"And did all drink the same spiritual drink, for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ."

A cry above the conquered years
To one that with us works, and trust,

With faith that comes of self-control,
The truths that never can be proved 10
Until we close with all we loved,
And all we flow from, soul in soul

EPILOGUE

O true and tried, so well and long,
Demand not thou a marriage lay;
In that it is thy marriage day
Is music more than any song.

Nor have I felt so much of bliss 5
Since first he told me that he loved
A daughter of our house, nor proved
Since that dark day a day like this;

Though I since then have numbered o'er
Some thrice three years; they went and 10
came,
Remade the blood and changed the frame,
And yet is love not less, but more,

No longer caring to embalm
In dying songs a dead regret,
But like a statue solid-set, 15
And molded in colossal calm.

Regret is dead, but love is more
Than in the summers that are flown,
For I myself with these have grown
To something greater than before; 20

Which makes appear the songs I made
As echoes out of weaker times,
As half but idle brawling rimes,
The sport of random sun and shade.

But where is she, the bridal flower, 25
That must be made a wife ere noon?
She enters, glowing like the moon
Of Eden on its bridal bower.

On me she bends her blissful eyes
And then on thee, they meet thy look 30
And brighten like the star that shook
Betwixt the palms of Paradise.

Oh, when her life was yet in bud,
He too foretold the perfect rose.

For thee she grew, for thee she grows 35
Forever, and as fair as good.

And thou art worthy, full of power;
As gentle, liberal-minded, great,
Consistent, wearing all that weight
Of learning lightly like a flower. 40

But now set out. The noon is near,
And I must give away the bride;
She fears not, or with thee beside
And me behind her, will not fear.

For I that danced her on my knee, 45
That watched her on her nurse's arm,
That shielded all her life from harm,
At last must part with her to thee;

Now waiting to be made a wife,
Her feet, my darling, on the dead, 50
Their pensive tablets round her head,
And the most living words of life

Breathed in her ear. The ring is on,
The "Wilt thou?" answered, and again
The "Wilt thou?" asked, till out of twain 55
Her sweet "I will" has made you one.

Now sign your names, which shall be read,
Mute symbols of a joyful morn,
By village eyes as yet unborn.
The names are signed, and overhead 60

Begins the clash and clang that tells
The joy to every wandering breeze;
The blind wall rocks, and on the trees
The dead leaf trembles to the bells.

O happy hour, and happier hours 65
Await them. Many a merry face
Salutes them — maidens of the place,
That pelt us in the porch with flowers.

O happy hour, behold the bride
With him to whom her hand I gave. 70
They leave the porch, they pass the grave
That has today its sunny side.

Today the grave is bright for me,
For them the light of life increased,
Who stay to share the morning feast, 75
Who rest tonight beside the sea

Let all my genial spirits advance
To meet and greet a whiter sun,

My drooping memory will not shun
The foaming grape of eastern France. 80

It circles round, and fancy plays,
And hearts are warmed and faces bloom,
As drinking health to bride and groom
We wish them store of happy days.

Nor count me all to blame if I 85
Conjecture of a stiller guest,
Perchance, perchance, among the rest,
And, though in silence, wishing joy.

But they must go, the time draws on,
And those white-favored horses wait; 90
They rise, but linger; it is late;
Farewell, we kiss, and they are gone.

A shade falls on us like the dark
From little cloudlets on the grass,
But sweeps away as out we pass 95
To range the woods, to roam the park,

Discussing how their courtship grew,
And talk of others that are wed,
And how she looked, and what he said,
And back we come at fall of dew. 100

Again the feast, the speech, the glee,
The shade of passing thought, the wealth
Of words and wit, the double health,
The crowning cup, the three-times-three,

And last the dance; — till I retire 105
Dumb is that tower which spake so loud,
And high in heaven the streaming cloud,
And on the downs a rising fire.

And rise, O moon, from yonder down,
Till over down and over dale 110
All night the shining vapor sail
And pass the silent-lighted town,

The white-faced halls, the glancing rills,
And catch at every mountain head,
And o'er the friths that branch and spread
Their sleeping silver through the hills, 116

And touch with shade the bridal doors,
With tender gloom the roof, the wall;
And breaking let the splendor fall
To spangle all the happy shores 120

By which they rest, and ocean sounds,
And, star and system rolling past,
A soul shall draw from out the vast
And strike his being into bounds,

And, moved through life of lower phase, 125
Result in man, be born and think,
And act and love, a closer link
Betwixt us and the crowning race

Of those that, eye to eye, shall look
On knowledge; under whose command 130
Is Earth and Earth's, and in their hand
Is Nature like an open book;

No longer half-akin to brute,
For all we thought and loved and did,
And hoped, and suffered, is but seed 135
Of what in them is flower and fruit;

Whereof the man that with me trod
This planet was a noble type
Appearing ere the times were ripe,
That friend of mine who lives in God, 140

That God, which ever lives and loves,
One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves. (1850)

FRAGMENT

He clasps the crag with crooked hands;
Close to the sun in lonely lands,
Ringed with the azure world, he stands.

The wrinkled sea beneath him crawls;
He watches from his mountain walls, 5
And like a thunderbolt he falls. (1851)

COME NOT, WHEN I AM DEAD

Come not, when I am dead,
To drop thy foolish tears upon my grave,
To trample round my fallen head,
And vex the unhappy dust thou wouldst not save.
There let the wind sweep and the plover cry;
But thou, go by. 6

Child, if it were thine error or thy crime
I care no longer, being all unblest:
Wed whom thou wilt, but I am sick of time,
And I desire to rest. 10
Pass on, weak heart, and leave me where I lie;
Go by, go by. (1851)

ODE ON THE DEATH OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON

I

Bury the Great Duke
 With an empire's lamentation;
 Let us bury the Great Duke
 To the noise of the mourning of a mighty nation;
 Mourning when their leaders fall, 5
 Warriors carry the warrior's pall,
 And sorrow darkens hamlet and hall.

2

Where shall we lay the man whom we deplore?
 Here, in streaming London's central roar
 Let the sound of those he wrought for, 10
 And the feet of those he fought for,
 Echo round his bones for evermore.

3

Lead out the pageant, sad and slow,
 As fits an universal woe,
 Let the long, long procession go, 15
 And let the sorrowing crowd about it grow,
 And let the mournful martial music blow,
 The last great Englishman is low.

4

Mourn, for to us he seems the last,
 Remembering all his greatness in the past 20
 No more in soldier fashion will he greet
 With lifted hand the gazer in the street.
 O friends, our chief state-oracle is mute!
 Mourn for the man of long-enduring blood,
 The statesman-warrior, moderate, resolute, 25
 Whole in himself, a common good.
 Mourn for the man of amplest influence,
 Yet clearest of ambitious crime,
 Our greatest yet with least pretense,
 Great in council and great in war, 30
 Foremost captain of his time,
 Rich in saving common-sense,
 And, as the greatest only are,
 In his simplicity sublime.
 O good gray head which all men knew, 35
 O voice from which their omens all men drew,
 O iron nerve to true occasion true,
 O fallen at length that tower of strength
 Which stood four-square to all the winds that blew!
 Such was he whom we deplore. 40

Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington (1760-1852), was at the time of his death the hero of the British nation. He had a distinguished record of military victories, the greatest being the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo, in 1815. Tennyson had genuine enthusiasm for his subject. The poem is the most important of his official compositions as poet laureate, and is one of the finest funeral odes in literature.

9 Here. roar. Wellington was buried in St Paul's Cathedral, located in the heart of London.

The long self-sacrifice of life is o'er.
 The great World-victor's victor will be seen no more.

5

All is over and done
 Render thanks to the Giver,
 England, for thy son 45
 Let the bell be tolled
 Render thanks to the Giver,
 And render him to the mold.
 Under the cross of gold
 That shines over city and river, 50
 There he shall rest forever
 Among the wise and the bold.
 Let the bell be tolled,
 And a reverent people behold
 The towering car, the sable steeds. 55
 Bright let it be with its blazoned deeds,
 Dark in its funeral fold
 Let the bell be tolled,
 And a deeper knell in the heart be knolled,
 And the sound of the sorrowing anthem rolled
 Through the dome of the golden cross; 61
 And the volleying cannon thunder his loss;
 He knew their voices of old.
 For many a time in many a clime
 His captain's-ear has heard them boom 65
 Bellowing victory, bellowing doom.
 When he with those deep voices wrought,
 Guarding realms and kings from shame,
 With those deep voices our dead captain taught
 The tyrant, and asserts his claim 70
 In that dread sound to the great name
 Which he has worn so pure of blame,
 In praise and in dispraise the same,
 A man of well-attempered frame.
 O civic muse, to such a name, 75
 To such a name for ages long,
 To such a name,
 Preserve a broad approach of fame,
 And ever-echoing avenues of song!

 guest, 80
 With banner and with music, with soldier and with priest,
 With a nation weeping, and breaking on my
 rest?" —

The funeral car was inscribed with the names of Wellington's victories. 66 Bellowing victory, a reference to the many victories of Wellington—in Holland, India, Denmark, Portugal, Spain, France, and Belgium. 80-82 These lines are spoken by Lord Nelson, the Mighty Seaman, who lay buried in St. Paul's. He was killed at Trafalgar in 1805.

Was great by land as thou by sea.
 Thine island loves thee well, thou famous
 man, 85
 The greatest sailor since our world began.
 Now, to the roll of muffled drums,
 To thee the greatest soldier comes;
 For this is he
 Was great by land as thou by sea 90
 His foes were thine; he kept us free;
 Oh, give him welcome, this is he
 Worthy of our gorgeous rites,
 And worthy to be laid by thee;
 For this is England's greatest son, 95
 He that gained a hundred fights,
 Nor ever lost an English gun;
 This is he that far away
 Against the myriads of Assaye
 Clashed with his fiery few and won; 100
 And underneath another sun,
 Warring on a later day,
 Round affrighted Lisbon drew
 The treble works, the vast designs
 Of his labored rampart-lines, 105
 Where he greatly stood at bay,
 Whence he issued forth anew,
 And ever great and greater grew,
 Beating from the wasted vines
 Back to France her banded swarms, 110
 Back to France with countless blows,
 Till o'er the hills her eagles flew
 Beyond the Pyrenean pines,
 Followed up in valley and glen
 With blare of bugle, clamor of men, 115
 Roll of cannon and clash of arms,
 And England pouring on her foes.
 Such a war had such a close.
 Again their ravening eagle rose
 In anger, wheeled on Europe-shadowing wings,
 And barking for the thrones of kings, 121
 Till one that sought but Duty's iron crown
 On that loud Sabbath shook the spoiler down,
 A day of onsets of despair!
 Dashed on every rocky square, 125
 Their surging charges foamed themselves
 away;
 Last, the Prussian trumpet blew;
 Through the long-tormented air
 Heaven flashed a sudden jubilant ray,
 And down we swept and charged and overthrew 130

What long-enduring hearts could do
 In that world-earthquake, Waterloo!
 Mighty Seaman, tender and true,
 And pure as he from taint of craven guile, 135
 O savior of the silver-coasted isle,
 O shaker of the Baltic and the Nile,
 If aught of things that here befall
 Touch a spirit among things divine,
 If love of country move thee there at all, 140
 Be glad, because his bones are laid by thine!
 And through the centuries let a people's voice
 In full acclaim,
 A people's voice,
 The proof and echo of all human fame, 145
 A people's voice, when they rejoice
 At civic revel and pomp and game,
 Attest their great commander's claim
 With honor, honor, honor, honor to him,
 Eternal honor to his name. 150

 Though all men else their nobler dreams for-

 Confused by brainless mobs and lawless

 We have a voice with which to pay the debt
 Of boundless love and reverence and regret
 To those great men who fought, and kept it
 ours.
 And keep it ours, O God, from brute control!

 soul 160

Gone, but nothing can bereave him
Of the force he made his own

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE

Half a league, half a league,
 Half a league onward,
 All in the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.
 "Forward the Light Brigade!" 5
 Charge for the guns!" he said.
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred

"Forward, the Light Brigade!"
 Was there a man dismayed?
 Not though the soldier knew 10
 Someone had blundered.
 Theirs not to make reply,
 Theirs not to reason why,
 Theirs but to do and die. 15
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them,
 Cannon in front of them 20
 Volleyed and thundered,
 Stormed at with shot and shell,
 Boldly they rode and well,
 Into the jaws of Death,
 Into the mouth of hell 25
 Rode the six hundred.

Flashed all their sabers bare,
 Flashed as they turned in air
 Sabring the gunners there,
 Charging an army, while 30
 All the world wondered
 Plunged in the battery-smoke
 Right through the line they broke;
 Cossack and Russian
 Reeled from the saber-stroke 35
 Shattered and sundered.
 Then they rode back, but not,
 Not the six hundred.

The Charge of the Light Brigade The charge here described took place in 1854 at Balaklava, on the Black Sea, in the Crimean War, fought against Russia by England, France, Turkey, and Sardinia. It is not known who was responsible for the useless sacrifice.

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them, 40
 Cannon behind them
 Volleyed and thundered;
 Stormed at with shot and shell,
 While horse and hero fell,
 They that had fought so well 45
 Came through the jaws of Death,
 Back from the mouth of hell,
 All that was left of them,
 Left of six hundred.

When can their glory fade? 50
 O the wild charge they made!
 All the world wondered
 Honor the charge they made!
 Honor the Light Brigade,
 Noble six hundred! 55

THE SONG OF THE BROOK

I come from haunts of coot and hern,
 I make a sudden sally,
 And sparkle out among the fern,
 To bicker down a valley.

By thirty hills I hurry down, 5
 Or slip between the ridges,
 By twenty thorps, a little town,
 And half a hundred bridges.

Till last by Philip's farm I flow
 To join the brimming river, 10
 For men may come and men may go,
 But I go on forever.

I chatter over stony ways,
 In little sharps and trebles,
 I bubble into eddying bays, 15
 I babble on the pebbles.

With many a curve my banks I fret
 By many a field and fallow,
 And many a fairy foreland set
 With willow-weed and mallow. 20

I chatter, chatter, as I flow
 To join the brimming river,
 For men may come and men may go,
 But I go on forever.

I wind about, and in and out, 25
 With here a blossom sailing,

The Song of the Brook This lyric appears in a narrative poem, an English idyll entitled The Brook. In the longer poem, Lawrence Aylmer, returning home after an absence of twenty years, wanders by the brook and recalls the past and the rime of the brook written by his brother Edmund. No particular brook is meant.

9 Philip. Philip is a character in the idyll.

And here and there a lusty trout,
And here and there a grayling,

And here and there a foamy flake
Upon me, as I travel
With many a silvery water-break
Above the golden gravel,

And draw them all along and flow
To join the brimming river,
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever.

I steal by lawns and grassy plots,
I slide by hazel covers;
I move the sweet forget-me-nots
That grow for happy lovers

I slip, I slide, I gloom, I glance,
Among my skimming swallows;
I make the netted sunbeam dance
Against my sandy shallows.

I murmur under moon and stars
In brambly wildernesses;
I linger by my shingly bars,
I loiter round my cresses;

And out again I curve and flow
To join the brimming river,
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever

(1855)

MAUD

PART ONE

1

I hate the dreadful hollow behind the little
wood;
Its lips in the field above are dabbled with blood-red heath,
The red-ribbed ledges drip with a silent horror
of blood,
And Echo there, whatever is asked her, answers "Death"

2

For there in the ghastly pit long since a body was found,

31 water-break, ripple 38 covers, thickets 47
shingly bars, banks of loose, coarse gravel
Maud The speaker of this poem is a morbid, sentimental young man in love with Maud, the rich playmate of his youth Each section is a stage in the hero's development
After a tragic love affair, the hero goes insane, but he is finally restored under the influence of the noble emotions aroused by the Crimean War (See Critical Notes)

His who had given me life — O father! O
God! was it well? —
Mangled, and flattened, and crushed, and dinted into the ground;
There yet lies the rock that fell with him
when he fell.

3

Did he fling himself down? who knows? for a vast speculation had failed,
And ever he muttered and maddened, and ever wanned with despair,
And out he walked when the wind like a broken worldling wailed,
And the flying gold of the ruined woodlands drove through the air.

4

I remembered the time, for the roots of my hair were stirred
By a shuffled step, by a dead weight trailed,
by a whispered fright,
And my pulses closed their gates with a shock
on my heart as I heard
The shrill-edged shriek of a mother divide the shuddering night.

5

Villainy somewhere! whose? One says, we are villains all
Not he; his honest fame should at least by me be maintained;
But that old man, now lord of the broad estate and the Hall,
Dropped off gorged from a scheme that had left us flaccid and drained.

6

Why do they prate of the blessings of peace?
we have made them a curse,
Pickpockets, each hand lusting for all that is not its own;
And lust of gain, in the spirit of Cain, is it better or worse
Than the heart of the citizen hissing in war on his own hearthstone?

7

But these are the days of advance, the works of the men of mind,
When who but a fool would have faith in a tradesman's ware or his word?
Is it peace or war? Civil war, as I think, and that of a kind
The viler, as underhand, not openly bearing the sword.

8

Sooner or later I too may passively take the print
Of the golden age — why not? I have neither hope nor trust; 30
May make my heart as a millstone, set my face as a flint,
Cheat and be cheated, and die — who knows?
we are ashes and dust.

9

Peace sitting under her olive, and slurring
the days gone by,
When the poor are hoveled and hustled together, each sex, like swine,
When only the ledger lives, and when only not all men lie; 35
Peace in her vineyard — yes! — but a company forges the wine.

10

And the vitriol madness flushes up in the ruffian's head,
Till the filthy by-lane rings to the yell of the trampled wife,
And chalk and alum and plaster are sold to the poor for bread,
And the spirit of murder works in the very means of life, 40

11

And Sleep must lie down armed, for the villainous center-bits
Grind on the wakeful ear in the hush of the moonless nights,
While another is cheating the sick of a few last gasps, as he sits
To pestle a poisoned poison behind his crimson lights.

12

When a Mammonite mother kills her babe for a burial fee, 45
And Timour-Mammon grins on a pile of children's bones,
Is it peace or war? better, war! loud war by land and by sea,
War with a thousand battles, and shaking a hundred thrones!

13

For I trust if an enemy's fleet came yonder round by the hill,

41 center-bit, an instrument used for drilling holes, it is a common tool of burglars 45 Mammonite, one devoted to the pursuit of wealth Mammon is the god of wealth 46 This line refers to the alleged brutalities of Timour, or Tamerlane, the great Mongolian conqueror of the 14th century At the capture of Siwas he is said to have had a thousand children crushed under the feet of his horsemen

And the rushing battle-bolt sang from the three-decker out of the foam, 50
That the smooth-faced, snub-nosed rogue would leap from his counter and till,
And strike, if he could, were it but with his cheating yardwand, home —

14

What! am I raging alone as my father raged
in his mood?
Must I too creep to the hollow and dash myself down and die
Rather than hold by the law that I made,
nevermore to brood 55
On a horror of shattered limbs and a wretched swindler's lie?

15

Would there be sorrow for me? there was love
in the passionate shriek,
Love for the silent thing that had made false haste to the grave —
Wrapped in a cloak, as I saw him, and thought he would rise and speak
And rave at the lie and the har, ah God, as he used to rave. 60

16

I am sick of the Hall and the hill, I am sick of the moor and the main
Why should I stay? can a sweeter chance ever come to me here?
Oh, having the nerves of motion as well as the nerves of pain,
Were it not wise if I fled from the place and the pit and the fear?

17

Workmen up at the Hall! — they are coming back from abroad; 65
The dark old place will be gilt by the touch of a millionaire
I have heard, I know not whence, of the singular beauty of Maud,
I played with the girl when a child, she promised then to be fair.

18

Maud, with her venturous climbings and tumbles and childish escapes,
Maud, the delight of the village, the ringing joy of the Hall, 70 Maud, with her sweet purse-mouth when my father dangled the grapes,
Maud, the beloved of my mother, the moon-faced darling of all —

19

What is she now? My dreams are bad She may bring me a curse.

No, there is fatter game on the moor, she will let me alone
Thanks, for the fiend best knows whether woman or man be the worse 75
I will bury myself in myself, and the Devil may pipe to his own

II

Long have I sighed for a calm; God grant I may find it at last!
It will never be broken by Maud; she has neither savor nor salt,
But a cold and clear-cut face, as I found when her carriage passed,
Perfectly beautiful, let it be granted her;
where is the fault? 80
All that I saw — for her eyes were downcast, not to be seen —
Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly
null,
Dead perfection, no more, nothing more, if it had not been
For a chance of travel, a paleness, an hour's defect of the rose,
Or an underlip, you may call it a little too ripe, too full, 85
Or the least little delicate aquiline curve in a sensitive nose,
From which I escaped heart-free, with the least little touch of spleen.

III

Cold and clear-cut face, why come you so cruelly meek,
Breaking a slumber in which all spleenful
folly was drowned?
Pale with the golden beam of an eyelash dead
on the cheek, 90
Passionless, pale, cold face, star-sweet on a gloom profound;
Womanlike, taking revenge too deep for a transient wrong
Done but in thought to your beauty, and ever as pale as before Growing and fading and growing upon me
without a sound,
Luminous, gemlike, ghostlike, deathlike, half the night long 95
Growing and fading and growing, till I could bear it no more,
But arose, and all by myself in my own dark garden ground,
Listening now to the tide in its broad-flung shipwrecking roar,
Now to the scream of a maddened beach
dragged down by the wave,

Walked in a wintry wind by a ghastly glimmer, and found 100
The shining daffodil dead, and Orion low in his grave.

IV

I

A million emeralds break from the rubybudded lime
In the little grove where I sit — ah, wherefore cannot I be Like things of the season gay, like the bountiful season bland,
When the far-off sail is blown by the breeze
of a softer clime, 105
Half-lost in the liquid azure bloom of a crescent of sea,
The silent sapphire-spangled marriage ring of the land?

2

Below me, there, is the village, and looks how quiet and small!
And yet bubbles o'er like a city, with gossip,
scandal, and spite,
And Jack on his ale-house bench has as many lies as a Czar; 110
And here on the landward side, by a red rock,
glimmers the Hall,
And up in the high Hall-garden I see her pass
like a light,
But sorrow seize me if ever that light be my leading star!

3

When have I bowed to her father, the wrinkled head of the race?
I met her today with her brother, but not to her brother I bowed; 115
I bowed to his lady-sister as she rode by on the moor,
But the fire of a foolish pride flashed over her beautiful face
O child, you wrong your beauty, believe it,
in being so proud;
Your father has wealth well-gotten, and I am nameless and poor.

4

I keep but a man and a maid, ever ready to slander and steal; 120
I know it, and smile a hard-set smile, like a stoic, or like
A wiser epicurean, and let the world have its
way.
For nature is one with rapine, a harm no
preacher can heal;

The Mayfly is torn by the swallow, the sparrow speared by the shrike,
And the whole little wood where I sit is a world of plunder and prey. 125

5

We are puppets, Man in his pride, and Beauty
fair in her flower,
Do we move ourselves, or are moved by an unseen hand at a game
That pushes us off from the board, and others ever succeed?
Ah yet, we cannot be kind to each other here
for an hour;
We whisper, and hint, and chuckle, and grin
at a brother's shame; 130
However we brave it out, we men are a little breed.

6

A monstrous eft was of old the lord and
master of earth,
For him did his high sun flame, and his river
billowing ran,
And he felt himself in his force to be Nature's crowning race
As nine months go to the shaping an infant ripe for his birth, 135
So many a million of ages have gone to the making of man;
He now is first, but is he the last? is he not too base?

7

The man of science himself is fonder of glory,
and vain,
An eye well-practiced in nature, a spirit
bounded and poor;
The passionate heart of the poet is whirled into folly and vice. 140
I would not marvel at either, but keep a temperate brain;
For not to desire or admire, if a man could learn it, were more Than to walk all day like the sultan of old in a garden of spice

8

For the drift of the Maker is dark, an Isis hid by the veil.
Who knows the ways of the world, how God will bring them about? 145
Our planet is one, the suns are many, the world is wide.
Shall I weep if a Poland fall? shall I shriek
if a Hungary fail?

144 Isis, an Egyptain goddess of fruitfulness 147
Poland . . . fail, a reference to the final dismemberment of Poland by Russia and Austria in 1846, and to the defeat of the Hungarians in their revolt against Austrian rule in 1849

Or an infant civilization be ruled with rod or with knout?
I have not made the world, and He that made it will guide.

9

Be mine a philosopher's life in the quiet woodland ways, 150
Where if I cannot be gay let a passionless
peace be my lot,
Far-off from the clamor of liars belied in the hubbub of lies;
From the long-necked geese of the world that are ever hissing dispraise
Because their natures are little, and, whether he heed it or not,
Where each man walks with his head in a cloud of poisonous flies. 155

10

And most of all would I flee from the cruel
madness of love,
The honey of poison-flowers and all the measureless ill.
Ah, Maud, you milk-white fawn, you are all unmeet for a wife.
Your mother is mute in her grave as her
image in marble above,
Your father is ever in London, you wander about at your will, 160
You have but fed on the roses and lain in the lilies of life.

V

I

A voice by the cedar tree
In the meadow under the Hall!
She is singing an air that is known to me,
A passionate ballad gallant and gay, 165
A martial song like a trumpet's call!
Singing alone in the morning of life,
In the happy morning of life and of May,
Singing of men that in battle array,
Ready in heart and ready in hand, 170
March with banner and bugle and fife
To the death, for their native land.

2

Maud with her exquisite face,
And wild voice pealing up to the sunny sky,
And feet like sunny gems on an English green,
Maud in the light of her youth and her grace,
Singing of Death, and of Honor that cannot
die, 177
Till I well could weep for a time so sordid
and mean,
And myself so languid and base.

3

Silence, beautiful voice! 180
 Be still, for you only trouble the mind
 With a joy in which I cannot rejoice,
 A glory I shall not find.
 Still! I will hear you no more,
 For your sweetness hardly leaves me a choice
 But to move to the meadow and fall before 186
 Her feet on the meadow grass, and adore,
 Not her, who is neither courtly nor kind,
 Not her, not her, but a voice.

VI

I

Morning arises stormy and pale, 190
 No sun, but a wannish glare
 In fold upon fold of hueless cloud,
 And the budded peaks of the wood are bowed,
 Caught, and cuffed by the gale,
 I had fancied it would be fair. 195

2

Whom but Maud should I meet
 Last night, when the sunset burned
 On the blossomed gable-ends
 At the head of the village street,
 Whom but Maud should I meet? 200
 And she touched my hand with a smile so
 sweet,
 She made me divine amends
 For a courtesy not returned.

3

And thus a delicate spark
 Of glowing and growing light 205
 Through the livelong hours of the dark
 Kept itself warm in the heart of my dreams,
 Ready to burst in a colored flame;
 Till at last, when the morning came
 In a cloud, it faded, and seems 210
 But an ashen-gray delight.

4

What if with her sunny hair,
 And smile as sunny as cold,
 She meant to weave me a snare
 Of some coquettish deceit, 215
 Cleopatra-like as of old
 To entangle me when we met,
 To have her lion roll in a silken net
 And fawn at a victor's feet?

5

Ah, what shall I be at fifty 220
 Should Nature keep me alive,
 If I find the world so bitter

216 Cleopatra See A Dream of Fair Women, lines 127 ff and note, page 32

When I am but twenty-five?
 Yet, if she were not a cheat,
 If Maud were all that she seemed, 225
 And her smile were all that I dreamed,
 Then the world were not so bitter
 But a smile could make it sweet.

6

What if, though her eye seemed full
 Of a kind intent to me, 230
 What if that dandy-despot, he,
 That jeweled mass of millinery,
 That oiled and curled Assyrian bull
 Smelling of musk and of insolence,
 Her brother, from whom I keep aloof, 235
 Who wants the finer politic sense
 To mask, though but in his own behoof,
 With a glassy smile his brutal scorn —
 What if he had told her yestermorn
 How prettily for his own sweet sake 240
 A face of tenderness might be feigned,
 And a moist mirage in desert eyes,
 That so, when the rotten hustings shake
 In another month to his brazen lies,
 A wretched vote may be gained? 245

7

For a raven ever croaks, at my side,
 Keep watch and ward, keep watch and ward,
 Or thou wilt prove their tool.
 Yea, too, myself from myself I guard,
 For often a man's own angry pride 250
 Is cap and bells for a fool.

8

Perhaps the smile and tender tone
 Came out of her pitying womanhood,
 For am I not, am I not, here alone
 So many a summer since she died, 255
 My mother, who was so gentle and good?
 Living alone in an empty house,
 Here half-hud in the gleaming wood,
 Where I hear the dead at midday moan,
 And the shrieking rush of the wainscot mouse,
 And my own sad name in corners cried, 261
 When the shiver of dancing leaves is thrown
 About its echoing chambers wide,
 Till a morbid hate and horror grown
 Of a world in which I have hardly mixed, 265
 And a morbid eating lichen fixed
 On a heart half-turned to stone.

9

O heart of stone, are you flesh, and caught
 By that you swore to withstand?

233 Assyrian bull Assyrian antiquities include sculptured bulls with wings and heavy-featured human heads 243
hustings, a platform from which a candidate for Parliament addressed the electors 251 cap and bells, a reference to the medieval fool's bauble, consisting of a representation of a fool's head with cap and bells.

For what was it else within me wrought 270
But, I fear, the new strong wine of love,
That made my tongue so stammer and trip
When I saw the treasured splendor, her hand,
Come sliding out of her sacred glove,
And the sunlight broke from her lip? 275

IO

I have played with her when a child;
She remembers it now we meet.
Ah, well, well, well, I may be beguiled
By some coquettish deceit 280
Yet, if she were not a cheat,
If Maud were all that she seemed,
And her smile had all that I dreamed,
Then the world were not so bitter
But a smile could make it sweet.

VII

I

Did I hear it half in a doze 285
Long since, I know not where?
Did I dream it an hour ago,
When asleep in this arm-chair?

2

Men were drinking together,
Drinking and talking of me: 290
"Well, if it prove a girl, the boy
Will have plenty; so let it be."

3

Is it an echo of something
Read with a boy's delight,
Viziers nodding together 295
In some Arabian night?

4

Strange, that I hear two men,
Somewhere, talking of me
"Well, if it prove a girl, my boy
Will have plenty; so let it be." 300

VIII

She came to the village church,
And sat by a pillar alone,
An angel watching an urn
Wept over her, carved in stone;
And once, but once, she lifted her eyes, 305
And suddenly, sweetly, strangely blushed
To find they were met by my own;
And suddenly, sweetly, my heart beat stronger
And thicker, until I heard no longer
The snowy-banded, dilettante, 310
Delicate-handed priest intone,

295 Viziers, high officials of various Mohammedan countries

And thought, is it pride? and mused and sighed,
"No surely, now it cannot be pride "

IX

I was walking a mile,
More than a mile from the shore, 315
The sun looked out with a smile
Betwixt the cloud and the moor;
And riding at set of day
Over the dark moor land,
Rapidly riding far away, 320
She waved to me with her hand.
There were two at her side,
Something flashed in the sun,
Down by the hill I saw them ride,
In a moment they were gone; 325
Like a sudden spark
Struck vainly in the night,
Then returns the dark
With no more hope of light.

X

I

Sick, am I sick of a jealous dread? 330
Was not one of the two at her side
This new-made lord, whose splendor plucks
The slavish hat from the villager's head?
Whose old grandfather has lately died,
Gone to a blacker pit, for whom 335
Grimy nakedness dragging his trucks
And laying his trams in a poisoned gloom
Wrought, till he crept from a gutted mine
Master of half a servile shire,
And left his coal all turned into gold 340
To a grandson, first of his noble line,
Rich in the grace all women desire,
Strong in the power that all men adore,
And simpler and set their voices lower,
And soften as if to a girl, and hold 345
Awe-stricken breaths at a work divine,
Seeing his gewgaw castle shine,
New as his title, built last year,
There amid perky larches and pine,
And over the sullen-purple moor — 350
Look at it — pricking a cockney ear

2

What, has he found my jewel out?
For one of the two that rode at her side
Bound for the Hall, I am sure was he;
Bound for the Hall, and I think for a bride
Blithe would her brother's acceptance be 356
Maud could be gracious too, no doubt,
To a lord, a captain, a padded shape,
A bought commission, a waxen face,
A rabbit mouth that is ever agape — 360

Bought? what is it he cannot buy?
 And therefore splenetic, personal, base,
 A wounded thing with a rancorous cry,
 At war with myself and a wretched race,
 Sick, sick to the heart of life, am I. 365

3

Last week came one to the county town,
 To preach our poor little army down,
 And play the game of the despot kings,
 Though the state has done it and thrice as
 well. 369

This broad-brimmed hawker of holy things, Whose ear is crammed with his cotton, and rings

Even in dreams to the chink of his pence,
 This huckster put down war! can he tell
 Whether war be a cause or a consequence?
 Put down the passions that make earth hell!
 Down with ambition, avarice, pride, 376
 Jealousy, down! cut off from the mind
 The bitter springs of anger and fear!
 Down too, down at your own fireside,
 With the evil tongue and the evil ear, 380
 For each is at war with mankind!

4

I wish I could hear again
 The chivalrous battle-song
 That she warbled alone in her joy!
 I might persuade myself then 385
 She would not do herself this great wrong,
 To take a wanton dissolute boy
 For a man and leader of men.

5

Ah God, for a man with heart, head, hand,
 Like some of the simple great ones gone 390
 Forever and ever by,
 One still strong man in a blatant land,
 Whatever they call him — what care I? — Aristocrat, democrat, autocrat — one
 Who can rule and dare not lie! 395

6

And ah for a man to arise in me,
 That the man I am may cease to be!

XI

I

Oh, let the solid ground
 Not fail beneath my feet
 Before my life has found 400
 What some have found so sweet!

370 This broad-brimmed, etc., someone who wore the broad-brimmed hat of the Quakers; sometimes taken to refer to John Bright (1811-1889), who was a Quaker and who was prominent in the party opposing the war with Russia at the time this poem was written.

Then let come what come may,
 What matter if I go mad,
 I shall have had my day.

2

Let the sweet heavens endure, 405
 Not close and darken above me
 Before I am quite, quite sure
 That there is one to love me!
 Then let come what come may
 To a life that has been so sad — 410
 I shall have had my day.

XII

I

Birds in the high Hall-garden
 When twilight was falling,
 Maud, Maud, Maud, Maud, 415
 They were crying and calling.

2

Where was Maud? in our wood,
 And I — who else? — was with her,
 Gathering woodland lilies,
 Myriads blow together.

3

Birds in our wood sang 420
 Ringing through the valleys,
 Maud is here, here, here
 In among the lilies.

4

I kissed her slender hand,
 She took the kiss sedately; 425
 Maud is not seventeen,
 But she is tall and stately.

5

I to cry out on pride
 Who have won her favor!
 Oh, Maud were sure of heaven 430
 If lowliness could save her!

6

I know the way she went Home with her maiden posy,
 For her feet have touched the meadows
 And left the daisies rosy. 435

7

Birds in the high Hall-garden
 Were crying and calling to her,
 Where is Maud, Maud, Maud?
 One is come to woo her.

419 blow, bloom 434-435 For rosy The underside of the English daisy is rose-colored Maud's dress brushed the daisies and bent them over so that the underside was visible

8

Look, a horse at the door, 440
 And little King Charley snarling!
 Go back, my lord, across the moor,
 You are not her darling.

XIII

I

Scorned, to be scorned by one that I scorn,
 Is that a matter to make me fret? 445
 That a calamity hard to be borne?
 Well, he may live to hate me yet.
 Fool that I am to be vexed with his pride!
 I passed him, I was crossing his lands;
 He stood on the path a little aside; 450
 His face, as I grant, in spite of spite,
 Has a broad-blown comeliness, red and white,
 And six feet two, as I think, he stands;
 But his essences turned the live air sick,
 And barbarous opulence jewel-thick 455
 Sunned itself on his breast and his hands

2

Who shall call me ungentle, unfair?
 I longed so heartily then and there
 To give him the grasp of fellowship,
 But while I passed he was humming an air,
 Stopped, and then with a riding-whip 461
 Leisuredly tapping a glossy boot,
 And curving a contumelious lip,
 Gorgonzized me from head to foot
 With a stony British stare. 465

3

Why sits he here in his father's chair?
 That old man never comes to his place,
 Shall I believe him ashamed to be seen?
 For only once, in the village street,
 Last year, I caught a glimpse of his face, 470
 A gray old wolf and a lean
 Scarcely, now, would I call him a cheat;
 For then, perhaps, as a child of deceit,
 She might by a true descent be untrue,
 And Maud is as true as Maud is sweet, 475
 Though I fancy her sweetness only due
 To the sweeter blood by the other side,
 Her mother has been a thing complete,
 However she came to be so allied.
 And fair without, faithful within, 480
 Maud to him is nothing akin.
 Some peculiar mystic grace
 Made her only the child of her mother,
 And heaped the whole inherited sin
 On that huge scapegoat of the race, 485
 All, all upon the brother.

4

Peace, angry spirit, and let him be!
 Has not his sister smiled on me?

XIV

I

Maud has a garden of roses
 And lilies fair on a lawn; 490
 There she walks in her state
 And tends upon bed and bower,
 And thither I climbed at dawn
 And stood by her garden-gate
 A lion ramps at the top, 495
 He is clasped by a passion-flower.

2

Maud's own little oak-room —
 Which Maud, like a precious stone
 Set in the heart of the carven gloom,
 Lights with herself, when alone 500
 She sits by her music and books
 And her brother lingers late
 With a roystering company — looks Upon Maud's own garden-gate;
 And I thought as I stood, if a hand, as white
 As ocean-foam in the moon, were laid 506
 On the hasp of the window, and my Delight Had a sudden desire, like a glorious ghost, to glide,
 Like a beam of the seventh heaven, down to my side,
 There were but a step to be made. 510

3

The fancy flattered my mind,
 And again seemed overbold;
 Now I thought that she cared for me,
 Now I thought she was kind
 Only because she was cold. 515

4

I heard no sound where I stood
 But the rivulet on from the lawn
 Running down to my own dark wood,
 Or the voice of the long sea-wave as it swelled
 Now and then in the dim-gray dawn, 520
 But I looked, and round, all round the house
 I beheld
 The death-white curtain drawn,
 Felt a horror over me creep,
 Prickle my skin and catch my breath,

492 bed and bower, flower bed and arbor 509 the seventh heaven In ancient times the space around the earth was divided into a series of heavens of varying number The seventh heaven represents the place or state of supreme bliss

441 Charley, a spaniel 464 Gorgonzized, turned to stone (from Gorgon, a hideous monster of Greek mythology the sight of which turned the beholder to stone)

Knew that the death-white curtain meant but sleep, 525
Yet I shuddered and thought like a fool of the sleep of death.

XV

So dark a mind within me dwells,
And I make myself such evil cheer,
That if I be dear to someone else,
Then someone else may have much to fear,
But if I be dear to someone else, 531
Then I should be to myself more dear.
Shall I not take care of all that I think,
Yea, even of wretched meat and drink,
If I be dear, 535
If I be dear to someone else?

XVI

I

This lump of earth has left his estate
The lighter by the loss of his weight;
And so that he find what he went to seek,
And fulsome pleasure clog him, and drown 540
His heart in the gross mud-honey of town,
He may stay for a year who has gone for a week.

But this is the day when I must speak,
And I see my oread coming down,
Oh, this is the day! 545

O beautiful creature, what am I
That I dare to look her way?
Think I may hold dominion sweet,
Lord of the pulse that is lord of her breast,
And dream of her beauty with tender dread,
From the delicate Arab arch of her feet 551
To the grace that, bright and light as the crest

Of a peacock, sits on her shining head,
And she knows it not — O if she knew it,
To know her beauty might half undo it! 555
I know it the one bright thing to save
My yet young life in the wilds of Time,
Perhaps from madness, perhaps from crime,
Perhaps from a selfish grave.

2

What, if she be fastened to this fool lord, 560
Dare I bid her abide by her word?
Should I love her so well if she
Had given her word to a thing so low?
Shall I love her as well if she
Can break her word were it even for me? 565
I trust that it is not so.

544 oread, a mountain nymph 551 Arab arch, a reference to the high instep of the Arab, which gives swiftness and elasticity to his gait

3

Catch not my breath, O clamorous heart,
Let not my tongue be a thrall to my eye,
For I must tell her before we part,
I must tell her, or die. 570

XVII

Go not, happy day,
From the shining fields,
Go not, happy day,
Till the maiden yields. 575
Rosy is the West,
Rosy is the South,
Roses are her cheeks,
And a rose her mouth.
When the happy Yes
Falters from her lips, 580
Pass and blush the news
Over glowing ships,
Over blowing seas,
Over seas at rest,
Pass the happy news, 585
Blush it through the West;
Till the red man dance
By his red cedar-tree,
And the red man's babe
Leap, beyond the sea. 590
Blush from West to East,
Blush from East to West,
Till the West is East,
Blush it through the West.
Rosy is the West, 595
Rosy is the South,
Roses are her cheeks,
And a rose her mouth.

XVIII

I

I have led her home, my love, my only friend
There is none like her, none. 600
And never yet so warmly ran my blood
And sweetly, on and on Calming itself to the long-wished-for end,
Full to the banks, close on the promised good.

2

None like her, none. 605
Just now the dry-tongued laurels' pattering
talk
Seemed her light foot along the garden walk,
And shook my heart to think she comes once
more.

Section XVII This section is commonly regarded as a notable example of "the flowing richness of Tennyson's rhythm." When Tennyson read the section aloud, his voice often broke down with the sheer intensity of joy that approaches sadness

But even then I heard her close the door;
The gates of heaven are closed, and she is gone. 610

3

There is none like her, none,
Nor will be when our summers have deceased.
Oh, art thou sighing for Lebanon
In the long breeze that streams to thy delicious East,
Sighing for Lebanon, 615
Dark cedar, though thy limbs have here increased,
Upon a pastoral slope as fair,
And looking to the South and fed
With honeyed rain and delicate air,
And haunted by the starry head 620
Of her whose gentle will has changed my fate,
And made my life a perfumed altar-flame;
And over whom thy darkness must have spread

With such delight as theirs of old, thy great Forefathers of the thornless garden, there 625 Shadowing the snow-limbed Eve from whom she came?

4

Here will I lie, while these long branches
sway,
And you fair stars that crown a happy day
Go in and out as if at merry play,
Who am no more so all forlorn 630
As when it seemed far better to be born
To labor and the mattock-hardened hand
Than nursed at ease and brought to understand

A sad astrology, the boundless plan
That makes you tyrants in your iron skies,
Innumerable, pitiless, passionless eyes, 636
Cold fires, yet with power to burn and brand
His nothingness into man

5

But now shine on, and what care I,
Who in this stormy gulf have found a pearl 640
The countercharm of space and hollow sky,
And do accept my madness, and would die
To save from some slight shame one simple girl? —

6

Would die, for sullen-seeming Death may give
More life to Love than is or ever was 645
In our low world, where yet 'tis sweet to live

616 Dark cedar There was a famous cedar of Lebanon in the grounds of Farringford, Tennyson's home on the Isle of Wight. Lebanon is a mountain range in Syria. 625 the thornless garden. The Garden of Eden was thornless until the sin of Adam. Cf. Genesis, 3:18—"Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee." 634 A sad astrology The old astrology taught that the destinies of men were controlled by the movement of the stars, modern science teaches that the stars have no such power

Let no one ask me how it came to pass;
It seems that I am happy, that to me
A livelier emerald twinkles in the grass,
A purer sapphire melts into the sea. 650

7

Not die, but live a life of truest breath,
And teach true life to fight with mortal
wrong.
Oh, why should Love, like men in drinking-songs,
Spice his fair banquet with the dust of death?
Make answer, Maud my bliss, 655
Maud made my Maud by that long loving
kiss,
Life of my life, wilt thou not answer this?
"The dusky strand of Death inwoven here
With dear Love's tie, makes Love himself more dear."

8

Is that enchanted moan only the swell 660
Of the long waves that roll in yonder bay?
And hark the clock within, the silver knell
Of twelve sweet hours that passed in bridal
white,
And died, to live, long as my pulses play;
But now by this my love has closed her sight
And given false death her hand, and stolen
away 666
To dreamful wastes where footless fancies dwell

Among the fragments of the golden day.
May nothing there her maiden grace affright!
Dear heart, I feel with thee the drowsy spell.
My bride to be, my evermore delight, 671
My own heart's heart, my ownest own, fare-
well;

It is but for a little space I go.
And ye meanwhile far over moor and fell
Beat to the noiseless music of the night! 675
Has our whole earth gone nearer to the glow
Of your soft splendors that you look so bright?
I have climbed nearer out of lonely hell
Beat, happy stars, timing with things below,
Beat with my heart more blest than heart can tell, 680

Blest, but for some dark undercurrent woe
That seems to draw — but it shall not be so;
Let all be well, be well

XIX

I

Her brother is coming back tonight,
Breaking up my dream of delight 685

649 livelier . . . grass Cf. Locksley Hall, 19-20, p. 45 651 Not . . . breath "This is the central idea, the holy power of Love" (Tennyson's note) 666 false death, sleep

2

My dream? do I dream of bliss?
 I have walked awake with Truth.
 Oh, when did a morning shine
 So rich in atonement as this
 For my dark-dawning youth, 690
 Darkened watching a mother decline
 And that dead man at her heart and mine;
 For who was left to watch her but I?
 Yet so did I let my freshness die.

3

I trust that I did not talk 695
 To gentle Maud in our walk —
 For often in lonely wanderings
 I have cursed him even to lifeless things —
 But I trust that I did not talk,
 Not touch on her father's sin 700
 I am sure I did but speak
 Of my mother's faded cheek
 When it slowly grew so thin
 That I felt she was slowly dying
 Vexed with lawyers and harassed with debt;
 For how often I caught her with eyes all wet,
 Shaking her head at her son and sighing 707
 A world of trouble within!

4

And Maud too, Maud was moved
 To speak of the mother she loved 710
 As one scarce less forlorn,
 Dying abroad and it seems apart
 From him who had ceased to share her heart,
 And ever mourning over the feud,
 The household Fury sprinkled with blood 715
 By which our houses are torn
 How strange was what she said,
 When only Maud and the brother
 Hung over her dying bed —
 That Maud's dark father and mine 720
 Had bound us one to the other,
 Betrothed us over their wine,
 On the day when Maud was born;
 Sealed her mine from her first sweet breath!
 Mine, mine by a right, from birth till death!
 Mine, mine — our fathers have sworn! 726

5

But the true blood split had in it a heat
 To dissolve the precious seal on a bond,
 That, if left uncanceled, had been so sweet;
 And none of us thought of a something beyond, 730
 A desire that awoke in the heart of the child,
 As it were a duty done to the tomb,
 To be friends for her sake, to be reconciled;
 And I was cursing them and my doom,
 And letting a dangerous thought run wild 735

While often abroad in the fragrant gloom
 Of foreign churches — I see her there,
 Bright English lily, breathing a prayer
 To be friends, to be reconciled!

6

But then what a flint is he! 740
 Abroad, at Florence, at Rome,
 I find whenever she touched on me
 This brother had laughed her down,
 And at last, when each came home,
 He had darkened into a frown, 745
 Chid her, and forbid her to speak
 To me, her friend of the years before;
 And this was what had reddened her cheek
 When I bowed to her on the moor.

7

Yet Maud, although not blind 750
 To the faults of his heart and mind,
 I see she cannot but love him,
 And says he is rough but kind,
 And wishes me to approve him,
 And tells me, when she lay 755
 Sick once, with a fear of worse,
 That he left his wine and horses and play,
 Sat with her, read to her, night and day,
 And tended her like a nurse.

8

Kind? but the death-bed desire 760
 Spurned by this heir of the har —
 Rough but kind? yet I know
 He has plotted against me in this,
 That he plots against me still.
 Kind to Maud? that were not amiss. 765
 Well, rough but kind; why, let it be so,
 For shall not Maud have her will?

9

For, Maud, so tender and true,
 As long as my life endures
 I feel I shall owe you a debt 770
 That I never can hope to pay;
 And if ever I should forget
 That I owe this debt to you
 And for your sweet sake to yours,
 Oh, then, what then shall I say? — 775
 If ever I should forget,
 May God make me more wretched
 Than ever I have been yet!

10

So now I have sworn to bury 780
 All this dead body of hate,
 I feel so free and so clear
 By the loss of that dead weight
 That I should grow light-headed, I fear,
 Fantastically merry,

But that her brother comes, like a blight 785
On my fresh hope, to the Hall tonight

XX

I

Strange, that I felt so gay,
Strange, that I tried today
To beguile her melancholy;
The Sultan, as we name him — 790
She did not wish to blame him —
But he vexed her and perplexed her
With his worldly talk and folly
Was it gentle to reprove her
For stealing out of view 795
From a little lazy lover
Who but claims her as his due?
Or for chilling his caresses
By the coldness of her manners,
Nay, the plainness of her dresses? 800
Now I know her but in two,
Nor can pronounce upon it
If one should ask me whether
The habit, hat, and feather,
Or the frock and gypsy bonnet 805
Be the neater and completer;
For nothing can be sweeter
Than maiden Maud in either.

2

But tomorrow, if we live,
Our ponderous squire will give 810
A grand political dinner
To half the squirelings near;
And Maud will wear her jewels,
And the bird of prey will hover,
And the titmouse hope to win her 815
With his chirrup at her ear.

3

A grand political dinner
To the men of many acres,
A gathering of the Tory,
A dinner and then a dance 820
For the maids and marriage-makers,
And every eye but mine will glance
At Maud in all her glory

4

For I am not invited,
But, with the Sultan's pardon, 825
I am all as well delighted,
For I know her own rose-garden,
And mean to linger in it
Till the dancing will be over;
And then, O then, come out to me 830
For a minute, but for a minute,
Come out to your own true lover,
That your true lover may see

Your glory also, and render
All homage to his own darling, 835
Queen Maud in all her splendor.

XXI

Rivulet crossing my ground,
And bringing me down from the Hall
This garden-rose that I found,
Forgetful of Maud and me, 840
And lost in trouble and moving round
Here at the head of a tinkling fall,
And trying to pass to the sea;
O rivulet, born at the Hall,
My Maud has sent it by thee — 845
If I read her sweet will right —
On a blushing mission to me, Saying in odor and color, "Ah, be Among the roses tonight."

XXII

I

Come into the garden, Maud, 850
For the black bat, night, has flown,
Come into the garden, Maud,
I am here at the gate alone;
And the woodbine spices are wafted abroad,
And the musk of the rose is blown 855

2

For a breeze of morning moves,
And the planet of Love is on high,
Beginning to faint in the light that she loves
On a bed of daffodil sky,
To faint in the light of the sun she loves, 860
To faint in his light, and to die.

3

All night have the roses heard
The flute, violin, bassoon;
All night has the casement jessamine stirred
To the dancers dancing in tune, 865
Till a silence fell with the waking bird,
And a hush with the setting moon

4

I said to the lily, "There is but one,
With whom she has heart to be gay
When will the dancers leave her alone? 870
She is weary of dance and play"
Now half to the setting moon are gone,
And half to the rising day;
Low on the sand and loud on the stone
The last wheel echoes away. 875

Section XXII Compare this section with "Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal," from The Princess, page 56 In that song the flowers sleep in sympathy 857. the planet of Love, Venus.

5

I said to the rose, "The brief night goes
In babble and revel and wine.
O young lord-lover, what sighs are those,
For one that will never be thine?
But mine, but mine," so I swear to the rose,
"Forever and ever, mine." 881

6

And the soul of the rose went into my blood,
As the music clashed in the hall;
And long by the garden lake I stood,
For I heard your rivulet fall 885
From the lake to the meadow and on to the
wood,
Our wood, that is dearer than all;

7

From the meadow your walks have left so sweet
That whenever a March-wind sighs
He sets the jewel-print of your feet 890
In violets blue as your eyes,
To the woody hollows in which we meet
And the valleys of Paradise.

8

The slender acacia would not shake
One long milk-bloom on the tree; 895
The white lake-blossom fell into the lake
As the pimpernel dozed on the lea;
But the rose was awake all night for your sake,
Knowing your promise to me;
The lilies and roses were all awake, 900
They sighed for the dawn and thee.

9

Queen rose of the rosebud garden of girls,
Come hither, the dances are done,
In gloss of satin and glimmer of pearls,
Queen lily and rose in one; 905
Shine out, little head, sunning over with curls,
To the flowers, and be their sun.

10

There has fallen a splendid tear
From the passion-flower at the gate.
She is coming, my dove, my dear; 910
She is coming, my life, my fate.
The red rose cries, "She is near, she is near",
And the white rose weeps, "She is late";
The larkspur listens, "I hear, I hear";
And the lily whispers, "I wait." 915

11

She is coming, my own, my sweet;
Were it ever so airy a tread,
My heart would hear her and beat,
Were it earth in an earthy bed,

My dust would hear her and beat, 920
Had I lain for a century dead,
Would start and tremble under her feet,
And blossom in purple and red.

PART TWO

1

"The fault was mine, the fault was mine" —
Why am I sitting here so stunned and still,
Plucking the harmless wild-flower on the hill? —

It is this guilty hand! —

And there rises ever a passionate cry 5
From underneath in the darkening land —
What is it that has been done?

O dawn of Eden bright over earth and sky,
The fires of hell brake out of thy rising sun,
The fires of hell and of hate; 10
For she, sweet soul, had hardly spoken a
word,

When her brother ran in his rage to the gate,
He came with the babe-faced lord,
Heaped on her terms of disgrace,
And while she wept, and I strove to be cool,
He fiercely gave me the lie, 16

Till I with as fierce an anger spoke,
And he struck me, madman, over the face,
Struck me before the languid fool,
Who was gaping and grinning by; 20

Struck for himself an evil stroke,
Wrought for his house an irredeemable woe
For front to front in an hour we stood,
And a million horrible bellowing echoes broke
From the red-ribbed hollow behind the wood,
And thundered up into heaven the Christless code 26

That must have life for a blow.

Ever and ever afresh they seemed to grow

Was it he lay there with a fading eye?

"The fault was mine," he whispered, "fly!"

Then glided out of the joyous wood 31

The ghastly Wraith of one that I know,

And there rang on a sudden a passionate cry,

A cry for a brother's blood;

It will ring in my heart and my ears, till I die, till I die. 35

2

Is it gone? my pulses beat —

What was it? a lying trick of the brain?

Yet I thought I saw her stand,

A shadow there at my feet,

High over the shadowy land. 40

26 the Christless code, the unwritten law, which is invoked in settling "affairs of honor" in a duel 32 The ghastly Wraith of one, the phantom of Maud

It is gone; and the heavens fall in a gentle rain,
When they should burst and drown with deluging storms
The feeble vassals of wine and anger and lust,
The little hearts that know not how to forgive.
Arise, my God, and strike, for we hold Thee
just, 45
Strike dead the whole weak race of venomous
worms,
That sting each other here in the dust;
We are not worthy to live.

II

I

See what a lovely shell,
Small and pure as a pearl,
Lying close to my foot, 50
Frail, but a work divine,
Made so fairly well
With delicate spire and whorl,
How exquisitely minute, 55
A miracle of design!

2

What is it? a learned man
Could give it a clumsy name.
Let him name it who can;
The beauty would be the same. 60

3

The tiny cell is forlorn,
Void of the little living will
That made it stir on the shore
Did he stand at the diamond door
Of his house in a rainbow frill? 65
Did he push, when he was uncured,
A golden foot or a fairy horn
Through his dum water-world?

4

Slight, to be crushed with a tap
Of my finger-nail on the sand, 70
Small, but a work divine,
Frail, but of force to withstand,
Year upon year, the shock
Of cataract seas that snap
The three-decker's oaken spine
Athwart the ledges of rock,
Here on the Breton strand!

5

Breton, not Briton, here
Like a shipwrecked man on a coast

Of ancient fable and fear — 80
Plagued with a fitting to and fro,
A disease, a hard mechanic ghost
That never came from on high
Nor ever arose from below,
But only moves with the moving eye, 85
Flying along the land and the main —
Why should it look like Maud?
Am I to be overawed
By what I cannot but know
Is a juggle born of the brain? 90

6

Back from the Breton coast,
Sick of a nameless fear,
Back to the dark sea-line
Looking, thinking of all I have lost;
An old song vexes my ear, 95
But that of Lamech is mine.

7

For years, a measureless ill,
For years, forever, to part —
But she, she would love me still;
And as long, O God, as she 100
Have a grain of love for me,
So long, no doubt, no doubt,
Shall I nurse in my dark heart,
However weary, a spark of will
Not to be trampled out. 105

8

Strange, that the mind, when fraught
With a passion so intense
One would think that it well
Might drown all life in the eye —
That it should, by being so overwrought, 110
Suddenly strike on a sharper sense
For a shell, or a flower, little things
Which else would have been passed by!
And now I remember, I,
When he lay dying there, 115
I noticed one of his many rings —
For he had many, poor worm — and thought,
It is his mother's hair.

9

Who knows if he be dead?
Whether I need have fled? 120
Am I guilty of blood?
However this may be,
Comfort her, comfort her, all things good,
While I am over the sea!
Let me and my passionate love go by, 125
But speak to her all things holy and high,

49 shell, found on the coast of Brittany, after the duel with Maud's brother. "The shell undestroyed amid the storm perhaps symbolizes to him his own first and highest nature preserved amid the storms of passion" (Tennyson's note)

96 Lamech. See Genesis, 4 23 — "And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah, 'Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech, for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt'"

Whatever happen to me!
 Me and my harmful love go by;
 But come to her waking, find her asleep,
 Powers of the height, Powers of the deep, 130
 And comfort her though I die!

III

Courage, poor heart of stone!
 I will not ask thee why
 Thou canst not understand
 That thou art left forever alone; 135
 Courage, poor stupid heart of stone! —
 Or if I ask thee why,
 Care not thou to reply:
 She is but dead, and the time is at hand
 When thou shalt more than die. 140

IV

I

O that 'twere possible
 After long grief and pain
 To find the arms of my true love
 Round me once again!

2

When I was wont to meet her 145
 In the silent woody places
 By the home that gave me birth,
 We stood tranced in long embraces
 Mixed with kisses sweeter, sweeter
 Than anything on earth. 150

3

A shadow flits before me,
 Not thou, but like to thee
 Ah, Christ, that it were possible
 For one short hour to see
 The souls we loved, that they might tell us
 What and where they be! 156

4

It leads me forth at evening,
 It lightly winds and steals
 In a cold white robe before me,
 When all my spirit reels 160
 At the shouts, the leagues of lights,
 And the roaring of the wheels

5

Half the night I waste in sighs,
 Half in dreams I sorrow after
 The delight of early skies; 165
 In a wakeful doze I sorrow
 For the hand, the lips, the eyes,
 For the meeting of the morrow,

The delight of happy laughter,
 The delight of low replies. 170

6

'Tis a morning pure and sweet,
 And a dewy splendor falls
 On the little flower that clings
 To the turrets and the walls;
 'Tis a morning pure and sweet, 175
 And the light and shadow fleet.
 She is walking in the meadow,
 And the woodland echo rings;
 In a moment we shall meet.
 She is singing in the meadow, 180
 And the rivulet at her feet
 Ripples on in light and shadow
 To the ballad that she sings.

7

Do I hear her sing as of old,
 My bird with the shining head, 185
 My own dove with the tender eye?
 But there rings on a sudden a passionate cry,
 There is someone dying or dead,
 And a sullen thunder is rolled;
 For a tumult shakes the city, 190
 And I wake, my dream is fled
 In the shuddering dawn, behold,
 Without knowledge, without pity,
 By the curtains of my bed
 That abiding phantom cold! 195

8

Get thee hence, nor come again,
 Mix not memory with doubt,
 Pass, thou deathlike type of pain,
 Pass and cease to move about!
 'Tis the blot upon the brain 200
 That will show itself without.

9

Then I rise, the eave-drops fall,
 And the yellow vapors choke
 The great city sounding wide;
 The day comes, a dull red ball 205
 Wrapped in drifts of lurid smoke
 On the misty river-tide

10

Through the hubbub of the market
 I steal, a wasted frame;
 It crosses here, it crosses there, 210
 Through all that crowd confused and loud,
 The shadow still the same;
 And on my heavy eyelids
 My anguish hangs like shame.

11

Alas for her that met me, 215
 That heard me softly call,

Section III. This lyric was added in 1856. It was one of Tennyson's favorite "songs of the deeper kind."
Section IV. See Critical Notes

Came glimmering through the laurels
At the quiet evenfall,
In the garden by the turrets
Of the old manorial hall! 220

12

Would the happy spirit descend
From the realms of light and song,
In the chamber or the street,
As she looks among the blest,
Should I fear to greet my friend 225
Or to say, "Forgive the wrong,"
Or to ask her, "Take me, sweet,
To the regions of thy rest"?

13

But the broad light glares and beats,
And the shadow flits and fleets 230
And will not let me be;
And I loathe the squares and streets,
And the faces that one meets,
Hearts with no love for me.
Always I long to creep 235
Into some still cavern deep,
There to weep, and weep, and weep
My whole soul out to thee. (1834; 1837)

V

I

Dead, long dead,
Long dead! 240
And my heart is a handful of dust,
And the wheels go over my head,
And my bones are shaken with pain,
For into a shallow grave they are thrust,
Only a yard beneath the street, 245
And the hoofs of the horses beat, beat,
The hoofs of the horses beat,
Beat into my scalp and my brain,
With never an end to the stream of passing
feet,
Driving, hurrying, marrying, burying, 250
Clamor and rumble, and ringing and clatter,
And here beneath it is all as bad,
For I thought the dead had peace, but it is not so.
To have no peace in the grave, is that not sad?
But up and down and to and fro, 255
Ever about me the dead men go,
And then to hear a dead man chatter
Is enough to drive one mad

2

Wretchedest age, since Time began,
They cannot even bury a man; 260
And though we paid our tithes in the days
that are gone,
Not a bell was rung, not a prayer was read.

It is that which makes us loud in the world of the dead;
There is none that does his work, not one
A touch of their office might have sufficed, 265
But the churchmen fain would kill their church,
As the churches have killed their Christ.

3

See, there is one of us sobbing,
No limit to his distress;
And another, a lord of all things, praying 270
To his own great self, as I guess;
And another, a statesman there, betraying
His party-secret, fool, to the press,
And yonder a vile physician, blabbing
The case of his patient — all for what? 275
To tickle the maggot born in an empty head,
And wheedle a world that loves him not,
For it is but a world of the dead.

4

Nothing but idiot gabble!
For the prophecy given of old 280
And then not understood,
Has come to pass as foretold;
Not let any man think for the public good,
But babble, merely for babble.
For I never whispered a private affair 285
Within the hearing of cat or mouse,
No, not to myself in the closet alone,
But I heard it shouted at once from the top of the house,
Everything came to be known.
Who told him we were there? 290

5

Not that gray old wolf, for he came not back
From the wilderness, full of wolves, where he used to lie;
He has gathered the bones for his o'ergrown
whelp to crack —
Crack them now for yourself, and howl, and

6

Prophet, curse me the blabbing lip, 295
And curse me the British vermin, the rat;
I know not whether he came in the Hanover ship,
But I know that he lies and listens mute

280 the prophecy given of old, a reference to Luke, 12 2-3 — "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, neither hid that shall not be known. Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light, and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops." 296 the rat, a reference to the Norwegian rat, which was carried to England in the 18th century. The Jacobites said that this rat had come to England with the House of Hanover in 1714, when George Ludwig, elector of Hanover, succeeded Anne on the English throne, hence it was called the "Hanoverian rat"

In an ancient mansion's crannies and holes
 Arsenic, arsenic, sure, would do it, 300
 Except that now we poison our babes, poor souls!
 It is all used up for that.

7

Tell him now: she is standing here at my
 head;
 Not beautiful now, not even kind,
 He may take her now; for she never speaks
 her mind, 305
 But is ever the one thing silent here.
 She is not of us, as I divine,
 She comes from another stiller world of the dead,
 Stiller, not fairer than mine.

8

But I know where a garden grows, 310
 Fairer than aught in the world beside,
 All made up of the lily and rose
 That blow by night, when the season is good,
 To the sound of dancing music and flutes.
 It is only flowers, they had no fruits, 315
 And I almost fear they are not roses, but
 blood;
 For the keeper was one, so full of pride,
 He linked a dead man there to a spectral
 bride;
 For he, if he had not been a Sultan of brutes,
 Would he have that hole in his side? 320

9

But what will the old man say?
 He laid a cruel snare in a pit
 To catch a friend of mine one stormy day;
 Yet now I could even weep to think of it,
 For what will the old man say 325
 When he comes to the second corpse in the pit?

10

Friend, to be struck by the public foe,
 Then to strike him and lay him low,
 That were a public merit, far,
 Whatever the Quaker holds, from sin, 330
 But the red life spilt for a private blow —
 I swear to you, lawful and lawless war
 Are scarcely even akin.

11

O me, why have they not buried me deep
 enough?
 Is it kind to have made me a grave so rough,

Me, that was never a quiet sleeper? 336
 Maybe still I am but half-dead;
 Then I cannot be wholly dumb.
 I will cry to the steps above my head
 And somebody, surely, some kind heart will come 340
 To bury me, bury me
 Deeper, ever so little deeper.

PART THREE

I

My life has crept so long on a broken wing
 Through cells of madness, haunts of horror and fear,
 That I come to be grateful at last for a little thing.
 My mood is changed, for it fell at a time of year
 When the face of night is fair on the dewy downs, 5
 And the shining daffodil dies, and the Charioteer
 And starry Gemini hang like glorious crowns
 Over Orion's grave low down in the west,
 That like a silent lightning under the stars
 She seemed to divide in a dream from a band of the blest, 10
 And spoke of a hope for the world in the coming wars —
 "And in that hope, dear soul, let trouble
 have rest,
 Knowing I tarry for thee," and pointed to Mars
 As he glowed like a ruddy shield on the Lion's breast.

2

And it was but a dream, yet it yielded a dear delight 15
 To have looked, though but in a dream, upon eyes so fair,
 That had been in a weary world my one thing bright;
 And it was but a dream, yet it lightened my despair
 When I thought that a war would arise in defense of the right,
 That an iron tyranny now should bend or
 cease, 20
 The glory of manhood stand on his ancient
 height,

Part Three Tennyson states that this part was written just prior to the Crimean War, fought against Russia by England, France, Turkey, and Sardinia, in 1854-56

6 the Charioteer, the constellation Auriga, situated midway between the Polar Star and Orion 7 Gemini, the Twins, two stars in the southern hemisphere, named Castor and Pollux 8 Orion, a large constellation in the shape of a man 14 the Lion, Leo, a northern constellation containing the bright star Regulus.

326 the second corpse. "The second corpse is Maud's brother, the lover's father being the first corpse, whom the lover thinks that Maud's father has murdered" (Tennyson's note). 330 Whatever the Quaker holds The Quakers, or Friends, regard personal combats and public wars as contrary to the spirit of Christ.

Nor Britain's one sole God be the millionaire.
 No more shall commerce be all in all, and Peace
 Pipe on her pastoral hillock a languid note,
 And watch her harvest ripen, her herd increase, 25
 Nor the cannon-bullet rust on a slothful shore,
 And the cobweb woven across the cannon's
 throat
 Shall shake its threaded tears in the wind no
 more.

3

And as months ran on and rumor of battle
 grew,
 "It is time, it is time, O passionate heart,"
 said I — 30
 For I cleaved to a cause that I felt to be pure and true —
 "It is time, O passionate heart and morbid
 eye,
 That old hysterical mock-disease should die."
 And I stood on a giant deck and mixed my
 breath
 With a loyal people shouting a battle-cry, 35
 Till I saw the dreary phantom arise and fly Far into the North, and battle, and seas of death.

4

Let it go or stay, so I wake to the higher aims
 Of a land that has lost for a little her lust of
 gold,
 And love of a peace that was full of wrongs
 and shames, 40
 Horrible, hateful, monstrous, not to be told;
 And hail once more to the banner of battle unrolled!
 Though many a light shall darken, and many shall weep
 For those that are crushed in the clash of jarring clams,
 Yet God's just wrath shall be wreaked on a giant liar, 45
 And many a darkness into the light shall leap,
 And shine in the sudden making of splendid names,
 And noble thought be freer under the sun,
 And the heart of a people beat with one
 desire;
 For the peace, that I deemed no peace, is over and done, 50
 And now by the side of the Black and the Baltic deep,
 And deathful-grinning mouths of the fortress,
 flames
 The blood-red blossom of war with a heart of fire.

5

Let it flame or fade, and the war roll down
 like a wind,
 We have proved we have hearts in a cause,
 we are noble still, 55
 And myself have awaked, as it seems, to the better mind.
 It is better to fight for the good than to rail
 at the ill;
 I have felt with my native land, I am one with my kind,
 I embrace the purpose of God, and the doom assigned. (1834-56; 1837-56)

IN THE VALLEY OF CAUTERETZ

All along the valley, stream that flashest
 white,
 Deepening thy voice with the deepening of the night,
 All along the valley, where thy waters flow,
 I walked with one I loved two and thirty years ago.
 All along the valley, while I walked today, 5
 The two and thirty years were a mist that rolls away;
 For all along the valley, down thy rocky bed,
 Thy living voice to me was as the voice of the dead,
 And all along the valley, by rock and cave
 and tree,
 The voice of the dead was a living voice to
 me. 10

A WELCOME TO ALEXANDRA

MARCH 7, 1863

Sea-kings' daughter from over the sea,
 Alexandra!
 Saxon and Norman and Dane are we,
 But all of us Danes in our welcome of thee,
 Alexandra! 5
 Welcome her, thunders of fort and of fleet!
 Welcome her, thundering cheer of the street!
 Welcome her, all things youthful and sweet,
 Scatter the blossom under her feet!
 Break, happy land, into earlier flowers! 10
 Make music, O bird, in the new-budded bowers!
 Blazon your mottoes of blessing and prayer!

In the Valley of Caunteretz Caunteretz is a beautiful valley in the Pyrenees Mountains, visited by Tennyson and Arthur Hallam in 1830, and again by Tennyson in 1861. See In Memoriam, Section 71, page 73.

A Welcome to Alexandra Alexandra was the daughter of Christian IX, of Denmark. She married the Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward VII, at Windsor on March 10, 1863. The poem was written as a welcome to her upon her arrival in England a few days before the wedding.

36 the dreary phantom. probably the false phantom of Maud, the "ghastly Wraith" of Part Two, 32, page 108.

Welcome her, welcome her, all that is ours!
 Warble, O bugle, and trumpet, blare!
 Flags, flutter out upon turrets and towers! 15
 Flames, on the windy headland flare!
 Utter your jubilee, steeple and spire!
 Clash, ye bells, in the merry March air!
 Flash, ye cities, in rivers of fire!
 Rush to the roof, sudden rocket, and higher
 Melt into stars for the land's desire! 21
 Roll and rejoice, jubilant voice,
 Roll as a ground-swell dashed on the strand,
 Roar as the sea when he welcomes the land,
 And welcome her, welcome the land's desire,
 The sea-kings' daughter as happy as fair, 26
 Blissful bride of a blissful heir,
 Bride of the heir of the kings of the sea —
 O joy to the people and joy to the throne,
 Come to us, love us and make us your own;
 For Saxon or Dane or Norman we, 31
 Teuton or Celt, or whatever we be,
 We are each all Dane in our welcome of thee,
 Alexandra!

MILTON

(ALCAICS)

O mighty-mouthed inventor of harmonies,
 O skilled to sing of Time or Eternity,
 God-gifted organ-voice of England,
 Milton, a name to resound for ages,
 Whose Titan angels, Gabriel, Abdiel, 5
 Starred from Jehovah's gorgeous armories,
 Tower, as the deep-domed empyrean
 Rings to the roar of an angel onset!
 Me rather all that bowery loneliness,
 The brooks of Eden mazily murmuring, 10
 And bloom profuse and cedar arches
 Charm, as a wanderer out in ocean,
 Where some refulgent sunset of India
 Streams o'er a rich ambrosial ocean isle,
 And crimson-hued the stately palm-woods
 Whisper in odorous heights of even 16
 (1863; 1864)

THE FLOWER

Once in a golden hour
 I cast to earth a seed.
 Up there came a flower,
 The people said, a weed

Milton See Critical Notes
 5 Gabriel, Abdiel In Paradise Lost Gabriel and Abdiel withstood Satan in his revolt against God (See Book 5) They are called Titans after the race of majestic giants of Greek mythology

The Flower Although Tennyson states (Memoir, II, 10) that this poem is "an universal apologue and parable," it fittingly suggests that his own poetry, little cared for at first, gained in popular approval after it found many imitators

To and fro they went 5
 Through my garden-bower,
 And muttering discontent
 Cursed me and my flower.

Then it grew so tall
 It wore a crown of light, 10
 But thieves from o'er the wall
 Stole the seed by night;

Sowed it far and wide
 By every town and tower,
 Till all the people cried, 15
 "Splendid is the flower."

Read my little fable.
 He that runs may read
 Most can raise the flowers now
 For all have got the seed 20

And some are pretty enough,
 And some are poor indeed;
 And now again the people
 Call it but a weed. (1864)

A DEDICATION

Dear, near and true — no truer Time himself
 Can prove you, though he make you evermore
 Dearer and nearer, as the rapid of life
 Shoots to the fall — take this and pray that he Who wrote it, honoring your sweet faith in 5
 him,
 May trust himself; and after praise and scorn,
 As one who feels the immeasurable world,
 Attain the wise indifference of the wise;
 And after autumn past — if left to pass
 His autumn into seeming-leafless days — 10
 Draw toward the long frost and longest night,
 Wearing his wisdom lightly, like the fruit
 Which in our winter woodland looks a flower (1864)

THE VOYAGE

We left behind the painted buoy
 That tosses at the harbor-mouth;
 And madly danced our hearts with joy,
 As fast we fled to the south.
 How fresh was every sight and sound 5
 On open main or winding shore!
 We knew the merry world was round,
 And we might sail for evermore.

A Dedication. This poem is supposed to be addressed to the poet's wife

The Voyage This poem is an allegory of earnest and noble living. It represents a quest for a lofty ideal—never to be attained, but never to be abandoned. Cf. Ulysses, 30-32, page 43, Locksley Hall, 181, page 49, and Merlin and the Gleam, page 163

Warm broke the breeze against the brow,
 Dry sang the tackle, sang the sail, 10
 The Lady's-head upon the prow
 Caught the shrill salt, and sheered the gale
 The broad seas swelled to meet the keel,
 And swept behind; so quick the run,
 We felt the good ship shake and reel, 15
 We seemed to sail into the sun!

How oft we saw the sun retire,
 And burn the threshold of the night,
 Fall from his Ocean-lane of fire,
 And sleep beneath his pillared light! 20
 How oft the purple-skirted robe
 Of twilight slowly downward drawn,
 As through the slumber of the globe
 Again we dashed into the dawn!

New stars all night above the brim 25
 Of waters lightened into view,
 They climbed as quickly, for the rim
 Changed every moment as we flew.
 Far ran the naked moon across
 The houseless ocean's heaving field, 30
 Or flying shone, the silver boss
 Of her own halo's dusky shield.

The peaky islet shifted shapes,
 High towns on hills were dimly seen;
 We passed long lines of Northern capes 35
 And dewy Northern meadows green
 We came to warmer waves, and deep
 Across the boundless East we drove,
 Where those long swells of breaker sweep
 The nutmeg rocks and isles of clove. 40

By peaks that flamed, or, all in shade,
 Gloomed the low coast and quivering brine
 With ashy rains, that spreading made
 Fantastic plume or sable pine;
 By sands and steaming flats, and floods 45
 Of mighty mouth, we scudded fast,
 And hills and scarlet-mingled woods
 Glowed for a moment as we passed.

O hundred shores of happy climes,
 How swiftly streamed ye by the bark! 50
 At times the whole sea burned, at times
 With wakes of fire we tore the dark,
 At times a carven craft would shoot
 From havens hid in fairy bowers,
 With naked limbs and flowers and fruit, 55
 But we nor paused for fruit nor flowers

For one fair Vision ever fled
 Down the waste waters day and night,
 And still we followed where she led,
 In hope to gain upon her flight 60
 Her face was evermore unseen,
 And fixed upon the far sea-line;

But each man murmured, "O my Queen,
 I follow till I make thee mine."

And now we lost her, now she gleamed 65
 Like Fancy made of golden air,
 Now nearer to the prow she seemed Like Virtue firm, like Knowledge fair,
 Now high on waves that idly burst
 Like Heavenly Hope she crowned the sea,
 And now, the bloodless point reversed, 71
 She bore the blade of Liberty.

And only one among us — him
 We pleased not — he was seldom pleased,
 He saw not far, his eyes were dim, 75
 But ours he swore were all diseased.
 "A ship of fools," he shrieked in spite,
 "A ship of fools," he sneered and wept.
 And overboard one stormy night
 He cast his body, and on we swept. 80

And never sail of ours was furled,
 Nor anchor dropped at eve or morn;
 We loved the glories of the world,
 But laws of nature were our scorn.
 For blasts would rise and rave and cease, 85
 But whence were those that drove the sail
 Across the whirlwind's heart of peace,
 And to and through the counter gale?

Again to colder climes we came,
 For still we followed where she led; 90
 Now mate is blind and captain lame,
 And half the crew are sick or dead,
 But, blind or lame or sick or sound,
 We follow that which flies before,
 We know the merry world is round, 95
 And we may sail for evermore. (1864)

Northern Farmer (New Style) In this poem the independent farmer of large holdings has succeeded the farm agent of the earlier poem. The poem grew out of a favorite saying of a rich neighbor of Tennyson—"When I canters my 'erse along the ramper [highway], I 'ears proputtty, proputtty, proputtty" (Memoirs, II, 9). The farmer and his son Sam are on horseback. The speech to Sam is frequently broken into by remarks to the horse

1 'erse's, horse's

Proputtty, proputtty, proputtty — that's what I 'ears 'em saay.

Proputtty, proputtty, proputtty — Sam, thou's

WAGES

Glory of warrior, glory of orator, glory of
song,
Paid with a voice flying by to be lost on an endless sea —
Glory of Virtue, to fight, to struggle, to right
the wrong —
Nay, but she aimed not at glory, no lover of glory she;
Give her the glory of going on, and still to be.

The wages of sin is death; if the wages of Virtue be dust, 6
Would she have heart to endure for the life of the worm and the fly?
She desires no isles of the blest, no quiet seats of the just,
To rest in a golden grove, or to bask in a summer sky; 9
Give her the wages of going on, and not to
die. (1867; 1868)

THE HIGHER PANTHEISM

The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills and the plains —
Are not these, O Soul, the Vision of Him who reigns?

burne's parody on the poem, The Higher Pantheism in a Nutshell, page 724

Is not the Vision He, though He be not that which He seems?
Dreams are true while they last, and do we not live in dreams?

Earth, these solid stars, this weight of body and limb, 5
Are they not sign and symbol of thy division from Him?

Dark is the world to thee; thyself art the reason why,
For is He not all but thou, that hast power to feel "I am I"?

Glory about thee, without thee; and thou ful-
fillest thy doom,
Making Him broken gleams and a stifled splendor and gloom. 10

Speak to Him, thou, for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet — Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

God is law, say the wise; O Soul, and let us rejoice,
For if He thunder by law the thunder is yet
His voice.

Law is God, say some; no God at all, says
the fool, 15
For all we have power to see is a straight staff bent in a pool;

And the ear of man cannot hear, and the eye
of man cannot see;
But if we could see and hear, this Vision —
were it not He? (1869)

IN THE GARDEN AT SWAINSTON

Nightingales warbled without,
Within was weeping for thee;
Shadows of three dead men
Walked in the walks with me,
Shadows of three dead men, and thou wast
one of the three. 5

Nightingales sang in his woods,
The Master was far away;

15 no God . . . fool. See Psalms 14 1 — "The fool hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.'" The poem is full of Biblical allusions.

In the Garden at Swainston Swainston was the home of Tennyson's friend, Sir John Simeon. It was in the Isle of Wight, just off the south coast of England. Sir John died at Fribourg, Switzerland, in 1870. The other men referred to are Arthur Hallam and Henry Lushington (1812-55). Lushington was an admirer of Tennyson's youthful genius. The Princess was dedicated to him.

Nightingales warbled and sang
Of a passion that lasts but a day;
Still in the house in his coffin the Prince of courtesy lay. 10

Two dead men have I known
In courtesy like to thee;
Two dead men have I loved
With a love that ever will be;
Three dead men have I loved, and thou art
last of the three. 15

FLOWER IN THE CRANNIED WALL

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
I hold you here, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower — but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all, 5
I should know what God and man is (1869)

DEDICATION

These to His Memory — since he held them
dear,
Perchance as finding there unconsciously
Some image of himself — I dedicate,
I dedicate, I consecrate with tears —
These Idylls.

And indeed he seems to me 5
Scarce other than my king's ideal knight,
"Who revered his conscience as his king,
Whose glory was, redressing human wrong,
Who spake no slander, no, nor listened to it,
Who loved one only and who clave to her—"
Her — over all whose realms to their last isle, 11
Commingled with the gloom of imminent war,
The shadow of his loss drew like eclipse, Darkening the world. We have lost him, he is gone.
We know him now; all narrow jealousies 15
Are silent, and we see him as he moved,

The Idylls of the King See Critical Notes
Dedication Written in memory of Prince Albert, husband of Queen Victoria. He died in 1861. It was Prince Albert's admiration for In Memoriam that was chiefly responsible for Tennyson's appointment as poet laureate. Prince Albert served as a kind of model for the poet's sketch of Arthur, the blameless king.

7-10 This quotation is adapted from Gunswept, 464-479. 12. Imminent war, a reference to the threatened war with the United States in 1861 when a United States officer seized two Confederate commissioners on the British mail steamer Trent. It was largely through Prince Albert's influence that the danger was averted.

How modest, kindly, all-accomplished, wise,
 With what sublime repression of himself,
 And in what limits, and how tenderly;
 Not swaying to this faction or to that; 20
 Not making his high place the lawless perch
 Of winged ambitions, nor a vantage-ground
 For pleasure; but through all this tract of
 years

Wearing the white flower of a blameless life,
 Before a thousand peering littlenesses, 25
 In that fierce light which beats upon a throne
 And blackens every blot; for where is he
 Who dares foreshadow for an only son
 A lovelier life, a more unstained, than his?
 Or how should England dreaming of his sons
 Hope more for these than some inheritance 31
 Of such a life, a heart, a mind as thine,
 Thou noble Father of her Kings to be,
 Laborious for her people and her poor —
 Voice in the rich dawn of an ampler day — 35
 Far-sighted summoner of War and Waste
 To fruitful strifes and rivalries of peace —
 Sweet nature gilded by the gracious gleam
 Of letters, dear to Science, dear to Art,
 Dear to thy land and ours, a Prince indeed,
 Beyond all titles, and a household name, 41
 Hereafter, through all times, Albert the Good.

Break not, O woman's-heart, but still endure,
 Break not, for thou art royal, but endure,
 Remembering all the beauty of that star 45
 Which shone so close beside thee that ye made
 One light together, but has passed and leaves
 The Crown a lonely splendor.

May all love,
 His love, unseen but felt, o'ershadow thee,
 The love of all thy sons encompass thee, 50
 The love of all thy daughters cherish thee,
 The love of all thy people comfort thee,
 Till God's love set thee at his side again!

LANCELOT AND ELAINE

Elaine the fair, Elaine the lovable,
 Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat,
 High in her chamber up a tower to the east
 Guarded the sacred shield of Lancelot;
 Which first she placed where morning's earliest ray 5
 Might strike it, and awake her with the gleam;
 Then, fearing rust or soiture, fashioned for it

17-27 How modest, etc. For a very different view of Prince Albert see Lytton Strachey's Queen Victoria (Harcourt, 1921), pp. 134 ff., 253 ff. 37 This line refers to the International Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, in which the Prince took an active part. 40 thy land. Prince Albert came from Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, a state in Germany.
Lancelot and Elaine See Critical Notes

A case of silk, and braided thereupon
 All the devices blazoned on the shield
 In their own tinct, and added, of her wit, 10
 A border fantasy of branch and flower,
 And yellow-throated nestling in the nest.
 Nor rested thus content, but day by day,
 Leaving her household and good father,
 climbed

That eastern tower, and, entering, barred her
 door, 15
 Stripped off the case, and read the naked
 shield,

Now guessed a hidden meaning in his arms,
 Now made a pretty history to herself
 Of every dint a sword had beaten in it,
 And every scratch a lance had made upon it,
 Conjecturing when and where: this cut is fresh, 21

That ten years back; this dealt him at Caerlyle,

That at Caerleon — this at Camelot —
 And, ah, God's mercy, what a stroke was
 there!

And here a thrust that might have killed,
 but God 25

Broke the strong lance, and rolled his enemy
 down,

And saved him. So she lived in fantasy.

How came the lily maid by that good
 shield

Of Lancelot, she that knew not even his
 name?

He left it with her, when he rode to tilt 30
 For the great diamond in the diamond justs,
 Which Arthur had ordained, and by that
 name

Had named them, since a diamond was the prize.

For Arthur, long before they crowned him
 king,

Roving the trackless realms of Lyonesse, 35
 Had found a glen, gray boulder and black tarn.
 A horror lived about the tarn, and clave

Like its own mists to all the mountain side,
 For here two brothers, one a king, had met
 And fought together, but their names were lost; 40

And each had slain his brother at a blow;
 And down they fell and made the glen abhorred.

And there they lay till all their bones were bleached,

8. braided, embroidered. 22 Caerlyle, Carlisle, in Cumberland. 23 Caerleon, an ancient town in Monmouthshire, where King Arthur frequently held court. Camelot, the place where Arthur had his palace and his court, and the place of the Round Table. 35 Lyonesse. See note on Morte d'Arthur, line 4, page 38

And lichen⁴⁴ into color with the crags.
 And he that once was king had on a crown 45
 Of diamonds, one in front and four aside.
 And Arthur came, and laboring up the pass,
 All in a misty moonshine, unawares
 Had trodden that crowned skeleton, and the skull
 Brake from the nape, and from the skull the crown 50
 Rolled into light, and turning on its rims
 Fled like a glittering rivulet to the tarn.
 And down the shingly scaur he plunged, and
 caught,
 And set it on his head, and in his heart Heard murmurs, "Lo, thou likewise shalt be
 king." 55

Thereafter, when a king, he had the gems Plucked from the crown, and showed them
 to his knights,
 Saying, "These jewels, whereupon I chanced Divinely, are the kingdom's, not the King's—
 For public use. Henceforward let there be, 60
 Once every year, a just for one of these;
 For so by nine years' proof we needs must learn
 Which is our mightiest, and ourselves shall grow
 In use of arms and manhood, till we drive
 The heathen, who, some say, shall rule the
 land 65
 Hereafter, which God hinder!" Thus he spoke.
 And eight years past, eight justs had been,
 and still
 Had Lancelot won the diamond of the year,
 With purpose to present them to the Queen
 When all were won; but, meaning all at once
 To snare her royal fancy with a boon 71
 Worth half her realm, had never spoken word.

Now for the central diamond and the last
 And largest, Arthur, holding then his court
 Hard on the river nigh the place which now
 Is this world's hugest, let proclaim a just 76
 At Camelot, and when the time drew nigh
 Spake—for she had been sick—to Guine-
 vere:
 "Are you so sick, my Queen, you cannot move
 To these fair justs?" "Yea, lord," she said,
 "ye know it." 80
 "Then will ye miss," he answered, "the great deeds
 Of Lancelot, and his prowess in the lists,
 A sight ye love to look on" And the Queen
 Lifted her eyes, and they dwelt languidly

On Lancelot, where he stood beside the King
 He, thinking that he read her meaning there,
 "Stay with me, I am sick; my love is more 87
 Than many diamonds," yielded; and a heart
 Love-loyal to the least wish of the Queen—
 However much he yearned to make complete
 The tale of diamonds for his destined boon—Urged him to speak against the truth, and
 say, 92
 "Sir King, mine ancient wound is hardly
 whole,
 And lets me from the saddle"; and the King Glanced first at him, then her, and went his
 way. 95
 No sooner gone than suddenly she began:

"To blame, my lord Sir Lancelot, much to blame!
 Why go ye not to these fair justs? The knights
 Are half of them our enemies, and the crowd
 Will murmur, 'Lo, the shameless ones, who
 take 100
 Their pastime now the trustful King is
 gone!'"
 Then Lancelot, vexed at having lied in vain.
 "Are ye so wise? Ye were not once so wise,
 My Queen, that summer when ye loved me
 first.
 Then of the crowd ye took no more account
 Than of the myriad cricket of the mead, 106
 When its own voice clings to each blade of grass,
 And every voice is nothing As to knights,
 Them surely can I silence with all ease.
 But now my loyal worship is allowed 110
 Of all men; many a bard, without offense,
 Has linked our names together in his lay,
 Lancelot, the flower of bravery, Guinevere,
 The pearl of beauty; and our knights at feast
 Have pledged us in this union, while the King
 Would listen smiling. How then? Is there
 more? 116
 Has Arthur spoken aught? or would yourself,
 Now weary of my service and devoir,
 Henceforth be truer to your faultless lord?"

She broke into a little scornful laugh: 120
 "Arthur, my lord, Arthur, the faultless King,
 That passionate perfection, my good lord—
 But who can gaze upon the sun in heaven?
 He never spake word of reproach to me,
 He never had a glimpse of mine untruth, 125
 He cares not for me. Only here today
 There gleamed a vague suspicion in his
 eyes;
 Some meddling rogue has tampered with him
 — else

44 lichen^{ed}, became covered with lichen 53 shingly

Rapt in this fancy of his Table Round,
 And swearing men to vows impossible, 130
 To make them like himself, but, friend, to me
 He is all fault who hath no fault at all
 For who loves me must have a touch of earth,
 The low sun makes the color. I am yours,
 Not Arthur's, as ye know, save by the bond.
 And therefore hear my words go to the justs, 136
 The tiny-trumpeting gnat can break our dream
 When sweetest; and the vermin voices here
 May buzz so loud — we scorn them, but they sting "

Then answered Lancelot, the chief of
 knights: 140
 "And with what face, after my pretext made,
 Shall I appear, O Queen, at Camelot, I
 Before a king who honors his own word
 As if it were his God's?"

"Yea," said the Queen,
 "A moral child without the craft to rule, 145
 Else had he not lost me; but listen to me,
 If I must find you wit. We hear it said
 That men go down before your spear at a
 touch,
 But knowing you are Lancelot, your great
 name,
 This conquers. Hide it therefore, go unknown 150
 Win' by this kiss you will, and our true King
 Will then allow your pretext, O my knight,
 As all for glory, for to speak him true,
 Ye know right well, how meek soe'er he seem,
 No keener hunter after glory breathes 155
 He loves it in his knights more than himself,
 They prove to him his work Win and return "

Then got Sir Lancelot suddenly to horse,
 Wroth at himself. Not willing to be known,
 He left the barren-beaten thoroughfare, 160
 Chose the green path that showed the rarer
 foot,
 And there among the solitary downs,
 Full often lost in fancy, lost his way,
 Till as he traced a faintly-shadowed track,
 That all in loops and links among the dales
 Ran to the Castle of Astolat, he saw 166
 Fired from the west, far on a hill, the towers
 Thither he made, and blew the gateway horn
 Then came an old, dumb, myriad-wrinkled
 man,
 Who let him into lodging and disarmed. 170
 And Lancelot marveled at the wordless man,
 And issuing found the Lord of Astolat

With two strong sons, Sir Torre and Sir
 Lavaine,
 Moving to meet him in the castle court;
 And close behind them stepped the lily maid
 Elaine, his daughter; mother of the house 176
 There was not. Some light jest among them
 rose
 With laughter dying down as the great knight
 Approached them, then the Lord of Astolat
 "Whence comest thou, my guest, and by what
 name 180
 Livest between the lips? for by thy state
 And presence I might guess thee chief of those,
 After the King, who eat in Arthur's halls
 Him have I seen; the rest, his Table Round,
 Known as they are, to me they are unknown."

Then answered Lancelot, the chief of
 knights: 186
 "Known am I, and of Arthur's hall, and
 known,
 What I by mere mischance have brought, my
 shield
 But since I go to just as one unknown
 At Camelot for the diamond, ask me not; 190
 Hereafter ye shall know me—and the shield—
 I pray you lend me one, if such you have,
 Blank, or at least with some device not mine "

Then said the Lord of Astolat. "Here is Torre's. 194
 Hurt in his first tilt was my son, Sir Torre,
 And so, God wot, his shield is blank enough
 His ye can have " Then added plain Sir
 Torre,
 "Yea, since I cannot use it, ye may have it "
 Here laughed the father, saying, "Fie, Sir
 Churl,
 Is that an answer for a noble knight? 200
 Allow him! but Lavaine, my younger here,
 He is so full of lusthood, he will ride,
 Just for it, and win, and bring it in an hour,
 And set it in this damsel's golden hair,
 To make her thrice as willful as before." 205

"Nay, father, nay, good father, shame me
 not
 Before this noble knight," said young Lavaine,
 "For nothing Surely I but played on Torre—
 He seemed so sullen, vexed he could not go —
 A jest, no more! For, knight, the maiden dreamt 210
 That someone put this diamond in her hand,
 And that it was too slippery to be held,
 And slipped and fell into some pool or stream,
 The castle-well, belike, and then I said 214
 That if I went and if I fought and won it —
 But all was jest and joke among ourselves —
 Then must she keep it safelier. All was jest.

But, father, give me leave, an if he will,
To ride to Camelot with this noble knight.
Win shall I not, but do my best to win, 220
Young as I am, yet would I do my best."

"So ye will grace me," answered Lancelot,
Smiling a moment, "with your fellowship
O'er these waste downs whereon I lost myself,
Then were I glad of you as guide and friend,
And you shall win this diamond — as I hear,
It is a fair large diamond — if ye may, 227
And yield it to this maiden, if ye will."
"A fair large diamond," added plain Sir Torre,
"Such be for queens, and not for simple maids" 230

Then she, who held her eyes upon the ground,
Elaine, and heard her name so tossed about,
Flushed slightly at the slight disparagement
Before the stranger knight, who, looking at
her,

Full courtly, yet not falsely, thus returned:
"If what is fair be but for what is fair, 236
And only queens are to be counted so,
Rash were my judgment then, who deem this maid

Might wear as fair a jewel as is on earth,
Not violating the bond of like to like" 240

He spoke and ceased, the lily maid Elaine,
Won by the mellow voice before she looked,
Lifted her eyes and read his lineaments.
The great and guilty love he bare the Queen,
In battle with the love he bare his lord, 245
Had marred his face, and marked it ere his
time

Another sinning on such heights with one,
The flower of all the west and all the world,
Had been the sleeker for it; but in him
His mood was often like a fiend, and rose 250
And drove him into wastes and solitudes
For agony, who was yet a living soul.
Marred as he was, he seemed the goodliest
man

That ever among ladies ate in hall,
And noblest, when she lifted up her eyes. 255
However marred, of more than twice her
years,
Seamed with an ancient sword-cut on the cheek,
And bruised and bronzed, she lifted up her
eyes
And loved him, with that love which was her doom.

Then the great knight, the darling of the court, 260
Loved of the loveliest, into that rude hall
Stepped with all grace, and not with half disdain

Hid under grace, as in a smaller time,
But kindly man moving among his kind;
Whom they with meats and vintage of their best 265

And talk and minstrel melody entertained.
And much they asked of court and Table
Round,

And ever well and readily answered he;
But Lancelot, when they glanced at Guine-
vere,

Suddenly speaking of the wordless man, 270
Heard from the baron that, ten years before,
The heathen caught and reft him of his
tongue.

"He learned and warned me of their fierce design

Against my house, and him they caught and
mained,

But I, my sons, and little daughter fled 275
From bonds or death, and dwelt among the woods

By the great river in a boatman's hut.
Dull days were those, till our good Arthur broke

The Pagan yet once more on Badon hill."

"O there, great lord, doubtless," Lavaine said, rapt 280

By all the sweet and sudden passion of youth Toward greatness in its elder, "you have fought.

O tell us — for we live apart — you know
Of Arthur's glorious wars." And Lancelot
spoke 284

And answered him at full, as having been
With Arthur in the fight which all day long Rang by the white mouth of the violent Glem,
And in the four loud battles by the shore
Of Duglas, that on Bassa; then the war
That thundered in and out the gloomy skirts
Of Celidon the forest, and again 291

By Castle Gurnion, where the glorious King
Had on his cuirass worn our Lady's Head,
Carved of one emerald centered in a sun
Of silver rays, that lightened as he breathed,
And at Caerleon had he helped his lord, 296
When the strong neighings of the wild White Horse

Set every gilded parapet shuddering;
And up in Agned-Cathregonion too,
And down the waste sand-shores of Trath
Trerout, 300

Where many a heathen fell, "and on the 269 glanced at, spoke of 279. The Pagan, the Saxons

The battle was fought in 520 at Mount Badon, supposed to be Badbury Hill, in Dorsetshire The other battles mentioned in lines 287-300 are regarded as mythical. Tennyson follows the account given by Nennius in his History of the Britons
(8th century) 293 our Lady's Head, image of the Virgin
Mary 297 the wild White Horse, the emblem of the Saxons.

Of Badon I myself beheld the King
 Charge at the head of all his Table Round,
 And all his legions crying Christ and hum, 304
 And break them; and I saw him, after, stand
 High on a heap of slain, from spur to plume
 Red as the rising sun with heathen blood,
 And seeing me, with a great voice he cried,
 "They are broken, they are broken!" for the
 King, 309
 However mild he seems at home, nor cares
 For triumph in our mimic wars, the justs —
 For if his own knight casts him down, he laughs,
 Saying his knights are better men than he —
 Yet in this heathen war the fire of God
 Fills him I never saw his like, there lives 315
 No greater leader."

While he uttered this,
 Low to her own heart said the lily maid,
 "Save your great self, fair lord"; and when he fell

From talk of war to traits of pleasantry —
 Being mirthful he, but in a stately kind — 320
 She still took note that when the living smile
 Died from his lips, across him came a cloud
 Of melancholy severe, from which again,
 Whenever in her hovering to and fro
 The lily maid had striven to make him cheer,
 There brake a sudden-beaming tenderness 326
 Of manners and of nature; and she thought
 That all was nature, all, perchance, for her
 And all night long his face before her lived,
 As when a painter, poring on a face, 330
 Divinely through all hindrance finds the
 man

Behind it, and so paints him that his face,
 The shape and color of a mind and life,
 Lives for his children, ever at its best
 And fullest; so the face before her lived, 335
 Dark-splendid, speaking in the silence, full
 Of noble things, and held her from her sleep,
 Till rathe she rose, half-cheated in the thought
 She needs must bid farewell to sweet Lavaine
 First as in fear, step after step, she stole 340
 Down the long tower-stairs, hesitating.
 Anon, she heard Sir Lancelot cry in the court,
 "This shield, my friend, where is it?" and Lavaine
 Passed inward, as she came from out the tower.

There to his proud horse Lancelot turned,
 and smoothed 345
 The glossy shoulder, humming to himself.
 Half-envious of the flattering hand, she drew Nearer and stood. He looked, and, more amazed
 Than if seven men had set upon him, saw

The maiden standing in the dewy light 350
 He had not dreamed she was so beautiful
 Then came on him a sort of sacred fear,
 For silent, though he greeted her, she stood
 Rapt on his face as if it were a god's.
 Suddenly flashed on her a wild desire 355
 That he should wear her favor at the tilt.
 She braved a riotous heart in asking for it.
 "Fair lord, whose name I know not — noble
 it is,

I well believe, the noblest — will you wear
 My favor at this tourney?" "Nay," said he,
 "Fair lady, since I never yet have worn 361
 Favor of any lady in the lists.
 Such is my wont, as those who know me
 know."

"Yea, so," she answered; "then in wearing
 mine 364
 Needs must be lesser likelihood, noble lord,
 That those who know should know you."

And he turned
 Her counsel up and down within his mind,
 And found it true, and answered: "True, my
 child.

Well, I will wear it; fetch it out to me
 What is it?" and she told him, "A red sleeve Broidered with pearls," and brought it. Then he bound 371

Her token on his helmet, with a smile,
 Saying, "I never yet have done so much
 For any maiden living," and the blood
 Sprang to her face and filled her with delight,
 But left her all the paler when Lavaine 376
 Returning brought the yet-unblazoned shield,
 His brother's, which he gave to Lancelot,
 Who parted with his own to fair Elaine
 "Do me this grace, my child, to have my
 shield 380

In keeping till I come" "A grace to me," She answered, "twice today. I am your squire!"

Whereat Lavaine said, laughing. "Lily maid,
 For fear our people call you lily maid
 In earnest, let me bring your color back, 385
 Once, twice, and thrice Now get you hence to bed";

So kissed her, and Sir Lancelot his own hand,
 And thus they moved away She stayed a minute,
 Then made a sudden step to the gate, and
 there —

Her bright hair blown about the serious face
 Yet rosy-kindled with her brother's kiss — 391 Paused by the gateway, standing near the shield

In silence, while she watched their arms far-off
 Sparkle, until they dipped below the downs
 Then to her tower she climbed, and took the
 shield, 395
 There kept it, and so lived in fantasy

Meanwhile the new companions passed
 away
 Far o'er the long backs of the bushless downs,
 To where Sir Lancelot knew there lived a
 knight 399
 Not far from Camelot, now for forty years
 A hermit, who had prayed, labored and prayed,
 And ever laboring had scooped himself
 In the white rock a chapel and a hall
 On massive columns, like a shore-cliff cave,
 And cells and chambers. All were fair and dry; 405
 The green light from the meadows underneath
 Struck up and lived along the milky roofs;
 And in the meadows tremulous aspen-trees
 And poplars made a noise of falling showers
 And thither wending there that night they bode. 410

But when the next day broke from underground,
 And shot red fire and shadows through the cave,
 They rose, heard Mass, broke fast, and rode
 away
 Then Lancelot saying, "Hear, but hold my
 name 414
 Hidden, you ride with Lancelot of the Lake,"
 Abashed Lavaine, whose instant reverence,
 Dearer to true young hearts than their own
 praise,
 But left him leave to stammer, "Is it indeed?"
 And after muttering, "The great Lancelot,"
 At last he got his breath and answered:
 "One, 420
 One have I seen — that other, our liege lord,
 The dread Pendragon, Britain's King of kings,
 Of whom the people talk mysteriously,
 He will be there — then were I stricken blind
 That minute, I might say that I had seen."

So spake Lavaine, and when they reached the lists 426
 By Camelot in the meadow, let his eyes
 Run through the peopled gallery which half
 round
 Lay like a rainbow fallen upon the grass,
 Until they found the clear-faced King, who sat 430
 Robed in red samite, easily to be known,
 Since to his crown the golden dragon clung,
 And down his robe the dragon writhed in
 gold,
 And from the carven-work behind him crept

Two dragons gilded, sloping down to make 435
 Arms for his chair, while all the rest of them
 Through knots and loops and folds innumerable
 Fled ever through the woodwork, till they
 found
 The new design wherein they lost themselves,
 Yet with all ease, so tender was the work; 440
 And, in the costly canopy o'er him set,
 Blazed the last diamond of the nameless
 king.

Then Lancelot answered young Lavaine
 and said:
 "Me you call great; mine is the firmer seat,
 The truer lance; but there is many a youth
 Now crescent, who will come to all I am 446
 And overcome it; and in me there dwells
 No greatness, save it be some far-off touch
 Of greatness to know well I am not great
 There is the man" And Lavaine gaped upon
 him 450
 As on a thing miraculous, and anon
 The trumpets blew: and then did either side,
 They that assailed, and they that held the
 lists,
 Set lance in rest, strike spur, suddenly move,
 Meet in the midst, and there so furiously 455
 Shock that a man far-off might well perceive,
 If any man that day were left afield,
 The hard earth shake, and a low thunder of arms
 And Lancelot bode a little, till he saw
 Which were the weaker; then he hurled into it Against the stronger. Little need to speak 461
 Of Lancelot in his glory! King, duke, earl,
 Count, baron — whom he smote, he over-
 threw.

But in the field were Lancelot's kith and
 kin,
 Ranged with the Table Round that held the
 lists, 465
 Strong men, and wrathful that a stranger
 knight
 Should do and almost overdo the deeds
 Of Lancelot; and one said to the other, "Lo!
 What is he? I do not mean the force alone —
 The grace and versatility of the man! 470
 Is it not Lancelot?" "When has Lancelot worn
 Favor of any lady in the lists?
 Not such his wont, as we that know him
 know"
 "How then? who then?" A fury seized them
 all,
 A fiery family passion for the name 475
 Of Lancelot, and a glory one with theirs.

422 Pendragon, a title given to the chief leader 423 talk mysteriously, a reference to the mystery of Arthur's birth, told about in The Coming of Arthur 431 samite, a kind of heavy silk stuff

446 crescent, in the period of promise.

They couched their spears and pricked their steeds, and thus,
 Their plumes driven backward by the wind
 they made
 In moving, all together down upon him
 Bare, as a wild wave in the wide North Sea,
 Green-glimmering toward the summit, bears,
 with all 481
 Its stormy crests that smoke against the skies,
 Down on a bark, and overbears the bark
 And him that helms it; so they overbore
 Sir Lancelot and his charger, and a spear 485
 Down-glancing lamed the charger, and a spear
 Pricked sharply his own carrass, and the head
 Pierced through his side, and there snapped and remained.

Then Sir Lavaine did well and worship-fully
 He bore a knight of old repute to the earth,
 And brought his horse to Lancelot where he
 lay. 491
 He up the side, sweating with agony, got,
 But thought to do while he might yet endure,
 And being lustily holpen by the rest,
 His party — though it seemed half-miracle
 To those he fought with — drave his kith and
 kin, 496
 And all the Table Round that held the lists,
 Back to the barrier, then the trumpets blew
 Proclaiming his the prize who wore the sleeve
 Of scarlet and the pearls, and all the knights
 His party, cried, "Advance and take thy
 prize 501
 The diamond"; but he answered: "Diamond
 me
 No diamonds! for God's love, a little air!
 Prize me no prizes, for my prize is death!
 Hence will I, and I charge you, follow me
 not." 505

He spoke, and vanished suddenly from the
 field
 With young Lavaine into the poplar grove
 There from his charger down he slid, and sat,
 Gasping to Sir Lavaine, "Draw the lance-
 head."
 "Ah, my sweet lord Sir Lancelot," said La-
 vaine, 510
 "I dread me, if I draw it, you will die."
 But he, "I die already with it; draw — Draw" — and Lavaine drew, and Sir Lancelot gave
 A marvelous great shriek and ghastly groan,
 And half his blood burst forth, and down he sank 515
 For the pure pain, and wholly swooned away
 Then came the hermit out and bare him in,
 There stanchd his wound, and there, in daily doubt

Whether to live or die, for many a week
 Hid from the wild world's rumor by the grove 520
 Of poplars with their noise of falling showers,
 And ever-tremulous aspen-trees, he lay.

But on that day when Lancelot fled the
 lists,
 His party, knights of utmost North and West,
 Lords of waste marshes, kings of desolate
 isles, 525
 Came round their great Pendragon, saying
 to him,
 "Lo, Sire, our knight, through whom we won
 the day,
 Hath gone sore wounded, and hath left his
 prize
 Untaken, crying that his prize is death"
 "Heaven hinder," said the King, "that such an one, 530
 So great a knight as we have seen today —
 He seemed to me another Lancelot —
 Yea, twenty times I thought him Lancelot —
 He must not pass uncared for Wherefore
 rise,
 O Gawain, and ride forth and find the knight Wounded and wearied, needs must he be
 near. 536
 I charge you that you get at once to horse
 And, knights and kings, there breathes not one of you
 Will deem this prize of ours is rashly given;
 His prowess was too wondrous. We will do
 him 540
 No customary honor, since the knight
 Came not to us, of us to claim the prize,
 Ourselves will send it after Rise and take
 This diamond, and deliver it, and return, 544
 And bring us where he is, and how he fares,
 And cease not from your quest until ye find "

So saying, from the carven flower above,
 To which it made a restless heart, he took
 And gave the diamond Then from where he sat
 At Arthur's right, with smiling face arose, 550
 With smiling face and frowning heart, a prince
 In the mid might and flourish of his May, Gawain, surnamed the Courteous, fair and strong,
 And after Lancelot, Tristram, and Gerant,
 And Gareth, a good knight, but therewithal
 Sir Modred's brother, and the child of Lot, 556
 Nor often loyal to his word, and now
 Wroth that the King's command to sally forth

535 Gawain, son of King Lot of Orkney, he was the nephew of King Arthur, the brother of Gareth, and the half-brother of Modred. Modred was the traitor of the Round Table

In quest of whom he knew not, made him
leave
The banquet and concourse of knights and
kings. 560

So all in wrath he got to horse and went,
While Arthur to the banquet, dark in mood, Passed, thinking, "Is it Lancelot who hath
come

Despite the wound he spake of, all for gain
Of glory, and hath added wound to wound,
And ridden away to die?" So feared the
King, 566

And, after two days' tarriance there, returned.
Then when he saw the Queen, embracing asked,

"Love, are you yet so sick?" "Nay, lord,"
she said.

"And where is Lancelot?" Then the Queen amazed, 570

"Was he not with you? Won he not your
prize?"

"Nay, but one like him" "Why, that like was he."

And when the King demanded how she knew,
Said: "Lord, no sooner had ye parted from us
Than Lancelot told me of a common talk 575
That men went down before his spear at a
touch,

But knowing he was Lancelot, his great name Conquered; and therefore would he hide his
name 578

From all men, even the King, and to this end
Had made the pretext of a hindering wound,
That he might just unknown of all, and learn
If his old prowess were in aught decayed,
And added, "Our true Arthur, when he learns,
Will well allow my pretext, as for gain
Of purer glory."

Then replied the King: 585

"Far lovelier in our Lancelot had it been,
In lieu of idly dallying with the truth,
To have trusted me as he hath trusted thee.
Surely his King and most familiar friend
Might well have kept his secret. True, indeed,
Albeit I know my knights fantastical, 591
So fine a fear in our large Lancelot Must needs have moved my laughter; now remains

But little cause for laughter. His own kin—
Ill news, my Queen, for all who love him,
this! — 595

His kith and kin, not knowing, set upon him,
So that he went sore wounded from the field
Yet good news too; for goodly hopes are mine
That Lancelot is no more a lonely heart.

He wore, against his wont, upon his helm 600
A sleeve of scarlet, brodered with great pearls,
Some gentle maiden's gift."

"Yea, lord," she said,
"Thy hopes are mine," and saying that, she choked,
And sharply turned about to hide her face,
Passed to her chamber, and there flung her-
self 605
Down on the great King's couch, and writhed upon it,
And clenched her fingers till they bit the palm,
And shrieked out "Traitor!" to the unhear-
ing wall,
Then flashed into wild tears, and rose again,
And moved about her palace, proud and pale.

Gawain the while through all the region
round 611

Rode with his diamond, wearied of the quest,
Touched at all points except the poplar grove,
And came at last, though late, to Astolat;
Whom glittering in enameled arms the maid Glanced at, and cried, "What news from Camelot, lord? 616

What of the knight with the red sleeve?"
"He won"

"I knew it," she said. "But parted from the justs

Hurt in the side"; whereat she caught her
breath.

Through her own side she felt the sharp lance
go. 620

Thereon she smote her hand; wellnigh she swooned

And, while he gazed wonderingly at her, came
The Lord of Astolat out, to whom the prince
Reported who he was, and on what quest

Sent, that he bore the prize and could not find 625

The victor, but had ridden a random round
To seek him, and had wearied of the search
To whom the Lord of Astolat: "Bide with us,
And ride no more at random, noble prince!
Here was the knight, and here he left a
shield, 630

This will he send or come for. Furthermore
Our son is with him; we shall hear anon;
Needs must we hear." To this the courteous prince

Accorded with his wonted courtesy,
Courtesy with a touch of traitor in it, 635
And stayed; and cast his eyes on fair Elaine.
Where could be found face daintier? Then her shape

From forehead down to foot, perfect; again
From foot to forehead exquisitely turned.

592 So fine a fear, etc. There is a touch of sarcasm in Arthur's words.

"Well — if I bide, lo! this wild flower for
 me!" 640
 And oft they met among the garden yews,
 And there he set himself to play upon her
 With sallying wit, free flashes from a height
 Above her, graces of the court, and songs,
 Sighs, and low smiles, and golden eloquence
 And amorous adulation, till the maid 646
 Rebelled against it, saying to him: "Prince,
 O loyal nephew of our noble King,
 Why ask you not to see the shield he left,
 Whence you might learn his name? Why slight your King, 650
 And lose the quest he sent you on, and prove
 No surer than our falcon yesterday,
 Who lost the hern we slipped her at, and went
 To all the winds?" "Nay, by mine head,"
 said he,
 "I lose it, as we lose the lark in heaven, 655
 O damsel, in the light of your blue eyes;
 But an ye will it, let me see the shield"
 And when the shield was brought, and Gawain saw
 Sir Lancelot's azure lions, crowned with gold, Ramp in the field, he smote his thigh, and mocked: 660
 "Right was the King! our Lancelot! that true
 man!"
 "And right was I," she answered merrily, "I,
 Who dreamed my knight the greatest knight
 of all"
 "And if I dreamed," said Gawain, "that you
 love
 This greatest knight, your pardon! lo, ye know it! 665
 Speak therefore; shall I waste myself in vain?"
 Full simple was her answer: "What know
 I?
 My brethren have been all my fellowship;
 And I, when often they have talked of love, Wished it had been my mother, for they talked, 670
 Meseemed, of what they knew not; so my-
 self —
 I know not if I know what true love is,
 But if I know, then, if I love not him,
 I know there is none other I can love."
 "Yea, by God's death," said he, "ye love him
 well, 675
 But would not, knew ye what all others know,
 And whom he loves." "So be it," cried
 Elaine,
 And lifted her fair face and moved away;
 But he pursued her, calling, "Stay a little!
 One golden minute's grace! He wore your sleeve; 680
 Would he break faith with one I may not
 name?
 Must our true man change like a leaf at last?

Nay — like enow. Why then, far be it from
 me
 To cross our mighty Lancelot in his loves!
 And, damsel, for I deem you know full well
 Where your great knight is hidden, let me
 leave 686
 My quest with you; the diamond also — here!
 For if you love, it will be sweet to give it,
 And if he love, it will be sweet to have it
 From your own hand; and whether he love or not, 690
 A diamond is a diamond Fare you well
 A thousand times! — a thousand times fare-
 well!
 Yet, if he love, and his love hold, we two
 May meet at court hereafter! There, I think,
 So ye will learn the courtesies of the court,
 We two shall know each other." 696

Then he gave,
 And slightly kissed the hand to which he gave,
 The diamond, and all wearied of the quest
 Leaped on his horse, and caroling as he went
 A true-love ballad, lightly rode away. 700

Thence to the court he passed; there told
 the King
 What the King knew, "Sir Lancelot is the
 knight."
 And added, "Sire, my liege, so much I learned,
 But failed to find him, though I rode all round
 The region; but I lighted on the maid 705 Whose sleeve he wore. She loves him, and to her,
 Deeming our courtesy is the truest law,
 I gave the diamond She will render it;
 For by mine head she knows his hiding-
 place."

The seldom-frowning King frowned, and replied, 710
 "Too courteous truly! Ye shall go no more
 On quest of mine, seeing that ye forget
 Obedience is the courtesy due to kings"

He spake and parted. Wroth, but all in awe,
 For twenty strokes of the blood, without a
 word, 715
 Lingered that other, staring after him,
 Then shook his hair, strode off, and buzzed abroad
 About the maid of Astolat, and her love.
 All ears were pricked at once, all tongues were loosed:
 "The maid of Astolat loves Sir Lancelot, 720
 Sir Lancelot loves the maid of Astolat"
 Some read the King's face, some the Queen's,
 and all

Had marvel what the maid might be, but most

Predoomed her as unworthy. One old dame Came suddenly on the Queen with the sharp
news. 725

She, that had heard the noise of it before,
But sorrowing Lancelot should have stooped
so low,

Marred her friend's aim with pale tranquillity.
So ran the tale like fire about the court,
Fire in dry stubble a nine-days' wonder flared; 730

Till even the knights at banquet twice or thrice

Forgot to drink to Lancelot and the Queen,
And pledging Lancelot and the hly maid Smiled at each other, while the Queen, who
sat

With lips severely placid, felt the knot 735
Climb in her throat, and with her feet unseen
Crushed the wild passion out against the floor Beneath the banquet, where the meats became

As wormwood, and she hated all who pledged.

But far away the maid in Astolat, 740
Her guiltless rival, she that ever kept

The one-day-seen Sir Lancelot in her heart,
Crept to her father, while he mused alone,
Sat on his knee, stroked his gray face, and
said, 744

"Father, you call me willful, and the fault
Is yours who let me have my will; and now,
Sweet father, will you let me lose my wits?"
"Nay," said he, "surely." "Wherefore, let me hence,"

She answered, "and find out our dear La-
vaine."

"Ye will not lose your wits for dear Lavaine.
Bide," answered he; "we needs must hear anon 751

Of him, and of that other." "Aye," she said,
"And of that other, for I needs must hence
And find that other, wheresoe'er he be,
And with mine own hand give his diamond
to him, 755

Lest I be found as faithless in the quest
As yon proud prince who left the quest to me.
Sweet father, I behold him in my dreams
Gaunt as it were the skeleton of himself,
Death-pale, for the lack of gentle maiden's
aid. 760

The gentler-born the maiden, the more bound,
My father, to be sweet and serviceable
To noble knights in sickness, as ye know,
When these have worn their tokens. Let me
hence,

I pray you." Then her father nodding said.
"Aye, aye, the diamond. Wit ye well, my
child, 766

Right fain were I to learn this knight were
whole,

Being our greatest. Yea, and you must give
it —

And sure I think this fruit is hung too high
For any mouth to gape for save a queen's —
Nay, I mean nothing; so then, get you gone,
Being so very willful you must go." 772

Lightly, her suit allowed, she slipped away,
And while she made her ready for her ride,
Her father's latest word hummed in her ear,
"Being so very willful you must go," 776

And changed itself and echoed in her heart,
"Being so very willful you must die."

But she was happy enough and shook it off,
As we shake off the bee that buzzes at us; 780
And in her heart she answered it and said,
"What matter, so I help him back to life?"

Then far away with good Sir Torre for guide
Rode o'er the long backs of the bushless downs
To Camelot, and before the city-gates 785

Came on her brother with a happy face
Making a roan horse caper and curvet
For pleasure all about a field of flowers;
Whom when she saw, "Lavaine," she cried,

"Lavaine,
How fares my lord Sir Lancelot?" He amazed, 790

"Torre and Elaine! why here? Sir Lancelot!
How know ye my lord's name is Lancelot?"
But when the maid had told him all her tale,
Then turned Sir Torre, and being in his moods

Left them, and under the strange-statued gate, 795

Where Arthur's wars were rendered mysti-cally,

Passed up the still rich city to his kin,
His own far blood, which dwelt at Camelot,
And her, Lavaine across the poplar grove Led to the caves. There first she saw the casque 800

Of Lancelot on the wall; her scarlet sleeve,
Though carved and cut, and half the pearls
away,

Streamed from it still; and in her heart she laughed,

Because he had not loosed it from his helm,
But meant once more perchance to tourney
in it. 805

And when they gained the cell wherein he slept,

His battle-writhen arms and mighty hands
Lay naked on the wolf-skin, and a dream
Of dragging down his enemy made them move
Then she that saw him lying unsleek, unshorn, 810

Gaunt as it were the skeleton of himself,
Uttered a little tender, dolorous cry.
The sound not wonted in a place so still Woke the sick knight, and while he rolled his eyes

Yet blank from sleep, she started to him, saying, 815

"Your prize, the diamond sent you by the King"

His eyes glistened; she fancied, "Is it for
me?"

And when the maid had told him all the tale
Of king and prince, the diamond sent, the quest

Assigned to her not worthy of it, she knelt
Full lowly by the corners of his bed, 821

And laid the diamond in his open hand.
Her face was near, and as we kiss the child
That does the task assigned, he kissed her
face.

At once she slipped like water to the floor 825
"Alas," he said, "your ride hath wearied you Rest must you have" "No rest for me," she
said;

"Nay, for near you, fair lord, I am at rest."
What might she mean by that? His large black eyes,

Yet larger through his leanness, dwelt upon
her, 830

Till all her heart's sad secret blazed itself
In the heart's colors on her simple face;
And Lancelot looked and was perplexed in
mind,

And being weak in body said no more,
But did not love the color; woman's love, 835
Save one, he not regarded, and so turned Sighing, and feigned a sleep until he slept.

Then rose Elaine and glided through the fields,

And passed beneath the weirdly-sculptured gates

Far up the dim rich city to her kin; 840
There bode the night, but woke with dawn,
and passed

Down through the dim rich city to the fields,
Thence to the cave So day by day she passed
In either twilight ghost-like to and fro
Gliding, and every day she tended him, 845
And likewise many a night; and Lancelot
Would, though he called his wound a little hurt

Whereof he should be quickly whole, at times
Brain-feverous in his heat and agony, seem Uncourteous, even he But the meek maid
Sweetly forbore him ever, being to him 851
Meeker than any child to a rough nurse,
Milder than any mother to a sick child,
And never woman yet, since man's first fall,
Did kindlier unto man, but her deep love 855

Upbore her, till the hermit, skilled in all
The simples and the science of that time, Told him that her fine care had saved his
life

And the sick man forgot her simple blush,
Would call her friend and sister, sweet Elaine,
Would listen for her coming and regret 861
Her parting step, and held her tenderly,
And loved her with all love except the love
Of man and woman when they love their best,
Closest and sweetest, and had died the death
In any knightly fashion for her sake. 866

And peradventure had he seen her first
She might have made this and that other
world

Another world for the sick man; but now
The shackles of an old love straitened him, 870
His honor rooted in dishonor stood,
And faith unfaithful kept him falsely true.

Yet the great knight in his mid-sickness made
Full many a holy vow and pure resolve. 874
These, as but born of sickness, could not live;
For when the blood ran lustier in him again,
Full often the bright image of one face,
Making a treacherous quiet in his heart,
Dispersed his resolution like a cloud. 879

Then if the maiden, while that ghostly grace
Beamed on his fancy, spoke, he answered not,
Or short and coldly, and she knew right well
What the rough sickness meant, but what this meant

She knew not, and the sorrow dimmed her sight,

And drave her ere her time across the fields
Far into the rich city, where alone 886
She murmured, "Vain, in vain! it cannot be.
He will not love me. How then? Must I
die?"

Then as a little helpless, innocent bird, 889
That has but one plain passage of few notes,
Will sing the simple passage o'er and o'er
For all an April morning, till the ear
Wearies to hear it, so the simple maid
Went half the night repeating, "Must I die?"
And now to right she turned, and now to left,
And found no ease in turning or in rest; 896
And "Him or death," she muttered, "death or him,"

Again and like a burthen, "Him or death."

But when Sir Lancelot's deadly hurt was
whole,

To Astolat returning rode the three. 900
There morn by morn, arraying her sweet self
In that wherein she deemed she looked her
best,

She came before Sir Lancelot, for she thought,

880 that ghostly grace, the vision of Guinevere. 883.
the rough sickness, delirium.

"If I be loved, these are my festal robes,
If not, the victim's flowers before he fall" 905
And Lancelot ever pressed upon the maid
That she should ask some goodly gift of him
For her own self or hers — "and do not shun
To speak the wish most near to your true
heart;" 909

Such service have ye done me that I make
My will of yours, and prince and lord am I
In mine own land, and what I will I can."
Then like a ghost she lifted up her face,
But like a ghost without the power to speak.
And Lancelot saw that she withheld her wish,
And bode among them yet a little space 916
Till he should learn it; and one morn it chanced

He found her in among the garden yews,
And said, "Delay no longer, speak your wish,
Seeing I go today." Then out she brake: 920
"Going? and we shall never see you more.
And I must die for want of one bold word."
"Speak; that I live to hear," he said, "is
yours."

Then suddenly and passionately she spoke:
"I have gone mad. I love you, let me die."
"Ah, sister," answered Lancelot, "what is
this?" 926

And innocently extending her white arms,
"Your love," she said, "your love — to be your wife."

And Lancelot answered, "Had I chosen to
wed,

I had been wedded earlier, sweet Elaine; 930
But now there never will be wife of mine."
"No, no," she cried, "I care not to be wife,
But to be with you still, to see your face,
To serve you, and to follow you through the
world."

And Lancelot answered: "Nay, the world, the
world," 935

All ear and eye, with such a stupid heart
To interpret ear and eye, and such a tongue
To blare its own interpretation — nay,
Full ill then should I quit your brother's
love,

And your good father's kindness." And she
said, 940

"Not to be with you, not to see your face —
Alas for me then, my good days are done!"
"Nay, noble maid," he answered, "ten times
nay!

This is not love, but love's first flash in youth,
Most common; yea, I know it of mine own
self, 945

And you yourself will smile at your own self Hereafter, when you yield your flower of life
To one more fitly yours, not thrice your age.
And then will I, for true you are and sweet

Beyond mine old belief in womanhood, 950
More specially should your good knight be
poor,

Endow you with broad land and territory
Even to the half my realm beyond the seas,
So that would make you happy, furthermore,
Even to the death, as though ye were my
blood, 955

In all your quarrels will I be your knight.
This will I do, dear damsel, for your sake.
And more than this I cannot."

While he spoke
She neither blushed nor shook, but deathly-
pale
Stood grasping what was nearest, then replied, 960
"Of all this will I nothing", and so fell,
And thus they bore her swooning to her
tower.

Then spake, to whom through those black walls of yew
Their talk had pierced, her father: "Aye, a flash, 964
I fear me, that will strike my blossom dead
Too courteous are ye, fair Lord Lancelot
I pray you, use some rough discourtesy
To blunt or break her passion."

Lancelot said,
"That were against me; what I can I will",
And there that day remained, and toward even 970
Sent for his shield. Full meekly rose the
maid,
Stripped off the case, and gave the naked
shield;
Then, when she heard his horse upon the stones,
Unclaspings flung the casement back, and looked Down on his helm, from which her sleeve had gone 975
And Lancelot knew the little clinking sound,
And she by tact of love was well aware That Lancelot knew that she was looking at
him
And yet he glanced not up, nor waved his
hand,
Nor bade farewell, but sadly rode away. 980
This was the one discourtesy that he used

So in her tower alone the maiden sat.
His very shield was gone, only the case,
Her own poor work, her empty labor, left
But still she heard him, still his picture formed 985
And grew between her and the pictured wall.

905 the victim's . . . fall, a reference to the ancient custom of decorating animals for sacrifice

Then came her father, saying in low tones,
 "Have comfort," whom she greeted quietly.
 Then came her brethren saying, "Peace to
 thee,
 Sweet sister," whom she answered with all calm. 990
 But when they left her to herself again,
 Death, like a friend's voice from a distant
 field
 Approaching through the darkness, called, the owls
 Wailing had power upon her, and she mixed
 Her fancies with the sallow-rifted glooms 995
 Of evening and the moanings of the wind.

And in those days she made a little song,
 And called her song "The Song of Love and
 Death,"
 And sang it, sweetly could she make and sing

"Sweet is true love though given in vain,
 in vain; 1000
 And sweet is death who puts an end to pain
 I know not which is sweeter, no, not I.

"Love, art thou sweet? Then bitter death must be
 Love, thou art bitter; sweet is death to me
 O Love, if death be sweeter, let me die. 1005

"Sweet love, that seems not made to fade
 away,
 Sweet death, that seems to make us loveless
 clay;
 I know not which is sweeter, no, not I.

"I fain would follow love, if that could be,
 I needs must follow death, who calls for me;
 Call and I follow, I follow! Let me die" 1011

High with the last line scaled her voice, and this,
 All in a fiery dawning wild with wind
 That shook her tower, the brothers heard, and thought
 With shuddering, "Hark the Phantom of the house 1015
 That ever shrieks before a death," and called
 The father, and all three in hurry and fear Ran to her, and lo! the blood-red light of
 dawn
 Flared on her face, she shrilling, "Let me
 die!"

As when we dwell upon a word we know,
 Repeating, till the word we know so well 1021
 Becomes a wonder, and we know not why,

1015-1016 Phantom . . . death. In Celtic folklore a supernatural being, the banshee, was supposed to warn a family of approaching death by wailing or by singing in a mournful voice.

So dwelt the father on her face, and thought.
 "Is this Elaine?" till back the maiden fell,
 Then gave a languid hand to each, and lay, 1025
 Speaking a still good-morrow with her eyes.
 At last she said: "Sweet brothers, yesternight
 I seemed a curious little maid again,
 As happy as when we dwelt among the woods,
 And when ye used to take me with the flood
 Up the great river in the boatman's boat. 1031
 Only ye would not pass beyond the cape
 That has the poplar on it; there ye fixed
 Your limit, oft returning with the tide.
 And yet I cried because ye would not pass
 Beyond it, and far up the shining flood 1036
 Until we found the palace of the King.
 And yet ye would not; but this night I dreamed

That I was all alone upon the flood,
 And then I said, 'Now shall I have my will',
 And there I woke, but still the wish remained. 1041

So let me hence that I may pass at last
 Beyond the poplar and far up the flood,
 Until I find the palace of the King.
 There will I enter in among them all, 1045
 And no man there will dare to mock at me;
 But there the fine Gawain will wonder at me,
 And there the great Sir Lancelot muse at me;
 Gawain, who bade a thousand farewells to me,
 Lancelot, who coldly went, nor bade me one.
 And there the King will know me and my
 love, 1051
 And there the Queen herself will pity me,
 And all the gentle court will welcome me,
 And after my long voyage I shall rest!"

"Peace," said her father, "O my child, ye seem 1055
 Light-headed, for what force is yours to go
 So far, being sick? And wherefore would ye look
 On this proud fellow again, who scorns us
 all?"

Then the rough Torre began to heave and
 move,
 And bluster into stormy sobs and say: 1060
 "I never loved him; an I meet with him,
 I care not howsoever great he be,
 Then will I strike at him and strike him down
 Give me good fortune, I will strike him dead,
 For this discomfort he hath done the house."

To whom the gentle sister made reply: 1066
 "Fret not yourself, dear brother, nor be
 wroth,
 Seeing it is no more Sir Lancelot's fault
 Not to love me than it is mine to love Him of all men who seems to me the highest"

"Highest?" the father answered, echoing
 "highest?" — 1071
 He meant to break the passion in her —
 "nay,
 Daughter, I know not what you call the
 highest;
 But this I know, for all the people know it,
 He loves the Queen, and in an open shame,
 And she returns his love in open shame; 1076
 If this be high, what is it to be low?"

Then spake the lily maid of Astolat:
 "Sweet father, all too faint and sick am I
 For anger. These are slanders; never yet 1080
 Was noble man but made ignoble talk.
 He makes no friend who never made a foe,
 But now it is my glory to have loved
 One peerless, without stain; so let me pass,
 My father, howsoever I seem to you, 1085
 Not all unhappy, having loved God's best
 And greatest, though my love had no return.
 Yet, seeing you desire your child to live,
 Thanks, but you work against your own
 desire,
 For if I could believe the things you say 1090
 I should but die the sooner; wherefore cease,
 Sweet father, and bid call the ghostly man
 Hither, and let me shrive me clean and die."

So when the ghostly man had come and
 gone,
 She, with a face bright as for sin forgiven, 1095
 Besought Lavaine to write as she devised
 A letter, word for word; and when he asked,
 "Is it for Lancelot, is it for my dear lord?
 Then will I bear it gladly," she replied,
 "For Lancelot and the Queen and all the
 world, 1100
 But I myself must bear it." Then he wrote
 The letter she devised, which being writ
 And folded, "O sweet father, tender and true,
 Deny me not," she said — "ye never yet
 Denied my fancies — this, however strange,
 My latest. Lay the letter in my hand 1106
 A little ere I die, and close the hand
 Upon it, I shall guard it even in death
 And when the heat has gone from out my
 heart,
 Then take the little bed on which I died 1110
 For Lancelot's love, and deck it like the Queen's
 For richness, and me also like the Queen
 In all I have of rich, and lay me on it.
 And let there be prepared a chariot-bier
 To take me to the river, and a barge 1115
 Be ready on the river, clothed in black.
 I go in state to court, to meet the Queen.
 There surely I shall speak for mine own self,

And none of you can speak for me so well.
 And therefore let our dumb old man alone 1120
 Go with me; he can steer and row, and he Will guide me to that palace, to the doors."

She ceased. Her father promised; whereupon
 She grew so cheerful that they deemed her
 death
 Was rather in the fantasy than the blood. 1125
 But ten slow mornings passed, and on the eleventh
 Her father laid the letter in her hand,
 And closed the hand upon it, and she died.
 So that day there was dole in Astolat.

But when the next sun brake from underground, 1130
 Then, those two brethren slowly with bent brows
 Accompanying, the sad chariot-bier
 Passed like a shadow through the field, that shone
 Full-summer, to that stream whereon the barge, 1134
 Palled all its length in blackest samite, lay.
 There sat the lifelong creature of the house,
 Loyal, the dumb old servitor, on deck,
 Winking his eyes, and twisted all his face.
 So those two brethren from the chariot took
 And on the black decks laid her in her bed,
 Set in her hand a lily, o'er her hung 1141
 The silken case with braided blazonings,
 And kissed her quiet brows, and saying to her,
 "Sister, farewell forever," and again,
 "Farewell, sweet sister," parted all in tears
 Then rose the dumb old servitor, and the dead, 1146
 Oared by the dumb, went upward with the flood —
 In her right hand the lily, in her left
 The letter — all her bright hair streaming
 down —
 And all the coverlid was cloth of gold 1150
 Drawn to her waist, and she herself in white
 All but her face, and that clear-featured face
 Was lovely, for she did not seem as dead,
 But fast asleep, and lay as though she smiled.

That day Sir Lancelot at the palace craved
 Audience of Guinevere, to give at last 1156
 The price of half a realm, his costly gift, Hard-won and hardly won with bruise and
 blow,
 With deaths of others, and almost his own,
 The nine-years-fought-for diamonds; for he
 saw 1160
 One of her house, and sent him to the Queen
 Bearing his wish, whereto the Queen agreed
 With such and so unmoved a majesty

She might have seemed her statue, but that
 he,
 Low-drooping till he wellnigh kissed her feet
 For loyal awe, saw with a sidelong eye 1166
 The shadow of some piece of pointed lace,
 In the Queen's shadow, vibrate on the walls,
 And parted, laughing in his courtly heart.

All in an oriel on the summer side, 1170
 Vine-clad, of Arthur's palace toward the
 stream,
 They met, and Lancelot kneeling uttered:
 "Queen,
 Lady, my liege, in whom I have my joy,
 Take, what I had not won except for you,
 These jewels, and make me happy, making
 them 1175

An armlet for the roundest arm on earth,
 Or necklace for a neck to which the swan's
 Is tawnier than her cygnet's These are words;
 Your beauty is your beauty, and I sin
 In speaking, yet O grant my worship of it 1180 Words, as we grant grief tears. Such sin in
 words,

Perchance, we both can pardon; but, my
 Queen,

I hear of rumors flying through your court.
 Our bond, as not the bond of man and wife,
 Should have in it an absoluter trust 1185
 To make up that defect; let rumors be.
 When did not rumors fly? These, as I trust
 That you trust me in your own nobleness,
 I may not well believe that you believe."

While thus he spoke, half turned away, the Queen 1190
 Brake from the vast oriel-embowering vine
 Leaf after leaf, and tore, and cast them off,
 Till all the place whereon she stood was green;
 Then, when he ceased, in one cold, passive
 hand

Received at once and laid aside the gems 1195
 There on a table near her, and replied:

"It may be I am quicker of belief
 Than you believe me, Lancelot of the Lake
 Our bond is not the bond of man and wife
 This good is in it, whatsoe'er of ill, 1200
 It can be broken easier. I for you
 This many a year have done despite and
 wrong

To one whom ever in my heart of hearts
 I did acknowledge nobler. What are these?
 Diamonds for me! They had been thrice their worth 1205

Being your gift, had you not lost your own.
 To loyal hearts the value of all gifts

1170 oriel, a large bay window. 1178 tawnier . . . cygnet's The down of the cygnet, or young swan, is of a brownish hue

Must vary as the giver's. Not for me!
 For her! for your new fancy. Only this 1209
 Grant me, I pray you: have your joys apart.
 I doubt not that, however changed, you keep
 So much of what is graceful; and myself
 Would shun to break those bounds of courtesy
 In which as Arthur's Queen I move and rule,
 So cannot speak my mind. An end to this!
 A strange one! yet I take it with Amen. 1216
 So pray you, add my diamonds to her pearls;
 Deck her with these, tell her she shines me
 down;

An armlet for an arm to which the Queen's
 Is haggard, or a necklace for a neck 1220
 O as much fairer — as a faith once fair
 Was richer than these diamonds — hers not
 mine —

Nay, by the mother of our Lord himself,
 Or hers or mine, mine now to work my will —
 She shall not have them "

Saying which she seized, 1225
 And, through the casement standing wide for heat,

Flung them, and down they flashed, and smote the stream.

Then from the smitten surface flashed, as it were,

Diamonds to meet them, and they passed
 away

Then while Sir Lancelot leaned, in half disdain 1230

At love, life, all things, on the window ledge,
 Close underneath his eyes, and right across Where these had fallen, slowly passed the barge

Whereon the lily maid of Astolat
 Lay smiling, like a star in blackest night. 1235

But the wild Queen, who saw not, burst
 away

To weep and wail in secret; and the barge,
 On to the palace-doorway sliding, paused
 There two stood armed, and kept the door;
 to whom,

All up the marble stair, tier over tier, 1240
 Were added mouths that gaped, and eyes that asked,

"What is it?" But that oarsman's haggard
 face,

As hard and still as is the face that men
 Shape to their fancy's eye from broken rocks
 On some cliff-side, appalled them, and they
 said, 1245

"He is enchanted, cannot speak — and she,
 Look how she sleeps — the Fairy Queen, so fair!

Yea, but how pale! What are they? Flesh and blood?

Or come to take the King to Fairyland?

For some do hold our Arthur cannot die, 1250
But that he passes into Fairyland "

While thus they babbled of the King, the
King
Came girt with knights Then turned the tongueless man

From the half-face to the full eye, and rose
And pointed to the damsel and the doors 1255
So Arthur bade the meek Sir Percivale
And pure Sir Galahad to uplift the maid;
And reverently they bore her into hall.

Then came the fine Gawain and wondered at
her, 1259

And Lancelot later came and mused at her,
And last the Queen herself, and pitied her;
But Arthur spied the letter in her hand,
Stooped, took, brake seal, and read it, this was all:

"Most noble lord, Sir Lancelot of the Lake,

I, sometime called the maid of Astolat, 1265
Come, for you left me taking no farewell,
Hither, to take my last farewell of you.
I loved you, and my love had no return,
And therefore my true love has been my
death.

And therefore to our Lady Guinevere, 1270
And to all other ladies, I make moan:
Pray for my soul, and yield me burial.
Pray for my soul thou too, Sir Lancelot,
As thou art a knight peerless."

Thus he read;

And ever in the reading lords and dames 1275
Wept, looking often from his face who read
To hers which lay so silent, and at times,
So touched were they, half-thinking that her lips

Who had devised the letter moved again

Then freely spoke Sir Lancelot to them
all: 1280

"My lord liege Arthur, and all ye that hear,
Know that for this most gentle maiden's death
Right heavy am I; for good she was and true,
But loved me with a love beyond all love
In women, whomsoever I have known. 1285
Yet to be loved makes not to love again;
Not at my years, however it hold in youth
I swear by truth and knighthood that I gave
No cause, not willingly, for such a love.
To this I call my friends in testimony, 1290
Her brethren, and her father, who himself
Besought me to be plain and blunt, and use,
To break her passion, some discourtesy

1256-1257. Sir Percivale, Sir Galahad. These were the purest knights of the Round Table

Against my nature; what I could, I did.
I left her and I bade her no farewell, 1295
Though, had I dreamt the damsel would have
died,
I might have put my wits to some rough use,
And helped her from herself "

Then said the Queen —

Sea was her wrath, yet working after storm:
"Ye might at least have done her so much
grace, 1300
Fair lord, as would have helped her from her
death."

He raised his head; their eyes met, and hers
fell,

He adding: "Queen, she would not be content
Save that I wedded her, which could not be Then might she follow me through the world,
she asked; 1305

It could not be I told her that her love
Was but the flash of youth, would darken
down,

To rise hereafter in a stiller flame
Toward one more worthy of her — then would I, 1309

More specially were he she wedded poor,
Estate them with large land and territory
In mine own realm beyond the narrow seas,
To keep them in all joyance. More than this I could not; this she would not, and she
died."

He pausing, Arthur answered: "O my
knight, 1315

It will be to thy worship, as my knight,
And mine, as head of all our Table Round,
To see that she be buried worshipfully."

So toward that shrine which then in all the realm

Was richest, Arthur leading, slowly went 1320
The marshaled Order of their Table Round,
And Lancelot sad beyond his wont, to see
The maiden buried, not as one unknown,
Nor meanly, but with gorgeous obsequies,
And Mass, and rolling music, like a queen
And when the knights had laid her comely
head 1326

Low in the dust of half-forgotten kings,
Then Arthur spake among them: "Let her tomb

Be costly, and her image thereupon,
And let the shield of Lancelot at her feet 1330
Be carven, and her lily in her hand.
And let the story of her dolorous voyage
For all true hearts be blazoned on her tomb
In letters gold and azure!" which was wrought

1316 worship, honor 1319-1320 that shrine . richest, the burial place of kings

Thereafter. But when now the lords and dames 1335
And people, from the high door streaming, brake
Disorderly, as homeward each, the Queen,
Who marked Sir Lancelot where he moved
apart,
Drew near, and sighed in passing, "Lancelot,
Forgive me; mine was jealousy in love." 1340
He answered with his eyes upon the ground,
"That is love's curse; pass on, my Queen, forgiven"
But Arthur, who beheld his cloudy brows,
Approached him, and with full affection said:
"Lancelot, my Lancelot, thou in whom I have 1345
Most joy and most affiance, for I know
What thou hast been in battle by my side,
And man; a time have watched thee at the tilt
Strike down the lusty and long practiced
knight
And let the younger and unskilled go by 1350
To win his honor and to make his name,
And loved thy courtesies and thee, a man
Made to be loved; but now I would to God,
Seeing the homeless trouble in thine eyes,
Thou couldst have loved this maiden, shaped,
it seems, 1355
By God for thee alone, and from her face,
If one may judge the living by the dead,
Delicately pure and marvelously fair,
Who might have brought thee, now a lonely
man
Wifeless and heirless, noble issue, sons 1360
Born to the glory of thy name and fame,
My knight, the great Sir Lancelot of the Lake"
Then answered Lancelot: "Fair she was,
my King,
Pure, as you ever wish your knights to be.
To doubt her fairness were to want an eye,
To doubt her pureness were to want a
heart — 1366
Yea, to be loved, if what is worthy love
Could bind him, but free love will not be bound"
"Free love, so bound, were freest," said
the King 1369
"Let love be free; free love is for the best
And, after heaven, on our dull side of death,
What should be best, if not so pure a love
Clothed in so pure a loveliness? Yet thee
She failed to bind, though being, as I think,
Unbound as yet, and gentle, as I know." 1375

And Lancelot answered nothing, but he
went,

And at the inrunning of a little brook
Sat by the river in a cove, and watched
The high reed wave, and lifted up his eyes
And saw the barge that brought her moving
down, 1380
Far-off, a blot upon the stream, and said
Low in himself: "Ah, simple heart and sweet,
Ye loved me, damsel, surely with a love Far tenderer than my Queen's. Pray for thy
soul?
Aye, that will I. Farewell too — now at
last — 1385
Farewell, fair lily. 'Jealousy in love'?
Not rather dead love's harsh heir, jealous pride?
Queen, if I grant the jealousy as of love,
May not your crescent fear for name and fame
Speak, as it waxes, of a love that wanes? 1390
Why did the King dwell on my name to me?
Mine own name shames me, seeming a reproach,
Lancelot, whom the Lady of the Lake
Caught from his mother's arms — the wondrous one 1394
Who passes through the vision of the night —
She chanted snatches of mysterious hymns
Heard on the winding waters; eve and morn
She kissed me, saying, 'Thou art fair, my
child,
As a king's son,' and often in her arms
She bare me, pacing on the dusky mere 1400
Would she had drowned me in it, where'er it be!
For what am I? What profits me my name Of greatest knight? I fought for it, and have it.
Pleasure to have it, none; to lose it, pain,
Now grown a part of me; but what use in
it? 1405
To make men worse by making my sin known?
Or sin seem less, the sinner seeming great?
Alas for Arthur's greatest knight, a man
Not after Arthur's heart! I needs must break
These bonds that so defame me Not without 1410
She wills it — would I, if she willed it? Nay,
Who knows? But if I would not, then may
God,
I pray him, send a sudden angel down
To seize me by the hair and bear me far,
And fling me deep in that forgotten mere, 1415
Among the tumbled fragments of the hills"

So groaned Sir Lancelot in remorseful pain,
Not knowing he should die a holy man (1859)

THE HOLY GRAIL

From noiseful arms, and acts of prowess done
 In tournament or tilt, Sir Percivale Whom Arthur and his knighthood called the Pure,
 Had passed into the silent life of prayer,
 Praise, fast, and alms; and leaving for the cowl 5
 The helmet in an abbey far away
 From Camelot, there, and not long after,
 died.

And one, a fellow-monk among the rest,
 Ambrosius, loved him much beyond the rest,
 And honored him, and wrought into his heart
 A way by love that wakened love within, 11
 To answer that which came; and as they sat
 Beneath a world-old yew-tree, darkening half
 The cloisters, on a gustful April morn
 That puffed the swaying branches into smoke
 Above them, ere the summer when he died, 16
 The monk Ambrosius questioned Percivale:

"O brother, I have seen this yew-tree
 smoke,
 Spring after spring, for half a hundred years;
 For never have I known the world without, 20
 Nor ever strayed beyond the pale. But thee,
 When first thou camest — such a courtesy
 Spake through the limbs and in the voice —
 I knew

For one of those who eat in Arthur's hall;
 For good ye are and bad, and like to coins, 25
 Some true, some light, but every one of you Stamped with the image of the King; and
 now

Tell me, what drove thee from the Table
 Round,
 My brother? Was it earthly passion crossed?"

"Nay," said the knight; "for no such passion mine 30
 But the sweet vision of the Holy Grail
 Drove me from all vainglories, rivalries,
 And earthly heats that spring and sparkle out
 Among us in the justs, while women watch
 Who wins, who falls, and waste the spiritual strength 35
 Within us, better offered up to heaven."

To whom the monk: "The Holy Grail! —
 I trust
 We are green in Heaven's eyes; but here too
 much
 We molder — as to things without, I mean —
 Yet one of your own knights, a guest of ours,

Told us of this in our refectory, 41
 But spake with such a sadness and so low
 We heard not half of what he said. What is it?
 The phantom of a cup that comes and goes?"

"Nay, monk! what phantom?" answered
 Percivale. 45

"The cup, the cup itself, from which our Lord
 Drank at the last sad supper with his own.
 This, from the blessed land of Aromat —
 After the day of darkness, when the dead
 Went wandering o'er Moriah — the good saint 50

Arimathæan Joseph, journeying brought
 To Glastonbury, where the winter thorn
 Blossoms at Christmas, mindful of our Lord.
 And there awhile it bode; and if a man
 Could touch or see it, he was healed at once,
 By faith, of all his ills. But then the times 56
 Grew to such evil that the holy cup
 Was caught away to heaven, and disappeared."

To whom the monk: "From our old books
 I know

That Joseph came of old to Glastonbury, 60
 And there the heathen Prince, Arviragus,
 Gave him an isle of marsh whereon to build;
 And there he built with wattles from the marsh

A little lonely church in days of yore,
 For so they say, these books of ours, but
 seem 65

Mute of this miracle, far as I have read.
 But who first saw the holy thing today?"

"A woman," answered Percivale, "a nun,
 And one no further off in blood from me
 Than sister, and if ever holy maid 70
 With knees of adoration wore the stone,
 A holy maid; though never maiden glowed,
 But that was in her earlier maidenhood,
 With such a fervent flame of human love,
 Which, being rudely blunted, glanced and
 shot 75

Only to holy things; to prayer and praise
 She gave herself, to fast and alms. And yet,
 Nun as she was, the scandal of the Court,
 Sin against Arthur and the Table Round,
 And the strange sound of an adulterous race,

Across the iron grating of her cell 81
Beat, and she prayed and fasted all the
more.

"And he to whom she told her sins, or what
Her all but utter whiteness held for sin,
A man wellnigh a hundred winters old, 85
Spake often with her of the Holy Grail,
A legend handed down through five or six,
And each of these a hundred winters old,
From our Lord's time. And when King
Arthur made

His Table Round, and all men's hearts became Clean for a season, surely he had thought 91
That now the Holy Grail would come again,
But sin broke out Ah, Christ, that it would
come,

And heal the world of all their wickedness!
'O Father!' asked the maiden, 'might it come
To me by prayer and fasting?' 'Nay,' said he,
'I know not, for thy heart is pure as snow.'
And so she prayed and fasted, till the sun Shone, and the wind blew, through her, and I thought

She might have risen and floated when I saw
her. 100

"For on a day she sent to speak with me.
And when she came to speak, behold her eyes
Beyond my knowing of them, beautiful,
Beyond all knowing of them, wonderful,
Beautiful in the light of holiness! 105
And 'O my brother Percivale,' she said,
'Sweet brother, I have seen the Holy Grail,
For, waked at dead of night, I heard a sound
As of a silver horn from o'er the hills
Blown, and I thought, "It is not Arthur's use To hunt by moonlight." And the slender
sound 111

As from a distance beyond distance grew
Coming upon me — O never harp nor horn,
Nor aught we blow with breath, or touch with hand,

Was like that music as it came; and then 115
Streamed through my cell a cold and silver beam,

And down the long beam stole the Holy Grail,
Rose-red with beatings in it, as if alive,
Till all the white walls of my cell were dyed
With rosy colors leaping on the wall; 120
And then the music faded, and the Grail Passed, and the beam decayed, and from the walls

The rosy quiverings died into the night
So now the Holy Thing is here again 124
Among us, brother; fast thou too and pray,
And tell thy brother knights to fast and pray,
That so perchance the vision may be seen
By thee and those, and all the world be healed.'

"Then leaving the pale nun, I spake of this
To all men, and myself fasted and prayed 130
Always, and many among us many a week
Fasted and prayed even to the uttermost,
Expectant of the wonder that would be.

"And one there was among us, ever moved
Among us in white armor, Galahad. 135
'God make thee good as thou art beautiful!'
Said Arthur, when he dubbed him knight,
and none

In so young youth was ever made a knight
Till Galahad; and this Galahad, when he heard

My sister's vision, filled me with amaze; 140
His eyes became so like her own, they seemed Hers, and himself her brother more than I.

"Sister or brother none had he; but some Called him a son of Lancelot, and some said
Begotten by enchantment — chattering they,
Like birds of passage piping up and down, 146
That gape for flies — we know not whence
they come;

For when was Lancelot wanderingly lewd?

"But she, the wan sweet maiden, shore
away

Clean from her forehead all that wealth of
hair 150

Which made a silken mat-work for her feet;
And out of this she plaited broad and long
A strong sword-belt, and wove with silver thread

And crimson in the belt a strange device,
A crimson grail within a silver beam; 155
And saw the bright boy-knight, and bound
it on him,

Saying, 'My knight, my love, my knight of
heaven,

O thou, my love, whose love is one with mine,
I, maiden, round thee, maiden, bind my belt.
Go forth, for thou shalt see what I have seen,
And break through all, till one will crown thee
king 161

Far in the spiritual city', and as she spake
She sent the deathless passion in her eyes
Through him, and made him hers, and laid
her mind

On him, and he believed in her belief. 165

"Then came a year of miracle. O brother,
In our great hall there stood a vacant chair,
Fashioned by Merlin ere he passed away,
And carved with strange figures; and in and
out

The figures, like a serpent, ran a scroll 170

135 Galahad See Sir Galahad, page 50 168 Merlin, the magician of Arthur's court He made the Round Table
at Camelot and built the castle to accommodate it

Of letters in a tongue no man could read.
And Merlin called it 'the Siege Perilous,'
Perilous for good and ill; for there, he said,
No man could sit but he should lose himself
And once by misadventure Merlin sat 175
In his own chair, and so was lost; but he,
Galahad, when he heard of Merlin's doom,
Cried, 'If I lose myself, I save myself!'

"Then on a summer night it came to pass,
While the great banquet lay along the hall, 180
That Galahad would sit down in Merlin's
chair.

"And all at once, as there we sat, we heard
A cracking and a riving of the roofs,
And rending, and a blast, and overhead
Thunder, and in the thunder was a cry. 185
And in the blast there smote along the hall
A beam of light seven times more clear than
day;

And down the long beam stole the Holy Grail
All over covered with a luminous cloud,
And none might see who bare it, and it passed
But every knight beheld his fellow's face 191
As in a glory, and all the knights arose,
And, staring each at other like dumb men,
Stood, till I found a voice and sware a vow

"I sware a vow before them all, that I, 195
Because I had not seen the Grail, would ride
A twelvemonth and a day in quest of it,
Until I found and saw it, as the nun
My sister saw it; and Galahad sware the vow,
And good Sir Bors, our Lancelot's cousin,
sware, 200
And Lancelot sware, and many among the
knights,
And Gawain sware, and louder than the rest "

Then spake the monk Ambrosius, asking
him,
"What said the King? Did Arthur take the vow?"

"Nay, for my lord," said Percivale, "the
King, 205
Was not in hall; for early that same day,
Scaped through a cavern from a bandit bold,
An outraged maiden sprang into the hall
Crying on help; for all her shining hair

172 the Siege Perilous, the perilous seat, Merlin's magic chair. It may represent some supreme test of spiritual worth. Tennyson explained it as "spiritual imagination." Other explanations include "the temptation of sense," and "the chair of knowledge." 175-176. Merlin . . . lost. In the medieval romances Merlin is left under a spell by Vivien in a thorn tree, in Tennyson's Merlin and Vivien he is overcome by Vivien and confined in a hollow tower from which there is no escape. 178. If I . . . myself. From Matthew, 10:39—"He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

Was smeared with earth, and either milky arm 210
Red-rent with hooks of bramble, and all she wore

Torn as a sail that leaves the rope is torn
In tempest. So the King arose and went To smoke the scandalous hive of those wild bees

That made such honey in his realm. Howbe-
it

Some little of this marvel he too saw, 216
Returning o'er the plain that then began
To darken under Camelot; whence the King
Looked up, calling aloud, 'Lo, there! the roofs
Of our great hall are rolled in thundersmoke!
Pray heaven, they be not smitten by the bolt!' 221

For dear to Arthur was that hall of ours,
As having there so oft with all his knights
Feasted, and as the stateliest under heaven

"O brother, had you known our mighty
hall,

Which Merlin built for Arthur long ago! 226
For all the sacred mount of Camelot,
And all the dim rich city, roof by roof,
Tower after tower, spire beyond spire,
By grove, and garden-lawn, and rushing brook, 230

Climbs to the mighty hall that Merlin built
And four great zones of sculpture, set betwixt
With many a mystic symbol, gird the hall,
And in the lowest beasts are slaying men,
And in the second men are slaying beasts, 235
And on the third are warriors, perfect men,
And on the fourth are men with growing
wings,

And over all one statue in the mold
Of Arthur, made by Merlin, with a crown,
And peaked wings pointed to the Northern
Star. 240

And eastward fronts the statue, and the crown
And both the wings are made of gold, and flame

At sunrise till the people in far fields
Wasted so often by the heathen hordes,
Behold it, crying, 'We have still a king' 245

"And, brother, had you known our hall within,

Broader and higher than any in all the lands!
Where twelve great windows blazon Arthur's wars,

And all the light that falls upon the board Streams through the twelve great battles of our King 250

232 zones of sculpture These zones represent four stages in human progress, from the beastly to the spiritual. 250 twelve great battles Cf. Lancelot and Elaine, 285 ff., page 123.

Nay, one there is, and at the eastern end,
 Wealthy with wandering lines of mount and
 mere,
 Where Arthur finds the brand Excalibur
 And also one to the west, and counter to it,
 And blank; and who shall blazon it? when and how? — 255
 O there, perchance, when all our wars are
 done,
 The brand Excalibur will be cast away!

“So to this hall full quickly rode the King,
 In horror lest the work by Merlin wrought,
 Dreamlike, should on the sudden vanish,
 wrapped 260
 In unremorseful folds of rolling fire.
 And in he rode, and up I glanced, and saw
 The golden dragon sparkling over all;
 And many of those who burned the hold,
 their arms
 Hacked, and their foreheads grimed with smoke and seared, 265
 Followed, and in among bright faces, ours,
 Full of the vision, pressed, and then the
 King
 Spake to me, being nearest, ‘Percivale’ —
 Because the hall was all in tumult — some Vowing, and some protesting — ‘what is
 this?’ 270

“O brother, when I told him what had
 chanced,
 My sister’s vision and the rest, his face
 Darkened, as I have seen it more than once,
 When some brave deed seemed to be done in
 vain,
 Darken, and ‘Woe is me, my knights,’ he
 cried, 275
 ‘Had I been here, ye had not sworn the vow’ Bold was mine answer, ‘Had thyself been
 here,
 My King, thou wouldst have sworn’ ‘Yea,
 yea,’ said he,
 ‘Art thou so bold and hast not seen the Grail?’

“‘Nay, lord, I heard the sound, I saw the
 light, 280
 But since I did not see the holy thing,
 I swear a vow to follow it till I saw.’

“Then when he asked us, knight by knight, if any
 Had seen it, all their answers were as one.
 ‘Nay, lord, and therefore have we sworn our vows.’ 285

251-253 Nay. . . Excalibur. Cf Morte d'Arthur, 27 ff., page 38 275-276 Woe. . . vow Arthur disapproves of the quest since the knights have not the spiritual character to succeed He sees in it only the breaking-up of the Round Table.

“‘Lo, now,’ said Arthur, ‘have ye seen a cloud?
 What go ye into the wilderness to see?’

“Then Galahad on the sudden, and in a voice
 Shrilling along the hall to Arthur, called,
 ‘But I, Sir Arthur, saw the Holy Grail, 290
 I saw the Holy Grail and heard a cry —
 “O Galahad, and O Galahad, follow me!”’

“‘Ah, Galahad, Galahad,’ said the King,
 ‘for such

As thou art is the vision, not for these Thy holy nun and thou have seen a sign —
 Holier is none, my Percivale, than she — 296
 A sign to maim this Order which I made
 But ye that follow but the leader’s bell’ —
 Brother, the King was hard upon his knights—
 ‘Taliessin is our fullest throat of song, 300
 And one hath sung and all the dumb will sing.

Lancelot is Lancelot, and hath overborne
 Five knights at once, and every younger
 knight,

Unproven, holds himself as Lancelot,
 Till overborne by one, he learns — and ye, 305
 What are ye? Galahads? — no, nor Percivales’ —

For thus it pleased the King to range me close
 After Sir Galahad — ‘nay,’ said he, ‘but men
 With strength and will to right the wronged, of power

To lay the sudden heads of violence flat, 310
 Knights that in twelve great battles splashed and dyed

The strong White Horse in his own heathen
 blood —

But one hath seen, and all the blind will see.
 Go, since your vows are sacred, being made
 Yet — for ye know the cries of all my realm Pass through this hall — how often, O my
 knights, 316

Your places being vacant at my side,
 This chance of noble deeds will come and go
 Unchallenged, while ye follow wandering fires
 Lost in the quagmire! Many of you, yea
 most, 320

Return no more. Ye think I show myself
 Too dark a prophet. Come now, let us meet
 The morrow morn once more in one full field
 Of gracious pastime, that once more the King,
 Before ye leave him for this quest, may count

287 What . . . see. From Matthew, 11 7 — “And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, ‘What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken in the wind?’” 298. follow . . . bell, like a flock of stupid sheep 300 Taliessin, a famous Welsh bard, said to have lived in the sixth century 312 White Horse, the emblem of the Saxons, regarded as heathen 319 wandering fires, like the will-o-the-wisp, made by the phosphorus in plants and water.

The yet-unbroken strength of all his knights,
Rejoicing in that Order which he made.'

"So when the sun broke next from underground,
All the great Table of our Arthur closed
And clashed in such a tourney and so full, 330
So many lances broken — never yet
Had Camelot seen the like since Arthur came;
And I myself and Galahad, for a strength
Was in us from the vision, overthrew
So many knights that all the people cried, 335
And almost burst the barriers in their heat,
Shouting, 'Sir Galahad and Sir Percivale!'

"But when the next day brake from underground —

O brother, had you known our Camelot,
Built by old kings, age after age, so old 340
The King himself had fears that it would fall,
So strange, and rich, and dim; for where the roofs

Tottered toward each other in the sky,
Met foreheads all along the street of those Who watched us pass; and lower, and where the long 345

Rich galleries, lady-laden, weighed the necks
Of dragons clinging to the crazy walls, Thicker than drops from thunder, showers of flowers

Fell as we passed; and men and boys astride
On wyvern, lion, dragon, griffin, swan, 350
At all the corners, named us each by name,
Calling 'God speed!' but in the ways below
The knights and ladies wept, and rich and
poor

Wept, and the King himself could hardly
speak

For grief, and all in middle street the Queen,
Who rode by Lancelot, wailed and shrieked
aloud, 356

'This madness has come on us for our sins.'
So to the Gate of the Three Queens we came,
Where Arthur's wars are rendered mystically,
And thence departed every one his way. 360

"And I was lifted up in heart, and thought
Of all my late-shown prowess in the lists,
How my strong lance had beaten down the
knights,

So many and famous names; and never yet
Had heaven appeared so blue, nor earth so
green, 365

For all my blood danced in me, and I knew
That I should light upon the Holy Grail

"Thereafter, the dark warning of our King,
That most of us would follow wandering fires,
Came like a driving gloom across my mind.
Then every evil word I had spoken once, 371
And every evil thought I had thought of old,
And every evil deed I ever did,
Awoke and cried, 'This quest is not for thee'
And lifting up mine eyes, I found myself 375
Alone, and in a land of sand and thorns,
And I was thirsty even unto death;
And I, too, cried, 'This quest is not for thee.'

"And on I rode, and when I thought my thirst

Would slay me, saw deep lawns, and then a brook, 380
With one sharp rapid, where the crisping
white

Played ever back upon the sloping wave
And took both ear and eye; and o'er the brook
Were apple-trees, and apples by the brook
Fallen, and on the lawns. 'I will rest here,'
I said, 'I am not worthy of the quest', 386
But even while I drank the brook, and ate
The goodly apples, all these things at once
Fell into dust, and I was left alone
And thirsting in a land of sand and thorns. 390

"And then behold a woman at a door
Spinning; and fair the house whereby she sat,
And kind the woman's eyes and innocent,
And all her bearing gracious; and she rose,
Opening her arms to meet me, as who should
say, 395

'Rest here'; but when I touched her, lo! she,
too,
Fell into dust and nothing, and the house
Became no better than a broken shed,
And in it a dead babe; and also this
Fell into dust, and I was left alone. 400

"And on I rode, and greater was my thirst.
Then flashed a yellow gleam across the world,
And where it smote the plowshare in the field
The plowman left his plowing and fell down
Before it; where it glittered on her pail 405
The milkmaid left her milking and fell down
Before it, and I knew not why, but thought
'The sun is rising,' though the sun had risen.
Then was I ware of one that on me moved
In golden armor with a crown of gold 410
About a casque all jewels, and his horse
In golden armor jeweled everywhere;
And on the splendor came, flashing me blind,
And seemed to me the lord of all the world,
Being so huge. But when I thought he meant

350 wyvern . . . swan These are all heraldic devices
The wyvern was a two-legged dragon with wings and with barbed tail tied in a knot The griffin was half lion and half eagle

387-390 But . . . thorns. Percivale finds that the things he has held most dear are only illusions pleasures of the senses (379-390), love of wife and family (391-400), wealth and splendor (401-420), fame and glory (421-439).

To crush me, moving on me, lo! he, too, 416
 Opened his arms to embrace me as he came,
 And up I went and touched him, and he, too,
 Fell into dust, and I was left alone
 And wearying in a land of sand and thorns.

"And I rode on and found a mighty hill,
 And on the top a city walled; the spires
 Pricked with incredible pinnacles into heaven.
 And by the gateway stirred a crowd; and
 these 424

Cried to me climbing, 'Welcome, Percivale!
 Thou mightiest and thou purest among men'
 And glad was I and clomb, but found at top
 No man, nor any voice. And thence I passed Far through a ruinous city, and I saw That man had once dwelt there; but there I
 found 430

Only one man of an exceeding age
 'Where is that goodly company,' said I,
 'That so cried out upon me?' And he had Scarce any voice to answer, and yet gasped,
 'Whence and what art thou?' and even as he spoke 435

Fell into dust and disappeared, and I
 Was left alone once more and cried in grief,
 'Lo, if I find the Holy Grail itself
 And touch it, it will crumble into dust!'

"And thence I dropped into a lowly vale,
 Low as the hill was high, and where the vale
 Was lowest found a chapel, and thereby
 A holy hermit in a hermitage,
 To whom I told my phantoms, and he said:

"O son, thou hast not true humility, 445
 The highest virtue, mother of them all,
 For when the Lord of all things made Himself
 Naked of glory for His mortal change,
 "Take thou my robe," she said, "for all is
 thine,"

And all her form shone forth with sudden
 light 450

So that the angels were amazed, and she Followed Him down, and like a flying star
 Led on the gray-haired wisdom of the East.
 But her thou hast not known; for what is this
 Thou thoughtest of thy prowess and thy sins?
 Thou hast not lost thyself to save thyself 456
 As Galahad.' When the hermit made an end,
 In silver armor suddenly Galahad shone
 Before us, and against the chapel door Laid lance and entered, and we knelt in prayer 460

And there the hermit slaked my burning
 thirst,
 And at the sacring of the Mass I saw

449 she, humility 453 the gray-haired . . . East, the three Wise Men who visited the infant Christ on the night of his birth (Matthew, 2) 462 the sacring of the Mass, the consecration of the bread and wine

The holy elements alone; but he,
 'Saw ye no more? I, Galahad, saw the Grail,
 The Holy Grail, descend upon the shrine. 465
 I saw the fiery face as of a child
 That smote itself into the bread and went;
 And hither am I come; and never yet
 Hath what thy sister taught me first to see,
 This holy thing, failed from my side, nor come
 Covered, but moving with me night and day,
 Fainter by day, but always in the night
 Blood-red, and sliding down the blackened
 marsh

Blood-red, and on the naked mountain top
 Blood-red, and in the sleeping mere below 475
 Blood-red And in the strength of this I rode,
 Shattering all evil customs everywhere,
 And passed through Pagan realms, and made them mine,

And clashed with Pagan hordes, and bore
 them down,

And broke through all, and in the strength of
 this 480

Come victor But my time is hard at hand,
 And hence I go, and one will crown me king
 Far in the spiritual city; and come thou, too,
 For thou shalt see the vision when I go.'

"While thus he spake, his eye, dwelling on
 mine, 485

Drew me, with power upon me, till I grew
 One with him, to believe as he believed.
 Then, when the day began to wane, we went.

"There rose a hill that none but man could climb, 489

Scarred with a hundred wintry watercourses—
 Storm at the top, and when we gained it,
 storm

Round us and death; for every moment glanced

His silver arms and gloomed, so quick and thick

The lightnings here and there to left and right
 Struck, till the dry old trunks about us, dead,
 Yea, rotten with a hundred years of death, 496
 Sprang into fire. And at the base we found
 On either hand, as far as eye could see,
 A great black swamp and of an evil smell, Part black, part whitened with the bones of
 men, 500

Not to be crossed, save that some ancient
 king

Had built a way, where, linked with many a bridge,

A thousand piers ran into the great Sea
 And Galahad fled along them bridge by
 bridge,

And every bridge as quickly as he crossed 505

Sprang into fire and vanished, though I yearned
 To follow; and thrice above him all the heavens
 Opened and blazed with thunder such as seemed Shoutings of all the sons of God. And first
 At once I saw him far on the great Sea, 510
 In silver-shining armor starry-clear;
 And o'er his head the Holy Vessel hung
 Clothed in white samite or a luminous cloud.
 And with exceeding swiftness ran the boat,
 If boat it were — I saw not whence it came
 And when the heavens opened and blazed
 again 516
 Roaring, I saw him like a silver star —
 And had he set the sail, or had the boat
 Become a living creature clad with wings?
 And o'er his head the Holy Vessel hung 520
 Redder than any rose, a joy to me,
 For now I knew the veil had been withdrawn.
 Then in a moment when they blazed again
 Opening, I saw the least of little stars Down on the waste, and straight beyond the
 star 525
 I saw the spiritual city and all her spires
 And gateways in a glory like one pearl —
 No larger, though the goal of all the saints —
 Strike from the sea; and from the star there
 shot
 A rose-red sparkle to the city, and there 530
 Dwelt, and I knew it was the Holy Grail,
 Which never eyes on earth again shall see.
 Then fell the floods of heaven drowning the
 deep,
 And how my feet recrossed the deathful ridge
 No memory in me lives; but that I touched 535
 The chapel-doors at dawn I know, and thence Taking my war-horse from the holy man,
 Glad that no phantom vexed me more, returned
 To whence I came, the gate of Arthur's wars."

"O brother," asked Ambrosius — "for in sooth 540
 These ancient books — and they would win
 thee — teem,
 Only I find not there this Holy Grail,
 With miracles and marvels like to these,
 Not all unlike; which oftentime I read,
 Who read but on my breviary with ease, 545
 Till my head swims, and then go forth and
 pass
 Down to the little thorpe that lies so close,
 And almost plastered like a martin's nest

To these old walls — and mingle with our folk;
 And knowing every honest face of theirs 550
 As well as ever shepherd knew his sheep,
 And every homely secret in their hearts,
 Delight myself with gossip and old wives,
 And ills and aches, and teetings, lyings-in,
 And mirthful sayings, children of the place,
 That have no meaning half a league away;
 Or lulling random squabbles when they rise,
 Chafferings and chatterings at the market-
 cross, 558
 Rejoice, small man, in this small world of
 mine,
 Yea, even in their hens and in their eggs —
 O brother, saving this Sir Galahad, 561
 Came ye on none but phantoms in your quest,
 No man, no woman?"

Then Sir Percivale:

"All men, to one so bound by such a vow,
 And women were as phantoms. O my brother,
 Why wilt thou shame me to confess to thee 566
 How far I faltered from my quest and vow?
 For after I had lain so many nights,
 A bed-mate of the snail and eft and snake,
 In grass and burdock, I was changed to wan 570
 And meager, and the vision had not come;
 And then I chanced upon a goodly town
 With one great dwelling in the middle of it
 Thither I made, and there was I disarmed
 By maidens each as fair as any flower; 575
 But when they led me into hall, behold,
 The princess of that castle was the one,
 Brother, and that one only, who had ever
 Made my heart leap; for when I moved of old
 A slender page about her father's hall, 580
 And she a slender maiden, all my heart
 Went after her with longing, yet we twain
 Had never kissed a kiss or vowed a vow.
 And now I came upon her once again,
 And one had wedded her, and he was dead,
 And all his land and wealth and state were hers. 586
 And while I tarried, every day she set
 A banquet richer than the day before
 By me, for all her longing and her will
 Was toward me as of old; till one fair morn,
 I walking to and fro beside a stream 591
 That flashed across her orchard underneath
 Her castle-walls, she stole upon my walk,
 And calling me the greatest of all knights,
 Embraced me, and so kissed me the first
 time, 595
 And gave herself and all her wealth to me
 Then I remembered Arthur's warning word,
 That most of us would follow wandering fires,

526 the spiritual city, the New Jerusalem, of Revelation, 21 — "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband" (v. 2).

558 the market-cross During the Middle Ages nearly every town had a cross standing in the market-place.

And the quest faded in my heart. Anon,
The heads of all her people drew to me, 600
With supplication both of knees and tongue:
'We have heard of thee; thou art our greatest
knight;

Our Lady says it, and we well believe.
Wed thou our Lady, and rule over us,
And thou shalt be as Arthur in our land ' 605
O me, my brother! but one night my vow
Burned me within, so that I rose and fled,
But wailed and wept, and hated mine own
self,
And even the holy quest, and all but her;
Then, after I was joined with Galahad, 610
Cared not for her nor anything upon earth."

Then said the monk "Poor men, when yule is cold,
Must be content to sit by little fires.
And this am I, so that ye care for me
Ever so little, yea, and blest be heaven 615
That brought thee here to this poor house of
ours
Where all the brethren are so hard, to warm
My cold heart with a friend, but O the pity
To find thine own first love once more — to hold,
Hold her a wealthy bride within thine arms,
Or all but hold, and then — cast her aside, 621
Forgoing all her sweetness, like a weed!
For we that want the warmth of double life,
We that are plagued with dreams of something sweet
Beyond all sweetness in a life so rich — 625
Ah, blessed Lord, I speak too earthly-wise,
Seemg I never strayed beyond the cell,
But live like an old badger in his earth,
With earth about him everywhere, despite
All fast and penance Saw ye none beside, 630
None of your knights?"

"Yea, so," said Percivale
"One night my pathway swerving east, I saw
The pelican on the casque of our Sir Bors
All in the middle of the rising moon,
And toward him spurred, and hailed him, and he me, 635
And each made joy of either. Then he asked,
'Where is he? Hast thou seen him — Lancelot? — Once,'
Said good Sir Bors, 'he dashed across me —
mad,
And maddening what he rode; and when I
cried,
'Ridest thou then so hotly on a quest 640
So holy?' Lancelot shouted, 'Stay me not!

600 The heads of all her people, all her leading people 612 when yule is cold, after the great fires of the Christmas yule log are passed

I have been the sluggard, and I ride apace,
For now there is a lion in the way!'
So vanished.'

"Then Sir Bors had ridden on Softly, and sorrowing for our Lancelot, 645
Because his former madness, once the talk
And scandal of our table, had returned;
For Lancelot's kith and kin so worship him
That ill to him is ill to them, to Bors
Beyond the rest. He well had been content
Not to have seen, so Lancelot might have
seen, 651
The Holy Cup of healing; and, indeed,
Being so clouded with his grief and love,
Small heart was his after the holy quest.
If God would send the vision, well; if not, 655
The quest and he were in the hands of Heaven.

"And then, with small adventure met, Sir
Bors
Rode to the lonest tract of all the realm,
And found a people there among their crags,
Our race and blood, a remnant that were left
Paynim amid their circles, and the stones 661
They pitch up straight to heaven; and their wise men
Were strong in that old magic which can trace
The wandering of the stars, and scoffed at
him
And this high quest as at a simple thing, 665
Told him he followed — almost Arthur's
words —
A mocking fire: 'What other fire than he Whereby the blood beats, and the blossom
blows,
And the sea rolls, and all the world is warmed?'
And when his answer chafed them, the rough
crowd, 670
Hearing he had a difference with their priests, Seized him, and bound and plunged him into a cell
Of great piled stones; and lying bounden
there
In darkness through innumerable hours
He heard the hollow-ringing heavens sweep
Over him till by miracle — what else? — 676 Heavy as it was, a great stone slipped and
fell,

643 For . . . way He means his love for Guinevere, from Proverbs, 22 13 — "The slothful man saith, 'There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets'" 646 madness Malory (11 and 12) tells of the madness of Lancelot, caused by the anger of Guinevere when she thought he was in love with the daughter of King Pellès After two years he was restored by the Grail 661 Paynim . . . circles. These pagans were still followers of the Druids, an ancient religious order of the Celts. The circles were their places of worship, like the ruins at Stonehenge 667 he, the sun, worshiped by these pagans 668 blows, blooms 675 the hollow-ringing heavens. It was an old belief that the movement of the heavenly bodies produced "the music of the spheres"

Such as no wind could move; and through the gap Glimmered the streaming scud. Then came a night

Still as the day was loud, and through the gap 680
The seven clear stars of Arthur's Table
Round —

For, brother, so one night, because they roll
Through such a round in heaven, we named the stars,

Rejoicing in ourselves and in our King —
And these, like bright eyes of familiar friends,
In on him shone: 'And then to me, to me,' 686
Said good Sir Bors, 'beyond all hopes of
mine,

Who scarce had prayed or asked it for myself —
Across the seven clear stars — O grace to
me! —

In color like the fingers of a hand 690
Before a burning taper, the sweet Grail
Glided and passed, and close upon it pealed
A sharp quick thunder' Afterwards, a maid,
Who kept our holy faith among her kin
In secret, entering, loosed and let him go." 695

To whom the monk: "And I remember
now

That pelican on the casque Sir Bors it was
Who spake so low and sadly at our board,
And mighty reverent at our grace was he;
A square-set man and honest, and his eyes,
An outdoor sign of all the warmth within,
Smiled with his lips — a smile beneath a
cloud, 702

But heaven had meant it for a sunny one Aye, aye, Sir Bors, who else? But when ye reached

The city, found ye all your knights returned,
Or was there sooth in Arthur's prophecy, 706
Tell me, and what said each, and what the
King?"

Then answered Percivale: "And that can I,
Brother, and truly; since the living words
Of so great men as Lancelot and our King 710
Pass not from door to door and out again,
But sit within the house. O when we reached
The city, our horses stumbling as they trode
On heaps of ruin, hornless unicorns,
Cracked basilisks, and splintered cockatrices,
And shattered talbots, which had left the
stones 716
Raw that they fell from, brought us to the hall.

"And there sat Arthur on the dais-throne,
And those that had gone out upon the quest,
Wasted and worn, and but a tithe of them,
And those that had not, stood before the
King, 721

Who, when he saw me, rose and bade me
hail,

Saying, 'A welfare in thine eyes reproves
Our fear of some disastrous chance for thee
On hill or plain, at sea or flooding ford. 725
So fierce a gale made havoc here of late
Among the strange devices of our kings,
Yea, shook this newer, stronger hall of ours,
And from the statue Merlin molded for us Half-wrenched a golden wing, but now —
the quest, 730

This vision — hast thou seen the Holy Cup
That Joseph brought of old to Glastonbury?"

"So when I told him all thyself hast heard,
Ambrosius, and my fresh but fixed resolve
To pass away into the quiet life, 735
He answered not, but, sharply turning, asked
Of Gawain, 'Gawain, was this quest for thee?"

"'Nay, lord,' said Gawain, 'not for such as I.

Therefore I communed with a saintly man,
Who made me sure the quest was not for
me,

For I was much a-wearied of the quest, 741
But found a silk pavilion in a field,
And merry maidens in it, and then this gale
Tore my pavilion from the tenting-pin,
And blew my merry maidens all about 745
With all discomfort; yea, and but for this,
My twelvemonth and a day were pleasant
to me'

"He ceased; and Arthur turned to whom at first

He saw not, for Sir Bors, on entering, pushed Athwart the throng to Lancelot, caught his
hand, 750

Held it, and there, half-hidden by him, stood,
Until the King espied him, saying to him,
'Hail, Bors! If ever loyal man and true
Could see it, thou hast seen the Grail', and Bors:

'Ask me not, for I may not speak of it, 755
I saw it'; and the tears were in his eyes

"Then there remained but Lancelot, for the
rest
Spake but of sundry perils in the storm

wind had torn the carved decorations from the buildings
The unicorn was a fabulous beast like a horse, but with a single horn in the middle of the forehead, the basilisk was a fabulous monster supposed to kill by its look; the cockatrice
was a winged snake, the talbot was a sort of hunting dog

679 the streaming scud, vapory clouds 681 The seven clear stars, the seven stars of the constellation of the Great Bear, which was called the Table Round because it revolves around the Polar Star 713-717 The city . . . hall. The city had gone to decay since the knights' departure The

Perhaps, like him of Cana in Holy Writ,
Our Arthur kept his best until the last; 760
'Thou, too, my Lancelot,' asked the King,
'my friend,
Our mightiest, hath this quest availed for
thee?'

"Our mightiest!" answered Lancelot, with a groan;
'O King' — and when he paused methought
I spied

A dying fire of madness in his eyes — 765
'O King, my friend, if friend of thine I be,
Happier are those that welter in their sin,
Swine in the mud, that cannot see for slime,
Slime of the ditch, but in me lived a sin
So strange, of such a kind, that all of pure, 770
Noble, and knightly in me twined and clung Round that one sin, until the wholesome flower

And poisonous grew together, each as each,
Not to be plucked asunder; and when thy
knights

Sware, I sware with them only in the hope 775
That could I touch or see the Holy Grail
They might be plucked asunder. Then I spake

To one most holy saint, who wept and said
That, save they could be plucked asunder, all
My quest were but in vain; to whom I vowed
That I would work according as he willed 781
And forth I went, and while I yearned and strove

To tear the twain asunder in my heart,
My madness came upon me as of old,
And whipped me into waste fields far away
There was I beaten down by little men, 786 Mean knights, to whom the moving of my
sword

And shadow of my spear had been enow
To scare them from me once, and then I
came

All in my folly to the naked shore, 790
Wide flats, where nothing but coarse grasses
grew;

But such a blast, my King, began to blow,
So loud a blast along the shore and sea,
Ye could not hear the waters for the blast,
Though heaped in mounds and ridges all the
sea 795

Drove like a cataract, and all the sand
Swept like a river, and the clouded heavens

Were shaken with the motion and the sound.

And blackening in the sea-foam swayed a boat,

Half-swallowed in it, anchored with a chain;
And in my madness to myself I said, 801
"I will embark and I will lose myself,
And in the great sea wash away my sin."

I burst the chain; I sprang into the boat.
Seven days I drove along the dreary deep, 805
And with me drove the moon and all the
stars;

And the wind fell, and on the seventh night
I heard the shingle grinding in the surge,
And felt the boat shock earth, and looking up,
Behold, the enchanted towers of Carbonek,
A castle like a rock upon a rock, 811

With chasm-like portals open to the sea,
And steps that met the breaker! There was none

Stood near it but a lion on each side
That kept the entry, and the moon was full
Then from the boat I leapt, and up the stairs,
There drew my sword. With sudden-flaring
manes 817

Those two great beasts rose upright like a
man,

Each gripped a shoulder, and I stood between,
And, when I would have smitten them, heard
a voice,

"Doubt not, go forward; if thou doubt, the beasts 821

Will tear thee piecemeal." Then with violence

The sword was dashed from out my hand,
and fell.

And up into the sounding hall I passed;
But nothing in the sounding hall I saw — 825
No bench nor table, painting on the wall
Or shield of knight, only the rounded moon
Through the tall oriel on the rolling sea.

But always in the quiet house I heard,
Clear as a lark, high o'er me as a lark, 830
A sweet voice singing in the topmost tower
To the eastward. Up I climbed a thousand steps

With pain, as in a dream I seemed to climb
Forever. At the last I reached a door;
A light was in the crannies, and I heard, 835
"Glory and joy and honor to our Lord
And to the Holy Vessel of the Grail!"

Then in my madness I essayed the door,
It gave, and through a stormy glare, a heat
As from a seven-times-heated furnace, I,
Blasted and burnt, and blinded as I was, 841
With such a fierceness that I swooned away —

759-760 like . . . last, a reference to the wine served at the marriage in Cana of Galilee, John, 2 1-10. The ruler of the feast tasted the wine, not knowing that Jesus had made it out of water, and said to the bridegroom, "Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine, and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse, but thou hast kept the good wine until now" (v. 10).

808 shingle, small rounded stones on the seashore. 810 Carbonek, a castle mentioned several times by Malory, said to be the place where the Holy Grail was kept. 828 oriel, a large bay window. 840, a seven-times-heated furnace, like the one in which Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were cast because they refused to worship the golden image set up by Nebuchadnezzar (Daniel, 3 1-30).

O yet methought I saw the Holy Grail,
All palled in crimson samite, and around Great angels, awful shapes, and wings and
eyes! 845

And but for all my madness and my sin,
And then my swooning, I had sworn I saw
That which I saw; but what I saw was veiled
And covered, and this quest was not for me.'

"So speaking, and here ceasing, Lancelot
left 850

The hall long silent, till Sir Gawain — nay,
Brother, I need not tell thee foolish words —
A reckless and irreverent knight was he,
Now boldened by the silence of his King —
Well, I will tell thee: 'O King, my liege,' he
said, 855

'Hath Gawain failed in any quest of thine?
When have I stunted stroke in foughten field?
But as for thine, my good friend Percivale,
Thy holy nun and thou have driven men mad, Yea, made our mightiest madder than our least. 860

But by mine eyes and by mine ears I swear,
I will be deafer than the blue-eyed cat,
And thrice as blind as any noonday owl,
To holy virgins in their ecstasies,
Henceforward.'

" 'Deafer,' said the blameless King,
'Gawain, and blunder unto holy things, 866
Hope not to make thyself by idle vows,
Being too blind to have desire to see.
But if indeed there came a sign from heaven,
Blessed are Bors, Lancelot, and Percivale, 870
For these have seen according to their sight
For every fiery prophet in old times,
And all the sacred madness of the bard,
When God made music through them, could but speak

His music by the framework and the chord;
And as ye saw it ye have spoken truth 876

" 'Nay — but thou errest, Lancelot, never
yet
Could all of true and noble in knight and
man
Twine round one sin, whatever it might be,
With such a closeness but apart there
grew, 880
Save that he were the swine thou spakest of,
Some root of knighthood and pure nobleness,
Whereto see thou, that it may bear its flower.

" 'And spake I not too truly, O my knights?
Was I too dark a prophet when I said 885
To those who went upon the Holy Quest,

862 deafer . . . cat. Male white cats with blue eyes are frequently deaf

That most of them would follow wandering
fires,

Lost in the quagmire? — lost to me and gone,
And left me gazing at a barren board, 889
And a lean Order — scarce returned a tithe —
And out of those to whom the vision came
My greatest hardly will believe he saw.
Another hath beheld it afar off,
And, leaving human wrongs to right themselves,

Cares but to pass into the silent life. 895
And one hath had the vision face to face,
And now his chair desires him here in vain,
However they may crown him elsewhere.

" 'And some among you held that if the
King

Had seen the sight he would have sworn the
vow. 900

Not easily, seeing that the King must guard
That which he rules, and is but as the hind
To whom a space of land is given to plow,
Who may not wander from the allotted field
Before his work be done, but, being done, 905
Let visions of the night or of the day
Come as they will; and many a time they
come,

Until this earth he walks on seems not earth,
This light that strikes his eyeball is not light,
This air that smites his forehead is not air 910
But vision — yea, his very hand and foot —
In moments when he feels he cannot die,
And knows himself no vision to himself,
Nor the high God a vision, nor that One Who rose again. Ye have seen what ye have seen.' 915

"So spake the King; I knew not all he meant."

TO THE QUEEN

O loyal to the royal in thyself,
And loyal to thy land, as this to thee —
Bear witness, that memorable day,
When, pale as yet and fever-worn, the Prince
Who scarce had plucked his flickering life
again 5
From halfway down the shadow of the grave Passed with thee through thy people and their love,
And London rolled one tide of joy through all
Her trebled millions, and loud leagues of man
And welcome! Witness, too, the silent cry,

To the Queen The Queen is Victoria thanksgiving in February, 1872, upon the recovery of the Prince of Wales from typhoid fever

The prayer of many a race and creed, and clime — 11

Thunderless lightnings striking under sea
From sunset and sunrise of all thy realm,
And that true North, whereof we lately heard A strain to shame us, "Keep you to yourselves; 15

So loyal is too costly! friends — your love
Is but a burthen; loose the bond, and go."
Is this the tone of empire? here the faith
That made us rulers? this, indeed, her voice
And meaning whom the roar of Hougoumont
Left mightiest of all peoples under heaven? 21
What shock has fooled her since, that she should speak

So feebly? wealthier — wealthier — hour by hour!

The voice of Britain, or a sinking land,
Some third-rate isle half-lost among her seas?
There rang her voice, when the full city
pealed 26

Thee and thy Prince! The loyal to their

Our ocean-empire with her boundless homes

knows

And dreads it we are fallen. — But thou, my

IN THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL

EMMIE

I

Our doctor had called in another; I never had seen him before,

But he sent a chill to my heart when I saw him come in at the door,

Fresh from the surgery-schools of France and of other lands —

Harsh red hair, big voice, big chest, big merciless hands!

Wonderful cures he had done, oh, yes, but they said too of him 5

He was happier using the knife than in trying to save the limb,

And that I can well believe, for he looked so coarse and so red,

I could think he was one of those who would break their jests on the dead,

And mangle the living dog that had loved him and fawned at his knee —

56 Art . . . France, a reference to what Tennyson thought the lewdness of contemporary French fiction
In the Children's Hospital This poem is told by a nurse.
The incident is said to be true

Drenched with the hellish oorali — that ever such things should be! 10

2

Here was a boy — I am sure that some of our children would die
But for the voice of love, and the smile, and the comforting eye —
Here was a boy in the ward, every bone seemed out of its place —
Caught in a mill and crushed — it was all but a hopeless case;
And he handled him gently enough, but his voice and his face were not kind, 15
And it was but a hopeless case, he had seen it and made up his mind;
And he said to me roughly, "The lad will need little more of your care."
"All the more need," I told him, "to seek the Lord Jesus in prayer;
They are all His children here, and I pray for them all as my own."
But he turned to me, "Aye, good woman, can prayer set a broken bone?" 20
Then he muttered half to himself, but I know that I heard him say,
"All very well — but the good Lord Jesus has had his day."

3

Had? has it come? It has only dawned It will come by and by.
Oh, how could I serve in the wards if the hope of the world were a lie?
How could I bear with the sights and the loathsome smells of disease 25
But that He said, "Ye do it to me, when ye do it to these?"

4

So he went. And we passed to this ward where the younger children are laid Here is the cot of our orphan, our darling, our meek little maid;
Empty, you see, just now! We have lost her who loved her so much — Patient of pain though as quick as a sensitive plant to the touch. 30
Hers was the prettiest prattle, it often moved me to tears;
Hers was the gratefullest heart I have found in a child of her years —
Nay, you remember our Emmie; you used to send her the flowers.
How she would smile at 'em, play with 'em,
talk to 'em hours after hours!

10 oorali, a drug used to paralyze the nerves, but which did not affect the senses. When introduced into the blood, it was likely to cause death. 26 Ye . . . these From Matthew, 25 40 — "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

They that can wander at will where the works of the Lord are revealed 35 Little guess what joy can be got from a cow-slip out of the field;
Flowers to these "spirits in prison" are all
they can know of the spring;
They freshen and sweeten the wards like the waft of an angel's wing
And she lay with a flower in one hand and her thin hands crossed on her breast — Wan, but as pretty as heart can desire, and we thought her at rest, 40
Quietly sleeping — so quiet, our doctor said,
"Poor little dear,
Nurse, I must do it tomorrow; she'll never live through it, I fear."

5

I walked with our kindly old doctor as far as the head of the stair,
Then I returned to the ward; the child didn't see I was there.

6

Never since I was nurse had I been so grieved and so vexed! 45
Emmie had heard him. Softly she called from her cot to the next,
"He says I shall never live through it, O
Annie, what shall I do?"
Annie considered "If I," said the wise little Annie, "was you,
I should cry to the dear Lord Jesus to help me, for, Emmie, you see,
It's all in the picture there: 'Little children should come to me' " — 50 Meaning the print that you gave us, I find that it always can please
Our children, the dear Lord Jesus with children about his knees
"Yes, and I will," said Emmie, "but then if I
call to the Lord,
How should he know that it's me? such a lot of beds in the ward!"
That was a puzzle for Annie. Again she considered and said: 55
"Emmie, you put out your arms, and you leave 'em outside on the bed —
The Lord has so much to see to! but, Emmie,
you tell it him plain,
It's the little girl with her arms lying out on the counterpane."

7

I had sat three nights by the child — I could not watch her for four —

50 Little children, etc. Adapted from Mark, 10 14 —
"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."

My brain had begun to reel — I felt I could do it no more. 60
That was my sleeping-night, but I thought that it never would pass
There was a thunderclap once, and a clatter of hail on the glass,
And there was a phantom cry that I heard as I tossed about,
The motherless bleat of a lamb in the storm
and darkness without;
My sleep was broken besides with dreams of the dreadful knife 65
And fears for our delicate Emmie, who scarce would escape with her life;
Then in the gray of the morning it seemed she stood by me and smiled,
And the doctor came at his hour, and we went to see the child

8

He had brought his ghastly tools; we believed her asleep again —
Her dear, long, lean, little arms lying out on the counterpane — 70
Say that His day is done! Ah, why should we care what they say?
The Lord of the children had heard her, and Emmie had passed away. (1872)

THE VOICE AND THE PEAK

The voice and the Peak
Far over summit and lawn,
The lone glow and long roar
Green-rushing from the rosy thrones of
dawn!
All night have I heard the voice 5
Rave over the rocky bar,
But thou wert silent in heaven,
Above thee glided the star.
Hast thou no voice, O Peak,
That standest high above all? 10
"I am the voice of the Peak,
I roar and rave, for I fall
"A thousand voices go
To North, South, East, and West;
They leave the heights and are troubled, 15
And moan and sink to their rest.
"The fields are fair beside them,
The chestnut towers in his bloom;

The Voice and the Peak The thought of this poem is that the material is transient and that the spiritual is the only real and abiding principle of the universe. The utterance of peak and valley, of sea and star, is that everything of the senses perishes, but beyond the world of sense is a world that endures. See In Memoriam, 124, page 88.

2 lawn, an open place in a forest.

But they — they feel the desire of the deep —
Fall, and follow their doom. 20

"The deep has power on the height,
And the height has power on the deep;
They are raised forever and ever,
And sink again into sleep."

Not raised forever and ever, 25
But when their cycle is o'er,
The valley, the voice, the peak, the star
Pass, and are found no more

The Peak is high and flushed
At his highest with sunrise fire, 30
The Peak is high, and the stars are high,
And the thought of a man is higher.

A deep below the deep,
And a height beyond the height!
Our hearing is not hearing, 35
And our seeing is not sight.

The voice and the Peak
Far into heaven withdrawn,
The lone glow and long roar 39
Green-rushing from the rosy thrones of dawn! (1874)

MONTENEGRO

They rose to where their sovran eagle sails,
They kept their faith, their freedom, on the
height,
Chaste, frugal, savage, armed by day and night
Against the Turk; whose inroad nowhere
scales
Their headlong passes, but his footstep fails,
And red with blood the Crescent reels from
fight 6
Before their dauntless hundreds, in prone flight
By thousands down the crags and through the vales.
O smallest among peoples! rough rock-throne
Of Freedom! warriors beating back the swarm
Of Turkish Islam for five hundred years, 11
Great Tsernogora! Never since thine own Black ridges drew the cloud and brake the storm
Has breathed a race of mightier mountaineers.
(1877)

Montenegro The word means black mountains Montenegro was then the smallest independent state in Europe and the only portion of the Balkan peninsula never really subdued by the Turk. After centuries of warfare, the inhabitants won a decisive victory over Turkey in 1876 In 1918 the country became a part of Jugo-Slavia

THE REVENGE

A BALLAD OF THE FLEET

I

At Florés in the Azorés Sir Richard Grenville
lay,
And a pinnace, like a fluttered bird, came flying from far away:
"Spanish ships of war at sea! We have sighted fifty-three!"
Then swore Lord Thomas Howard: "'Fore
God I am no coward;
But I cannot meet them here, for my ships are out of gear, 5
And the half my men are sick. I must fly, but follow quick.
We are six ships of the line; can we fight with fifty-three?"

2

Then spake Sir Richard Grenville: "I know
you are no coward;
You fly them for a moment to fight with them again.
But I've ninety men and more that are lying sick ashore. 10
I should count myself the coward if I left them, my Lord Howard,
To these Inquisition dogs and the devildoms of Spain."

3

So Lord Howard passed away with five ships
of war that day,
Till he melted like a cloud in the silent summer heaven;
But Sir Richard bore in hand all his sick men from the land 15
Very carefully and slow,
Men of Bideford in Devon,
And we laid them on the ballast down below;
For we brought them all aboard,
And they blessed him in their pain, that they were not left to Spain, 20
To the thumb-screw and the stake, for the glory of the Lord.

4

He had only a hundred seamen to work the ship and to fight,

The Revenge. See Critical Notes

7 ships of the line A ship of line was one large enough to have a place in the line of battle. It carried the heaviest armament. 12 Inquisition. The Inquisition was a tribunal of the Roman Catholic Church for the discovery and punishment of heretics and unbelievers. In Spain its proceedings were conducted with notorious cruelty, especially in the 16th century. It was abolished in 1834. 17
Bideford, an important seaport on the north coast of Devonshire, the birthplace of Sir Richard Grenville. 21 thumb-screw . . . the stake. Torturing by the use of an instrument for compressing the thumb, and burning at the stake were methods employed by the Inquisition.

And he sailed away from Florés till the Spaniard came in sight,
With his huge sea-castles heaving upon the weather bow.

"Shall we fight or shall we fly? 25
Good Sir Richard, tell us now,
For to fight is but to die!

There'll be little of us left by the time this sun be set "

And Sir Richard said again, "We be all good English men.

Let us bang these dogs of Seville, the children of the devil, 30

For I never turned my back upon Don or devil yet."

5

Sir Richard spoke and he laughed, and we roared a hurrah, and so

The little Revenge ran on sheer into the heart of the foe,

With her hundred fighters on deck, and her ninety sick below,

For half of their fleet to the right and half to the left were seen, 35

And the little Revenge ran on through the long sea-lane between.

6

Thousands of their soldiers looked down from their decks and laughed,

Thousands of their seamen made mock at the mad little craft

Running on and on, till delayed

By their mountain-like San Philip that, of fifteen hundred tons, 40

And up-shadowing high above us with her yawning tiers of guns,

Took the breath from our sails, and we stayed.

7

And while now the great San Philip hung above us like a cloud

Whence the thunderbolt will fall

Long and loud, 45

Four galleons drew away

From the Spanish fleet that day,

And two upon the larboard and two upon
the starboard lay,

And the battle-thunder broke from them all 8

But anon the great San Philip, she bethought herself and went, 50

Having that within her womb that had left her ill content,

And the rest they came aboard us, and they

30 Seville, a province in Spain. 31 Don, a title in Spain, formerly given only to men of high rank. 40 San Philip,
the flagship of the Spanish fleet.

fought us hand to hand,
For a dozen times they came with their pikes
and musqueteers,
And a dozen times we shook 'em off as a dog that shakes his ears
When he leaps from the water to the land. 55

9

And the sun went down, and the stars came out far over the summer sea,
But never a moment ceased the fight of the one and the fifty-three.
Ship after ship, the whole night long, their high-built galleons came,
Ship after ship, the whole night long, with her battle-thunder and flame;
Ship after ship, the whole night long, drew back with her dead and her shame. 60
For some were sunk and many were shattered, and so could fight us no more — God of battles, was ever a battle like this in the world before?

10

For he said, "Fight on! fight on!"
Though his vessel was all but a wreck;
And it chanced that, when half of the short summer night was gone, 65
With a grisly wound to be dressed he had left the deck,
But a bullet struck him that was dressing it suddenly dead,
And himself he was wounded again in the side and the head,
And he said, "Fight on! fight on!"

11

And the night went down, and the sun smiled
out far over the summer sea, 70
And the Spanish fleet with broken sides lay round us all in a ring,
But they dared not touch us again, for they feared that we still could sting,
So they watched what the end would be.
And we had not fought them in vain,
But in perilous plight were we, 75
Seeing forty of our poor hundred were slain,
And half of the rest of us maimed for life
In the crash of the cannonades and the desperate strife;
And the sick men down in the hold were most of them stark and cold,
And the pikes were all broken or bent, and the powder was all of it spent; 80
And the masts and the rigging were lying over the side;
But Sir Richard cried in his English pride,
"We have fought such a fight for a day and
a night
As may never be fought again!

We have won great glory, my men! 85
And a day less or more
At sea or ashore,
We die — does it matter when?
Sink me the ship, Master Gunner — sink her,
split her in twain!
Fall into the hands of God, not into the hands

12

And the gunner said, "Aye, aye," but the seamen made reply,
"We have children, we have wives,
And the Lord hath spared our lives.
We will make the Spaniard promise, if we yield, to let us go;
We shall live to fight again and to strike another blow" 95
And the lion there lay dying, and they yielded to the foe.

13

And the stately Spanish men to their flagship bore him then,
Where they laid him by the mast, old Sir
Richard caught at last,
And they praised him to his face with their courtly foreign grace; 99
But he rose upon their decks, and he cried,
"I have fought for Queen and Faith like a valiant man and true;
I have only done my duty as a man is bound to do.
With a joyful spirit I, Sir Richard Grenville,
die!"
And he fell upon their decks, and he died

14

And they stared at the dead that had been so valiant and true, 105
And had holden the power and glory of Spain
so cheap
That he dared her with one little ship and his English few;
Was he devil or man? He was devil for aught
they knew,
But they sank his body with honor down into the deep,
And they manned the Revenge with a swar-
thier alien crew, 110
And away she sailed with her loss and longed for her own;
When a wind from the lands they had ruined
awoke from sleep,
And the water began to heave and the weather
to moan,
And or ever that evening ended a great gale
blew,
And a wave like the wave that is raised by an earthquake grew, 115

Till it smote on their hulls and their sails and their masts and their flags,
 And the whole sea plunged and fell on the shot-shattered navy of Spain,
 And the little Revenge herself went down by the island crags
 To be lost evermore in the main. (1878)

RIZPAH

17—

Wailing, wailing, wailing, the wind over land and sea —

And Willy's voice in the wind, "O mother, come out to me!"

Why should he call me tonight, when he knows that I cannot go?

For the downs are as bright as day, and the full moon stares at the snow.

We should be seen, my dear, they would spy us out of the town. 5

The loud black nights for us, and the storm
 rushing over the down,

When I cannot see my own hand, but am led by the creak of the chain,

And grovel and grope for my son till I find myself drenched with the rain.

Anything fallen again? nay — what was there left to fall?

I have taken them home, I have numbered the bones, I have hidden them all 10

What am I saying? and what are you? Do you come as a spy?

Falls? what falls? who knows? As the tree falls so must it lie.

Who let her in? how long has she been? you
 — what have you heard?

Why did you sit so quiet? you never have spoken a word

O — to pray with me — yes — a lady — none of their spies — 15

But the night has crept into my heart, and begun to darken my eyes.

Ah — you, that have lived so soft, what should you know of the night,

The blast and the burning shame and the bitter frost and the fright?

I have done it, while you were asleep — you were only made for the day.

I have gathered my baby together — and now
 you may go your way. 20

Nay — for it's kind of you, madam, to sit by an old dying wife.

But say nothing hard of my boy, I have only an hour of life.

I kissed my boy in the prison, before he went out to die.

"They dared me to do it," he said, and he never has told me a lie.

I whipped him for robbing an orchard once when he was but a child — 25

"The farmer dared me to do it," he said; he was always so wild —

And idle — and couldn't be idle — my Willy
 — he never could rest.

The King should have made him a soldier;
 he would have been one of his best.

But he lived with a lot of wild mates, and they never would let him be good;

They swore that he dare not rob the mail,
 and he swore that he would; 30

And he took no life, but he took one purse,
 and when all was done

He flung it among his fellows — "I'll none of it," said my son.

I came into court to the judge and the lawyers. I told them my tale,

God's own truth — but they killed him, they killed him for robbing the mail.

They hanged him in chains for a show — we had always borne a good name — 35

To be hanged for a thief — and then put away — isn't that enough shame?

Dust to dust — low down — let us hide! but they set him so high

That all the ships of the world could stare at him, passing by

God 'ill pardon the hell-black raven and horrible fowls of the air,

But not the black heart of the lawyer who killed him and hanged him there. 40

And the jailer forced me away. I had bid him my last good-by,

They had fastened the door of his cell. "O mother!" I heard him cry.

I couldn't get back, though I tried, he had something further to say,

And now I never shall know it. The jailer forced me away.

Then since I couldn't but hear that cry of my boy that was dead, 45

They seized me and shut me up; they fastened me down on my bed

"Mother, O mother!" — he called in the dark to me year after year —

They beat me for that, they beat me — you know that I couldn't but hear;

And then at the last they found I had grown so stupid and still

They let me abroad again — but the creatures had worked their will. 50

Flesh of my flesh was gone, but bone of my bone was left —
I stole them all from the lawyers — and you, will you call it a theft? —
My baby, the bones that had sucked me, the bones that had laughed and had cried—Theirs? O, no! they are mine — not theirs — they had moved in my side.

Do you think I was scared by the bones? I kissed 'em, I buried 'em all — 55
I can't dig deep, I am old — in the night by the churchyard wall.
My Willy 'ill rise up whole when the trumpet
of judgment 'ill sound,
But I charge you never to say that I laid him in holy ground.

They would scratch him up — they would hang him again on the curséd tree Sin? O yes, we are sinners, I know — let all that be, 60
And read me a Bible verse of the Lord's goodwill toward men —
"Full of compassion and mercy, the Lord" —
let me hear it again;
"Full of compassion and mercy — long-suffering." Yes, O yes!
For the lawyer is born but to murder — the Savior lives but to bless He'll never put on the black cap except for the worst of the worst, 65
And the first may be last — I have heard it in church — and the last may be first Suffering — O long-suffering — yes, as the Lord must know,
Year after year in the mist and the wind and the shower and the snow.

Heard, have you? what? they have told you
he never repented his sin.
How do they know it? are they his mother? are you of his kin? 70
Heard! have you ever heard, when the storm
of the downs began,
The wind that 'ill wail like a child and the sea that 'ill moan like a man?

51. Flesh . . . bone. From Genesis, 2 23 — "And Adam said, 'This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh, she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man.'" 58 holy ground. Executed persons were denied Christian burial. 62 Full . . . the Lord. From Psalms, 86 15 — "But thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion, and gracious, long-suffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth." 65. the black cap, worn by an English judge when he passes sentence of death upon a prisoner. 66 the last may be first. From Matthew, 19 30 — "But many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first."

Election, Election, and Reprobation — it's all very well.
But I go tonight to my boy, and I shall not find him in hell.

For I cared so much for my boy that the Lord has looked into my care, 75
And He means me I'm sure to be happy with Willy, I know not where.

And if he be lost — but to save my soul, that is all your desire —
Do you think that I care for my soul if my boy be gone to the fire?
I have been with God in the dark — go, go,
you may leave me alone —
You never have borne a child — you are just as hard as a stone. 80

Madam, I beg your pardon! I think that you mean to be kind,
But I cannot hear what you say for my Willy's voice in the wind —
The snow and the sky so bright — he used but to call in the dark,
And he calls to me now from the church and not from the gibbet — for hark!
Nay — you can hear it yourself — it is coming — shaking the walls — 85
Willy — the moon's in a cloud — Goodnight. I am going. He calls. (1880)

"FRATER AVE ATQUE VALE"

Row us out from Desenzano, to your Sir-mione row!
So they rowed, and there we landed — "O
venusta Sirmio!"
There to me through all the groves of olive in the summer glow,
There beneath the Roman ruin where the purple flowers grow,
Came that "Ave atque Vale" of the Poet's hopeless woe, 5
Tenderest of Roman poets nineteen hundred
years ago,
"Frater Ave atque Vale" — as we wandered to and fro
Gazing at the Lydian laughter of the Garda
Lake below
Sweet Catullus's all-but-island, olive-silvery
Sirmio! (1880; 1883)

73 Election . . . Reprobation, a reference to the belief that some persons are elected to be saved and others lost, regardless of personal character.

Frater Ave Atque Vale. The title, Brother, Hail and Farewell, is quoted from a lament of the Roman poet Catullus (1st cent.) for his brother. Tennyson visited Italy in 1880.

1 Desenzano, a town on Lake Garda in northern Italy, just west of Sirmione, a narrow peninsula, where Catullus lived. 2 O venusta Sirmio, O beautiful Sirmio, quoted from Catullus. 8 Lydian. The Etruscans, who settled near Lake Garda, were supposed to be of Lydian origin.

TO VIRGIL

WRITTEN AT THE REQUEST OF THE MANTUANS
FOR THE NINETEENTH CENTENARY OF VIRGIL'S DEATH

Roman Virgil, thou that singest Ilion's lofty temples robed in fire,
Ilion falling, Rome arising, wars, and filial
faith, and Dido's pyre;

Landscape-lover, lord of language more than he that sang the "Works and Days,"
All the chosen coin of fancy flashing out from many a golden phrase;

Thou that singest wheat and woodland, tilth
and vineyard, hive and horse and herd;
All the charm of all the Muses often flowering in a lonely word; 6

Poet of the happy Tityrus piping underneath
his beechen bowers;
Poet of the poet-satyr whom the laughing
shepherd bound with flowers;

Chanter of the Pollio, glorying in the blissful years again to be,
Summers of the snakeless meadow, unlabori-ous earth and oarless sea; 10

Thou that seest Universal Nature moved by Universal Mind;
Thou majestic in thy sadness at the doubtful
doom of human kind;

Light among the vanished ages; star that glidest yet this phantom shore;
Golden branch amid the shadows, kings and realms that pass to rise no more;

Now thy Forum rears no longer, fallen every purple Cæsar's dome — 15
Though thine ocean-roll of rhythm sound forever of Imperial Rome —

Now the Rome of slaves hath perished, and the Rome of freemen holds her place,
I, from out the Northern Island sundered once
from all the human race,

To Virgil. Virgil was born in Mantua, Italy. He died in 19 B. C. The poem is full of allusions to his works. 1-2 This stanza refers to the chief incidents in Virgil's Æneid—the burning of Troy (Ilion) and the death of Dido in Carthage when Æneas left her. 3 Works and Days, the title of a poem by Hesiod, a Greek poet of the 8th century B. C. 5-6 This stanza mentions themes of Virgil's Georgics. 7 Tityrus, a shepherd in Virgil's first Eclogue. 8 poet-satyr. 9 flowers, an incident in the sixth Eclogue. 9 Pollio, C. Asinius Pollio, a patron of Virgil, mentioned in the fourth Eclogue. 11-14 These lines contain echoes of the sixth book of the Æneid. 15 Forum, the famous market place of ancient Rome, used for popular assemblies. purple, the color and symbol of authority. The Cæsars ruled during the first century B. C.

I salute thee, Mantovano, I that loved thee
since my day began,
Wielder of the stateliest measure ever molded by the lips of man. 20

FREEDOM

O thou so fair in summers gone,
While yet thy fresh and virgin soul
Informed the pillared Parthenon,
The glittering Capitol;

So fair in southern sunshine bathed, 5
But scarce of such majestic mien
As here with forehead vapor-swathed
In meadows ever green;

For thou — when Athens reigned and Rome,
Thy glorious eyes were dimmed with pain
To mark in many a freeman's home 11
The slave, the scourge, the chain;

O follower of the Vision, still
In motion to the distant gleam
Howe'er blind force and brainless will 15
May jar thy golden dream

Of Knowledge fusing class with class,
Of civic Hate no more to be,
Of Love to leaven all the mass,
Till every soul be free; 20

Who yet, like Nature, wouldst not mar
By changes all too fierce and fast
This order of her Human Star,
This heritage of the past;

O scorner of the party cry 25
That wanders from the public good,
Thou — when the nations rear on high
Their idol smeared with blood,

And when they roll their idol down —
Of saner worship sanely proud; 30
Thou loather of the lawless crown
As of the lawless crowd;

How long thine ever-growing mind
Hath stilled the blast and strown the wave,
Though some of late would raise a wind 35
To sing thee to thy grave,

Freedom. This poem expresses Tennyson's favorite political creed—that changes and reforms should be made gradually. Cf. Of Old Sat Freedom on the Heights, page 35, and The Poet, page 16.

3 Parthenon, a celebrated temple built in Athens, Greece, during the 5th century B. C. 4 Capitol, the temple of Jupiter at Rome. 12 The slave . . . chain. Slavery held sway in Greece and Rome for more than a thousand years.

Men loud against all forms of power —
 Unfurnished brows, tempestuous tongues,
 Expecting all things in an hour —
 Brass mouths and iron lungs!

VASTNESS

Many a hearth upon our dark globe sighs
 after many a vanished face,
 Many a planet by many a sun may roll with the dust of a vanished race.

Raving politics, never at rest — as this poor earth's pale history runs —
 What is it all but a trouble of ants in the gleam of a million million of suns?

Lies upon this side, lies upon that side, truth-less violence mourned by the wise, 5
 Thousands of voices drowning his own in a popular torrent of lies upon lies;

Stately purposes, valor in battle, glorious annals of army and fleet,
 Death for the right cause, death for the wrong cause, trumpets of victory, groans of defeat,

Innocence seethed in her mother's milk, and Charity setting the martyr aflame,
 Thralldom who walks with the banner of Freedom, and recks not to ruin a realm in her name 10

Faith at her zenith, or all but lost in the gloom of doubts that darken the schools;
 Craft with a bunch of all-heal in her hand, followed up by her vassal legion of fools,

Trade flying over a thousand seas with her spice and her vintage, her silk and her corn,
 Desolate offing, sailorless harbors, famishing
 populace, wharves forlorn;

Star of the morning, Hope in the sunrise;
 Gloom of the evening, Life at a close; 15
 Pleasure who flaunts on her wide downway with her flying robe and her poisoned
 rose;

Pain, that has crawled from the corpse of Pleasure, a worm which writhes all day, and at night

 and died in the doing it, flesh without
 mind;

He that has nailed all flesh to the Cross, till
 Self died out in the love of his kind,

Spring and Summer and Autumn and Winter,
 and all these old revolutions of earth,
 All new-old revolutions of Empire — change of the tide — what is all of it worth? 30

What the philosophies, all the sciences, poesy,
 varying voices of prayer,
 All that is noblest, all that is basest, all that is filthy with all that is fair?

What is it all, if we all of us end but in being our own corpse-coffins at last?
 Swallowed in Vastness, lost in Silence, drowned in the deeps of a meaningless Past?

What but a murmur of gnats in the gloom, or a moment's anger of bees in their hive? — 35

Peace, let it be! for I loved him, and love him forever; the dead are not dead but alive. (1885)

26 death-ruckle, a rattling sound sometimes produced in the throat of a dying person 28 He . . . Cross From Galatians, 5 24 — "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" 36 Originally this line was represented as spoken by another person in answer to the question in line 35 If the line is spoken by the poet,

LOCKSLEY HALL SIXTY YEARS
AFTER

Late, my grandson! half the morning have I paced these sandy tracts, Watched again the hollow ridges roaring into
cataracts,

Wandered back to living boyhood while I heard the curlews call,
I myself so close on death, and death itself in Locksley Hall.

So — your happy suit was blasted — she the faultless, the divine;
And you liken — boyish babble — this boy-
love of yours with mine.

I myself have often babbled "doubtless" of a foolish past;
Babble, babble; our old England may go down in babble at last.

"Curse him!" curse your fellow-victim? call him dotard in your rage?
Eyes that lured a doting boyhood well might fool a dotard's age.

Jilted for a wealthier! wealthier? yet perhaps she was not wise;
I remember how you kissed the miniature with those sweet eyes.

In the hall there hangs a painting — Amy's arms about my neck —
Happy children in a sunbeam sitting on the ribs of wreck.

In my life there was a picture, she that clasped
my neck had flown;
I was left within the shadow sitting on the wreck alone

Yours has been a slighter ailment, will you sicken for her sake?
You, not you! your modern amorist is of easier, earthlier make.

Amy loved me, Amy failed me, Amy was a timid child;
But your Judith — but your worldling — she had never driven me wild.

She that holds the diamond necklace dearer
than the golden ring,
She that finds a winter sunset fairer than a morn of spring.

She that in her heart is brooding on his briefer
lease of life,
While she vows "till death shall part us," she
the would-be-widow wife.

She the worldling born of worldlings — father,
mother — be content,
Even the homely farm can teach us there is something in descent.

Yonder in that chapel, slowly sinking now into the ground,
Lies the warrior, my forefather, with his feet
upon the hound.

Crossed! for once he sailed the sea to crush
the Moslem in his pride;
Dead the warrior, dead his glory, dead the cause in which he died.

Yet how often I and Amy in the moldering aisle have stood,
Gazing for one pensive moment on that founder of our blood.

There again I stood today, and where of old
we knelt in prayer,
Close beneath the casement crimson with the shield of Locksley — there,

All in white Italian marble, looking still as if she smiled,
Lies my Amy dead in childbirth, dead the mother, dead the child.

Dead — and sixty years ago, and dead her aged husband now —
I, this old white-headed dreamer, stooped and kissed her marble brow.

Gone the fires of youth, the follies, furies,
curses, passionate tears,
Gone like fires and floods and earthquakes of the planet's dawning years—

Fires that shook me once, but now to silent ashes fallen away.
Cold upon the dead volcano sleeps the gleam of dying day.

Gone the tyrant of my youth, and mute below
the chancel stones,
All his virtues — I forgive them — black in white above his bones.

Gone the comrades of my bivouac, some in fight against the foe,
Some through age and slow diseases, gone as all on earth will go.

Locksley Hall Sixty Years After This poem is a sequel to Locksley Hall, page 45. The young lover has become an old man 80 years of age

29 he pride This means that he had been a Crusader against the Turk (Moslem)

Gone with whom for forty years my life in golden sequence ran,
She with all the charm of woman, she with all the breadth of man,

Strong in will and rich in wisdom, Edith, yet
so lowly-sweet,
Woman to her inmost heart, and woman to her tender feet, 50

Very woman of very woman, nurse of ailing body and mind,
She that linked again the broken chain that bound me to my kind.

Here today was Amy with me, while I wandered down the coast,
Near us Edith's holy shadow, smiling at the slighter ghost.

Gone our sailor son thy father, Leonard early lost at sea, 55
Thou alone, my boy, of Amy's kin and mine
art left to me

Gone thy tender-natured mother, wearying to be left alone,
Pining for the stronger heart that once had beat beside her own.

Truth, for truth is truth, he worshiped, being true as he was brave;
Good, for good is good, he followed, yet he looked beyond the grave, 60

Wiser there than you, that crowning barren
Death as lord of all,
Deem this over-tragic drama's closing curtain
is the pall!

Beautiful was death in him, who saw the death, but kept the deck, Saving women and their babes, and sinking with the sinking wreck,

Gone forever! Ever? No — for since our dying race began, 65
Ever, ever, and forever was the leading light of man.

Those that in barbarian burials killed the slave, and slew the wife, Felt within themselves the sacred passion of the second life.

Indian warriors dream of ampler hunting grounds beyond the night;
Even the black Australian dying hopes he shall return, a white. 70

Truth for truth, and good for good! The good, the true, the pure, the just — Take the charm "Forever" from them, and they crumble into dust.

Gone the cry of "Forward, Forward," lost within a growing gloom;
Lost, or only heard in silence from the silence of a tomb.

Half the marvels of my morning, triumphs over time and space, 75
Staled by frequency, shrunk by usage into commonest commonplace!

"Forward" rang the voices then, and of the many mine was one.
Let us hush this cry of "Forward" till ten thousand years have gone.

Far among the vanished races, old Assyrian kings would flay
Captives whom they caught in battle — iron-hearted victors they. 80

Ages after, while in Asia, he that led the wild Moguls,
Timur built his ghastly tower of eighty thousand human skulls,

Then, and here in Edward's time, an age of noblest English names,
Christian conquerors took and flung the conquered Christian into flames.

Love your enemy, bless your haters, said the Greatest of the great, 85 Christian love among the Churches looked the twin of heathen hate.

From the golden alms of Blessing man had coined himself a curse:
Rome of Cæsar, Rome of Peter, which was crueller? which was worse?

79-80 Assyrian . . . Captives. The Assyrian kings were notably cruel to their captives. 82 Timur, Tamerlane, a famous Mongolian conqueror notorious for his atrocities. In 1398 he sacked Delhi, India, and is said to have put to death 100,000 prisoners. (See Maud, 46, page 97.) 83-84 These lines refer to the religious persecutions in England of the sovereigns immediately following Henry VIII. Edward V was crowned in 1547. 85 Love . . . great, a reference to Christ's saying, "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you" (Matthew, 5:44). 86 Rome of Cæsar. During the first century pagan Rome, especially under Nero, persecuted and killed great numbers of Christians. Rome of Peter, the See of St Peter, at Rome. Religious persecutions were common among all medieval peoples. Tennyson, the Protestant, here fixes his attention upon the treatment of heretics by Roman Catholics.

France had shown a light to all men, preached a Gospel, all men's good;
Celtic Demos rose a Demon, shrieked and slaked the light with blood. 90

Hope was ever on her mountain, watching till the day begun —
Crowned with sunlight — over darkness —
from the still unrisen sun.

Have we grown at last beyond the passions of the primal clan?
"Kill your enemy, for you hate him," still,
"your enemy" was a man.

Have we sunk below them? Peasants maim
the helpless horse, and drive 95 Innocent cattle under thatch, and burn the kindlier brutes alive.

Brutes, the brutes are not your wrongers — burned at midnight, found at morn, Twisted hard in mortal agony with their offspring, born-unborn,

Clinging to the silent mother! Are we devils?
are we men?

Sweet Saint Francis of Assisi, would that he were here again, 100

He that in his Catholic wholeness used to call the very flowers
Sisters, brothers — and the beasts — whose pains are hardly less than ours!

Chaos, Cosmos! Cosmos! Chaos! who can tell how all will end?

Read the wide world's annals, you, and take their wisdom for your friend.

Hope the best, but hold the Present! fatal daughter of the Past, 105

Shape your heart to front the hour, but dream not that the hour will last.

Aye, if dynamite and revolver leave you courage to be wise —

When was age so crammed with menace?
madness? written, spoken lies?

Envy wears the mask of Love, and, laughing
sober fact to scorn,

Cries to weakest as to strongest, "Ye are equals, equal-born." 110

Equal-born? Oh, yes, if yonder hill be level with the flat

Charm us, orator, till the lion look no larger than the cat,

Till the cat through that mirage of overheated language loom

Larger than the lion — Demos end in working its own doom.

Russia bursts our Indian barrier; shall we fight her? shall we yield? 115

Pause! before you sound the trumpet, hear the voices from the field.

Those three hundred millions under one
Imperial scepter now,
Shall we hold them? shall we loose them?
take the suffrage of the plow.

Nay, but these would feel and follow Truth
if only you and you,

Rivals of realm-running party, when you speak were wholly true 120

Plowmen, shepherds, have I found, and more than once, and still could find,

Sons of God, and kings of men in utter noble-
ness of mind,

Truthful, trustful, looking upward to the practiced hustings-lar;

So, the higher wields the lower, while the lower is the higher.

Here and there a cotter's babe is royal-born
by right divine, 125

Here and there my lord is lower than his oxen or his swine.

Chaos, Cosmos! Cosmos, Chaos! once again
the sickening game;

Freedom, free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name.

Step by step we gained a freedom known to Europe, known to all;

Step by step we rose to greatness — through the tonguesters we may fall. 130

You that woo the Voices — tell them "old experience is a fool,"

89-90 These lines refer to the French Revolution and to the Reign of Terror, 1793-94, during which hundreds were sent to the guillotine. The doctrine of the Revolution was "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." Demos is a Greek word meaning people. 95-96 Peasants alive, a reference to incidents attendant on the agricultural disturbances of the time. 100 Saint Francis of Assisi, an Italian monk (1182-1226) noted for his gentleness and nobility of character. 103 Chaos, Cosmos. Tennyson here refers to the conflict between those who see no meaning in life and those who see an ordered purpose in it.

115 Russia yield, a reference to Russia's persistent efforts during the 19th century to gain control of Afghanistan, the "Indian barrier." In 1877-78 Russia sent an expedition through the Balkans to Constantinople, and England promptly sent a fleet in opposition. 116 voices from the field, voices of the laboring classes. 123 hustings, the platform from which the candidates for Parliament addressed the electors. 131 the Voices, the approval of the masses.

Teach¹ your flattered kings that only those who cannot read can rule.

Pluck the mighty from their seat, but set no
meek ones in their place;

Pillory Wisdom in your markets, pelt your offal at her face.

Tumble Nature heel o'er head, and, yelling with the yelling street, ¹³⁵

Set the feet above the brain and swear the brain is in the feet.

Bring the old dark ages back without the faith, without the hope,

Break the State, the Church, the Throne, and roll their ruins down the slope.

Authors — essayist, atheist, novelist, realist,
rimester, play your part,

Paint the mortal shame of nature with the living hues of art. ¹⁴⁰

Rip your brothers' vices open, strip your own foul passions bare;

Down with Reticence, down with Reverence
— forward — naked — let them stare.

Feed the budding rose of boyhood with the drainage of your sewer;

Send the drain into the fountain, lest the stream should issue pure.

Set the maiden fancies wallowing in the troughs of Zolaism — ¹⁴⁵

Forward, forward, aye, and backward, downward too into the abysm!

Do your best to charm the worst, to lower the rising race of men;

Have we risen from out the beast, then back into the beast again?

Only "dust to dust" for me that sicken at your lawless din,

Dust in wholesome old-world dust before the
the newer world begin ¹⁵⁰

Heated am I? you — you wonder — weil, it scarce becomes mine age —

Patience! let the dying actor mouth his last upon the stage

Cries of unprogressive dotage ere the dotard fall asleep?

Noises of a current narrowing, not the music of a deep?

Aye, for doubtless I am old, and think gray
thoughts, for I am gray; ¹⁵⁵

After all the stormy changes shall we find a changeless May?

After madness, after massacre, Jacobinism
and Jacquerie,

Some diviner force to guide us through the days I shall not see?

When the schemes and all the systems, kingdoms and republics fall,

Something kindlier, higher, holier — all for each and each for all? ¹⁶⁰

All the full-brain, half-brain races, led by Justice, Love, and Truth;

All the millions one at length with all the visions of my youth?

All diseases quenched by Science, no man
halt, or deaf, or blind;

Stronger ever born of weaker, lustier body, larger mind?

Earth at last a warless world, a single race,
a single tongue — ¹⁶⁵

I have seen her far away — for is not Earth
as yet so young? —

Every tiger madness muzzled, every serpent passion killed,

Every grim ravine a garden, every blazing desert tilled,

Robed in universal harvest up to either pole
she smiles,

Universal ocean softly washing all her warless isles. ¹⁷⁰

Warless? when her tens are thousands, and her thousands millions, then —

All her harvest all too narrow — who can fancy warless men?

Warless? war will die out late then. Will it ever? late or soon?

Can it, till this outworn earth be dead as yon dead world the moon?

Dead the new astronomy calls her. — On this day and at this hour, ¹⁷⁵

In this gap between the sandhills, whence you see the Locksley tower,

¹⁵⁷ Jacobinism, Jacquerie, mad opposition to regular government. The Jacobins were a society of violent radicals in France during the Revolution of 1789. Under the leadership of Robespierre, they conducted the "Reign of Terror." The Jacquerie was a revolt of French peasants in 1358 because of the oppressions of the nobles.

¹³⁹⁻¹⁵⁰ These lines show Tennyson's dislike of the realistic novels of the period. Zola (line 145) was a contemporary French realist.

Here we met, our latest meeting — Amy — sixty years ago —
 She and I — the moon was falling greenish through a rosy glow,

Just above the gateway tower, and even where you see her now — Here we stood and clasped each other, swore the seeming-deathless vow — 180

Dead, but how her living glory lights the hall,
 the dune, the grass!
 Yet the moonlight is the sunlight, and the sun himself will pass.

Venus near her! smiling downward at this earthlier earth of ours,
 Closer on the sun, perhaps a world of never fading flowers.

Hesper, whom the poet called the Bringer home of all good things — 185
 All good things may move in Hesper, perfect peoples, perfect kings.

Hesper — Venus — were we native to that splendor or in Mars,
 We should see the globe we groan in, fairest of their evening stars.

Could we dream of wars and carnage, craft and madness, lust and spite,
 Roaring London, raving Paris, in that point of peaceful light? 190

Might we not in glancing heavenward on a star so silver-fair,
 Yearn, and clasp the hands and murmur,
 "Would to God that we were there"?

Forward, backward, backward, forward, in the immeasurable sea,
 Swayed by vaster ebbs and flows than can be known to you or me.

All the suns — are these but symbols of innumerable man, 195
 Man or Mind that sees a shadow of the planner or the plan?

Is there evil but on earth? or pain in every peopled sphere?
 Well, be grateful for the sounding watchword
 "Evolution" here,

Evolution ever climbing after some ideal
 good,

And Reversion ever dragging Evolution in the mud. 200

What are men that He should heed us? cried
 the king of sacred song,
 Insects of an hour, that hourly work their brother insect wrong,

While the silent heavens roll, and suns along their fiery way,
 All their planets whirling round them, flash
 a million miles a day.

Many an æon molded earth before her highest, man, was born, 205
 Many an æon too may pass when earth is manless and forlorn,

Earth so huge, and yet so bounded — pools of salt, and plots of land — Shallow skin of green and azure — chains of mountain, grains of sand!

Only That which made us meant us to be mightier by and by,
 Set the sphere of all the boundless heavens
 within the human eye, 210

Sent the shadow of Himself, the boundless,
 through the human soul;
 Boundless inward in the atom, boundless outward in the Whole.

Here is Locksley Hall, my grandson, here the hon-guarded gate
 Not tonight in Locksley Hall — tomorrow —
 you, you come so late.

Wrecked — your train — or all but wrecked?
 a shattered wheel? a vicious boy! 215
 Good, this forward, you that preach it, is it well to wish you joy?

Is it well that while we range with Science,
 glorying in the Time,
 City children soak and blacken soul and sense
 in city slime?

There among the glooming alleys Progress
 halts on palsied feet,
 Crime and hunger cast our maidens by the thousand on the street. 220

 stress of her daily bread,

There a single sordid attic holds the living and the dead

There the smoldering fire of fever creeps
across the rotted floor,
And the crowded couch of incest in the warrens of the poor.

Nay, your pardon, cry your "Forward," yours are hope and youth, but I — 225 Eighty winters leave the dog too lame to follow with the cry,

Lame and old, and past his time, and passing
now into the night;
Yet I would the rising race were half as eager for the light.

Light the fading gleam of even? light the glimmer of the dawn?
Aged eyes may take the growing glimmer for the gleam withdrawn. 230

Far away beyond her myriad coming changes earth will be Something other than the wildest modern guess of you and me.

Earth may reach her earthly-worst, or if she gain her earthly-best,
Would she find her human offspring this ideal man at rest?

Forward then, but still remember how the course of Time will swerve, 235
Crook and turn upon itself in many a backward streaming curve.

Not the Hall tonight, my grandson! Death and Silence hold their own.
Leave the master in the first dark hour of his last sleep alone.

Worthier soul was he than I am, sound and honest, rustic Squire, Kindly landlord, boon companion — youthful jealousy is a liar. 240

Cast the poison from your bosom, oust the madness from your brain.
Let the trampled serpent show you that you have not lived in vain.

Youthful! youth and age are scholars yet but in the lower school,

Nor is he the wisest man who never proved himself a fool.

Yonder lies our young sea-village — Art and Grace are less and less; 245
Science grows and Beauty dwindles — roofs of slated hideousness!

There is one old hostel left us where they swing the Locksley shield,
Till the peasant cow shall butt the "lion
passant" from his field.

Poor old Heraldry, poor old History, poor old Poetry, passing hence,
In the common deluge drowning old political common-sense! 250

Poor old voice of eighty crying after voices that have fled!
All I loved are vanished voices, all my steps are on the dead.

All the world is ghost to me, and as the phantom disappears,
Forward far and far from here is all the hope of eighty years.

In this hostel — I remember — I repent it o'er his grave — 255
Like a clown — by chance he met me — I refused the hand he gave.

From that casement where the trailer mantles all the moldering bricks —
I was then in early boyhood, Edith but a child of six —

While I sheltered in this archway from a day of driving showers —
Peeped the winsome face of Edith like a flower among the flowers. 260

Here tonight! the Hall tomorrow, when they toll the chapel bell!
Shall I hear in one dark room a wailing, "I have loved thee well"?

Then a peal that shakes the portal — one has come to claim his bride,
Her that shrank, and put me from her,
shrieked, and started from my side —

Silent echoes! You, my Leonard, use and not abuse your day, 265
Move among your people, know them, follow him who led the way,

224. in the warrens of the poor, a reference to the crowding of the families of the poor into small quarters. A warren is a protected piece of ground for the breeding of rabbits

Strove for sixty widowed years to help his homelier brother men,
Served the poor, and built the cottage, raised the school, and drained the fen.

Hears he now the voice that wronged him?
who shall swear it cannot be?
Earth would never touch her worst, were one in fifty such as he. 270

Ere she gain her heavenly-best, a god must mingle with the game.
Nay, there may be those about us whom we neither see nor name,

Felt within us as ourselves, the Powers of Good, the Powers of Ill, Strowing balm, or shedding poison in the fountains of the will.

Follow you the star that lights a desert pathway, yours or mine. 275
Forward, till you see the Highest Human Nature is divine.

Follow Light, and do the Right — for man can half-control his doom —
Till you find the deathless Angel seated in the vacant tomb.

Forward, let the stormy moment fly and mingle with the past.
I that loathed have come to love him. Love will conquer at the last. 280

Gone at eighty, mine own age, and I and you will bear the pall;
Then I leave thee lord and master, latest lord of Locksley Hall. (1886)

MERLIN AND THE GLEAM.*

I

O young Mariner,
You from the haven
Under the sea-cliff,
You that are watching
The gray Magician 5
With eyes of wonder,
I am Merlin,
And I am dying,
I am Merlin
Who follow the Gleam. 10

278 the deathless Angel . . . tomb. The story of the angel who rolled away the stone from the tomb of Christ is told in all the Gospels. See Matthew, 28 1-7.

Merlin and the Gleam. Merlin was the magician of Arthur's court. The poem is an allegory of Tennyson's poetical career. Merlin is Tennyson, the Gleam is "the higher poetic imagination."

2

Mighty the Wizard
Who found me at sunrise
Sleeping, and woke me
And learned me Magic! 15
Great the Master,
And sweet the Magic,
When over the valley,
In early summers,
Over the mountain,
On human faces, 20
And all around me,
Moving to melody,
Floated the Gleam.

3

Once at the croak of a Raven who crossed it,
A barbarous people, 25
Blind to the magic
And deaf to the melody,
Snarled at and cursed me.
A demon vexed me,
The light retreated, 30
The landskip darkened,
The melody deadened,
The Master whispered,
"Follow the Gleam."

4

Then to the melody, 35
Over a wilderness
Gliding, and glancing at Elf of the woodland,
Gnome of the cavern,
Griffin and Giant, 40
And dancng of Fairies
In desolate hollows,
And wraiths of the mountain,
And rolling of dragons
By warble of water, 45
Or cataract music
Of falling torrents,
Flitted the Gleam.

Stanza 2 This stanza refers to Tennyson's early poetry, as in the 1827 volume

Stanza 3 This stanza refers to the hostility of reviewers of the 1830 volume of poems and to the period of Tennyson's silence from 1833 to 1842. The "Raven" of line 24 may refer to Christopher North (John Wilson), whose criticism appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, May, 1832. The following poem by Tennyson appeared in the volume of 1832

TO CHRISTOPHER NORTH

You did late review my lays,
Crusty Christopher,
You did mangle blame and praise,
Rusty Christopher
When I learnt from whom it came
I forgave you all the blame,
Musty Christopher,
I could not forgive the praise,
Fusty Christopher

Stanza 4 This stanza refers to the period of imaginative poems, as found in the 1842 volume

5

Down from the mountain
And over the level, 50
And streaming and shining on/Silent river,
Silvery willow,
Pasture and plowland,
Innocent maidens, 55
Garrulous children,
Homestead and harvest,
Reaper and gleaner,
And rough-ruddy faces
Of lowly labor, 60
Slided the Gleam —

6

Then, with a melody
Stronger and statelier,
Led me at length
To the city and palace 65
Of Arthur the King;
Touched at the golden
Cross of the churches,
Flashed on the tournament,
Flickered and bickered 70
From helmet to helmet,
And last on the forehead
Of Arthur the blameless Rested the Gleam.

7

Clouds and darkness 75
Closed upon Camelot,
Arthur had vanished
I knew not whither,
The king who loved me,
And cannot die; 80
For out of the darkness
Silent and slowly
The Gleam, that had waned to a wintry glimmer
On icy fallow
And faded forest, 85
Drew to the valley
Named of the shadow,
And slowly brightening
Out of the glimmer,
And slowly moving again to a melody 90
Yearningly tender,
Fell on the shadow,
No longer a shadow,
But clothed with the Gleam

Stanza 5 This stanza refers to the period of pastorals and English idylls, as found in the 1842 volume

Stanza 6 This stanza refers to The Idylls of the King

Stanza 7 This stanza refers to the experiences related in In Memoriam

87 the shadow. Cf Psalms, 23 4 — "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil"

8

And broader and brighter 95
The Gleam flying onward,
Wed to the melody,
Sang through the world,
And slower and fainter,
Old and weary, 100
But eager to follow,
I saw, whenever
In passing it glanced upon
Hamlet or city,
That under the Crosses 105
The dead man's garden,
The mortal hillock,
Would break into blossom;
And so to the land's
Last limit I came — 110
And can no longer,
But die rejoicing,
For through the Magic
Of Him the Mighty, 115
Who taught me in childhood,
There on the border
Of boundless Ocean,
And all but in Heaven
Hovers the Gleam

9

Not of the sunlight, } 120
Not of the moonlight }
Not of the starlight }
O young Mariner,
Down to the haven,
Call your companions, 125
Launch your vessel
And crowd your canvas,
And, ere it vanishes
Over the margin,
After it, follow it, 130
Follow the Gleam (1889)

BY AN EVOLUTIONIST

The Lord let the house of a brute to the soul
of a man,
And the man said, "Am I your debtor?"
And the Lord — "Not yet, but make it as clean as you can,
And then I will let you a better."

I

If my body come from brutes, my soul uncertain or a fable, 5
Why not bask amid the senses while the sun of morning shines,

Stanza 8 This stanza refers to later poetic activity
By an Evolutionist Cf Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, 199, page 161, and Browning's Rabbi Ben Ezra, page 280

I, the finer brute rejoicing in my hounds, and in my stable,
Youth and health, and birth and wealth,
and choice of women and of wines?

2

What hast thou done for me, grim Old Age,
save breaking my bones on the rack?
Would I had passed in the morning that looks so bright from afar! 10

Old Age

Done for thee? starved the wild beast that was linked with thee eighty years back.
Less weight now for the ladder-of-heaven that hangs on a star.

1

If my body come from brutes, though somewhat finer than their own,
I am heir, and this my kingdom. Shall the royal voice be mute?
No, but if the rebel subject seek to drag me
from the throne, 15
Hold the scepter, Human Soul, and rule thy province of the brute.

2

I have climbed to the snows of Age, and I gaze at a field in the Past, Where I sank with the body at times in the sloughs of a low desire,
But I hear no yelp of the beast, and the Man is quiet at last,
As he stands on the heights of his life with a glimpse of a height that is higher 20

(FOR MUSIC)

What sight so lured him through the fields
he knew
As where earth's green stole into heaven's own hue,
Far — far — away?

What sound was dearest in his native dells?
The mellow lin-lan-lone of evening bells 5
Far — far — away

What vague world-whisper, mystic pain or
joy,
Through those three words would haunt him
when a boy,
Far — far — away?

Far—Far—Away Compare this poem with Tears, Idle
Tears, page 55

A whisper from his dawn of life? a breath 10
From some fair dawn beyond the doors of
death

Far — far — away?

Far, far, how far? from o'er the gates of birth,
The faint horizons, all the bounds of earth,
Far — far — away? 15

What charm in words, a charm no words could give?

O dying words, can Music make you live
Far — far — away? (1889)

THE THROSTLE

"Summer is coming, summer is coming.
I know it, I know it, I know it
Light again, leaf again, life again, love again!"
Yes, my wild little Poet.

Sing the new year in under the blue 5
Last year you sang it as gladly.
"New, new, new, new!" Is it then so new
That you should carol so madly?

"Love again, song again, nest again, young
again,"
Never a prophet so crazy! 10
And hardly a daisy as yet, little friend,
See, there is hardly a daisy.

"Here again, here, here, here, happy year!"
O warble unchidden, unbidden!
Summer is coming, is coming, my dear, 15
And all the winters are hidden (1889)

THE OAK

Live thy Life,
Young and old,
Like yon oak,
Bright in spring,
Living gold, 5

Summer-rich
Then; and then
Autumn-changed,
Soberer-hued
Gold again. 10

All his leaves
Fallen at length,
Look, he stands,
Trunk and bough,
Naked strength. (1889)

The Thristle In this poem Tennyson sets words to the music of the song thrush Cf O Swallow, Swallow, page 55, and Swinburne's Itylus, page 675

Where cedar pales in scented row
Kept out the flakes of the dancing brine, 15
And an awning drooped the mast below,
In fold on fold of the purple fine,
That neither noontide nor starshine
Nor moonlight cold which maketh mad,
Might pierce the regal tenement 20
When the sun dawned, oh, gay and glad
We set the sail and plied the oar,
But when the night-wind blew like breath,
For joy of one day's voyage more,
We sang together on the wide sea, 25
Like men at peace on a peaceful shore;
Each sail was loosed to the wind so free,
Each helm made sure by the twilight star,
And in a sleep as calm as death,
We, the voyagers from afar, 30
Lay stretched along, each weary crew
In a circle round its wondrous tent
Whence gleamed soft light and curled rich scent,
And with light and perfume, music, too.
So the stars wheeled round, and the darkness
past, 35
And at morn we started beside the mast,
And still each ship was sailing fast.

Now, one morn, land appeared — a speck
Dim trembling betwixt sea and sky —
"Avoid it," cried our pilot, "check 40
The shout, restrain the eager eye!"
But the heaving sea was black behind
For many a night and many a day,
And land, though but a rock, drew nigh,
So, we broke the cedar pales away, 45
Let the purple awning flap in the wind,
And a statue bright was on every deck!
We shouted, every man of us,
And steered right into the harbor thus,
With pomp and pæan glorious. 50

A hundred shapes of lucid stone!
All day we built its shrine for each,
A shrine of rock for every one,
Nor paused till in the westerling sun 55
We sat together on the beach
To sing because our task was done
When lo! what shouts and merry songs!
What laughter all the distance stirs!
A loaded raft with happy throngs
Of gentle islanders! 60
"Our isles are just at hand," they cried,
"Like cloudlets faint in even sleeping.
Our temple-gates are opened wide,
Our olive-groves thick shade are keeping
For these majestic forms" — they cried 65
Oh, then we awoke with sudden start

From our deep dream, and knew, too late,
How bare the rock, how desolate,
Which had received our precious freight;
Yet we called out — "Depart! 70
Our gifts, once given, must here abide.
Our work is done; we have no heart
To mar our work" — we cried

THUS THE MAYNE GLIDETH

Thus the Mayne glideth
Where my Love abideth.
Sleep's no softer; it proceeds
On through lawns, on through meads,
On and on, whate'er befall, 5
Meandering and musical,
Though the niggard pasturage
Bears not on its shaven ledge
Aught but weeds and waving grasses
To view the river as it passes, 10
Save here and there a scanty patch
Of primroses too faint to catch
A weary bee. And scarce it pushes
Its gentle way through strangling rushes
Where the glossy kingfisher 15
Flutters when noon-heats are near,
Glad the shelving banks to shun,
Red and steaming in the sun,
Where the shrew-mouse with pale throat
Burrows, and the speckled stoat, 20
Where the quick sandpipers flit
In and out the marl and grit
That seems to breed them, brown as they.
Naught disturbs its quiet way,
Save some lazy stork that springs, 25
Trailing it with legs and wings,
Whom the shy fox from the hill
Rouses, creep he ne'er so still (1835)

PORPHYRIA'S LOVER

The rain set early in tonight,
The sullen wind was soon awake —
It tore the elm-tops down for spite,
And did its worst to vex the lake 5
I listened with heart fit to break.
When glided in Porphyria; straight
She shut the cold out and the storm,
And kneeled and made the cheerless grate
Blaze up, and all the cottage warm;
Which done, she rose, and from her form 10
Withdrew the dripping cloak and shawl,
And laid her soiled gloves by, untied

Porphyria's Lover This poem, together with the one following, first appeared under the title Madhouse Cells It is the earliest of Browning's dramatic monologues

19 moonlight . . mad. The moon was long thought to cause madness

Her hat and let the damp hair fall,
 And, last, she sat down by my side
 And called me When no voice replied, 15
 She put my arm about her waist,
 And made her smooth white shoulder bare
 And all her yellow hair displaced,
 And, stooping, made my cheek lie there,
 And spread, o'er all, her yellow hair, 20
 Murmuring how she loved me — she Too weak, for all her heart's endeavor,
 To set its struggling passion free
 From pride, and vainer ties dis sever,
 And give herself to me forever. 25
 But passion sometimes would prevail,
 Nor could tonight's gay feast restrain
 A sudden thought of one so pale
 For love of her, and all in vain,
 So, she was come through wind and rain 30
 Be sure I looked up at her eyes
 Happy and proud; at last I knew
 Porphyria worshiped me; surprise
 Made my heart swell, and still it grew
 While I debated what to do. 35
 That moment she was mine, mine, fair,
 Perfectly pure and good; I found
 A thing to do, and all her hair
 In one long yellow string I wound
 Three times her little throat around, 40
 And strangled her No pain felt she;
 I am quite sure she felt no pain.
 As a shut bud that holds a bee,
 I warily oped her lids, again 45
 Laughed the blue eyes without a stain
 And I untightened next the tress
 About her neck, her cheek once more
 Blushed bright beneath my burning kiss
 I propped her head up as before, 50
 Only, this time my shoulder bore
 Her head, which droops upon it still —
 The smiling rosy little head,
 So glad it has its utmost will,
 That all it scorned at once is fled, 55
 And I, its love, am gained instead!
 Porphyria's love — she guessed not how
 Her darling one wish would be heard.
 And thus we sit together now,
 And all night long we have not stirred,
 And yet God has not said a word! (1836)

JOHANNES AGRICOLA IN MEDITATION

There's heaven above, and night by night
 I look right through its gorgeous roof;
 No suns and moons though e'er so bright

Johannes Agricola in Meditation Johannes Agricola, a German reformer of the 16th century, was the reputed founder of the Antinomians, a sect of Christians who held that the moral law is of no value or force on the ground that faith only is necessary to salvation.

Avail to stop me, splendor-proof
 I keep the broods of stars aloof. 5
 For I intend to get to God,
 For 'tis to God I speed so fast,
 For in God's breast, my own abode,
 Those shoals of dazzling glory, passed,
 I lay my spirit down at last. 10
 I lie where I have always lain,
 God smiles as he has always smiled,
 Ere suns and moons could wax and wane,
 Ere stars were thundergirt, or piled
 The heavens, God thought on me his child,
 Ordained a life for me, arrayed 16
 Its circumstances every one
 To the minutest; aye, God said
 This head this hand should rest upon
 Thus, ere he fashioned star or sun. 20
 And having thus created me,
 Thus rooted me, he bade me grow,
 Guiltless forever, like a tree
 That buds and blooms, nor seeks to know
 The law by which it prospers so 25
 But sure that thought and word and deed
 All go to swell his love for me,
 Me, made because that love had need
 Of something irreversibly
 Pledged solely its content to be 30
 Yes, yes, a tree which must ascend,
 No poison-gourd foredoomed to stoop!
 I have God's warrant, could I blend
 All hideous sins, as in a cup,
 To drink the mingled venoms up; 35
 Secure my nature will convert
 The draft to blossoming gladness fast;
 While sweet dews turn to the gourd's hurt,
 And bloat, and while they bloat it, blast,
 As from the first its lot was cast. 40
 For as I lie, smiled on, full-fed
 By unexhausted power to bless,
 I gaze below on hell's fierce bed,
 And those its waves of flame oppress,
 Swarming in ghastly wretchedness, 45
 Whose life on earth aspired to be
 One altar-smoke, so pure! — to win
 If not love like God's love for me,
 At least to keep his anger in;
 And all their striving turned to sin 50
 Priest, doctor, hermit, monk grown white
 With prayer, the broken-hearted nun,
 The martyr, the wan acolyte,
 The incense-swinging child — undone
 Before God fashioned star or sun! 55
 God, whom I praise; how could I praise,
 If such as I might understand,
 Make out and reckon on his ways,
 And bargain for his love, and stand,
 Paying a price, at his right hand? (1836)

INTRODUCTION

NEW YEAR'S DAY AT ASOLO IN THE TREVISAN

SCENE A large mean airy chamber. A girl, PIPPA, from the silk-mills, springing out of bed.

Day!

Faster and more fast,
O'er night's brim, day boils at last;
Boils, pure gold, o'er the cloud-cup's brim
Where spurting and suppressed it lay, 5
For not a froth-flake touched the rim
Of yonder gap in the solid gray
Of the eastern cloud, an hour away,
But forth one wavelet, then another, curled,
Till the whole sunrise, not to be suppressed,
Rose, reddened, and its seething breast 11
Flickered in bounds, grew gold, then overflowed the world

O Day, if I squander a wavelet of thee,
A mite of my twelve-hours' treasure,
The least of thy gazes or glances 15
(Be they grants thou art bound to or gifts above measure),

One of thy choices or one of thy chances (Be they tasks God imposed thee or freaks at thy pleasure)

— My Day, if I squander such labor or leisure,
Then shame fall on Asolo, mischief on me! 20

Thy long blue solemn hours serenely flowing, Whence earth, we feel, gets steady help and
good —

Thy fitful sunshine-minutes, coming, going,
As if earth turned from work in gamesome
mood — 24

All shall be mine! But thou must treat me not
As prosperous ones are treated, those who live
At hand here, and enjoy the higher lot,
In readiness to take what thou wilt give,
And free to let alone what thou refusest;
For, Day, my holiday, if thou ill-usest 30
Me, who am only Pippa — old-year's sorrow,
Cast off last night, will come again tomorrow;

Whereas, if thou prove gentle, I shall borrow Sufficient strength of thee for new-year's sorrow.

All other men and women that this earth 35
Belongs to, who all days alike possess,
Make general plenty cure particular dearth,
Get more joy one way, if another, less;
Thou art my single day, God lends to heaven
What were all earth else, with a feel of
heaven — 40
Sole light that helps me through the year, thy sun's!

Try now! Take Asolo's Four Happiest Ones —
And let thy morning rain on that superb
Great haughty Ottima, can rain disturb
Her Sebald's homage? All the while thy rain Beats fiercest on her shrub-house window-pane, 46

He will but press the closer, breathe more warm

Against her cheek; how should she mind the storm?

And, morning past, if mid-day shed a gloom
O'er Jules and Phene — what care bride and groom 50

Save for their dear selves? 'Tis their marriage-day;

And while they leave church and go home
their way,

Hand clasping hand, within each breast would be

Sunbeams and pleasant weather spite of thee
Then, for another trial, obscure thy eve 55

With mist—will Luigi and his mother grieve—
The lady and her child, unmatched, forsooth,
She in her age, as Luigi in his youth,
For true content? The cheerful town, warm,
close

And safe, the sooner that thou art morose, 60
Receives them. And yet once again, outbreak
In storm at night on Monsignor, they make Such stir about — whom they expect from
Rome

To visit Asolo, his brothers' home,
And say here masses proper to release 65
A soul from pain — what storm dares hurt his peace?

Calm would he pray, with his own thoughts to ward

Thy thunder off, nor want the angels' guard
But Pippa — just one such mischance would spoil

Her day that lightens the next twelvemonth's
toil 70

At wearisome silk-winding, coil on coil!

And here I let time slip for naught!
Aha, you foolhardy sunbeam, caught

Pippa Passes See Critical Notes The scene of the introduction is Asolo, a small town in the province of Treviso, about 30 miles from Venice, Italy

62 Monsignor, an ecclesiastical title bestowed by the Pope upon high church officials

With a single splash from my ewer!
 You that would mock the best pursuer, 75
 Was my basin over-deep?
 One splash of water ruins you asleep,
 And up, up, fleet your brilliant bits
 Wheeling and counterwheeling,
 Reeling, broken beyond healing — 80
 Now grow together on the ceiling!
 That will task your wits
 Whoever it was quenched fire first, hoped to
 see

Morsel after morsel flee
 As merrily, as giddily . . . 85
 Meantime, what lights my sunbeam on,
 Where settles by degrees the radiant cripple?
 Oh, is it surely blown, my martagon?
 New-blown and ruddy as St Agnes' nipple,
 Plump as the flesh-bunch on some Turk bird's poll! 90

Be sure if corals, branching 'neath the ripple
 Of ocean, bud there — fairies watch unroll
 Such turban-flowers, I say, such lamps disperse
 Thick red flame through that dusk green universe!

I am queen of thee, floweret! 95
 And each fleshy blossom
 Preserve I not — safer
 Than leaves that embower it,
 Or shells that embosom —
 From weevil and chafer? 100
 Laugh through my pane then, solicit the bee,
 Gibe him, be sure, and, in midst of thy glee,
 Love thy queen, worship me!

—Worship whom else? For am I not, this day,
 Whate'er I please? What shall I please today?
 My morn, noon, eve, and night — how spend my day? 106

Tomorrow I must be Pippa who winds silk,
 The whole year round, to earn just bread and milk;

But, this one day, I have leave to go,
 And play out my fancy's fullest games; 110
 I may fancy all day — and it shall be so —
 That I taste of the pleasures, am called by the names

Of the Happiest Four in our Asolo!

See! Up the hillside yonder, through the morning,
 Someone shall love me, as the world calls love,
 I am no less than Ottima, take warning! 116

 And other house for shrubs, all glass in front,

About me — Ottima, I mean — of late,
 Too bold, too confident she'll still face down
 The spitefullest of talkers in our town. 125
 How we talk in the little town below!

But love, love, love — there's better love,
 I know!

This foolish love was only day's first offer;
 I choose my next love to defy the scoffer,
 For do not our Bride and Bridegroom sally 130
 Out of Possagno church at noon?
 Their house looks over Orcana valley,
 Why should not I be the bride as soon
 As Ottima? For I saw, beside,

Arrive last night that little bride — 135
 Saw, if you call it seeing her, one flash
 Of the pale snow-pure cheek and black bright
 tresses,

Blacker than all except the black eyelash,
 I wonder she contrives those lids no dresses!
 — So strict was she, the veil 140
 Should cover close her pale

Pure cheeks — a bride to look at and scarce
 touch,
 Scarce touch, remember, Jules! For are not such

Used to be tended, flower-like, every feature,
 As if one's breath would fray the lily of a creature? 145

A soft and easy life these ladies lead;
 Whiteness in us were wonderful indeed.
 Oh, save that brow its virgin dimness,
 Keep that foot its lady prinness,
 Let those ankles never swerve 150

From their exquisite reserve,
 Yet have to trip along the streets like me,
 All but naked to the knee!

How will she ever grant her Jules a bliss
 So startling as her real first infant kiss? 155
 Oh, no — not envy, this!

— Not envy, sure! — for if you gave me
 Leave to take or to refuse,
 In earnest, do you think I'd choose
 That sort of new love to enslave me? 160
 Mine should have lapped me round from the beginning;

As little fear of losing it as winning:
 Lovers grow cold, men learn to hate their wives,

And only parents' love can last our lives.
 At eve the Son and Mother, gentle pair, 165

120 Luca, Ottima's despised husband 131 Possagno,

Commune inside our turret, what prevents
My being Luigi? While that mossy lair
Of lizards through the winter-time is stirred
With each to each imparting sweet intents
For this new-year, as brooding bird to bird
(For I observe of late, the evening walk 171
Of Luigi and his mother, always ends
Inside our ruined turret, where they talk, Calmer than lovers, yet more kind than friends),

Let me be cared about, kept out of harm, 175
And schemed for, safe in love as with a charm;
Let me be Luigi! If I only knew
What was my mother's face — my father, too!

Nay, if you come to that, best love of all
Is God's; then why not have God's love befall
Myself as, in the palace by the Dome, 181
Monsignor? — who tonight will bless the home
Of his dead brother; and God bless in turn That heart which beats, those eyes which mildly burn

With love for all men! I, tonight at least, 185
Would be that holy and beloved priest.

Now wait! — even I already seem to share
In God's love, what does New-year's hymn declare?

What other meaning do these verses bear?

All service ranks the same with God's 190
If now, as formerly he trod
Paradise, his presence fills
Our earth, each only as God wills
Can work — God's puppets, best and worst,
Are we; there is no last nor first 195

Say not "a small event!" Why "small"?
Costs it more pain that this, ye call
A "great event," should come to pass,
Than that? Untwine me from the mass
Of deeds which make up life, one deed 200
Power shall fall short in or exceed!

And more of it, and more of it! — oh, yes —
I will pass each, and see their happiness,
And envy none — being just as great, no
doubt,

Useful to men, and dear to God, as they! 205
A pretty thing to care about
So mightily, this single holiday!

But let the sun shine! Wherefore repine?
—With thee to lead me, O Day of mine,
Down the grass path gray with dew, 210
Under the pine-wood, blind with boughs,
Where the swallow never flew
Nor yet cicala dared carouse —
No, dared carouse! [She enters the street.]

I. MORNING

SCENE: Up the Hillside, inside the Shrub-house.
LUCA's Wife, OTTIMA, and her Paramour, the German SEBALD.

Sebald [sings].

Let the watching lids wink!
Day's ablaze with eyes, think!
Deep into the night, drink!

Ottima. Night? Such may be your Rhineland nights, perhaps;

But this blood-red beam through the shutter's
chink 5

—We call such light, the morning; let us
see!

Mind how you grope your way, though! How these tall

Naked geraniums straggle! Push the lattice
Behind that frame! — Nay, do I bid you? —

Sebald,
It shakes the dust down on me! Why, of course 10

The slide-bolt catches Well, are you content.
Or must I find you something else to spoil?
Kiss and be friends, my Sebald! Is't full morning?

Oh, don't speak then!

Seb Aye, thus it used to be!
Ever your house was, I remember, shut 15
Till mid-day, I observed that, as I strolled
On mornings through the vale here, country girls

Were noisy, washing garments in the brook,
Hinds drove the slow white oxen up the hills,
But no, your house was mute, would ope no
eye! 20

And wisely, you were plotting one thing there,
Nature, another outside I looked up —

Rough white wood shutters, rusty iron bars,
Silent as death, blind in a flood of light.

Oh, I remember! — and the peasants laughed
And said, "The old man sleeps with the young wife" 26

This house was his, this chair, this window —
his

Otti Ah, the clear morning! I can see
Saint Mark's,

That black streak is the belfry Stop, Vicenza
Should lie — there's Padua, plain enough, that blue! 30

Look o'er my shoulder, follow my finger!
Seb Morning?

It seems to me a night with a sun added
Where's dew, where's freshness? That bruised plant, I bruised

In getting through the lattice yestereve,

28 St Mark's, the cathedral in Venice The cities of Vicenza and Padua (lines 29, 30) are also plainly visible

Droops as it did. See, here's my elbow's mark
I' the dust o' the sill.

Otti. Oh, shut the lattice, pray! 36

Seb. Let me lean out I cannot scent blood
here,
Foul as the morn may be.

There, shut the world out!
How do you feel now, Ottima? There, curse
The world and all outside! Let us throw off
This mask, how do you bear yourself? Let's
out 41

With all of it!
Otti. Best never speak of it.

Seb. Best speak again and yet again of it, Till words cease to be more than words. "His
blood,"

For instance — let those two words mean "his
blood" 45

And nothing more Notice, I'll say them now,
"His blood"

Otti. Assuredly if I repented

The deed —

Seb. Repent? Who should repent, or why?

What puts that in your head? Did I once say
That I repented?

Otti. No, I said the deed — 50

Seb. "The deed" and "the event" — just now it was

"Our passion's fruit" — the devil take such cant!

Say, once and always, Luca was a wittol,
I am his cutthroat, you are —

Otti. Here's the wine,
I brought it when we left the house above, 55
And glasses too — wine of both sorts Black?
White then?

Seb. But am not I his cutthroat? What are you?

Otti. There trudges on his business from the Duomo

Benet the Capuchin, with his brown hood 59
And bare feet, always in one place at church,
Close under the stone wall by the south entry
I used to take him for a brown cold piece
Of the wall's self, as out of it he rose

To let me pass — at first, I say, I used; 64
Now, so has that dumb figure fastened on
me,

I rather should account the plastered wall
A piece of him, so chilly does it strike
This, Sebald?

Seb. No, the white wine — the white
wine!

Well, Ottima, I promised no new year
Should rise on us the ancient shameful way, 70
Nor does it rise. Pour on! To your black
eyes!

Do you remember last damned New Year's
day?

Otti. You brought those foreign prints. We looked at them

Over the wine and fruit I had to scheme 74
To get him from the fire Nothing but saying
His own set wants the proof-mark, roused him up

To hunt them out

Seb. 'Faith, he is not alive

To fondle you before my face.

Otti. Do you

Fondle me then! Who means to take your life
For that, my Sebald?

Seb. Hark you, Ottima! 80

One thing to guard against We'll not make
much

One of the other — that is, not make more
Parade of warmth, childish officious coil,
Than yesterday — as if, sweet, I supposed
Proof upon proof were needed now, now first,
To show I love you — yes, still love you — love you 86

In spite of Luca and what's come to him —
Sure sign we had him ever in our thoughts,
White sneering old reproachful face and all!
We'll even quarrel, love, at times, as if 90
We still could lose each other, were not tied
By this, conceive you?

Otti. Love!

Seb. Not tied so sure!

Because though I was wrought upon, have struck

His insolence back into him — am I
So surely yours? — therefore forever yours?

Otti. Love, to be wise (one counsel pays another), 96

Should we have — months ago, when first we
loved,

For instance that May morning we two stole
Under the green ascent of sycamores —

If we have come upon a thing like that 100
Suddenly —

Seb. "A thing" — there again — "a
thing!"

Otti. Then, Venus' body, had we come upon

My husband Luca Gaddi's murdered corpse
Within there, at his couch-foot, covered
close — 104

Would you have pored upon it? Why persist
In poring now upon it? For 'tis here

As much as there in the deserted house;
You cannot rid your eyes of it. For me,

Now he is dead I hate him worse, I hate — Dare you stay here? I would go back and hold 110

59 Capuchin . . . brown hood. The Capuchins, a branch of the Franciscan order, wear a brown habit

76 the proof-mark, the mark that indicates that a print is one of the first impressions from the plate 83 coil, fuss, ado 102 Venus'. Venus was the goddess of love

His two dead hands, and say, "I hate you worse,
Luca, than" —

Seb Off, off — take your hands off
mine,

'Tis the hot evening — off! oh, morning is it?

Otti There's one thing must be done; you know what thing

Come in and help to carry. We may sleep 115
Anywhere in the whole wide house tonight.

Seb What would come, think you, if we let him lie

Just as he is? Let him lie there until
The angels take him! He is turned by this Off from his face beside, as you will see. 120

Otti This dusty pane might serve for looking-glass.

Three, four — four gray hairs! Is it so you
said

A plait of hair should wave across my neck?
No — this way

Seb Ottima, I would give your neck,
Each splendid shoulder, both those breasts of
yours, 125

That this were undone! Killing! Kill the
world,

So Luca lives again! — aye, lives to sputter
His fulsome dotage on you — yes, and feign
Surprise that I return at eve to sup,
When all the morning I was loitering here —
Bid me dispatch my business and begone. 131
I would —

Otti See!
Seb No, I'll finish. Do you think

I fear to speak the bare truth once for all?
All we have talked of, is, at bottom, fine
To suffer, there's a recompense in guilt; 135
One must be venturous and fortunate —
What is one young for, else? In age we'll sigh
O'er the wild reckless wicked days flown
over;

Still, we have lived, the vice was in its place
But to have eaten Luca's bread, have worn His clothes, have felt his money swell my purse — 141

Do lovers in romances sin that way?
Why, I was starving when I used to call
And teach you music, starving while you plucked me

These flowers to smell!
Otti My poor lost friend!

Seb He gave me 145
Life, nothing less; what if he did reproach
My perfidy, and threaten, and do more —
Had he no right? What was to wonder at?
He sat by us at table quietly,
Why must you lean across till our cheeks touched? 150

Could he do less than make pretense to strike?
'Tis not the crime's sake — I'd commit ten crimes

Greater, to have this crime wiped out, un-
done!

And you — O how feel you? Feel you for me?
Otti Well then, I love you better now than ever, 155

And best (look at me while I speak to you) —
Best for the crime, nor do I grieve, in truth,
This mask, this simulated ignorance,
This affectation of simplicity, 159
Falls off our crime; this naked crime of ours
May not now be looked over — look it down!
Great? Let it be great; but the joys it brought,
Pay they or no its price? Come: they or it!
Speak not! The past, would you give up the
past

Such as it is, pleasure and crime together? 165
Give up that noon I owned my love for you?
The garden's silence: even the single bee
Persisting in his toil, suddenly stopped,
And where he hid you only could surmise
By some campanula chalice set a-swing 170
Who stammered — "Yes, I love you?"

Seb And I drew
Back; put far back your face with both my
hands

Lest you should grow too full of me — your
face

So seemed athirst for my whole soul and body!
Otti And when I ventured to receive you
here, 175

Made you steal hither in the mornings —
Seb When

I used to look up 'neath the shrub-house here,
Till the red fire on its glazed windows spread
To a yellow haze?

Otti Ah — my sign was, the sun
Inflamed the sear side of yon chestnut-tree 180
Nipped by the first frost

Seb You would always laugh
At my wet boots; I had to stride through grass

Over my ankles
Otti Then our crowning night!

Seb The July night?
Otti The day of it too, Sebald!

When heaven's pillars seemed o'erbowled with heat, 185

Its black-blue canopy suffered descend
Close on us both, to weigh down each to each
And smother up all life except our life.
So lay we till the storm came.

Seb How it came!
Otti Buried in woods we lay, you recollect;
Swift ran the searching tempest overhead; 191
And ever and anon some bright white shaft
Burned through the pine-tree roof, here burned
and there,

119-120 turned . . . face. It was believed that the face of a murdered man looks toward heaven for vengeance.

As if God's messenger through the close wood screen

Plunged and replunged his weapon at a venture, 195

Feeling for guilty thee and me; then broke
The thunder like a whole sea overhead —

Seb Yes!

Otti. — While I stretched myself upon you,
hands

To hands, my mouth to your hot mouth, and shook

All my locks loose, and covered you with
them — 200

You, Sebald, the same you!

Seb. Slower, Ottima!

Otti And as we lay —

Seb Less vehemently! Love me!

Forgive me! Take not words, mere words, to
heart!

Your breath is worse than wine. Breathe slow, speak slow!

Do not lean on me!

Otti Sebald, as we lay, 205

Rising and falling only with our pants,
Who said, "Let death come now! 'Tis right to die!

Right to be punished! Naught completes such bliss

But woe!" Who said that?

Seb. How did we ever rise?

Was 't that we slept? Why did it end?

Otti I felt you 210

Taper into a point the ruffled ends

Of my loose locks 'twixt both your humid lips

My hair is fallen now, knot it again!

Seb I kiss you now, dear Ottima, now and
now!

This way? Will you forgive me — be once
more 215

My great queen?

Otti. Bind it thrice about my brow;

Crown me your queen, your spirit's arbitress,
Magnificent in sin. Say that!

Seb. I crown you

My great white queen, my spirit's arbitress,
Magnificent — 220

[From without is heard the voice of PIPPA singing—

The year's at the spring

And day's at the morn;

Morning's at seven;

The hillside's dew-pearled;

The lark's on the wing; 225

The snail's on the thorn:

God's in his heaven —

All's right with the world!

[PIPPA passes.

Seb God's in his heaven! Do you hear that? Who spoke?

You, you spoke!

Otti. Oh — that little ragged girl! 230

She must have rested on the step, we give
them

But this one holiday the whole year round.
Did you ever see our silk-mills — their inside?
There are ten silk-mills now belong to you.

She stoops to pick my double heartsease —
Sh! 235

She does not hear; call you out louder!

Seb Leave me!

Go, get your clothes on — dress those shoulders!

Otti Sebald?

Seb Wipe off that paint! I hate you.

Oth Miserable!

Seb My God, and she is emptied of it now!
Outright now! — how miraculously gone 240
All of the grace — had she not strange grace
once?

Why, the blank cheek hangs listless as it likes,

No purpose holds the features up together,
Only the cloven brow and puckered chin
Stay in their places; and the very hair, 245
That seemed to have a sort of life in it,
Drops, a dead web!

Oth. Speak to me — not of me!

Seb. — That round great full-orbed face,
where not an angle

Broke the delicious indolence — all broken!

Oth. To me — not of me! Ungrateful, perjured cheat! 250

A coward too, but ingrate's worse than all!
Beggar — my slave — a fawning, cringing lie!
Leave me! Betray me! I can see your drift!
A lie that walks and eats and drinks!

Seb. My God!

Those morbid olive faultless shoulder-blades —
I should have known there was no blood beneath! 256

Otti. You hate me then? You hate me
then?

Seb. To think

She would succeed in her absurd attempt,
And fascinate by sinning, show herself
Superior — guilt from its excess superior 260

To innocence! That little peasant's voice
Has righted all again Though I be lost,
I know which is the better, never fear,
Of vice or virtue, purity or lust,
Nature or trick! I see what I have done, 265
Entirely now! Oh, I am proud to feel Such torments — let the world take credit thence —

I, having done my deed, pay too its price!
I hate, hate — curse you! God's in his heaven!

Otti. — Me! 269

Me! no, no, Sebald, not yourself — kill me!

247 Speak to me—not of me! This is generally regarded as one of the great dramatic lines in the drama.

Mine is the whole crime. Do but kill me —
then
Yourself — then — presently — first hear me
speak!

I always meant to kill myself — wait, you!
Lean on my breast — not as a breast; don't love me

The more because you lean on me, my own Heart's Sebald! There, there, both deaths presently!

Seb. My brain is drowned now — quite drowned; all I feel

Is . . . is, at swift-recurring intervals,
A hurry-down within me, as of waters
Loosened to smother up some ghastly pit; 280
There they go — whirls from a black fiery sea!

Otti. Not me — to him, O God, be merciful!

SCENE: Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from the hillside to Orcana. Foreign Students of painting and sculpture, from Venice, assembled opposite the house of JULES, a young French statuary, at Passagno.

1st Student. Attention! My own post is beneath this window, but the pomegranate clump yonder will hide three or four of you with a little squeezing, and Schramm and his pipe must lie flat in the balcony. Four, five — who's a defaulter? We want everybody, for Jules must not be suffered to hurt his bride
when the jest's found out.

2d Stud. All here! Only our poet's away — never having much meant to be present, moonstrike him! The airs of that fellow, that Giovacchino! He was in violent love with himself, and had a fair prospect of thriving in his suit, so unmolested was it—when suddenly a woman falls in love with him, too; and out of pure jealousy he takes himself off to Trieste, immortal poem and all: whereto is this prophetical epitaph appended already, as Blu-phocks assures me — "Here a mammoth-poem lies, Fouled to death by butterflies" His own fault, the simpleton! Instead of cramp couplets, each like a knife in your entrails, he should write, says Bluphocks, both classically and intelligibly — Æsculapius, an Epic Calalogue of the drugs: Hebe's plaister — One strip Cools your lip. Phæbus' emulsion — One bottle Clears your throttle. Mercury's bolus — One box Cures —

3d Stud. Subside, my fine fellow! If the marriage was over by ten o'clock, Jules will certainly be here in a minute with his bride.

2d Stud. Good! — only, so should the poet's muse have been universally acceptable, says Bluphocks, et canibus nostris — and Delia not better known to our literary dogs than the boy Giovacchino! 35

1st Stud. To the point, now. Where's Gottlieb, the new-comer? Oh — listen, Gottlieb, to what has called down this piece of friendly vengeance on Jules, of which we now assemble to witness the winding-up We are all agreed, all in a tale, observe, when Jules shall burst out on us in a fury by and by. I am spokesman — the verses that are to undeceive Jules bear my name of Lutwyche — but each professes himself alike insulted by this strutting stone-squarer, who came along from Paris to Munich, and thence with a crowd of us to Venice and Passagno here, but proceeds in a day or two alone again — oh, alone indubitably! — to Rome and Florence. He, forsooth, take up his portion with these dissolute, brutalized, heartless bunglers! — so he was heard to call us all Now, is Schramm brutalized, I should like to know? Am I heartless? 55

Gottlieb. Why, somewhat heartless; for, suppose Jules a coxcomb as much as you choose, still, for this mere coxcombry, you will have brushed off — what do folks style it? — the bloom of his life. Is it too late to alter? 60
These love-letters now, you call his — I can't laugh at them

4th Stud. Because you never read the sham letters of our inditing which drew forth these.

Gott. His discovery of the truth will be 65 frightful

4th Stud. That's the joke. But you should have joined us at the beginning; there's no doubt he loves the girl — loves a model he might hire by the hour! 70

Gott. See here! "He has been accustomed," he writes, "to have Canova's women about him, in stone, and the world's women beside him, in flesh; these being as much below, as those above, his soul's aspiration, but now he is to have the reality." There you laugh again! I say, you wipe off the very dew of his youth. 75

1st Stud. Schramm! (Take the pipe out of his mouth, somebody!) Will Jules lose the bloom of his youth? 80

Schramm Nothing worth keeping is ever lost in this world: look at a blossom — it drops

Stage Directions: statuary, one who makes statues 16 Trieste, a city in Austria 24 Æsculapius, the god of medicine Giovacchino is ridiculed for regarding love as a disease to be cured by drugs, pills, etc. instead of as a passion to be enjoyed 25 Hebe, the goddess of youth and cupbearer to the gods 26 Phæbus, Apollo, the sun god
27 Mercury, the messenger of the gods. bolus, pill

34 et canibus nostris . . . Delia. From Virgil's Eclogues, 3, 67 "So that now not Delia herself is more familiar to our dogs" In the Eclogue, which is a poetry contest, Delia is the mistress of one of the singers She runs no risk in calling upon him at night, because she knows the watchdogs and they know her. 42 all in a tale, bound to tell the same story 72 Canova's women Antonio Canova (1757-1822) was an Italian sculptor He designed the church at Passagno, his birthplace, in it are several of his statues of women.

presently, having done its service and lasted its time; but fruits succeed, and where would be the blossom's place could it continue? As well affirm that your eye is no longer in your body, because its earliest favorite, whatever it may have first loved to look on, is dead and done with — as that any affection is lost to the soul when its first object, whatever happened first to satisfy it, is superseded in due course. Keep but ever looking, whether with the body's eye or the mind's, and you will soon find something to look on! Has a man done wondering at women? — there follow men, dead and alive, to wonder at. Has he done wondering at men? — there's God to wonder at; and the faculty of wonder may be, at the same time, old and tired enough with respect to its first object, and yet young and fresh sufficiently, so far as concerns its novel one. Thus —

1st Stud. Put Schramm's pipe into his mouth again! There, you see! Well, this Jules — a wretched fribble — oh, I watched his disportings at Possagno, the other day! Canova's gallery — you know, there he marches first resolutely past great works by the dozen without vouchsafing an eye; all at once he stops full at the Psiche-fanciulla — cannot pass that old acquaintance without a nod of encouragement — "In your new place, beauty? Then behave yourself as well here as at Munich — I see you!" Next he posts himself deliberately before the unfinished Pietà for half an hour without moving, till up he starts of a sudden, and thrusts his very nose into — I say, into — the group, by which gesture you are informed that precisely the sole point he had not fully mastered in Canova's practice was a certain method of using the drill in the articulation of the knee-joint — and that, likewise, has he mastered at length! Good-by, therefore, to poor Canova — whose gallery no longer needs detain his successor Jules, the predestinated novel thinker in marble!

5th Stud. Tell him about the women; go on to the women!

1st Stud. Why, on that matter he could never be supercilious enough. How should we be other (he said) than the poor devils you see, with those debasing habits we cherish? He was not to wallow in that mire, at least, he would wait, and love only at the proper time, and meanwhile put up with the Psiche-fanciulla. Now, I happened to hear of a young Greek — real Greek girl at Malamocco; a true Islander, do you see, with Alciphron's "hair like sea-moss" — Schramm knows! — white and quiet as an apparition, and fourteen years old at farthest — a daughter of Natalia, so she swears — that hag Natalia, who helps us to models at three lire an hour. We selected this girl for the heroine of our jest. So first, Jules received a scented letter — somebody had seen his Tydeus at the Academy, and my picture was nothing to it, a profound admirer bade him persevere — would make herself known to him ere long. (Paolina, my little friend of the Femce, transcribes divinely) And in due time, the mysterious correspondent gave certain hints of her peculiar charms — the pale cheeks, the black hair — whatever, in short, had struck us in our Malamocco model; we retained her name, too — 155 Phene, which is, by interpretation, sea-eagle. Now, think of Jules finding himself distinguished from the herd of us by such a creature! In his very first answer he proposed marrying his mistress; and fancy us over these letters, 160 two, three times a day, to receive and dispatch! I concocted the main of it: relations were in the way — secrecy must be observed — in fine, would he wed her on trust, and only speak to her when they were indissolubly united? St — st — Here they come!

6th Stud. Both of them! Heaven's love, speak softly, speak within yourselves!

5th Stud. Look at the bridegroom! Half his hair in storm and half in calm — patted 170 down over the left temple — like a frothy cup one blows on to cool it, and the same old blouse that he murders the marble in.

2d Stud. Not a rich vest like yours, Hannibal Scratchy! — rich, that your face may the 175 better set it off 6th Stud. And the bride! Yes, sure enough, our Phene! Should you have known her in her clothes? How magnificently pale!

Gott. She does not also take it for earnest, 180 I hope?

1st Stud. Oh, Natalia's concern, that is! We settle with Natalia.

6th Stud. She does not speak — has evidently let out no word. The only thing is, will 185 she equally remember the rest of her lesson, and repeat correctly all those verses which are to break the secret to Jules?

Gott. How he gazes on her! Pity — pity!

138 Alciphron, the most distinguished of the Greek epistolary writers of the second century A.D. 143 lire, plural of lira, an Italian coin worth about twenty cents. 146 Tydeus, an Homeric hero, one of the leaders in the expedition against Thebes. Jules is supposed to have made a statue of him for the Academy of Fine Arts in Venice. 150 Femce, Phenix, the principal theater in Venice. Paolina (l. 149) was an actress at the theater. 174 Hannibal Scratchy, a burlesque spelling of the name of the noted Italian painter, Annibale Caracci, attached in jest to one of the group.

105 fribble, a frivolous person. 110 Psiche-fanciulla, one of the most faultless of Canova's works, representing Psyche as a maiden with a butterfly. Fanciulla is Italian for young girl. Psyche was the beautiful maiden loved by Cupid. The statue is in the gallery at Possagno. 115 Pietà, a statue of the Virgin with the dead Christ in her arms. It is in the church at Possagno. 137 Malamocco, a small town on an island of the same name near Venice.

190 1st Stud They go in, now, silence! You three — not nearer the window, mind, than that pomegranate — just where the little girl, who a few minutes ago passed us singing, is seated!

II. NOON

SCENE: Over Orcana The house of JULES, who crosses its threshold with PHENE she is silent, on which JULES begins —

Do not die, Phene! I am yours now, you Are mine now, let fate reach me how she likes, If you'll not die; so, never die! Sit here — My workroom's single seat. I over-lean This length of hair and lustrous front; they turn 5

Like an entire flower upward: eyes, lips, last Your chin — no, last your throat turns: 'tis their scent

Pulls down my face upon you Nay, look ever This one way till I change, grow you — I could Change into you, beloved!

You by me, 10 And I by you, this is your hand in mine, And side by side we sit, all's true. Thank God!

I have spoken, speak you!

O my life to come! My Tydeus must be carved that's there in clay;

Yet how be carved, with you about the room? Where must I place you? When I think that once 16

This room-full of rough block-work seemed my heaven

Without you! Shall I ever work again, Get fairly into my old ways again, Bid each conception stand while, trait by trait, 20

My hand transfers its lineaments to stone? Will my mere fancies live near you, their truth —

The live truth, passing and repassing me, Sitting beside me?

Now speak!

Only first, See, all your letters! Was 't not well contrived? 25

Their hiding-place is Psyche's robe, she keeps Your letters next her skin Which drops out foremost?

Ah — this that swam down like a first moon-beam

Into my world!

Again those eyes complete Their melancholy survey, sweet and slow, 30 Of all my room holds, to return and rest On me, with pity, yet some wonder too, As if God bade some spint plague a world,

And this were the one moment of surprise And sorrow while she took her station, pausing 35

O'er what she sees, finds good, and must destroy!

What gaze you at? Those? Books, I told you of,

Let your first word to me rejoice them, too. This minion, a Coluthus, writ in red, Bister and azure by Bessarion's scribe — 40 Read this line — no, shame — Homer's be the Greek

First breathed me from the lips of my Greek girl!

This Odyssey in coarse black vivid type With faded yellow blossoms 'twixt page and page,

To mark great places with due gratitude; 45 "He said, and on Antinous directed

A bitter shaft" — a flower blots out the rest! Again upon your search? My statues, then! — Ah, do not mind that — better that will look

When cast in bronze — an Almain Kaiser, that, 50 Swart-green and gold, with truncheon based on hip

This, rather, turn to! What, unrecognized? I thought you would have seen that here you sit

As I imagined you — Hippolyta, Naked upon her bright Numidian horse. 55

Recall you this then? "Carve in bold relief" — So you commanded — "Carve, against I come, A Greek, in Athens, as our fashion was, Feasting, bay-filleted and thunder-free, Who rises 'neath the lifted myrtle-branch 60 'Praise those who slew Hipparchus!' cry the guests,

'While o'er thy head the singer's myrtle waves As erst above our champion: stand up, all' " See, I have labored to express your thought. Quite round, a cluster of mere hands and arms (Thrust in all senses, all ways, from all sides, Only consenting at the branch's end 67 They strain toward) serves for frame to a sole face, 39 minion, favorite. Coluthus, a Greek epic poet of the 6th century. His The Rape of Helen was discovered by Cardinal Bessarion (1395-1472), a noted Greek scholar. 40 Bister, brown. 46-47 He said . . . shaft, from the Odyssey, 22, 10. Upon returning home from his wanderings, Ulysses found his wife Penelope besieged with suitors. When he attacked them, Antinous was the first to fall. The flower that blotted out the rest of the story symbolizes Phene's love that robbed Lutwyche's plot of its bitterness. 50 Almain Kaiser, German emperor. 54 Hippolyta, queen of the Amazons, a race of women warriors. 55 Numidian. Numidia was a country in northern Africa, now Algeria. 59 bay-filleted and thunder-free. A crown of bay or laurel was supposed to be a protection against thunder and lightning because the tree was sacred to Apollo, the sun god. 61 Hipparchus, a tyrant of Athens slain in 514 B.C. by Harmodius and Aristogiton, who carried their swords concealed in myrtle branches. 67 consenting, coming together.

The Praiser's, in the center. who with eyes
Sightless, so bend they back to light inside 70
His brain where visionary forms throng up,
Sings, minding not that palpitating arch
Of hands and arms, nor the quick drip of wine
From the drenched leaves o'erhead, nor crowns cast off,

Violet and parsley crowns to trample on — 75
Sings, pausing as the patron-ghosts approve,
Devoutly their unconquerable hymn
But you must say a "well" to that — say
"well!"

Because you gaze — am I fantastic, sweet?
Gaze like my very life's-stuff, marble — marbly 80

Even to the silence! Why, before I found
The real flesh Phene, I inured myself
To see, throughout all nature, varied stuff
For better nature's birth by means of art,
With me, each substance tended to one form
Of beauty — to the human archetype 86
On every side occurred suggestive germs
Of that — the tree, the flower — or take the fruit —

Some rosy shape, continuing the peach,
Curved beewise o'er its bough, as rosy limbs,
Depending, nestled in the leaves, and just 91
From a cleft rose-peach the whole Dryad sprang

But of the stuffs one can be master of,
How I divined their capabilities!
From the soft-rinded smoothening facile chalk
That yields your outline to the air's embrace,
Half-softened by a halo's pearly gloom, 97
Down to the crisp impetuous steel, so sure
To cut its one confided thought clean out Of all the world But marble! — 'neath my tools 100

More pliable than jelly — as it were Some clear primordial creature dug from depths

In the earth's heart, where itself breeds itself,
And whence all baser substance may be worked,

Refine it off to air, you may — condense it 105
Down to the diamond — is not metal there,
When o'er the sudden speck my chisel trips?
— Not flesh, as flake off flake I scale, approach,

Lay bare those bluish veins of blood asleep?
Lurks flame in no strange windings where,
surprised 110

By the swift implement sent home at once,
Flushes and glowings radiate and hover
About its track?

Phene? what — why is this?
That whitening cheek, those still dilating eyes!

75 parsley, frequently used by the ancients in crowns worn at feasts because of its strong fragrance 92. Dryad, a wood nymph

Ah, you will die — I knew that you would
die! 115

PHENE begins, on his having long remained silent

Now the end's coming; to be sure, it must Have ended sometime! Tush, why need I
speak

Their foolish speech? I cannot bring to mind
One half of it, beside; and do not care
For old Natalia now, nor any of them 120
Oh, you — what are you? — if I do not try
To say the words Natalia made me learn,
To please your friends — it is to keep myself
Where your voice lifted me, by letting that Proceed, but can it? Even you, perhaps, 125
Cannot take up, now you have once let fall,
The music's life, and me along with that —
No, or you would! We'll stay, then, as we are —
Above the world.

You creature with the eyes!
If I could look forever up to them, 130
As now you let me — I believe all sin,
All memory of wrong done, suffering borne,
Would drop down, low and lower, to the earth
Whence all that's low comes, and there touch and stay —

Never to overtake the rest of me, 135
All that, unspotted, reaches up to you,
Drawn by those eyes! What rises is myself,
Not me the shame and suffering, but they sink,

Are left, I rise above them Keep me so,
Above the world!

But you sink, for your eyes 140
Are altering — altered! Stay — "I love you,
love" —

I could prevent it if I understood
More of your words to me, was 't in the tone
Or the words, your power?

Or stay — I will repeat Their speech, if that contents you! Only
change 145

No more, and I shall find it presently
Far back here, in the brain yourself filled up.
Natalia threatened me that harm should follow

Unless I spoke their lesson to the end,
But harm to me, I thought she meant, not
you 150

Your friends — Natalia said they were your friends

And meant you well — because, I doubted it,
Observing (what was very strange to see)
On every face, so different in all else,
The same smile girls like me are used to bear,
But never men, men cannot stoop so low, 156
Yet your friends, speaking of you, used that
smile,

That hateful smirk of boundless self-conceit
Which seems to take possession of the world

And make of God a tame confederate, 160
 Purveyor to their appetites — you know!
 But still Natalia said they were your friends,
 And they assented though they smiled the
 more,

And all came round me — that thin English-
 man 164

With light lank hair seemed leader of the rest,
 He held a paper — "What we want," said he,
 Ending some explanation to his friends —
 "Is something slow, involved and mystical,
 To hold Jules long in doubt, yet take his taste
 And lure him on until, at innermost 170
 Where he seeks sweetness' soul, he may find
 — this!

— As in the apple's core, the noisome fly;
 For insects on the rind are seen at once,
 And brushed aside as soon, but this is found
 Only when on the lips or loathing tongue" 175
 And so he read what I have got by heart:
 I'll speak it — "Do not die, love! I am
 yours" —

No — is not that, or like that, part of words
 Yourself began by speaking? Strange to lose What cost such pains to learn! Is this more right? 180

*I am a painter who cannot paint;
 In my life, a devil rather than saint;
 In my brain, as poor a creature too.
 No end to all I cannot do!
 Yet do one thing at least I can — 185
 Love a man or hate a man
 Supremely; thus my lore began
 Through the Valley of Love I went,
 In the loveliest spot to abide,
 And just on the verge where I pitched my tent,
 I found Hate dwelling beside 191
 (Let the Bridegroom ask what the painter
 meant,*

*Of his Bride, of the peerless Bride!)
 And further, I traversed Hate's grove,
 In the hatefullest nook to dwell, 195
 But lo, where I flung myself prone, couched
 Love*

*Where the shadow threefold fell
 (The meaning—those black bride's-eyes above,
 Not a painter's lip should tell!)*

'And here,' said he, "Jules probably will ask, 200
 You have black eyes, Love — you are, sure
 enough,
 My peerless bride — then do you tell indeed
 What needs some explanation! What means
 this?"
 — And I am to go on, without a word —

*So, I grew wise in Love and Hate, 205
 From simple that I was of late.
 Once, when I loved, I would enlase
 Breast, eyelids, hands, feet, form, and face
 Of her I loved, in one embrace —
 As if by mere love I could love immensely! 210
 Once, when I hated, I would plunge
 My sword, and wipe with the first lunge
 My foe's whole life out like a sponge —
 As if by mere hate I could hate intensely!
 But now I am wiser, know better the fashion
 How passion seeks and from its opposite passion; 216*

*And if I see cause to love more, hate more Than ever man loved, ever hated before —
 And seek in the Valley of Love
 The nest, or the nook in Hate's Grove 220
 Where my soul may surely reach
 The essence, naught less, of each,
 The Hate of all Hates, the Love
 Of all Loves, in the Valley or Grove —
 I find them the very warders 225
 Each of the other's borders.
 When I love most, Love is disguised
 In Hate, and when Hate is surprised
 In Love, then I hate most: ask 229
 How Love smiles through Hate's iron casque,
 Hate grins through Love's rose-braided mask—
 And how, having hated thee,
 I sought long and painfully
 To reach thy heart, nor prick
 The skin but pierce to the quick — 235
 Ask this, my Jules, and be answered straight
 By thy bride — how the painter Lutwyche can hate!*

JULES interposes

Lutwyche! Who else? But all of them, no
 doubt,

Hated me: they at Venice — presently 239
 Their turn, however! You I shall not meet,
 If I dreamed, saying this would wake me

Keep
 What's here, the gold—we cannot meet again,
 Consider! and the money was but meant
 For two years' travel, which is over now,
 All chance or hope or care or need of it 245
 This — and what comes from selling these,
 my casts

And books and medals, except — let them go
 Together, so the produce keeps you safe
 Out of Natalia's clutches! If by chance (For all's chance here) I should survive the gang 250

At Venice, root out all fifteen of them,
 We might meet somewhere, since the world is wide.

181-237 Although these lines are intentionally involved in manner, they reveal the hateful plot to Jules, and he learns what Phene has been

241 If I dreamed, etc. If I have been in love with a phantom-Phene, saying as I do, "It's over," will bring me back to the harsh truth

From without is heard the voice of PIPPA, singing —

*Give her but a least excuse to love me!
When — where —
How — can this arm establish her above me,
If fortune fixed her as my lady there, 256
There already, to eternally reprove me?
("Hst!") — said Kate the Queen;
But "Oh!" cried the maiden, binding her
tresses,
" 'Tis only a page that carols unseen, 260
Crumbling your hounds their messes!")*

*Is she wronged? — To the rescue of her honor,
My heart!
Is she poor? — What costs it to be styled a donor?
Merely an earth to cleave, a sea to part 265
But that fortune should have thrust all this upon her!
("Nay, hst!" — bade Kate the Queen;
And 'still cried the maiden, binding her tresses,
" 'Tis only a page that carols unseen,
Fitting your hawks their jesses!") 270
[PIPPA passes*

JULES resumes

What name was that the little girl sang forth?
Kate? The Cornaro, doubtless, who renounced
The crown of Cyprus to be lady here
At Asolo, where still her memory stays,
And peasants sing how once a certain page 275
Pined for the grace of her so far above
His power of doing good to, "Kate the Queen—
She never could be wronged, be poor," he sighed,
"Need him to help her!"

Yes, a bitter thing
To see our lady above all need of us; 280
Yet so we look ere we will love; not I,
But the world looks so If whoever loves
Must be, in some sort, god or worshiper,
The blessing or the blest one, queen or page,
Why should we always choose the page's
part? 285

Here is a woman with utter need of me —
I find myself queen here, it seems!

How strange!

Look at the woman here with the new soul,
Like my own Psyche — fresh upon her lips
Alit, the visionary butterfly, 290
Waiting my word to enter and make bright,
Or flutter off and leave all blank as first.
This body had no soul before, but slept

258 Kate the Queen Caterina Cornaro, the last queen of the island of Cyprus, off the coast of Turkey, was induced to yield her kingdom to the Republic of Venice in 1489. She was received in Venice with great honor and was assigned a palace and a court at Asolo (line 274) 270 jesses. A jess is a strap of leather or silk fastened round the leg of a hawk and usually fitted with a ring to which the leash of the hunter is attached 290 butterfly, symbol of the soul and of immortality.

Or stirred, was beauteous or ungainly, free
From taint or foul with stain, as outward
things 295
Fastened their image on its passiveness,
Now, it will wake, feel, live — or die again!
Shall to produce form out of unshaped stuff
Be Art — and further, to evoke a soul From form be nothing? This new soul is
mine! 300

Now, to kill Lutwyche, what would that do?
— save

A wretched dauber, men will hoot to death
Without me, from their hooting Oh, to hear
God's voice plain as I heard it first, before They broke in with their laughter! I heard
them 305

Henceforth, not God.

To Ancona — Greece — some isle!
I wanted silence only, there is clay
Everywhere One may do whate'er one likes
In Art, the only thing is, to make sure That one does like it — which takes pains to
know 310

Scatter all this, my Phene—this mad dream!
Who, what is Lutwyche, what Natalia's
friends,

What the whole world except our love — my
own,

Own Phene? But I told you, did I not,
Ere night we travel for your land — some isle
With the sea's silence on it? Stand aside— 316
I do but break these paltry models up
To begin Art afresh Meet Lutwyche, I —
And save him from my statue meeting him?
Some unsuspected isle in the far seas! 320
Like a god going through his world, there stands

One mountain for a moment in the dusk,
Whole brotherhoods of cedars on its brow,
And you are ever by me while I gaze — Are in my arms as now — as now — as
now! 325

Some unsuspected isle in the far seas!
Some unsuspected isle in far-off seas!

SCENE. Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from Orcana to the Turret Two or three of the Austrian Police loitering with BLUPHOCKS, an English vagabond, just in view of the Turret

Bluphocks So, that is your Pippa, the little girl who passed us singing? Well, your Bishop's Intendant's money shall be honestly

306 Ancona, a city on the east coast of Italy 318-319 Meet . . him? Jules means, "I will not kill Lutwyche in a duel, because I want him to have the pain of seeing a fine complete work of mine in marble"

3 Intendant's money The Bishop's Superintendent (Maffeo, or Ugo) has bribed Bluphocks to seduce Pippa, the rightful heir to the estate that the Bishop has just inherited from his brother Maffeo, who is in charge of the estate, will expect a large reward for his services

earned — now, don't make me that sour face 5 because I bring the Bishop's name into the business; we know he can have nothing to do with such horrors; we know that he is a saint and all that a bishop should be, who is a great man beside Oh, were but every worm a maggot,
 10 Every fly a grig, Every bough a Christmas faggot,
Every tune a jig! In fact, I have abjured all religions; but the last I inclined to was the Armenian for I have traveled, do you see,
 and at Koenigsberg, Prussia Improper (so 15 styled because there's a sort of bleak hungry sun there), you might remark, over a venerable house-porch, a certain Chaldee inscription; and brief as it is, a mere glance at it used absolutely to change the mood of every 20 bearded passenger In they turned, one and all; the young and lightsome, with no irreverent pause, the aged and decrepit, with a sensible alacrity: 'twas the Grand Rabbi's abode, in short. Struck with curiosity, I lost no time 25 in learning Syriac — (these are vowels, you dogs — follow my stick's end in the mud — Celarent, Daril, Ferio!) and one morning presented myself, spelling-book in hand, a, b, c,
 — I picked it out letter by letter, and what 30 was the purport of this miraculous posy?
 Some cherished legend of the past, you'll say — "How Moses hocus-pocussed Egypt's land with fly and locust" — or "How to Jonah sounded harshish, Get thee up and go to Tar-35 shish" — or "How the angel meeting Balaam, Straight his ass returned a salaam" In no wise! "Shackabrack — Boach — somebody or other — Isaach, Re-cei-ver, Pur-cha-ser, and Ex-chan-ger of — Stolen Goods!" So, talk to 40 me of the religion of a bishop! I have renounced all bishops save Bishop Beveridge!
 — mean to live so — and die — As some Greek dog-sage, dead and merry, Hellward bound in Charon's wherry, With food for both 45 worlds, under and upper, Lupine-seed and Hecate's supper, And never an obolus . . .
 (though thanks to you, or this Intendant through you, or this Bishop through his Intendant — I possess a burning pocket-full of zwanzigers) . . . To pay the Stygian Ferry!

 50 1st Policeman. There is the girl, then; go and deserve them the moment you have pointed out to us Signor Luigi and his mother [To the rest] I have been noticing a house yonder, this long while — not a shutter un-55 closed since morning!

2d Pol. Old Luca Gaddi's, that owns the silk-mills here. He dozes by the hour, wakes up, sighs deeply, says he should like to be Prince Metternich, and then dozes again after 60 having bidden young Sebald, the foreigner, set his wife to playing draughts. Never molest such a household; they mean well.

Blup Only, cannot you tell me something of this little Pippa, I must have to do with?
 65 One could make something of that name.
 Pippa — that is, short for Felippa — riming to Panurge consults Hertrippa — Believest thou, King Agrippa? Something might be done with that name.

2d Pol. Put into rime that your head and a ripe muskmelon would not be dear at half a zwanziger! Leave this fooling, and look out;
 the afternoon's over or nearly so

3d Pol. Where in this passport of Signor
 75 Luigi does our Principal instruct you to watch him so narrowly? There? What's there beside a simple signature? (That English fool's busy watching.)

2d Pol. Flourish all round — "Put all pos-80 sible obstacles in his way," oblong dot at the end — "Detain him till further advices reach you"; scratch at bottom — "Send him back on pretense of some informality in the above"; ink-spirt on right-hand side (which is the case 85 here) — "Arrest him at once." Why and wherefore, I don't concern myself, but my instructions amount to this: if Signor Luigi leaves home tonight for Vienna — well and good, the passport deposited with us for our 90 visa is really for his own use, they have misinformed the Office, and he means well; but let him stay over tonight — there has been the pretense we suspect, the accounts of his corresponding and holding intelligence with 95

10 grig, cricket 13 Armenian Bluphocks has always adopted the form of religion best suited to his immediate purpose 14 Koenigsberg, a fortified city of East Prussia, beyond the border of "Prussia Proper," the name applied to the arm of land between Poland and the Baltic Sea 17
Chaldee inscription The Chaldeans spoke a Semitic dialect They were the leading people in ancient Babylonia 25 Syriac, the common language of Western Asia from the third to the eighth century It has five vowels 27 Cela- rent, Daril, Ferio, coined words used in formal logic to designate certain types of reasoning 34 harshish, harsh Tarshish, an ancient city, mentioned in the Old Testament
 (see Jonah, 1:1-2) 35 Balaam See Numbers, 22 41
Bishop Beveridge Bluphocks is making a pun on the name of a Calvinist theologian who lived in the 17th century 44 Charon's wherry Charon was a god of hell It was his task to carry the shades of the dead across the river Styx (the Stygian Ferry of line 50) The price of the passage was an obolus (line 46), a small silver coin worth about fifteen cents, found in the mouth of the body 45 Lupine, a kind of plant Lupine means wolfish 46 Hecate's supper
 Hecate was a goddess of hell who was propitiated by frequent gifts of food, usually placed at cross-roads.

50 zwanzigers. A zwanziger is an Austrian coin worth about fifteen cents 60 Metternich, a famous Austrian statesman (1773-1859) noted for his policy of conservatism and repression He was an enemy of Italy Cf The Italian in England, page 209 68 Panurge. Hertrippa Panurge is a character in Gargantua and Pantagruel, a romance by the French writer Rabelais (1490-1553) Panurge consults the magician Hertrippa in regard to marriage 68-69 Believest thou, Agrippa From Acts, 26:27 Paul tells the story of his conversion to Christianity to Festus and Agrippa, and asks, "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets?" I know thou believest" 71-73 Put into rime . . . zwanziger
 The policeman ridicules Bluphocks by telling him to make a rime out of the fact that his head and a ripe muskmelon together are worth only seven and a half cents, the value of a muskmelon alone

the Carbonari are correct, we arrest him at once, tomorrow comes Venice, and presently Spielberg. Bluphocks makes the signal, sure enough! That is he, entering the turret with 100 his mother, no doubt.

III EVENING

SCENE Inside the Turret on the Hall above Asolo
LUIGI and his MOTHER entering.

Mother If there blew wind, you'd hear a long sigh, easing

The utmost heaviness of music's heart

Luigi. Here in the archway?

Mother Oh no, no — in farther, Where the echo is made, on the ridge

Luigi Here surely, then
How plain the tap of my heel as I leaped up!
Hark — "Lucius Junius!" The very ghost of a voice 6

Whose body is caught and kept by . . . what are those?

Mere withered wallflowers, waving overhead?
They seem an elvish group with thin bleached hair

That lean out of their topmost fortress — look
And listen, mountain men, to what we say, 11
Hand under chin of each grave earthy face
Up and show faces all of you! — "All of you!"
That's the king dwarf with the scarlet comb,
old Franz,

Come down and meet your fate? Hark —
"Meet your fate!" 15

Mother Let him not meet it, my Luigi — do not Go to his City! Putting crime aside,

Half of these ills of Italy are feigned;
Your Pellicos and writers for effect,
Write for effect.

Luigi. Hush! Say A writes, and B 20

Mother These A's and B's write for effect, I say.

Then, evil is in its nature loud, while good
Is silent, you hear each petty injury,
None of his virtues; he is old beside,
Quiet and kind, and densely stupid. Why 25
Do A and B kill not him themselves?

Luigi They teach
Others to kill him — me — and, if I fail,
Others to succeed; now, if A tried and failed,
I could not teach that; mine's the lesser task.
Mother, they visit night by night . . .

96 Carbonari, a secret society of Italian patriots organized in 1820 to help free Italy from the control of Austria
98 Spielberg, an Austrian prison

Evening 6 Lucius Junius, Lucius Junius Brutus, who led the revolt against the Tarquins in Rome and established the Roman Republic in 509 B.C. Luigi is contemplating a similar deed 14 Franz, Francis I, emperor of Austria (1804-1835) 19 Pellicos Silvio Pellico (1788-1854) was an Italian patriot and a member of the Carbonari. He was imprisoned for eleven years, part of the time in Spielberg Castle.

Mother — You, Luigi? 30

Ah, will you let me tell you what you are?

Luigi Why not? Oh, the one thing you fear to hint,

You may assure yourself I say and say
Ever to myself! At times — nay, even as now
We sit — I think my mind is touched, suspect
All is not sound, but is not knowing that, 36
What constitutes one sane or otherwise?

I know I am thus — so, all is right again
I laugh at myself as through the town I walk,
And see men merry as if no Italy 40

Were suffering; then I ponder — "I am rich, Young, healthy, why should this fact trouble
me,

More than it troubles these?" But it does trouble

No, trouble's a bad word, for as I walk
There's springing and melody and giddiness,
And old quaint turns and passages of my
youth, 46

Dreams long forgotten, little in themselves,
Return to me — whatever may amuse me
And earth seems in a truce with me, and
heaven

Accords with me, all things suspend their strife, 50

The very cicala laughs "There goes he, and
there!

Feast him, the time is short; he is on his
way

For the world's sake, feast him this once, our
friend!"

And in return for all this, I can trip
Cheerfully up the scaffold-steps. I go 55
This evening, mother!

Mother. But mistrust yourself —
Mistrust the judgment you pronounce on him!

Luigi. Oh, there I feel — am sure that I am right!

Mother. Mistrust your judgment then, of the mere means

To this wild enterprise; say, you are right —
How should one in your state e'er bring to
pass 61

What would require a cool head, a cool heart,
And a calm hand? You never will escape

Luigi. Escape? To even wish that would spoil all.

The dying is best part of it Too much 65
Have I enjoyed these fifteen years of mine,
To leave myself excuse for longer life;
Was not life pressed down, running o'er with
joy,

That I might finish with it ere my fellows
Who, sparerlier feasted, make a longer stay? 70
I was put at the board-head, helped to all
At first; I rise up happy and content
God must be glad one loves his world so
much.

I can give news of earth to all the dead

Who ask me: — last year's sunsets, and great
stars 75
Which had a right to come first and see ebb
The crimson wave that drifts the sun away —
Those crescent moons with notched and burning rims
That strengthened into sharp fire, and there
stood,
Impatient of the azure — and that day 80
In March, a double rainbow stopped the storm —
May's warm slow yellow moonlit summer nights —
Gone are they, but I have them in my soul!
Mother. (He will not go!)

Luigi. You smile at me? 'Tis true —
Voluptuousness, grotesqueness, ghastliness, 85
Environ my devotedness as quaintly
As round about some antique altar wreath
The rose festoons, goats' horns, and oxen's skulls.

Mother See now, you reach the city, you must cross
His threshold — how?

Luigi Oh, that's if we conspired! 90
Then would come pains in plenty, as you guess —
But guess not how the qualities most fit
For such an office, qualities I have,
Would little stead me, otherwise employed,
Yet prove of rarest merit only here. 95
Everyone knows for what his excellence
Will serve, but no one ever will consider For what his worst defect might serve; and
yet
Have you not seen me range our coppice
yonder
In search of a distorted ash? — I find 100
The wry spoilt branch a natural perfect bow
Fancy the thrice-sage, thrice-precautioned
man
Arriving at the palace on my errand!
No, no! I have a handsome dress packed up —
White satin here, to set off my black hair, 105
In I shall march — for you may watch your life out
Behind thick walls, make friends there to betray you;
More than one man spoils everything March straight —
Only, no clumsy knife to fumble for,
Take the great gate, and walk (not saunter)
on 110
Through guards and guards — I have rehearsed it all
Inside the turret here a hundred times.
Don't ask the way of whom you meet, observe!
But where they cluster thickest is the door
Of doors, they'll let you pass — they'll never blab 115
Each to the other, he knows not the favorite,

Whence he is bound and what's his business
now.
Walk in — straight up to him; you have no
knife.
Be prompt, how should he scream? Then, out with you!
Italy, Italy, my Italy! 120
You're free, you're free! Oh, mother, I could
dream
They got about me — Andrea from his exile, Pier from his dungeon, Gualtier from his
grave!
Mother. Well, you shall go Yet seems this patriotism
The easiest virtue for a selfish man 125
To acquire, he loves himself — and next, the
world —
If he must love beyond — but naught between.
As a short-sighted man sees naught midway
His body and the sun above. But you
Are my adored Luigi, ever obedient 130
To my least wish, and running o'er with love,
I could not call you cruel or unkind.
Once more, your ground for killing him! —
then go!
Luigi. Now do you try me, or make sport of me?
How first the Austrians got these provinces
(If that is all, I'll satisfy you soon) 136 — Never by conquest but by cunning, for
That treaty whereby . . .
Mother Well?
Luigi (Sure, he's arrived,
The tell-tale cuckoo; spring's his confidant,
And he lets out her April purposes!) 140
Or . . . better go at once to modern time
He has . . . they have . . . in fact, I understand
But can't restate the matter, that's my boast Others could reason it out to you, and prove Things they have made me feel.
Mother Why go tonight? 145
Morn's for adventure. Jupiter is now
A morning-star. I cannot hear you, Luigi!
Luigi "I am the bright and morningstar," saith God —
And, "to such an one I give the morning-
star"
The gift of the morning-star! Have I God's gift 150
Of the morning-star?

122-123 Andrea, Pier, Gualtier, imaginary former conspirators against the tyranny of Austria. 135 How provinces. Austria gained part of Northern Italy by conquest in 1813, and the rest by the terms of the treaty made at the Congress of Vienna in 1815. 146-147 Jupiter morning- star. When a planet rises after midnight, it is called a morning star. It is now evening, and the mother urges Luigi to wait until morning—until Jupiter rises. 148 I am, etc
From Revelation, 22:16—"I Jesus am the bright and morning star." 149 to . . . star From Revelation, 2:26-28 —"And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works to the end, to him will I give the morning star."

Mother Chiara will love to see
That Jupiter an evening-star next June.

Luigi True, mother. Well for those who live through June!

Great noontides, thunder-storms, all glaring
pomps

That triumph at the heels of June the god 155

Leading his revel through our leafy world

Yes, Chiara will be here.

Mother In June remember,
Yourself appointed that month for her coming

Luigi. Was that low noise the echo?

Mother The night-wind
She must be grown — with her blue eyes up-
turned 160

As if life were one long and sweet surprise:

In June she comes

Luigi We were to see together
The Titian at Treviso There, again!

[From without is heard the voice of PIPPA, singing —

*A king lived long ago,
In the morning of the world,* 165

When earth was nigher heaven than now,

And the king's locks curled,

Disparting o'er a forehead full

As the milk-white space 'twixt horn and horn

Of some sacrificial bull — 170

Only calm as a babe new-born:

For he was got to a sleepy mood,

So safe from all decrepitude,

Age with its bane, so sure gone by,

(The gods so loved him while he dreamed) 175

That, having lived thus long, there seemed

No need the king should ever die

Luigi No need that sort of king should ever die!

Among the rocks his city was;

Before his palace, in the sun, 180

He sat to see his people pass,

And judge them every one

From its threshold of smooth stone

They haled him many a valley-thief 185

Caught in the sheep-pens, robber-chief

Swarthy and shameless, beggar-cheat,

Spy-prowler, or rough pirate found

On the sea-sand left aground;

And sometimes clung about his feet,

With bleeding lip and burning cheek, 190

A woman, bitterest wrong to speak

151 Chiara, Luigi's betrothed The mother hopes to keep Luigi from going by reminding him of her 163 The Titian, an altar-piece by Titian, a noted Venetian painter (1477-1576), in the Cathedral of San Pietro, at Treviso, an Italian town seventeen miles from Venice 164 A king, etc This song was first published in 1835, it was changed considerably when adapted to this drama

Of one with sullen thickset brows:

And sometimes from the prison-house

The angry priests a pale wretch brought,

Who through some chink had pushed and pressed 195

On knees and elbows, belly and breast,

Worm-like into the temple — caught

He was by the very god,

Who ever in the darkness strode

Backward and forward, keeping watch 200

O'er his brazen bowls, such rogues to catch!

These, all and every one,

The king judged, sitting in the sun.

Luigi That king should still judge sitting in the sun!

His councilors, on left and right, 205

Looked anxious up — but no surprise

Disturbed the king's old smiling eyes

Where the very blue had turned to white

'Tis said, a Python scared one day

The breathless city, till he came, 210

With forked tongue and eyes on flame,

Where the old king sat to judge away;

But when he saw the sweepy hair

Girt with a crown of berries rare

Which the god will hardly give to wear 215

To the maiden who singeth, dancing bare

In the altar-smoke by the pine-torch lights,

At his wondrous forest rules —

Seeing this, he did not dare

Approach that threshold in the sun, 220

Assault the old king smiling there

'Such grace had kings when the world begun!

[PIPPA passes

Luigi. And such grace have they, now that the world ends!

The Python at the city, on the throne,

And brave men, God would crown for slaying
him, 225

Lurk in by-corners lest they fall his prey

Are crowns yet to be won in this late time,

Which weakness makes me hesitate to reach?

'Tis God's voice calls; how could I stay?

Farewell!

SCENE. Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from the Turret to the Bishop's Brother's House, close to the Duomo S Maria Poor GIRLS sitting on the steps.

1st Girl. There goes a swallow to Venice —
the stout seafarer!

Seeing those birds fly makes one wish for
wings.

Let us all wish; you wish first!

2d Girl. I? This sunset

To finish.

3d Girl That old — somebody I know,
Grayer and older than my grandfather, 5

To give me the same treat he gave last week —
Feeding me on his knee with fig-peckers, Lampreys and red Breganze-wine, and mumbling

The while some folly about how well I fare,
Let sit and eat my supper quietly; 10
Since had he not himself been late this morning

Detained at — never mind where — had he
not —

“Eh, baggage, had I not!” —

2d Girl How she can lie!

3d Girl Look there — by the nails!

2d Girl What makes your fingers red?

3d Girl Dipping them into wine to write bad words with 15

On the bright table; how he laughed!

1st Girl My turn.

Spring's come and summer's coming I would wear

A long loose gown, down to the feet and hands,
With plaits here, close about the throat, all
day;

And all night lie, the cool long nights, in bed,
And have new milk to drink, apples to eat, 21
Deuzans and junetings, leather-coats — ah, I should say,

This is away in the fields — miles!

3d Girl Say at once

You'd be at home, she'd always be at home!
Now comes the story of the farm among 25
The cherry orchards, and how April snowed
White blossoms on her as she ran. Why, fool, They've rubbed the chalk-mark out, how tall
you were,

Twisted your starling's neck, broken his cage,
Made a dung-hill of your garden!

1st Girl They destroy 30

My garden since I left them? well — perhaps
I would have done so, so I hope they have!
A fig-tree curled out of our cottage wall;
They called it mine — I have forgotten why —
It must have been there long ere I was born,
Cric — cric — I think I hear the wasps o'er-
head 36

Pricking the papers strung to flutter there
And keep off birds in fruit-time — coarse long papers,

And the wasps eat them, prick them through and through

3d Girl How her mouth twitches! Where was I? — before 40

She broke in with her wishes and long gowns
And wasps — would I be such a fool! — Oh,
here!

This is my way I answer everyone

7 fig-peckers, birds that feed on figs 8 Lampreys, eel-like fish, considered a delicacy 9 Breganze-wine, wine made at Breganza, a village in northern Italy 22 Deuzans, junetings, leather-coats, varieties of apples

Who asks me why I make so much of him — (If you say, “you love him” — straight “he'll not be gulled!”) 45

“He that seduced me when I was a girl
Thus high — had eyes like yours, or hair like
yours,

Brown, red, white,” — as the case may be,
that pleases!

See how that beetle burnishes in the path! 49
There sparkles he along the dust, and, there —
Your journey to that maize-tuft spoiled at least!

1st Girl When I was young, they said if you killed one

Of those sunshiny beetles that his friend
Up there would shine no more that day nor next.

2d Girl When you were young? Nor are you young, that's true. 55

How your plump arms, that were, have dropped away!

Why, I can span them. Cecco beats you
still?

No matter, so you keep your curious hair.
I wish they'd find a way to dye our hair
Your color — any lighter tint, indeed, 60
Than black; the men say they are sick of black,

Black eyes, black hair!

4th Girl Sick of yours, like enough

Do you pretend you ever tasted lampreys
And ortolans? Giovita, of the palace, Engaged (but there's no trusting him) to slice
me 65

Polenta with a knife that had cut up

An ortolan.

2d Girl Why, there! Is not that Pippa

We are to talk to, under the window —
quick! —

Where the lights are?

1st Girl That she? No, or she would sing,
For the Intendant said —

3d Girl Oh, you sing first! 70

Then, if she listens and comes close — I'll tell you —

Sing that song the young English noble made,
Who took you for the purest of the pure,
And meant to leave the world for you — what fun!

2d Girl. [Sings]

You'll love me yet! — and I can tarry 75

Your love's protracted growing

*June reared that bunch of flowers you carry,
From seeds of April's sowing.*

I plant a heartfull now: some seed

At least is sure to strike, 80

64 ortolan, a small singing bird, regarded as a table delicacy 66 Polenta, corn-meal porridge

*And yield — w'at you'll not pluck indeed,
Not love, but, may be, like.*

*You'll look at least on love's remains,
A grave's one violet:
Your look? — that pays a thousand pains.
What's death? You'll love me yet!* 86

3d Girl. [To PIPPA who approaches] Oh, you may come closer — we shall not eat you! Why, you seem the very person that the great rich handsome Englishman has fallen so violently in love with. I'll tell you all about it

IV NIGHT

SCENE. Inside the Palace by the Duomo. MONSIGNOR, dismissing his Attendants.

Monsignor. Thanks, friends, many thanks! I chiefly desire life now, that I may recompense every one of you. Most I know something of already. What, a repast prepared? 5 Benedicite benedicatur . . . ugh, ugh! Where was I? Oh, as you were remarking, Ugo, the weather is mild, very unlike winter-weather, but I am a Sicilian, you know, and shiver in your Julys here. To be sure, when 'twas full 10 summer at Messina, as we priests used to cross in procession the great square on Assumption Day, you might see our thickest yellow tapers twist suddenly in two, each like a falling star, or sink down on themselves in 15 a gore of wax. But go, my friends, but go! [To the Intendant] Not you, Ugo! [The others leave the apartment] I have long wanted to converse with you, Ugo.

Intendant Uguccio —

20 Mon. . . . 'guccio Stefani, man! of Ascoli, Fermo, and Fossombruno;—what I do need instructing about, are these accounts of your administration of my poor brother's affairs. Ugh! I shall never get through a third part 25 of your accounts; take some of these dainties before we attempt it, however. Are you bashful to that degree? For me, a crust and water suffice.

Inten. Do you choose this especial night to 30 question me?

Mon. This night, Ugo. You have managed my late brother's affairs since the death of our elder brother: fourteen years and a month, all but three days. On the Third of December, I 35 find him —

90 Englishman, Bluphocks.

Night. 5. Benedicite benedicatur, a form of blessing for the food—"Let it be consecrated with a good saying" 8 a Sicilian. The Bishop has come from Messina, in Sicily, to take charge of his brother's estate 12 Assumption Day, a church festival celebrated on August 15 to commemorate the Ascension of the Virgin Mary 20-21 Ascoli, Fermo, Fossombruno, towns of central Italy

Inten. If you have so intimate an acquaintance with your brother's affairs, you will be tender of turning so far back, they will hardly bear looking into, so far back.

Mon. Aye, aye, ugh, ugh — nothing but 40 disappointments here below! I remark a considerable payment made to yourself on this Third of December. Talk of disappointments! There was a young fellow here, Jules, a foreign sculptor — I did my utmost to advance, 45 that the Church might be a gainer by us both; he was going on hopefully enough, and of a sudden he notifies to me some marvelous change that has happened in his notions of Art. Here's his letter — "He never had a 50 clearly conceived Ideal within his brain till today. Yet since his hand could manage a chisel, he has practiced expressing other men's Ideals; and, in the very perfection he has attained to, he foresees an ultimate failure. 55 his unconscious hand will pursue its prescribed course of old years, and will reproduce with a fatal expertness the ancient types, let the novel one appear never so palpably to his spirit. There is but one method of escape: 60 confiding the virgin type to as chaste a hand, he will turn painter instead of sculptor, and paint, not carve, its characteristics" — strike out, I dare say, a school like Correggio. How think you, Ugo? 65

Inten. Is Correggio a painter?

Mon. Foolish Jules! and yet, after all, why foolish? He may — probably will — fail egregiously, but if there should arise a new painter, 70 will it not be in some such way, by a poet now, or a musician (spirits who have conceived and perfected an Ideal through some other channel), transferring it to this, and escaping our conventional roads by pure 75 ignorance of them; eh, Ugo? If you have no appetite, talk at least, Ugo!

Inten. Sir, I can submit no longer to this course of yours. First, you select the group of which I formed one — next you thin it 80 gradually — always retaining me with your smile — and so do you proceed till you have fairly got me alone with you between four stone walls. And now then? Let this farce, this chatter end now; what is it you want with me? 85

Mon. Ugo!

Inten. From the instant you arrived, I felt your smile on me as you questioned me about this and the other article in those papers — why your brother should have given me this 90 villa, that podere — and your nod at the end meant — what?

54-55 perfection . . . failure, a favorite doctrine with Browning. Cf. Andrea del Sarto, 97, p. 267. 64 Correggio, a famous Italian painter (1494-1534). 91 podere, a small farm or manor.

Mon. Possibly that I wished for no loud talk here. If once you set me coughing, Ugo! —

Inten. I have your brother's hand and seal to all I possess; now ask me what for! what service I did him — ask me!

Mon. I would better not; I should rip up old disgraces, let out my poor brother's weaknesses. By the way, Maffeo of Forli (which, I forgot to observe, is your true name), was the interdict ever taken off you for robbing that church at Cesena?

Inten. No, nor needs be; for when I murdered your brother's friend, Pasquale, for him —

Mon. Ah, he employed you in that business, did he? Well, I must let you keep, as you say, this villa and that podere, for fear the world should find out my relations were of so indifferent a stamp? Maffeo, my family is the oldest in Messina, and century after century have my progenitors gone on polluting themselves with every wickedness under heaven. My own father — rest his soul! — I have, I know, a chapel to support that it may rest; my dear two dead brothers were — what you know tolerably well; I, the youngest, might have rivaled them in vice, if not in wealth, but from my boyhood I came out from among them, and so am not partaker of their plagues. My glory springs from another source; or if from this, by contrast only — for I, the bishop, am the brother of your employers, Ugo. I hope to repair some of their wrong, however; so far as my brother's ill-gotten treasure reverts to me, I can stop the consequences of his crime; and not one soldo shall escape me. Maffeo, the sword we quiet men spurn away, you shrewd knaves pick up and commit murders with; what opportunities the virtuous forego, the villainous seize. Because, to pleasure myself apart from other considerations, my food would be millet-cake, my dress sackcloth, and my couch straw — am I therefore to let you, the off-scouring of the earth, seduce the poor and ignorant by appropriating a pomp these will be sure to think lessens the abominations so unaccountably and exclusively associated with it? Must I let villas and poderi go to you, a murderer and thief, that you may beget by means of them other murderers and thieves? No — if my cough would but allow me to speak!

Inten. What am I to expect? You are going to punish me?

Mon. Must punish you, Maffeo. I cannot afford to cast away a chance. I have whole centuries of sin to redeem, and only a month or two of life to do it in. How should I dare to say —

Inten. "Forgive us our trespasses?"

Mon. My friend, it is because I avow myself a very worm, sinful beyond measure, that I reject a line of conduct you would applaud perhaps. Shall I proceed, as it were, a-pardoning? — I? — who have no symptom of reason to assume that aught less than my strenuous efforts will keep myself out of mortal sin, much less keep others out. No, I do trespass, but will not double that by allowing you to trespass.

Inten. And suppose the villas are not your brother's to give, nor yours to take? Oh, you are hasty enough just now!

Mon. 1, 2 — No. 3! — aye, can you read the substance of a letter, No. 3, I have received from Rome? It is precisely on the ground there mentioned, of the suspicion I have that a certain child of my late elder brother, who would have succeeded to his estates, was murdered in infancy by you, Maffeo, at the instigation of my late younger brother — that the Pontiff enjoins on me not merely the bringing that Maffeo to condign punishment, but the taking all pains, a guardian of the infant's heritage for the Church, to recover it parcel by parcel, howsoever, whensoever, and wheresoever. While you are now gnawing those fingers, the police are engaged in sealing up your papers, Maffeo, and the mere raising my voice brings my people from the next room to dispose of yourself. But I want you to confess quietly, and save me raising my voice. Why, man, do I not know the old story? The heir between the succeeding heir, and this heir's ruffianly instrument, and their complot's effect, and the life of fear and bribes and ominous smiling silence? Did you throttle or stab my brother's infant? Come now!

Inten. So old a story, and tell it no better? When did such an instrument ever produce such an effect? Either the child smiles in his face; or, most likely, he is not fool enough to put himself in the employer's power so thoroughly; the child is always ready to produce — as you say — howsoever, wheresoever, and whensoever.

Mon. Liar!

Inten. Strike me? Ah, so might a father chastise! I shall sleep soundly tonight at least, though the gallows await me tomorrow; for what a life did I lead! Carlo of Cesena reminds me of his connivance, every time I pay his annuity; which happens commonly thrice a year. If I remonstrate, he will confess all to the good bishop — you!

101 Forli, a city of central Italy 104 Cesena, a city near Forli. 129. soldo, an Italian coin worth about one cent.

210 Mon I see through the trick, caitiff! I would you spoke truth for once. All shall be sifted, however — seven times sifted

Inten. And how my absurd riches encumbered me! I dared not lay claim to above half 215 my possessions. Let me but once unbosom myself, glorify Heaven, and die!

Sir, you are no brutal dastardly idiot like your brother I frightened to death; let us understand one another. Sir, I will make 220 away with her for you — the girl — here close at hand, not the stupid obvious kind of killing; do not speak — know nothing of her nor of me! I see her every day — saw her this morning Of course there is to be no killing, 225 but at Rome the courtesans perish off every three years, and I can entice her thither—have indeed begun operations already. There's a certain lusty, blue-eyed, florid-complexioned
English knave, I and the Police employ occa-230 sionally. You assent, I perceive — no, that's not it — assent I do not say — but you will let me convert my present havings and holdings into cash, and give me time to cross the Alps?
'Tis but a little black-eyed pretty singing Fe-235 lippa, gay silk-winding gurl. I have kept her out of harm's way up to this present; for I always intended to make your life a plague to you with her 'Tis as well settled once and forever. Some women I have procured will 240 pass Bluphocks, my handsome scoundrel, off for somebody, and once Pippa entangled! — you conceive? Through her singing? Is it a bargain?

[From without is heard the voice of PIPPA, singing —

Overhead the tree-tops meet, 244
Flowers and grass spring 'neath one's feet;
There was naught above me, naught below,
My childhood had not learned to know;
For, what are the voices of birds
— Aye, and of beasts — but words, our words,
Only so much more sweet? 250
The knowledge of that with my life begun.
But I had so near made out the sun,
And counted your stars, the seven and one,
Like the fingers of my hand.
Nay, I could all but understand 255
Wherefore through heaven the white moon ranges;
And just when out of her soft fifty changes
No unfamiliar face might overlook me —
Suddenly God took me.

[PIPPA passes

260 Mon [Springing up.] My people — one and all — all — within there! Gag this villain — tie him hand and foot! He dares — I know not half he dares — but remove him — quick! Miserere mei, Domine! Quick, I say! 264

SCENE. PIPPA's Chamber again. She enters it

The bee with his comb,
The mouse at her dray,
The grub in his tomb,
While winter away,
But the firefly and hedge-shrew and lob-worm, I pray, 5
How fare they?

Ha, ha, thanks for your counsel, my Zanze!
"Feast upon lampreys, quaff Breganze!" —
The summer of life so easy to spend,
And care for tomorrow so soon put away! 10
But winter hastens at summer's end,
And firefly, hedge-shrew, lob-worm, pray,
How fare they?
No bidding me then to — what did Zanze
say?

"Pare your nails pearlwise, get your small feet
shoes 15
More like" — (what said she?) — "and less like canoes!"

How pert that girl was! — would I be those pert
Impudent staring women! It had done me,
However, surely no such mighty hurt
To learn his name who passed that jest upon
me, 20

No foreigner, that I can recollect,
Came, as she says, a month since, to inspect Our silk-mills — none with blue eyes and thick rings

Of raw-silk-colored hair, at all events.
Well, if old Luca keep his good intents, 25
We shall do better, see what next year brings!
I may buy shoes, my Zanze, not appear
More destitute than you perhaps next year!
Bluph . . . something! I had caught the uncouth name 29

But for Monsignor's people's sudden clatter
Above us — bound to spoil such idle chatter
As ours; it were indeed a serious matter
If silly talk like ours should put to shame
The pious man, the man devoid of blame,
The — ah but — ah but, all the same, 35
No mere mortal has a right
To carry that exalted air;
Best people are not angels quite:
While — not the worst of people's doings scare 39

The devil, so there's that proud look to spare!

229 English knave, Bluphocks 253 stars, seven and one, the Pleiades (consisting of seven stars) and one other

Which is mere counsel to myself, mind!
for

I have just been the holy Monsignor;
And I was you too, Luigi's gentle mother,
And you too, Luigi! — how that Luigi started
Out of the turret — doubtlessly departed 45
On some good errand or another,
For he passed just now in a traveler's trim,
And the sullen company that prowled
About his path, I noticed, scowled
As if they had lost a prey in him. 50
And I was Jules the sculptor's bride,
And I was Ottima beside,
And now what am I? — tired of fooling.
Day for folly, night for schooling!
New-year's day is over and spent, 55
Ill or well, I must be content.

Even my lily's asleep, I vow;
Wake up — here's a friend I've plucked you!
Call this flower a heart's-ease now!
Something rare, let me instruct you, 60
Is this, with petals triply swollen,
Three times spotted, thrice the pollen;
While the leaves and parts that witness
Old proportions and their fitness,
Here remain unchanged, unmoved now; 65
Call this pampered thing improved now!
Suppose there's a king of the flowers
And a girl-show held in his bowers —
"Look ye, buds, this growth of ours,"
Says he, "Zanze from the Brenta, 70
I have made her gorge polenta
Till both cheeks are near as bouncing
As her — name there's no pronouncing!
See this heightened color too,
For she swilled Breganze wine 75
Till her nose turned deep carmine;
'Twas but white when wild she grew.
And only by this Zanze's eyes
Of which we could not change the size,
The magnitude of all achieved 80
Otherwise, may be perceived"

Oh, what a drear dark close to my poor day!
How could that red sun drop in that black
cloud?

Ah, Pippa, morning's rule is moved away,
Dispensed with, never more to be allowed! 85
Day's turn is over, now arrives the night's O lark, be day's apostle
To mavis, merle, and throstle,
Bid them their betters jostle
From day and its delights! 90
But at night, brother owlet, over the woods,
Toll the world to thy chantry;
Singing to the bats' sleek sisterhoods

Full complines with gallantry:
Then, owls and bats, 95
Cows and twats,
Monks and nuns, in a cloister's moods,
Adjourn to the oak-stump pantry!

[After she has begun to undress herself
Now, one thing I should like to really know
How near I ever might approach all these 100
I only fancied being, this long day —
Approach, I mean, so as to touch them, so
As to — in some way — move them — if you
please,

Do good or evil to them some slight way.
For instance, if I wind 105
Silk tomorrow, my silk may bind

[Sitting on the bedside
And border Ottima's cloak's hem.
Ah me, and my important part with them,
This morning's hymn half promised when I
rose!

True in some sense or other, I suppose. 110
[As she lies down
God bless me! I can pray no more tonight.
No doubt, some way or other, hymns say
right.

All service ranks the same with God —
With God, whose puppets, best and worst,
Are we; there is no last nor first. 115
[She sleeps

CAVALIER TUNES

I. MARCHING ALONG

Kentish Sir Byng stood for his King,
Bidding the crop-headed Parliament swing;
And, pressing a troop unable to stoop
And see the rogues flourish and honest folk droop,
Marched them along, fifty-score strong, 5
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song.

God for King Charles! Pym and such carles
To the Devil that prompts 'em their treasonous parles!
Cavaliers, up! Lips from the cup,
Hands from the pasty, nor bite take nor sup
Till you're — 11

94 compline, an ecclesiastical term—the last of the canonical hours. 96 twat, part of a nun's garb, corresponding to the cowl of a monk.

Cavalier Tunes The three songs under this title express the loyalty of the Cavaliers to King Charles I of England (1625-49) and their contempt for his Puritan enemies.

Marching Along 2. the crop-headed Parliament, the Parliament of 1640, controlled by the Puritans, who wore their hair short in protest against the vain fashion of the Cavaliers, who wore their hair long and in curls. The Puritans were called "Roundheads" 7 Pym, John Pym (1584-1643), a leader of Parliament against the king

CHORUS —

*Marching along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this
song*

Hampden to hell, and his obsequies' knell Serve Hazelrig, Fiennes, and young Harry as
well! 15

England, good cheer! Rupert is near!
Kentish and loyalists, keep we not here,

CHORUS —

Then, God for King Charles! Pym and his snarls 20
To the Devil that pricks on such pestilent carles!

Hold by the right, you double your might,
So, onward to Nottingham, fresh for the fight.

CHORUS —

*March we along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this
song.*

2. GIVE A ROUSE

King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?
Give a rouse, here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

Who gave me the goods that went since? 5
Who raised me the house that sank once?
Who helped me to gold I spent since?
Who found me in wine you drank once?

CHORUS —

*King Charles, and who'll do him right
now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight
now?
Give a rouse, here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles.*

To whom used my boy George quaff else,
By the old fool's side that begot him?

14 Hampden, John Hampden (1594-1643), associated with Pym in Parliament in opposition to the king. 15 Hazelrig, Fiennes, young Harry The Puritans were aided by Sir Arthur Hazelrig, Nathaniel Fiennes, and Sir Henry Vane, son of the elder Sir Henry Vane, one of Charles's secretaries. Young Harry was Governor of Massachusetts Bay, 1636-37. He was executed for treason after the accession of Charles II. 16 Rupert, Rupert, Prince of Bavaria (1619-82), a nephew of Charles I. 23 Nottingham The first stand of the Royalists was made at Nottingham, a city in central England in August, 1642. Give a Rouse Title rouse, a shout that accompanies drinking.

For whom did he cheer and laugh else, 15
While Noll's damned troopers shot him?

CHORUS —

King Charles, and who's ripe for fight
now?
Give a rouse, here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles.* 20

3 BOOT AND SADDLE

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!
Rescue my castle before the hot day
Brightens to blue from its silvery gray

CHORUS —

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!

Ride past the suburbs, asleep as you'd say; s
Many's the friend there, will listen and pray
"God's luck to gallants that strike up the lay —

CHORUS —

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

Forty miles off, like a roebuck at bay,
Flouts Castle Brancepeth the Roundheads' 10 array,
Who laughs, "Good fellows ere this, by my fay,

CHORUS —

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

Who? My wife Gertrude, that, honest and
gay,
Laughs when you talk of surrendering, "Nay!
I've better counselors; what counsel they?" 15

CHORUS —

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

THROUGH THE METIDJA TO ABD-EL-KADR

As I ride, as I ride,
With a full heart for my guide,
So its tide rocks my side,
As I ride, as I ride,

16 Noll, a contemptuous nickname for Cromwell, leader of the Puritans.

Boot and Saddle This song is supposed to be sung by a Royalist nobleman who is riding to rescue Castle Brancepeth, near Durham, from an attack of the Roundheads, or Puritans. His wife Gertrude held the castle.

Through the Metidja The speaker of the poem is an Arab who is riding through the great Metidja Plain in Algeria to join his chieftain Abd-el-Kadr (1807-83), who at the head of

That, as I were double-eyed, 5
He, in whom our Tribes confide,
Is descried, ways untried,
As I ride, as I ride.

As I ride, as I ride
To our Chief and his Allied, 10
Who dares chide my heart's pride
As I ride, as I ride?
Or are witnesses denied —
Through the desert waste and wide
Do I glide unespied
As I ride, as I ride? 15

As I ride, as I ride,
When an inner voice has cried,
The sands slide, nor abide
(As I ride, as I ride) 20
O'er each visioned homicide
That came vaunting (has he lied?)
To reside — where he died,
As I ride, as I ride

As I ride, as I ride, 25
Ne'er has spur my swift horse plied,
Yet his hide, streaked and pied,
As I ride, as I ride,
Shows where sweat has sprung and dried
— Zebra-footed, ostrich-thighed — 30
How has vied stride with stride
As I ride, as I ride!

As I ride, as I ride,
Could I loose what Fate has tied,
Ere I pried, she should hide 35
(As I ride, as I ride)
All that's meant me — satisfied
When the Prophet and the Bride
Stop veins I'd have subside
As I ride, as I ride! 40

RUDEL TO THE LADY OF TRIPOLI

I

I know a Mount, the gracious Sun perceives
First, when he visits, last, too, when he leaves
The world, and, vainly favored, it repays
The day-long glory of his steadfast gaze
By no change of its large calm front of snow 5
And underneath the Mount, a Flower I know, allied tribes is resisting a French invasion. As he gallops along, his spiritual fervor reveals Mohammed (line 6) in a new light. The rider rejoices in his visions of the dead bodies of the slain Frenchmen, buried in the desert and seemingly uncovered by the shifting sands. His own future is concealed, but he will be content to accept death when Mohammed pleases. Or the last stanza may mean that Fate will be satisfied when Mohammed allows the rider to slay his enemies.

Rudel to the Lady of Tripoli See Critical Notes

He cannot have perceived, that changes ever
At his approach; and, in the lost endeavor
To live his life, has parted, one by one,
With all a flower's true graces, for the grace 10
Of being but a foolish mimic sun,
With ray-like florets round a disk-like face.
Men nobly call by many a name the Mount
As over many a land of theirs its large
Calm front of snow like a triumphal targe 15
Is reared, and still with old names, fresh names vie,
Each to its proper praise and own account.
Men call the Flower the Sunflower, sport-tively.

2

Oh, Angel of the East, one, one gold look Across the waters to this twilight nook — 20
The far sad waters, Angel, to this nook!

3

Dear Pilgrim, art thou for the East indeed?
Go! — saying ever as thou dost proceed,
That I, French Rudel, choose for my device 25
A sunflower outspread like a sacrifice
Before its idol See! These inexpert
And hurried fingers could not fail to hurt
The woven picture, 'tis a woman's skill
Indeed, but nothing baffled me, so, ill
Or well, the work is finished Say, men feed 30
On songs I sing, and therefore bask the bees
On my flower's breast as on a platform broad;
But, as the flower's concern is not for these
But solely for the sun, so men applaud
In vain this Rudel, he not looking here 35
But to the East — the East! Go, say this,
Pilgrim dear! (1842)

CRISTINA

She should never have looked at me
If she meant I should not love her!
There are plenty — men, you call such,
I suppose — she may discover
All her soul to, if she pleases, 5
And yet leave much as she found them,
But I'm not so, and she knew it
When she fixed me, glancing round them
What? To fix me thus meant nothing?
But I can't tell (there's my weakness) 10
What her look said! — no vile cant, sure,
About "need to strew the bleakness

17 proper, own 28 'tis a woman's skill, the weaving requires the skill of a woman

Cristina Maria Christina (1806-78) was the daughter of Francis I, king of Sicily. In 1829 she married Ferdinand VII, king of Spain, and upon his death in 1833 she became queen dowager. Before her marriage she had the reputation of being a coquette and a political intriguer.

Of some lone shore with its pearl-seed,
That the sea feels' — no "strange yearning
That such souls have, most to lavish 15
Where there's chance of least returning "

Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows!
But not quite so sunk that moments,
Sure though seldom, are denied us,
When the spirit's true endowments 20
Stand out plainly from its false ones,
And apprise it if pursuing
Or the right way or the wrong way,
To its triumph or undoing

There are flashes struck from midnights, 25
There are fire-flames noondays kindle,
Whereby piled-up honors perish,
Whereby swollen ambitions dwindle,
While just this or that poor impulse,
Which for once had play unstified, 30
Seems the sole work of a lifetime,
That away the rest have trifled.

Doubt you if, in some such moment,
As she fixed me, she felt clearly,
Ages past the soul existed, 35
Here an age 'tis resting merely,
And hence fleets again for ages,
While the true end, sole and single,
It stops here for is, this love-way,
With some other soul to mingle? 40

Else it loses what it lived for,
And eternally must lose it,
Better ends may be in prospect,
Deeper blisses (if you choose it),
But this life's end and this love-bliss 45
Have been lost here. Doubt you whether
This she felt as, looking at me,
Mine and her souls rushed together?

Oh, observe! Of course, next moment,
The world's honors, in derision, 50
Trampled out the light forever;
Never fear but there's provision
Of the devil's to quench knowledge
Lest we walk the earth in rapture!
— Making those who catch God's secret 55
Just so much more prize their capture!

Such am I, the secret's mine now!
She has lost me, I have gained her;
Her soul's mine and thus, grown perfect,
I shall pass my life's remainder. 60
Life will just hold out the proving
Both our powers, alone and blended;
And then, come the next life quickly!
This world's use will have been ended

INCIDENT OF THE FRENCH CAMP

You know, we French stormed Ratisbon,
A mile or so away,
On a little mound, Napoleon
Stood on our storming-day,
With neck out-thrust, you fancy how, 5
Legs wide, arms locked behind,
As if to balance the prone brow
Oppressive with its mind.

Just as perhaps he mused, "My plans
That soar, to earth may fall, 10
Let once my army-leader Lannes
Waver at yonder wall" —
Out 'twixt the battery-smokes there flew
A rider, bound on bound
Full-galloping, nor bridle drew 15
Until he reached the mound.

Then off there flung in smiling joy,
And held himself erect
By just his horse's mane, a boy;
You hardly could suspect — 20
(So tight he kept his lips compressed, Scarce any blood came through)
You looked twice ere you saw his breast
Was all but shot in two.

"Well," cried he, "Emperor, by God's grace
We've got you Ratisbon! 26
The Marshal's in the market-place,
And you'll be there anon
To see your flag-bird flap his vans
Where I, to heart's desire, 30 Perched him!" The chief's eye flashed, his plans
Soared up again like fire

The chief's eye flashed, but presently
Softened itself, as sheathes
A film the mother-eagle's eye 35
When her bruised eaglet breathes,
"You're wounded!" "Nay," the soldier's pride
Touched to the quick, he said:
"I'm killed, Sir!" And his chief beside,
Smiling the boy fell dead. (1842)

Salve tibi! I must hear 10
 Wise talk of the kind of weather,
 Sort of season, time of year:
Not a plenteous cork-crop; scarcely
Dare we hope oak-galls, I doubt;
What's the Latin name for "parsley"? 15
 What's the Greek name for Swine's Snout?

Whew! We'll have our platter burnished,
 Laid with care on our own shelf!
 With a fire-new spoon we're furnished,
 And a goblet for ourself, 20
 Rinsed like something sacrificial
 Ere 'tis fit to touch our chaps —
 Marked with L for our initial!

 With Sanchicha, telling stories,
 Steeping tresses in the tank,

 Bright as 'twere a Barbary corsair's?

 Knife and fork he never lays
 Cross-wise, to my recollection, 35
 As do I, in Jesu's praise
 I the Trinity illustrate,

 While he drains his at one gulp. 40

 We're to have a feast! so nice!

 All of us get each a slice

 Not one fruit-sort can you spy?
 Strange! — And I, too, at such trouble
 Keep them close-nipped on the sly!

There's a great text in Galatians,
 Once you trip on it, entails 50

10 Salve tibi, hail to thee 14. oak-galls, oak apples, produced on the leaves of the oak. Some varieties contain tannic acid, valuable in commerce. 31 Barbary corsair. Barbary includes the countries on the north coast of Africa. A corsair was originally a Turkish or Saracen pirate. 39 Arian, a follower of Arius, a fourth-century priest who held that Christ is not the Eternal Son of God, and who denied the Trinity. 49 text in Galatians, probably a reference to Galatians, 5:19-21, which enumerates seventeen "works of the flesh" and states that "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." See also Galatians, 3:10 for another possible reference.

Twenty-nine distinct damnations,
 One sure, if another fails:
 If I trip him just a-dying,
 Sure of heaven as sure can be,
 Spin him round and send him flying 55

Or, my scrofulous French novel
 On gray paper with blunt type!
 Simply glance at it, you grovel
 Hand and foot in Belial's gripe; 60
 If I double down its pages
 At the woeful sixteenth print,
 When he gathers his greengages,
 Ope a sieve and slip it in 't?

Or, there's Satan! — one might venture 65
 Pledge one's soul to him, yet leave
 Such a flaw in the indenture
 As he'd miss till, past retrieve,
 Blasted lay that rose-acacia
 We're so proud of! Hy, Zy, Hine 70

MY LAST DUCHESS.

FERRARA

That's my last Duchess painted on the wall,
 Looking as if she were alive. I call
 That piece a wonder, now; Frà Pandolf's 5
 hands
 Worked busily a day, and there she stands
 Will 't please you sit and look at her? I said 5
 "Frà Pandolf" by design, for never read Strangers like you that pictured countenance,
 The depth and passion of its earnest glance,
 But to myself they turned (since none puts by The curtain I have drawn for you, but I) 10
 And seemed as they would ask me, if they
 durst,
 How such a glance came there, so, not the first
 Are you to turn and ask thus. Sir, 'twas not
 Her husband's presence only, called that spot
 Of joy into the Duchess' cheek, perhaps 15
 Frà Pandolf chanced to say, "Her mantle laps

The speaker in this poem is a duke of Ferrara, a famous Italian city in northern Italy, near Venice. He is negotiating with an envoy for the hand of the Count's daughter. This is one of Browning's most famous dramatic monologues.

Over my lady's wrist too much," or "Paint
Must never hope to reproduce the faint Half-flush that dies along her throat." Such stuff

Was courtesy, she thought, and cause enough
For calling up that spot of joy She had 21
A heart — how shall I say? — too soon made glad,

Too easily impressed; she liked whate'er
She looked on, and her looks went everywhere.

Sir, 'twas all one! My favor at her breast, 25
The dropping of the daylight in the West,
The bough of cherries some officious fool
Broke in the orchard for her, the white mule
She rode with round the terrace — all and
each

Would draw from her alike the approving speech, 30

Or blush, at least. She thanked men, — good!
but thanked

Somehow — I know not how — as if she ranked

My gift of a nine-hundred-years-old name
With anybody's gift. Who'd stoop to blame
This sort of trifling? Even had you skill 35
In speech — which I have not — to make your will

Quite clear to such an one, and say, "Just
this

Or that in you disgusts me, here you miss,
Or there exceed the mark" — and if she let Herself be lessoned so, nor plainly set 40
Her wits to yours, forsooth, and made excuse —
E'en then would be some stooping, and I choose

Never to stoop Oh, sir, she smiled, no doubt, Whene'er I passed her, but who passed with-
out

Much the same smile? This grew; I gave commands, 45

Then all smiles stopped together. There she stands

As if alive. Will 't please you rise? We'll meet
The company below, then I repeat,
The Count your master's known munificence
Is ample warrant that no just pretense 50
Of mine for dowry will be disallowed,
Though his fair daughter's self, as I avowed
At starting, is my object. Nay, we'll go Together down, sir. Notice Neptune, though,
Taming a sea-horse, thought a rarity, 55
Which Claus of Innsbruck cast in bronze for
me! (1842)

45-46 commands . . . together In response to an inquiry from Professor Corson (Introduction to Browning), Browning said that he meant that "the commands were that she should be put to death, or he might have had her shut up in a convent" 54 Neptune, the god of the sea 56 Claus of Innsbruck, an imaginary sculptor Innsbruck, the capital of Tyrol in Austria, is noted for its bronze work on the tomb of the Emperor Maximilian (1459-1519)

IN A GONDOLA

He sings.

I send my heart up to thee, all my heart
In this my singing.

For the stars help me, and the sea bears part;

The very night is clinging

Closer to Venice' streets to leave one space 5

Above me, whence thy face

May light my joyous heart to thee its dwelling place.

She speaks.

Say after me, and try to say

My very words, as if each word

Came from you of your own accord, 10

In your own voice, in your own way.

"This woman's heart and soul and brain

Are mine as much as this gold chain

She bids me wear; which" (say again)

"I choose to make by cherishing 15

A precious thing, or choose to fling

Over the boat-side, ring by ring."

And yet once more say — no word more!

Since words are only words. Give o'er!

Unless you call me, all the same, 20

Familiarly by my pet name,

Which if the Three should hear you call,

And me reply to, would proclaim

At once our secret to them all.

Ask of me, too, command me, blame — 25

Do, break down the partition-wall

'Twixt us, the daylight world beholds

Curtained in dusk and splendid folds!

What's left but — all of me to take?

I am the Three's, prevent them, slake 30

Your thirst! 'Tis said, the Arab sage,

In practicing with gems, can loose

Their subtle spirit in his cruce

And leave but ashes; so, sweet mage,

Leave them my ashes when thy use 35

Sucks out my soul, thy heritage!

He sings.

Past we glide, and past, and past!

What's that poor Agnese doing

Where they make the shutters fast?

Gray Zanobi's just a-wooing 40

To his couch the purchased bride;

Past we glide!

Past we glide, and past, and past!

Like a beacon to the blast? 45

She sings:

The moth's kiss, first!
Kiss me as if you made believe 50
You were not sure, this eve,
How my face, your flower, had pursed
Its petals up; so, here and there
You brush it, till I grow aware
Who wants me, and wide ope I burst. 55

Kiss me as if you entered gay
My heart at some noonday,

The claim, so all is rendered up,

He sings:

He muses:

Oh, which were best, to roam or rest?
The land's lap or the water's breast? 80
To sleep on yellow millet-sheaves,
Or swim in lucid shallows just Eluding water-lily leaves,
An inch from Death's black fingers, thrust
To lock you, whom release he must; 85
Which life were best on summer eves?

He speaks, musing

Lie back; could thought of mine improve you?
From this shoulder let there spring
A wing; from this, another wing;
Wings, not legs and feet, shall move you! 90
Snow-white must they spring, to blend
With your flesh, but I intend
They shall deepen to the end,

Broader, into burning gold,
Till both wings crescent-wise enfold 95
Your perfect self, from 'neath your feet
To o'er your head, where, lo, they meet
As if a million sword-blades hurled
Defiance from you to the world!

Rescue me thou, the only real! 100
And scare away this mad ideal
That came, nor motions to depart!
Thanks! Now, stay ever as thou art!

Still he muses:

What if the Three should catch at last
Thy serenader? While there's cast 105
Paul's cloak about my head, and fast
Gian pinions me, Himself has past
His stylet through my back; I reel;
And — is it thou I feel?

They trail me, these three godless knaves, 110
Past every church that saints and saves,
Nor stop till, where the cold sea raves
By Lido's wet accursed graves,
They scoop mine, roll me to its brink,
And — on thy breast I sink! 115

She replies, musing:

Dip your arm o'er the boat-side, elbow-deep,
As I do — thus; were death so unlike sleep,
Caught this way? Death's to fear from flame or steel,
Or poison doubtless; but from water — feel!

Go find the bottom! Would you stay me?
There! 120
Now pluck a great blade of that ribbon-grass
To plait in where the foolish jewel was,
I flung away; since you have praised my hair,
'Tis proper to be choice in what I wear.

Row home? must we row home? Too surely Know I where its front's demurely 126
Over the Giudecca piled;
Window just with window mating,
Door on door exactly waiting,
All's the set face of a child; 130
But behind it, where's a trace
Of the staidness and reserve,
And formal lines without a curve,
In the same child's playing-face?
No two windows look one way 135
O'er the small sea-water thread
Below them Ah, the autumn day
I, passing, saw you overhead!

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN

A CHILD'S STORY

I

Hamelin Town's in Brunswick,
By famous Hanover city,
The river Weser, deep and wide,
Washes its wall on the southern side,
A pleasanter spot you never spied,
But, when begins my ditty,
Almost five hundred years ago,
To see the townsfolk suffer so
From vermin, was a pity.

2

Rats!
They fought the dogs and killed the cats,
And bit the babies in the cradles,
And ate the cheeses out of the vats,
And licked the soup from the cooks' own ladles,
Split open the kegs of salted sprats,
Made nests inside men's Sunday hats,
And even spoiled the women's chats
By drowning their speaking
With shrieking and squeaking
In fifty different sharps and flats.

3

At last the people in a body
To the Town Hall came flocking.
"Tis clear," cried they, "our Mayor's a noddy,
And as for our Corporation — shocking
To think we buy gowns lined with ermine
For dolts that can't or won't determine
What's best to rid us of our vermin!
You hope, because you're old and obese,
To find in the furry civic robe ease?
Rouse up, sirs! Give your brains a racking
To find the remedy we're lacking,
Or, sure as fate, we'll send you packing!"
At this the Mayor and Corporation
Quaked with a mighty consternation.

4

An hour they sat in council,
At length the Mayor broke silence.
"For a guilder I'd my ermine gown sell,
I wish I were a mile hence!
It's easy to bid one rack one's brain —
I'm sure my poor head aches again,

The Pied Piper of Hamelin This poem is based upon an old legend found in many forms, all dealing with the attempt to cheat a magician out of his promised reward. (See Brewer's Reader's Handbook under "Pied Piper.") Browning wrote the poem to amuse Willy (line 300), the son of the famous actor William Macready (1793-1873). The boy was ill and desired a subject for which he could make illustrations.

1 Brunswick, a state in north-central Germany 24
Corporation, the governing body of the city 37 guilder, a coin worth about forty cents

I've scratched it so, and all in vain.
Oh, for a trap, a trap, a trap!"
Just as he said this, what should hap
At the chamber-door but a gentle tap?
"Bless us," cried the Mayor, "what's that?"
(With the Corporation as he sat,
Looking little though wondrous fat;
Nor brighter was his eye, nor moister
Than a too-long-opened oyster,
Save when at noon his paunch grew mutinous
For a plate of turtle green and glutinous),
"Only a scraping of shoes on the mat?
Anything like the sound of a rat
Makes my heart go pit-a-pat!"

5

"Come in!" — the Mayor cried, looking bigger;
And in did come the strangest figure!
His queer long coat from heel to head
Was half of yellow and half of red,
And he himself was tall and thin,
With sharp blue eyes, each like a pin,
And light loose hair, yet swarthy skin,
No tuft on cheek nor beard on chin,
But lips where smiles went out and in,
There was no guessing his kith and kin;
And nobody could enough admire
The tall man and his quaint attire.
Quoth one, "It's as my great-grandsire,
Starting up at the Trump of Doom's tone,
Had walked this way from his painted tombstone!"

6

He advanced to the council-table;
And, "Please your honors," said he, "I'm able,
By means of a secret charm, to draw
All creatures living beneath the sun,
That creep or swim or fly or run,
After me so as you never saw!
And I chiefly use my charm
On creatures that do people harm,
The mole and toad and newt and viper,
And people call me the Pied Piper."
(And here they noticed round his neck
A scarf of red and yellow stripe,
To match with his coat of the self-same check,
And at the scarf's end hung a pipe,
And his fingers, they noticed, were ever stray-
ing
As if impatient to be playing
Upon this pipe, as low it dangled
Over his vesture so old-fangled.)
"Yet," said he, "poor piper as I am,
In Tartary I freed the Cham,
Last June, from his huge swarm of gnats, 90

89 Cham, the title of the ruler of the Tartar Empire in Central Asia

I eased in Asia the Nizam
 Of a monstrous brood of vampire-bats;
 And as for what your brain bewilders,
 If I can rid your town of rats
 Will you give me a thousand guilders?" 95
 "One? fifty thousand!" — was the exclamation
 Of the astonished Mayor and Corporation

7

Into the street the Piper stepped,
 Smiling first a little smile,
 As if he knew what magic slept 100
 In his quiet pipe the while;
 Then, like a musical adept,
 To blow the pipe his lips he wrinkled,
 And green and blue his sharp eyes twinkled,
 Like a candle-flame where salt is sprinkled; 105
 And ere three shrill notes the pipe uttered,
 You heard as if an army muttered;
 And the muttering grew to a grumbling;
 And the grumbling grew to a mighty rumbling; 109
 And out of the houses the rats came tumbling.
 Great rats, small rats, lean rats, brawny rats,
 Brown rats, black rats, gray rats, tawny rats,
 Grave old plodders, gay young friskers,
 Fathers, mothers, uncles, cousins,
 Cocking tails and pricking whiskers, 115
 Families by tens and dozens,
 Brothers, sisters, husbands, wives —
 Followed the Piper for their lives
 From street to street he piped advancing,
 And step for step they followed dancing, 120
 Until they came to the river Weser,
 Wherein all plunged and perished!
 — Save one who, stout as Julius Cæsar,
 Swam across and lived to carry
 (As he, the manuscript he cherished) 125
 To Rat-land home his commentary—Which was, "At the first shrill notes of the pipe,
 I heard a sound as of scraping tripe,
 And putting apples, wondrous ripe,
 Into a cider-press's gripe, 130
 And a moving away of pickle-tub-boards,
 And a leaving ajar of conserve-cupboards,
 And a drawing the corks of tram-oil-flasks,
 And a breaking the hoops of butter-casks;
 And it seemed as if a voice 135
 (Sweeter far than by harp or by psaltery
 Is breathed) called out, 'O rats, rejoice!
 The world is grown to one vast drysaltery!'

91. Nizam, the title of the ruler of Hyderabad, the chief state of India 123-126 Cæsar . . . commentary. At the siege of Alexandria, Egypt, in 48 B.C., Cæsar's ship was captured, and Cæsar had to swim for his life. It is said that he carried with him the manuscript of his Commentaries on the Gallic War, a record of his campaign in Gaul 133. train-oil-flasks, bottles containing whale oil.

So munch on, crunch on, take your nunch-eon,
 Breakfast, supper, dinner, luncheon!" 140
 And just as a bulky sugar-puncheon,
 All ready staved, like a great sun shone
 Glorious scarce an inch before me,
 Just as methought it said, 'Come, bore me!'
 — I found the Weser rolling o'er me." 145

8

You should have heard the Hamelin people
 Ringing the bells till they rocked the steeple
 "Go," cried the Mayor, "and get long poles,
 Poke out the nests and block up the holes!
 Consult with carpenters and builders, 150
 And leave in our town not even a trace
 Of the rats!" — when suddenly, up the face
 Of the Piper perked in the market-place,
 With a "First, if you please, my thousand guilders!"

9

A thousand guilders! The Mayor looked blue,
 So did the Corporation too. 156
 For council dinners made rare havoc
 With Claret, Moselle, Vin-de-Grave, Hock,
 And half the money would replenish
 Their cellar's biggest butt with Rhenish 160
 To pay this sum to a wandering fellow
 With a gypsy coat of red and yellow!
 "Beside," quoth the Mayor with a knowing
 wink,
 "Our business was done at the river's brink;
 We saw with our eyes the vermin sink, 165
 And what's dead can't come to life, I think.
 So, friend, we're not the folks to shrink
 From the duty of giving you something for drink,
 And a matter of money to put in your poke,
 But as for the guilders, what we spoke 170
 Of them, as you very well know, was in joke.
 Beside, our losses have made us thrifty.
 A thousand guilders! Come, take fifty!"

10

The Piper's face fell, and he cried,
 "No trifling! I can't wait, beside!" 175
 I've promised to visit by dinner time
 Bagdat, and accept the prime
 Of the Head-Cook's pottage, all he's rich in,
 For having left, in the Caliph's kitchen,
 Of a nest of scorpions no survivor; 180
 With him I proved no bargain-driver,
 With you, don't think I'll bate a stiver!
 And folks who put me in a passion
 May find me pipe after another fashion."

139 nuncheon, light lunch 158 Claret . . . Hock
 These are all names of wines 177 Bagdat, Bagdad, a city in Mesopotamia, in Asia 182 stiver, a Dutch coin worth about two cents.

II

"How?" cried the Mayor, "d'ye think I brook
Being worse treated than a Cook? 186
Insulted by a lazy ribald
With idle pipe and vesture piebald?
You threaten us, fellow? Do your worst,
Blow your pipe there till you burst!" 190

I2

Once more he stepped into the street,
And to his lips again
Laid his long pipe of smooth straight cane;
And ere he blew three notes (such sweet
Soft notes as yet musician's cunning 195
Never gave the enraptured air)
There was a rustling that seemed like a bustling
Of merry crowds justling at pitching and hustling;
Small feet were pattering, wooden shoes clat-tering,
Little hands clapping and little tongues chattering, 200
And, like fowls in a farm-yard when barley is scattering,
Out came the children running
All the little boys and girls,
With rosy cheeks and flaxen curls,
And sparkling eyes and teeth like pearls, 205
Tripping and skipping, ran merrily after
The wonderful music with shouting and laughter.

I3

The Mayor was dumb, and the Council stood
As if they were changed into blocks of wood,
Unable to move a step, or cry 210
To the children merrily skipping by,
— Could only follow with the eye
That joyous crowd at the Piper's back.
But how the Mayor was on the rack,
And the wretched Council's bosoms beat, 215
As the Piper turned from the High Street
To where the Weser rolled its waters
Right in the way of their sons and daughters!
However, he turned from South to West,
And to Koppelberg Hill his steps addressed,
And after him the children pressed; 221
Great was the joy in every breast.
"He never can cross that mighty top!
He's forced to let the piping drop,
And we shall see our children stop!" 225
When, lo, as they reached the mountain-side,
A wondrous portal opened wide,
As if a cavern was suddenly hollowed,
And the Piper advanced and the children followed,
And when all were in to the very last, 230
The door in the mountain-side shut fast.
Did I say all? No! One was lame,

And could not dance the whole of the way;
And in after years, if you would blame
His sadness, he was used to say — 235
"It's dull in our town since my playmates left!
I can't forget that I'm bereft
Of all the pleasant sights they see,
Which the Piper also promised me.
For he led us, he said, to a joyous land, 240
Joining the town and just at hand,
Where waters gushed and fruit-trees grew
And flowers put forth a fairer hue,
And everything was strange and new;
The sparrows were brighter than peacocks
here, 245
And their dogs outran our fallow deer,
And honey-bees had lost their stings,
And horses were born with eagles' wings,
And just as I became assured
My lame foot would be speedily cured, 250
The music stopped and I stood still,
And found myself outside the hill,
Left alone against my will,
To go now limping as before,
And never hear of that country more!" 255

I4

Alas, alas for Hamelin!
There came into many a burgher's pate
A text which says that heaven's gate
Opes to the rich at as easy rate
As the needle's eye takes a camel in! 260
The Mayor sent East, West, North and South,
To offer the Piper, by word of mouth,
Wherever it was men's lot to find him,
Silver and gold to his heart's content,
If he'd only return the way he went, 265
And bring the children behind him.
But when they saw 'twas a lost endeavor,
And Piper and dancers were gone forever,
They made a decree that lawyers never
Should think their records dated duly 270
If, after the day of the month and year,
These words did not as well appear,
"And so long after what happened here
On the Twenty-second of July,
Thirteen hundred and seventy-six": 275
And the better in memory to fix
The place of the children's last retreat,
They called it, the Pied Piper's Street —
Where anyone playing on pipe or tabor
Was sure for the future to lose his labor. 280
Nor suffered they hostility or tavern
To shock with mirth a street so solemn;
But opposite the place of the cavern
They wrote the story on a column,
And on the great church-window painted 285
The same, to make the world acquainted

258-260 A text . camel in. From Matthew, 19 24 —
"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God"

How their children were stolen away,
 And there it stands to this very day.
 And I must not omit to say
 That in Transylvania there's a tribe 290
 Of alien people who ascribe
 The outlandish ways and dress
 On which their neighbors lay such stress,
 To their fathers and mothers having risen
 Out of some subterraneous prison 295
 Into which they were trepanned
 Long time ago in a mighty band
 Out of Hamelin town in Brunswick land,
 But how or why, they don't understand.

15

So, Willy, let me and you be wipers 300
 Of scores out with all men — especially pipers!
 And, whether they pipe us free from rats or from mice,
 If we've promised them aught, let us keep our promise! (1842)

COUNT GISMOND

AIX IN PROvence

Christ God who savest man, save most
 Of men Count Gismond, who saved me!
 Count Gauthier, when he chose his post,
 Chose time and place and company
 To suit it, when he struck at length 5
 My honor, 'twas with all his strength.

And doubtlessly ere he could draw
 All points to one, he must have schemed!
 That miserable morning saw
 Few half so happy as I seemed, 10
 While being dressed in queen's array
 To give our tourney prize away.

I thought they loved me, did me grace
 To please themselves, 'twas all their deed,
 God makes, or fair or foul, our face, 15
 If showing mine so caused to bleed
 My cousins' hearts, they should have dropped
 A word, and straight the play had stopped

They, too, so beauteous! Each a queen
 By virtue of her brow and breast; 20
 Not needing to be crowned, I mean,
 As I do E'en when I was dressed,
 Had either of them spoke, instead
 Of glancing sideways with still head!

But no; they let me laugh, and sing 25
 My birthday song quite through, adjust

290 Transylvania, a region in northwest Rumania, formerly a part of Hungary
 Count Gismond The poem is spoken by a lady of the court of Aix, in Provence, an old province in southeastern France

The last rose in my garland, fling
 A last look on the mirror, trust
 My arms to each an arm of theirs,
 And so descend the castle-stairs — 30

And come out on the morning-troop
 Of merry friends who kissed my cheek,
 And called me queen, and made me stoop
 Under the canopy — a streak
 That pierced it, of the outside sun, 35
 Powdered with gold its gloom's soft dun —

And they could let me take my state
 And foolish throne amid applause
 Of all come there to celebrate
 My queen's-day — oh, I think the cause 40
 Of much was, they forgot no crowd
 Makes up for parents in their shroud!

Howe'er that be, all eyes were bent
 Upon me, when my cousins cast
 Theirs down; 'twas time I should present 45
 The victor's crown, but . . . there, 'twill last
 No long time . . . the old mist again
 Blinds me as then it did. How vain!

See! Gismond's at the gate, in talk
 With his two boys, I can proceed 50
 Well, at that moment, who should stalk
 Forth boldly — to my face, indeed —
 But Gauthier, and he thundered, "Stay!"
 And all stayed "Bring no crowns, I say!"

"Bring torches! Wind the penance-sheet 55
 About her! Let her shun the chaste,
 Or lay herself before their feet!
 Shall she whose body I embraced
 A night long, queen it in the day?
 For honor's sake no crowns, I say!" 60

I? What I answered? As I live,
 I never fancied such a thing
 As answer possible to give.
 What says the body when they spring
 Some monstrous torture-engine's whole 65
 Strength on it? No more says the soul

Till out strode Gismond, then I knew
 That I was saved. I never met
 His face before, but, at first view,
 I felt quite sure that God had set 70
 Himself to Satan, who would spend
 A minute's mistrust on the end?

He strode to Gauthier, in his throat
 Gave him the lie, then struck his mouth
 With one back-handed blow that wrote 75

73-74 in his throat . . . lie To lie in the throat is to lie abominably It is therefore more serious to accuse one of lying in the throat than to accuse one of merely lying

In blood men's verdict there North, South,
East, West, I looked The lie was dead,
And damned, and truth stood up instead.

This glads me most, that I enjoyed
The heart of the joy, with my content 80
In watching Gismond unalloyed
By any doubt of the event;
God took that on him — I was bid
Watch Gismond for my part. I did.

Did I not watch him while he let 85
His armorer just brace his greaves,
Rivet his hauberk, on the fret
The while! His foot . . . my memory leaves
No least stamp out, nor how anon
He pulled his ringing gauntlets on. 90

And e'en before the trumpet's sound
Was finished, prone lay the false knight,
Prone as his lie, upon the ground;
Gismond flew at him, used no sleight
O' the sword, but open-breasted drove, 95
Cleaving till out the truth he clove.

Which done, he dragged him to my feet
And said, "Here die, but end thy breath
In full confession, lest thou fleet
From my first, to God's second death! 100
Say, hast thou lied?" And, "I have lied
To God and her," he said, and died.

Then Gismond, kneeling to me, asked —
What safe my heart holds, though no word
Could I repeat now, if I tasked 105
My powers forever, to a third
Dear even as you are. Pass the rest
Until I sank upon his breast

Over my head his arm he flung
Against the world, and scarce I felt 110
His sword (that dripped by me and swung)
A little shifted in its belt;
For he began to say the while
How South our home lay many a mile.

So 'mid the shouting multitude 115
We two walked forth to never more
Return My cousins have pursued
Their life, untroubled as before
I vexed them Gauthier's dwelling-place
God lighten! May his soul find grace! 120

Our elder boy has got the clear
Great brow, though when his brother's black
Full eye shows scorn, it . . . Gismond here?
And have you brought my tercel back?
I just was telling Adela 125
How many birds it struck since May (r842)

124 tercel, a male falcon, used in hunting

THE LABORATORY

ANCIENT RÉGIME

Now that I, tying thy glass mask tightly,
May gaze through these faint smokes curling whitely,
As thou pliest thy trade in this devil's-smithy —
Which is the poison to poison her, prithee?

He is with her, and they know that I know s
Where they are, what they do, they believe my tears flow
While they laugh, laugh at me, at me fled to the drear Empty church, to pray God in, for them! — I am here.

Grind away, moisten and mash up thy paste,
Pound at thy powder — I am not in haste! 10
Better sit thus, and observe thy strange things,
Than go where men wait me and dance at the King's

That in the mortar — you call it a gum?
Ah, the brave tree whence such gold oozings
come!
And yonder soft phial, the exquisite blue, 15
Sure to taste sweetly — is that poison too?

Had I but all of them, thee and thy treasures,
What a wild crowd of invisible pleasures!
To carry pure death in an earring, a casket,
A signet, a fan-mount, a filigree basket! 20

Soon, at the King's, a mere lozenge to give,
And Pauline should have just thirty minutes to live!
But to light a pastile, and Else, with her head
And her breast and her arms and her hands, should drop dead!

Quick — is it finished? The color's too grim!
Why not soft like the phial's, enticing and dim? 26
Let it brighten her drink, let her turn it and stir,
And try it and taste, ere she fix and prefer!

What a drop! She's not little, no minion like
me!
That's why she ensnared him, this never will free 30

The Laboratory See Critical Notes The phrase Ancient Régime (Old Order) suggests that the incident here recorded is the kind of thing that happened in the old days Poisoning was then a favorite means of getting rid of rivals and other objectionable persons Regular schools of poisoners for this purpose flourished in Italy in the 16th and 17th centuries

29 minion, a dainty or delicate person

The soul from those masculine eyes — say
“no!”

To that pulse’s magnificent come-and-go

For only last night, as they whispered, I brought

My own eyes to bear on her so, that I thought Could I keep them one half minute fixed, she would fall 35

Shriveled; she fell not, yet this does it all!

Not that I bid you spare her the pain,
Let death be felt and the proof remain;
Brand, burn up, bite into its grace —
He is sure to remember her dying face! 40

Is it done? Take my mask off! Nay, be not morose;

It kills her, and this prevents seeing it close:
The delicate droplet, my whole fortune’s feel!
If it hurts her, beside, can it ever hurt me?

Now, take all my jewels, gorge gold to your fill, 45

You may kiss me, old man, on my mouth if you will!

But brush this dust off me, lest horror it brings Ere I know it — next moment I dance at the King’s! (1844)

THE BOY AND THE ANGEL

Morning, evening, noon, and night,
“Praise God!” said Theocrite.

Then to his poor trade he turned,
Whereby the daily meal was earned.

Hard he labored, long and well; 5
O’er his work the boy’s curls fell.

But ever, at each period,
He stopped and sang, “Praise God!”

Then back again his curls he threw,
And cheerful turned to work anew. 10

Said Blaise, the listening monk, “Well done;
I doubt not thou art heard, my son,

“As well as if thy voice today
Were praising God, the Pope’s great way.

“This Easter Day, the Pope at Rome 15
Praises God from Peter’s dome.”

The Boy and the Angel This legend presents one of Browning’s deepest convictions, expressed in lines 37-38 and 78—namely, in service to God, the humblest is equal with the highest Cf Pippa Passes, 190-195, page 171. For a variation of the theme, see Longfellow’s King Robert of Sicily

Said Theocrite, “Would God that I Might praise him that great way, and die!”

Night passed, day shone,
And Theocrite was gone. 20

With God a day endures always,
A thousand years are but a day.

God said in heaven, “Nor day nor night
Now brings the voice of my delight.”

Then Gabriel, like a rainbow’s birth, 25
Spread his wings and sank to earth;

Entered, in flesh, the empty cell,
Lived there, and played the craftsman well,

And morning, evening, noon, and night,
Praised God in place of Theocrite 30

And from a boy, to youth he grew;
The man put off the stripling’s hue;

The man matured and fell away
Into the season of decay;

And ever o’er the trade he bent, 35
And ever lived on earth content

(He did God’s will, to him, all one
If on the earth or in the sun)

God said, “A praise is in mine ear,
There is no doubt in it, no fear; 40

“So sing old worlds, and so
New worlds that from my footstool go.

“Clearer loves sound other ways;
I miss my little human praise.”

Then forth sprang Gabriel’s wings, off fell 45
The flesh disguise, remained the cell.

’Twas Easter Day, he flew to Rome,
And paused above Saint Peter’s dome.

In the tiring-room close by
The great outer gallery, 50

With his holy vestments dight,
Stood the new Pope, Theocrite;

And all his past career
Came back upon him clear,

Since when, a boy, he plied his trade, 55
Till on his life the sickness weighed;

25 Gabriel, an angel whose duty was to bear comfort and sympathy to man

And in his cell, when death drew near,
An angel in a dream brought cheer;

And rising from the sickness drear,
He grew a priest, and now stood here. 60

To the East with praise he turned,
And on his sight the angel burned.

"I bore thee from thy craftsman's cell,
And set thee here, I did not well.

"Vainly I left my angel-sphere, 65
Vain was thy dream of many a year

"Thy voice's praise seemed weak; it dropped—Creation's chorus stopped!

"Go back and praise again
The early way, while I remain. 70

"With that weak voice of our disdain,
Take up creation's pausing strain

"Back to the cell and poor employ;
Resume the craftsman and the boy!"

Theocrite grew old at home, 75
A new Pope dwelt in Peter's dome.

One vanished as the other died;
They sought God side by side. (1844)

"HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS FROM GHENT TO AIX"

[16—]

I sprang to the stirrup, and Joris, and he,
I galloped, Dirck galloped, we galloped all three;

"Good speed!" cried the watch, as the gate-
bolts undrew,

"Speed!" echoed the wall to us galloping
through;

Behind shut the postern, the lights sank to
rest, 5

And into the midnight we galloped abreast

Not a word to each other, we kept the great pace

Neck by neck, stride by stride, never changing
our place;

I turned in my saddle and made its girths tight,

How They Brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix. Ghent is an important city in Belgium, about 100 miles from Aix, or Aix-la-Chapelle, in West Prussia, Germany. The other places mentioned in the poem lie between Ghent and Aix. The date 16— suggests that the incident might have happened in the conflict between the Netherlands and Spain or during the Thirty Years War. See Critical Notes

5 postern, the rear gate of a castle or of a fortified city.

Then shortened each stirrup, and set the pique
right, 10

Rebuckled the cheek-strap, chained slacker
the bit,

Nor galloped less steadily Roland a whit.

'Twas moonset at starting, but while we drew near

Lokeren, the cocks crew and twilight dawned
clear;

At Boom, a great yellow star came out to see;
At Düffeld, 'twas morning as plain as could
be; 16

And from Mecheln church-steeple we heard
the half-chime,

So Joris broke silence with, "Yet there is
time!"

At Aershot, up leaped of a sudden the sun,
And against him the cattle stood black every
one, 20

To stare through the mist at us galloping past,
And I saw my stout galloper Roland at last,

With resolute shoulders, each butting away
The haze, as some bluff river headland its spray;

And his low head and crest, just one sharp ear
bent back 25

For my voice, and the other pricked out on his track;

And one eye's black intelligence — ever that glance

O'er its white edge at me, his own master, askance!

And the thick heavy spume-flakes which aye
and anon

His fierce lips shook upwards in galloping on

By Hasselt, Dirck groaned, and cried Joris,
"Stay spur! 31

Your Roos galloped bravely, the fault's not in her,

We'll remember at Aix" — for one heard the quick wheeze

Of her chest, saw the stretched neck and staggering knees,

And sunk tail, and horrible heave of the flank,
As down on her haunches she shuddered and
sank. 36

So we were left galloping, Joris and I, Past Looz and past Tongres, no cloud in the sky;

10 pique, the pommel of the saddle. 14 Lokeren, 12 miles from Ghent. 15 Boom, 16 miles from Lokeren. 16 Düffeld, 12 miles from Boom. 17 Mecheln, near Düffeld. 19 Aershot, 15 miles from Düffeld. 31 Hasselt, 80 miles from Ghent. 38 Looz, Tongres. These towns, and Dalhem (line 41), are off the direct route

The broad sun above laughed a pitiless laugh,
 'Neath our feet broke the brittle bright stubble like chaff; 40
 Till over by Dalhem a dome-spire sprang
 white,
 And "Gallop," gasped Joris, "for Aix is in sight!"

"How they'll greet us!" — and all in a moment his roan
 Rolled neck and croup over, lay dead as a
 stone,
 And there was my Roland to bear the whole
 weight 45
 Of the news which alone could save Aix from her fate,
 With his nostrils like pits full of blood to the brim,
 And with circles of red for his eye-sockets' rim

Then I cast loose my buffcoat, each holster
 let fall,
 Shook off both my jack-boots, let go belt and
 all, 50
 Stood up in the stirrup, leaned, patted his ear, Called my Roland his pet-name, my horse without peer,
 Clapped my hands, laughed and sang, any noise, bad or good,
 Till at length into Aix Roland galloped and
 stood.

And all I remember is—friends flocking round
 As I sat with his head 'twixt my knees on the
 ground, 56
 And no voice but was praising this Roland of
 mine,
 As I poured down his throat our last measure of wine,
 Which (the burgesses voted by common consent)
 Was no more than his due who brought good news from Ghent 60

THE LOST LEADER

Just for a handful of silver he left us,
 Just for a riband to stick in his coat —
 Found the one gift of which fortune bereft us,
 Lost all the others she lets us devote;
 They, with the gold to give, doled him out silver, 5
 So much was theirs who so little allowed,
 How all our copper had gone for his service!
 Rags — were they purple, his heart had been proud!

We that had loved him so, followed him,
 honored him,
 Lived in his mild and magnificent eye, 10
 Learned his great language, caught his clear accents,
 Made him our pattern to live and to die!
 Shakespeare was of us, Milton was for us,
 Burns, Shelley, were with us — they watch from their graves!
 He alone breaks from the van and the free-
 men — 15
 He alone sinks to the rear and the slaves!

We shall march prospering — not through his presence;
 Songs may inspirit us — not from his lyre,
 Deeds will be done — while he boasts his quiescence,
 Still bidding crouch whom the rest bade aspire; 20
 Blot out his name, then, record one lost soul
 more,
 One task more declined, one more footpath
 untrod,
 One more devils'-triumph and sorrow for angels,
 One wrong more to man, one more insult to
 God!
 Life's night begins, let him never come back to us! 25
 There would be doubt, hesitation, and pain, Forced praise on our part — the glimmer of twilight,
 Never glad confident morning again!
 Best fight on well, for we taught him — strike gallantly, 29
 Menace our heart ere we master his own,
 Then let him receive the new knowledge and wait us,
 Pardoned in heaven, the first by the throne!
 (1845)

THE LOST MISTRESS

All's over, then; does truth sound bitter
 As one at first believes?
 Hark, 'tis the sparrows' good-night twitter
 About your cottage eaves!
 And the leaf-buds on the vine are woolly; 5
 I noticed that, today,
 One day more bursts them open fully—
 You know the red turns gray.
 Tomorrow we meet the same then, dearest?
 May I take your hand in mine? 10

Mere friends are we — well, friends the merest
Keep much that I resign.

For each glance of the eye so bright and black
Though I keep with heart's endeavor —
Your voice, when you wish the snowdrops
back, 15
Though it stay in my soul forever! —

Yet I will but say what mere friends say,
Or only a thought stronger,
I will hold your hand but as long as all may.
Or so very little longer! 20

EARTH'S IMMORTALITIES

FAME

See, as the prettiest graves will do in time,
Our poet's wants the freshness of its prime,
Spite of the sexton's browsing horse, the sods
Have struggled through its binding osier rods,
Headstone and half-sunk footstone lean awry,
Wanting the brick-work promised by-and-by,
How the minute gray lichens, plate o'er plate,
Have softened down the crisp-cut name and date!

LOVE

So, the year's done with!
(Love me forever!)
All March begun with,
April's endeavor,
May-wreaths that bound me 5
June needs must sever;
Now snows fall round me,
Quenching June's fever —
(Love me forever!) (1845)

MEETING AT NIGHT

The gray sea and the long black land,
And the yellow half-moon large and low,
And the startled little waves that leap
In fiery ringlets from their sleep,
As I gain the cove with pushing prow, 5
And quench its speed i' the slushy sand

Then a mile of warm sea-scented beach,
Three fields to cross till a farm appears,
A tap at the pane, the quick sharp scratch
And blue spurt of a lighted match, 10
And a voice less loud, through its joys and fears,
Than the two hearts beating each to each!
(1845)

PARTING AT MORNING

Round the cape of a sudden came the sea,
And the sun looked over the mountain's rim.
And straight was a path of gold for him,
And the need of a world of men for me
(1845)

SONG

Nay but you, who do not love her,
Is she not pure gold, my mistress?
Holds earth aught — speak truth — above
her?
Aught like this tress, see, and this tress,
And this last fairest tress of all, 5
So fair, see, ere I let it fall?

Because you spend your lives in praising,
To praise, you search the wide world over,
Then why not witness, calmly gazing,
If earth holds aught — speak truth — above
her? 10
Above this tress, and this, I touch
But cannot praise, I love so much!

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM ABROAD

Oh, to be in England
Now that April's there,
And whoever wakes in England
Sees, some morning, unaware,
That the lowest boughs and the brushwood 5
sheaf 5
Round the elm-tree bole are in tiny leat,
While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough
In England — now!

And after April, when May follows,
And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallows! 10
Hark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge
Leans to the field and scatters on the clover Blossoms and dewdrops — at the bent spray's
edge —
That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over,
Lest you should think he never could recapture 15
The first fine careless rapture!
And though the fields look rough with hoary
dew,

Parting at Morning This is a sequel to the poem preceding. Here the speaker, the same man, emphasizes the fact that with the morning the need of activity among men comes to him. Him in line 3 refers to the sun.

All will be gay when noontide wakes anew
The buttercups, the little children's dower —
Far brighter than this gaudy melon-flower! 20

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM THE SEA

Nobly, nobly Cape Saint Vincent to the Northwest died away;
Sunset ran, one glorious blood-red, reeking
into Cadiz Bay;
Bluish 'mid the burning water, full in face
Trafalgar lay,
In the dimmest Northeast distance dawned
Gibraltar grand and gray;
"Here and here did England help me, how can I help England?" — say, 5 Whoso turns as I, this evening, turn to God
to praise and pray,
While Jove's planet rises yonder, silent over Africa.

THE CONFESSIONAL

SPAIN

It is a lie — their Priests, their Pope,
Their Saints, their . . . all they fear or hope
Are lies, and lies — there! through my door
And ceiling, there! and walls and floor,
There, lies, they lie — shall still be hurled 5
Till spite of them I reach the world!

You think Priests just and holy men!
Before they put me in this den
I was a human creature too,
With flesh and blood like one of you, 10
A girl that laughed in beauty's pride
Like lilies in your world outside.

I had a lover — shame avaunt!
This poor wrenched body, grim and gaunt,
Was kissed all over till it burned, 15
By lips the truest, love e'er turned
His heart's own tint; one night they kissed
My soul out in a burning mist.

Home-Thoughts, from the Sea Browning wrote this poem one evening in April while on shipboard off the northwest coast of Africa on his first voyage to Italy.

1. Cape Saint Vincent, the southwestern point of Portugal, near which in 1797 England won a naval victory over Spain. 2. Cadiz Bay, on the southern coast of Spain, east of Cape St. Vincent, where in 1596 an English fleet destroyed the second Spanish Armada. 3. Trafalgar, a cape east of Cadiz Bay, off which Lord Nelson won his greatest victory over the French and Spanish fleets in 1805. 4. Gibraltar, the famous British stronghold at the entrance to the Mediterranean. It was acquired from Spain by the Peace of Utrecht in 1713. 5. Jove's planet, Jupiter.

The Confessional. This poem relates an incident as of the period of the persecutions by the Spanish Inquisition of the sixteenth century and later.

So, next day when the accustomed train
Of things grew round my sense again, 20
"That is a sin," I said; and slow
With downcast eyes to church I go,
And pass to the confession-chair,
And tell the old mild father there.

But when I falter Beltran's name, 25
"Ha!" quoth the father, "much I blame
The sin, yet wherefore idly grieve?
Despair not — strenuously retrieve!
Nay, I will turn this love of thine
To lawful love, almost divine; 30

"For he is young, and led astray,
This Beltran, and he schemes, men say,
To change the laws of church and state;
So, thine shall be an angel's fate,
Who, ere the thunder breaks, should roll 35
Its cloud away and save his soul.

"For, when he lies upon thy breast,
Thou mayest demand and be possessed
Of all his plans, and next day steal
To me, and all those plans reveal, 40
That I and every priest, to purge
His soul, may fast and use the scourge."

That father's beard was long and white,
With love and truth his brow seemed bright, 45
I went back, all on fire with joy,
And, that same evening, bade the boy
Tell me, as lovers should, heart-free,
Something to prove his love of me.

He told me what he would not tell
For hope of heaven or fear of hell; 50
And I lay listening in such pride!
And, soon as he had left my side,
Tripped to the church by morning-light
To save his soul in his despite.

I told the father all his schemes, 55
Who were his comrades, what their dreams,
"And now make haste," I said, "to pray
The one spot from his soul away;
Tonight he comes, but not the same
Will look!" At night he never came. 60

Nor next night; on the after-morn,
I went forth with a strength new-born.
The church was empty; something drew
My steps into the street; I knew
It led me to the market-place— 65
Where, lo, on high, the father's face!

That horrible black scaffold dressed,
That stapled block — God sink the rest!
That head strapped back, that blinding vest,
Those knotted hands and naked breast, 70

Till near one busy hangman pressed,
And on the neck these arms caressed . . .

No part in aught they hope or fear!
No heaven with them, no hell! — and here,
No earth, not so much space as pens 75
My body in their worst of dens
But shall bear God and man my cry,
Lies — lies, again — and still, they lie!
(1845)

THE GLOVE

(PETER RONSARD loquitur)

"Heigho," yawned one day King Francis,
"Distance all value enhances!
When a man's busy, why, leisure
Strikes him as wonderful pleasure;
'Faith, and at leisure once is he? 5
Straightway he wants to be busy.
Here we've got peace; and aghast I'm Caught thinking war the true pastime.
Is there a reason in meter?
Give us your speech, master Peter!" 10
I who, if mortal dare say so,
Ne'er am at loss with my Naso,
"Sire," I replied, "joys prove cloudlets,
Men are the merest Ixions" —
Here the King whistled aloud, "Let's 15
— Heigho — go look at our lions!"
Such are the sorrowful chances
If you talk fine to King Francis.

And so, to the courtyard proceeding
Our company, Francis was leading, 20
Increased by new followers tenfold
Before he arrived at the penfold,
Lords, ladies, like clouds which bedizen
At sunset the western horizon.
And Sir De Lorge pressed 'mid the foremost
With the dame he professed to adore most 26
Oh, what a face! One by fits eyed
Her, and the horrible pitside;
For the penfold surrounded a hollow
Which led where the eye scarce dared follow,
And shelved to the chamber secluded 31
Where Bluebeard, the great lion, brooded
The King hailed his keeper, an Arab
As glossy and black as a scarab,

The Glove The incident here related is supposed to be told by Pierre de Ronsard, a famous French poet of the 16th century. The story has also been told by a French writer, St. Croix (1746-1809) in Essais Historiques sur Paris, by the German poet Schiller (1759-1805) in Der Handschuh, and by Leigh Hunt (1784-1859) in The Glove and the Lions.

1. King Francis, Francis I (1494-1547), king of France 12. Naso, Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso), a famous Roman poet (43 B.C.-18 A.D.) 14. Ixions. Ixion was a king in Greek mythology who loved Hera, queen of the gods and wife of Zeus. She sent him a cloud in her shape, by which he became father of the race of centaurs. For his presumption he was bound in Hades to an endlessly revolving wheel 34. scarab, a large black dung beetle

And bade him make sport and at once stir 35
Up and out of his den the old monster.
They opened a hole in the wire-work
Across it, and dropped there a firework,
And fled; one's heart's beating redoubled;
A pause, while the pit's mouth was troubled,
The blackness and silence so utter, 41
By the firework's slow sparkling and sputter,
Then earth in a sudden contortion
Gave out to our gaze her abortion
Such a brute! Were I friend Clement Marot (Whose experience of nature's but narrow, 46
And whose faculties move in no small mist
When he versifies David the Psalmist)
I should study that brute to describe you
Illum Juda Leonem de Tribu. 50

One's whole blood grew curdling and creepy
To see the black mane, vast and heapy,
The tail in the air stiff and straining,
The wide eyes, nor waxing nor waning,
As over the barrier which bounded 55
His platform, and us who surrounded
The barrier, they reached and they rested
On space that might stand him in best stead,
For who knew, he thought, what the amazement,
The eruption of clatter and blaze meant, 60
And if, in this minute of wonder,
No outlet, 'mid lightning and thunder,
Lay broad, and, his shackles all shivered,
The lion at last was delivered?
Aye, that was the open sky o'er head! 65
And you saw by the flash on his forehead,
By the hope in those eyes wide and steady,
He was leagues in the desert already,
Driving the flocks up the mountain,
Or catlike couched hard by the fountain 70
To waylay the date-gathering negress;
So guarded he entrance or egress.
"How he stands!" quoth the King, "we may well swear
(No novice, we've won our spurs elsewhere
And so can afford the confession) 75
We exercise wholesome discretion
In keeping aloof from his threshold;
Once hold you, those jaws want no fresh
hold—
Their first would too pleasantly purloin
The visitor's brisket or surloin; 80
But who's he would prove so foolhardy?
Not the best man of Marignan, pardie!"

The sentence no sooner was uttered,
Than over the rails a glove fluttered,

45. Clement Marot, a famous French court poet (1496-1544) who versified forty-nine of the Psalms, ascribed to David 50. Illum . . . Tribu, that lion of the tribe of Judah 82. Marignan, Melegnano, an Italian town ten miles southeast of Milan pardie, surely (originally an oath, meaning by God).

Fell close to the lion, and rested, 85
 The dame 'twas, who flung it and jested
 With life so, De Lorge had been wooing
 For months past, he sat there pursuing
 His suit, weighing out with nonchalance
 Fine speeches like gold from a balance. 90

Sound the trumpet, no true knight's a tarrier!
 De Lorge made one leap at the barrier,
 Walked straight to the glove — while the lion
 Ne'er moved, kept his far-reaching eye on
 The palm-tree-edged desert-spring's sapphire,
 And the musky oiled skin of the Kaffir — 96
 Picked it up, and as calmly retreated,
 Leaped back where the lady was seated,
 And full in the face of its owner
 Flung the glove.

"Your heart's queen, you dethrone her? 100
 So should I!" — cried the King — "'twas mere vanity,
 Not love, set that task to humanity!"
 Lords and ladies alike turned with loathing
 From such a proved wolf in sheep's clothing

Not so, I, for I caught an expression 105
 In her brow's undisturbed self-possession
 Amid the Court's scoffing and merriment —
 As if from no pleasing experiment
 She rose, yet of pain not much heedful
 So long as the process was needful — 110
 As if she had tried in a crucible,
 To what "speeches like gold" were reducible,
 And, finding the finest prove copper,
 Felt the smoke in her face was but proper;
 To know what she had not to trust to, 115
 Was worth all the ashes and dust too.
 She went out 'mid hooting and laughter;
 Clement Marot stayed, I followed after,
 And asked, as a grace, what it all meant?
 If she wished not the rash deed's recallment?
 "For I" — so I spoke — "am a poet; 121
 Human nature — behooves that I know it!"

She told me, "Too long had I heard
 Of the deed proved alone by the word;
 For my love — what De Lorge would not dare!
 With my scorn — what De Lorge could compare! 126

And the endless descriptions of death
 He would brave when my lip formed a breath,
 I must reckon as braved, or, of course,
 Doubt his word — and moreover, perforce, 130
 For such gifts as no lady could spurn,
 Must offer my love in return.
 When I looked on your lion, it brought
 All the dangers at once to my thought,

Encountered by all sorts of men, 135
 Before he was lodged in his den —
 From the poor slave whose club or bare hands
 Dug the trap, set the snare on the sands,
 With no King and no Court to applaud,
 By no shame, should he shrink, overawed, 140
 Yet to capture the creature made shift,
 That his rude boys might laugh at the gift
 — To the page who last leaped o'er the fence
 Of the pit, on no greater pretense
 Than to get back the bonnet he dropped, 145
 Lest his pay for a week should be stopped.
 So, wiser I judged it to make
 One trial what 'death for my sake'
 Really meant, while the power was yet mine,
 Than to wait until time should define 150
 Such a phrase not so simply as I,
 Who took it to mean just 'to die'
 The blow a glove gives is but weak;
 Does the mark yet discolor my cheek?
 But when the heart suffers a blow, 155
 Will the pain pass so soon, do you know?"

I looked, as away she was sweeping,
 And saw a youth eagerly keeping
 As close as he dared to the doorway.
 No doubt that a noble should more weigh 160
 His life than befits a plebeian;
 And yet, had our brute been Nemean —
 I judge by a certain calm fervor
 The youth stepped with, forward to serve her — He'd have scarce thought you did him the worst turn 165
 If you whispered, "Friend, what you'd get,
 first earn!"
 And when, shortly after, she carried
 Her shame from the Court, and they married,
 To that marriage some happiness, maugre
 The voice of the Court, I dared augur. 170

For De Lorge, he made women with men vie,
 Those in wonder and praise, these in envy;
 And in short stood so plain a head taller
 That he wooed and won — how do you call
 her?

The beauty, that rose in the sequel 175
 To the King's love, who loved her a week well
 And 'twas noticed he never would honor
 De Lorge (who looked daggers upon her)
 With the easy commission of stretching
 His legs in the service, and fetching 180
 His wife, from her chamber, those straying
 Sad gloves she was always mislaying,
 While the King took the closet to chat in —
 But of course this adventure came pat in
 And never the King told the story, 185
 How bringing a glove brought such glory,

96 Kaffir, a member of a South African tribe noted as lion hunters

162 our brute been Nemean, referring to a monstrous lion in the valley of Nemea, in ancient Greece, slain by Hercules

But the wife smiled — "His nerves are grown firmer,
Mine he brings now and utters no murmur "

Venienti occurrere morbo!

With which moral I drop my theorbo. 190

TIME'S REVENGES

I've a Friend, over the sea;
I like him, but he loves me.
It all grew out of the books I write;
They find such favor in his sight
That he slaughters you with savage looks 5
Because you don't admire my books.
He does himself though — and if some vein
Were to snap tonight in this heavy brain,
Tomorrow month, if I lived to try,
Round should I just turn quietly, 10
Or out of the bedclothes stretch my hand
Till I found him, come from his foreign land
To be my nurse in this poor place,
And make my broth and wash my face
And light my fire and, all the while, 15
Bear with his old good-humored smile
That I told him "Better have kept away
Than come and kill me, night and day,
With, worse than fever throbs and shoots,
The creaking of his clumsy boots " 20
I am as sure that this he would do,
As that Saint Paul's is striking two
And I think I rather . . . woe is me!

— Yes, rather should see him than not see,
If lifting a hand could seat him there 25
Before me in the empty chair
Tonight, when my head aches indeed,
And I can neither think nor read,
Nor make these purple fingers hold
The pen; this garret's freezing cold! 30

And I've a Lady — there he wakes,
The laughing fiend and prince of snakes
Within me, at her name, to pray
Fate send some creature in the way
Of my love for her, to be down-torn, 35
Upthrust and outward-borne,
So I might prove myself that sea
Of passion which I needs must be!
Call my thoughts false and my fancies quaint
And my style infirm and its figures faint, 40
All the critics say, and more blame yet,
And not one angry word you get
But, please you, wonder I would put
My cheek beneath that lady's foot

189 Venienti, etc., encounter the approaching disease, or, meet trouble as it comes 190 theorbo, a light stringed instrument

Time's Revenues 22 Saint Paul's, a cathedral in London

Rather than trample under mine 45
The laurels of the Florentine,
And you shall see how the devil spends
A fire God gave for other ends!
I tell you, I stride up and down
This garret, crowned with love's best crown,
And feasted with love's perfect feast, 51
To think I kill for her, at least,
Body and soul and peace and fame,
Alike youth's end and manhood's aim —
So is my spirit, as flesh with sin, 55
Filled full, eaten out and in
With the face of her, the eyes of her,
The lips, the little chin, the stir
Of shadow round her mouth; and she (I'll tell you) calmly would decree 60
That I should roast at a slow fire,
If that would compass her desire
And make her one whom they invite
To the famous ball tomorrow night.

There may be heaven; there must be hell, 65
Meantime, there is our earth here — well!
(1845)

THE ITALIAN IN ENGLAND

That second time they hunted me
From hill to plain, from shore to sea,
And Austria, hounding far and wide
Her blood-hounds through the country-side,
Breathed hot and instant on my trace — 5
I made six days a hiding-place
Of that dry green old aqueduct
Where I and Charles, when boys, have plucked
The fire-flies from the roof above,
Bright creeping through the moss they love —
How long it seems since Charles was lost! 11
Six days the soldiers crossed and crossed
The country in my very sight,
And when that peril ceased at night,
The sky broke out in red dismay 15
With signal fires; well, there I lay
Close covered o'er in my recess,
Up to the neck in ferns and cress,
Thinking on Metternich our friend,
And Charles's miserable end, 20

The Italian in England The speaker is represented as an Italian patriot of the early 19th century active in one of the uprisings against the rule of Austria. He is a refugee in England. Mazzini (1805-1872), the famous revolutionary leader of Italy, who spent seven years of his exile in England, may well have gone through such experiences as are here related. The poem shows Browning's enthusiasm for Italian liberty. Cf. the story of Luigi and the Austrian police in Pippa Passes, III, pages 182-184.

8. Charles, Carlo Alberto (1798-1849), king of Sardinia, who had made terms with Austria. In 1831 he dealt severely with Mazzini's "Young Italy" and other patriotic secret societies. In 1848 he took the lead in a revolt against Austrian rule, but was defeated and forced to abdicate. 19 Metternich, a noted Austrian statesman (1773-1859), one of the most powerful enemies of Italian liberty.

And much beside, two days, the third,
 Hunger o'ercame me when I heard
 The peasants from the village go
 To work among the maize; you know,
 With us in Lombardy, they bring 25
 Provisions packed on mules, a string
 With little bells that cheer their task,
 And casks, and boughs on every cask
 To keep the sun's heat from the wine,
 These I let pass in jingling line, 30
 And, close on them, dear noisy crew,
 The peasants from the village, too,
 For at the very rear would troop
 Their wives and sisters in a group
 To help, I knew. When these had passed, 35
 I threw my glove to strike the last,
 Taking the chance; she did not start,
 Much less cry out, but stooped apart,
 One instant rapidly glanced round,
 And saw me beckon from the ground; 40
 A wild bush grows and hides my crypt,
 She picked my glove up while she stripped
 A branch off, then rejoined the rest
 With that, my glove lay in her breast.
 Then I drew breath; they disappeared, 45
 It was for Italy I feared

An hour, and she returned alone
 Exactly where my glove was thrown.
 Meanwhile came many thoughts; on me
 Rested the hopes of Italy;
 I had devised a certain tale 50
 Which, when 'twas told her, could not fail
 Persuade a peasant of its truth;
 I meant to call a freak of youth
 This hiding, and give hopes of pay, 55
 And no temptation to betray
 But when I saw that woman's face,
 Its calm simplicity of grace,
 Our Italy's own attitude
 In which she walked thus far, and stood, 60
 Planting each naked foot so firm,
 To crush the snake and spare the worm —
 At first sight of her eyes, I said,
 "I am that man upon whose head
 They fix the price, because I hate 65
 The Austrians over us; the State
 Will give you gold — oh, gold so much! —
 If you betray me to their clutch,
 And be your death, for aught I know,
 If once they find you saved their foe 70
 Now, you must bring me food and drink,
 And also paper, pen, and ink,
 And carry safe what I shall write
 To Padua, which you'll reach at night
 Before the duomo shuts, go in, 75
 And wait till Tenebræ begin;

Walk to the third confessional,
 Between the pillar and the wall,
 And kneeling whisper, Whence comes peace?
 Say it a second time, then cease, 80
 And if the voice inside returns,
From Christ and Freedom; what concerns
The cause of Peace? — for answer, slip
 My letter where you placed your lip,
 Then come back happy we have done 85
 Our mother service — I, the son,
 As you the daughter of our land!"

Three mornings more, she took her stand
 In the same place, with the same eyes;
 I was no surer of sunrise 90
 Than of her coming. We conferred
 Of her own prospects, and I heard
 She had a lover — stout and tall,
 She said — then let her eyelids fall,
 "He could do much" — as if some doubt 95
 Entered her heart — then, passing out,
 "She could not speak for others, who Had other thoughts, herself she knew";
 And so she brought me drink and food.
 After four days, the scouts pursued 100
 Another path; at last arrived
 The help my Paduan friends contrived
 To furnish me, she brought the news.
 For the first time I could not choose
 But kiss her hand, and lay my own 105
 Upon her head — "This faith was shown
 To Italy, our mother; she Uses my hand and blesses thee"
 She followed down to the seashore;
 I left and never saw her more. 110

How very long since I have thought
 Concerning — much less wished for — aught
 Beside the good of Italy,
 For which I live and mean to die!
 I never was in love; and since 115
 Charles proved false, what shall now convince
 My inmost heart I have a friend?
 However, if I pleased to spend Real wishes on myself — say, three —
 I know at least what one should be 120
 I would grasp Metternich until
 I felt his red wet throat distill
 In blood through these two hands. And next—
 Nor much for that am I perplexed —
 Charles, perjured traitor, for his part, 125
 Should die slow of a broken heart
 Under his new employers. Last —
 Ah, there, what should I wish? For fast
 Do I grow old and out of strength.
 If I resolved to seek at length 130
 My father's house again, how scared
 They all would look, and unprepared!
 My brothers live in Austria's pay —
 Disowned me long ago, men say;
 And all my early mates who used 135

74 Padua, an important Italian city, about twenty miles west of Venice. 75 the duomo, the most famous church in Padua. 76 Tenebræ, Darkness, a religious service in the Roman Catholic Church commemorating the Crucifixion.

To praise me so — perhaps induced
 More than one early step of mine —
 Are turning wise; while some opine
 "Freedom grows license," some suspect
 "Haste breeds delay," and recollect 140
 They always said, such premature
 Beginnings never could endure!
 So, with a sullen "All's for best,"
 The land seems settling to its rest.
 I think, then, I should wish to stand 145
 This evening in that dear, lost land,
 Over the sea the thousand miles,
 And know if yet that woman smiles
 With the calm smile; some little farm
 She lives in there, no doubt What harm 150
 If I sat on the door-side bench,
 And, while her spindle made a trench
 Fantastically in the dust,
 Inquired of all her fortunes — just
 Her children's ages and their names, 155
 And what may be the husband's aims
 For each of them I'd talk this out,
 And sit there, for an hour about,
 Then kiss her hand once more, and lay
 Mine on her head, and go my way. 160

So much for idle wishing — how
 It steals the time! To business now.

PICTOR IGNOTUS

FLORENCE, 15—

I could have painted pictures like that youth's Ye praise so. How my soul springs up!
 No bar
 Stayed me — ah, thought which saddens while it soothes!
 — Never did fate forbid me, star by star,
 To outburst on your night with all my gift 5
 Of fires from God, nor would my flesh have shrunk
 From seconding my soul, with eyes uplift
 And wide to heaven, or, straight like thunder, sunk
 To the center, of an instant; or around
 Turned calmly and inquisitive, to scan 10
 The license and the limit, space and bound.
 Allowed to truth made visible in man
 And, like that youth ye praise so, all I saw,
 Over the canvas could my hand have flung,
 Each face obedient to its passion's law, 15
 Each passion clear proclaimed without a
 tongue;
 Whether Hope rose at once in all the blood,
 A-tiptoe for the blessing of embrace,
 Or Rapture drooped the eyes, as when her brood

Pull down the nesting dove's heart to its
 place, 20
 Or Confidence lit swift the forehead up,
 And locked the mouth fast, like a castle braved —
 O human faces, hath it spilt, my cup?
 What did ye give me that I have not saved?
 Nor will I say I have not dreamed (how
 well!) 25
 Of going — I, in each new picture — forth,
 As, making new hearts beat and bosoms swell,
 To Pope or Kaiser, East, West, South, or North,
 Bound for the calmly satisfied great State,
 Or glad aspiring little burgh, it went, 30
 Flowers cast upon the car which bore the freight,
 Through old streets named afresh from the event,
 Till it reached home, where learned age should greet
 My face, and youth, the star not yet distinct
 Above his hair, lie learning at my feet! — 35
 Oh, thus to live, I and my picture, linked With love about, and praise, till life should
 end,
 And then not go to heaven, but linger here,
 Here on my earth, earth's every man my
 friend —
 The thought grew frightful, 'twas so wildly
 dear! 40
 But a voice changed it. Glimpses of such sights
 Have scared me, like the revels through a door
 Of some strange house of idols at its rites!
 This world seemed not the world it was before,
 Mixed with my loving trusting ones, there trooped 45
 . . . Who summoned those cold faces that begun
 To press on me and judge me? Though I stooped
 Shrinking, as from the soldiery a nun,
 They drew me forth, and spite of me . . .
 enough!
 These buy and sell our pictures, take and
 give, 50
 Count them for garniture and household-stuff,
 And where they live needs must our pictures live
 And see their faces, listen to their prate,
 Partakers of their daily pettiness,
 Discussed of — "This I love, or this I hate, ss
 This likes me more, and this affects me less!"
 Wherefore I chose my portion. If at whiles

My heart sinks, as monotonous I paint
 These endless cloisters and eternal aisles
 With the same series, Virgin, Babe, and
 Saint, 60
 With the same cold calm beautiful regard —
 At least no merchant traffics in my heart,
 The sanctuary's gloom at least shall ward
 Vain tongues from where my pictures stand
 apart,
 Only prayer breaks the silence of the shrine 65
 While, blackening in the daily candle-
 smoke,
 They molder on the damp wall's travertine,
 'Mid echoes the light footstep never woke.
 So, die my pictures! surely, gently die!
 O youth, men praise so — holds their praise its worth? 70
 Blown harshly, keeps the trump its golden cry?
 Tastes sweet the water with such specks of
 earth? (1845)

THE BISHOP ORDERS HIS TOMB AT SAINT PRAXED'S CHURCH

ROME, 15—

Vanity, saith the preacher, vanity!
 Draw round my bed, is Anselm keeping back?
 Nephews — sons mine . . . ah, God, I know not! Well —
 She, men would have to be your mother once,
 Old Gandolf envied me, so fair she was! 5
 What's done is done, and she is dead beside,
 Dead long ago, and I am Bishop since,
 And as she died so must we die ourselves,
 And thence ye may perceive the world's a
 dream
 Life, how and what is it? As here I lie 10
 In this state-chamber, dying by degrees,
 Hours and long hours in the dead night, I
 ask
 "Do I live, am I dead?" Peace, peace seems
 all.
 Saint Praxed's ever was the church for peace;
 And so, about this tomb of mine. I fought 15
 With tooth and nail to save my niche, ye
 know —
 Old Gandolf cozened me, despite my care;
 Shrewd was that snatch from out the corner
 South

67 travertine, a kind of white limestone used for building.

The Bishop Orders His Tomb at Saint Praxed's Church This old church in Rome was named after a virgin, St Praxed, or Praxedes, a Christian saint of the first century who used her riches in aiding the poor and the persecuted Christians. Both the Bishop and the tomb are imaginary. See Critical Notes

1 Vanity, etc. From Ecclesiastes, 1 2 — "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity" 5. Old Gandolf, the Bishop's predecessor and rival

He graced his carrion with, God curse the
 same!
 Yet still my niche is not so cramped but
 thence 20
 One sees the pulpit o' the epistle-side,
 And somewhat of the choir, those silent seats,
 And up into the aery dome where live
 The angels, and a sunbeam's sure to lurk;
 And I shall fill my slab of basalt there, 25
 And 'neath my tabernacle take my rest,
 With those nine columns round me, two and two,
 The odd one at my feet where Anselm stands:
 Peach-blossom marble all, the rare, the ripe
 As fresh-poured red wine of a mighty pulse. 30
 — Old Gandolf with his paltry onion-stone, Put me where I may look at him! True peach,
 Rosy and flawless; how I earned the prize!
 Draw close, that conflagration of my church—
 What then? So much was saved if aught were missed! 35
 My sons, ye would not be my death? Go dig
 The white-grape vineyard where the oil-press
 stood,
 Drop water gently till the surface sink,
 And if ye find . . . Ah, God, I know not, I! . . .
 Bedded in store of rotten fig-leaves soft, 40
 And corded up in a tight olive-frail,
 Some lump, ah, God, of lapis lazuli,
 Big as a Jew's head cut off at the nape,
 Blue as a vein o'er the Madonna's breast . . .
 Sons, all have I bequeathed you, villas, all, 45
 That brave Frascati villa with its bath,
 So, let the blue lump poise between my knees,
 Like God the Father's globe on both his hands
 Ye worship in the Jesu Church so gay,
 For Gandolf shall not choose but see and burst! 50
 Swift as a weaver's shuttle fleet our years;
 Man goeth to the grave, and where is he?
 Did I say basalt for my slab, sons? Black —
 'Twas ever antique-black I meant! How else
 Shall ye contrast my frieze to come beneath?
 The bas-relief in bronze ye promised me, 56
 Those Pans and Nymphs ye wot of, and perchance

Some tripod, thyrsus, with a vase or so,
 The Savior at his sermon on the mount,
 Saint Praxed in a glory, and one Pan 60
 Ready to twitch the Nymph's last garment off,
 And Moses with the tables . . . but I know
 Ye mark me not! What do they whisper thee,
 Child of my bowels, Anselm? Ah, ye hope
 To revel down my villas while I gasp 65
 Bricked o'er with beggar's moldy travertine
 Which Gandolf from his tomb-top chuckles at!
 Nay, boys, ye love me — all of jasper, then!
 'Tis jasper ye stand pledged to, lest I grieve
 My bath must needs be left behind, alas! 70
 One block, pure green as a pistachio-nut, There's plenty jasper somewhere in the
 world —

And have I not Saint Praxed's ear to pray
 Horses for ye, and brown Greek manuscripts,
 And mistresses with great smooth marbly
 limbs? 75

— That's if ye carve my epitaph aright, Choice Latin, picked phrase, Tully's every
 word,

No gaudy ware like Gandolf's second line —
 Tully, my masters? Ulpian serves his need!
 And then how I shall lie through centuries, 80
 And hear the blessed mutter of the Mass,
 And see God made and eaten all day long,
 And feel the steady candle-flame, and taste
 Good strong thick stupefying incense-smoke!
 For as I lie here, hours of the dead night, 85
 Dying in state and by such slow degrees,
 I fold my arms as if they clasped a crook,
 And stretch my feet forth straight as stone
 can point,

And let the bedclothes, for a mortcloth, drop
 Into great laps and folds of sculptor's-work, 90
 And as yon tapers dwindle, and strange
 thoughts

Grow, with a certain humming in my ears,
 About the life before I lived this life,
 And this life too, popes, cardinals, and priests,
 Saint Praxed at his sermon on the mount, 95
 Your tall pale mother with her talking eyes,
 And new-found agate urns as fresh as day,
 And marble's language, Latin pure, discreet—
 Aha, ELUCESCEBAT quoth our friend?

58 tripod, the three-legged stool on which the priestess of Apollo sat when giving responses to persons consulting the oracle at Delphi. thyrsus, the staff used by followers of Bacchus, God of wine. 59 This line refers to Christ's sermon on the mount as told in Matthew, 5-7. 62. Moses with the table. The account of Moses and the tables is found in Exodus, 24-34. 66 travertine, a kind of white limestone. 68 jasper, a dark green stone of smooth surface. 74 brown, that is, brown with age. 77 Tully's . . . word, in the style of Cicero (106-43 B.C.)—that is, the purest classic Latin. 79 Ulpian, Domitius Ulpianus (170-228), a noted Roman jurist whose Latin style was evidently inferior to that of Cicero. 82 God . . . long, that is, in the sacrament of the Mass. 89 mortcloth, a funeral pall. 95 his. The Bishop's mind seems to be wandering, St. Praxed was a woman. 99 elucescebat, he was famous. The Bishop scorns the form of the word, the classic form being elucebat.

No Tully, said I, Ulpian at the best! 100
 Evil and brief hath been my pilgrimage.
 All lapis, all, sons! Else I give the Pope
 My villas! Will ye ever eat my heart?
 Ever your eyes were as a lizard's quick,
 They glitter like your mother's for my soul, 105
 Or ye would heighten my impoverished frieze,
 Piece out its starved design, and fill my vase
 With grapes, and add a visor and a term,
 And to the tripod ye would tie a lynx
 That in his struggle throws the thyrsus down,
 To comfort me on my entablature 111
 Whereon I am to lie till I must ask,
 "Do I live, am I dead?" There, leave me,
 there!

For ye have stabbed me with ingratitude
 To death—ye wish it—God, ye wish it!
 Stone— 115

Gritstone, a-crumble! Clammy squares which sweat

As if the corpse they keep were oozing
 through —

And no more lapis to delight the world!
 Well, go! I bless ye. Fewer tapers there,
 But in a row; and, going, turn your backs —
 Aye, like departing altar-ministrants, 121
 And leave me in my church, the church for
 peace,

That I may watch at leisure if he leers —
 Old Gandolf — at me, from his onion-stone,
 As still he envied me, so fair she was! (1845)

SAUL

I

Said Abner, "At last thou art come! Ere I tell, ere thou speak,

Kiss my cheek, wish me well!" Then I wished it, and did kiss his cheek

And he "Since the King, O my friend, for thy countenance sent,

Neither drunken nor eaten have we; nor until from his tent

Thou return with the joyful assurance the King liveth yet, 5

Shall our lip with the honey be bright, with the water be wet.

For out of the black mid-tent's silence, a space
 of three days,

Not a sound hath escaped to thy servants, of prayer nor of praise,

108 visor, mask. term, combined bust and pedestal.
 116 Gritstone, a kind of coarse sandstone.

Saul. This poem is based upon a passage in 1 Samuel, 16 14-23. King Saul of Israel was troubled with an evil spirit. He was told that he would be cured by music, and hearing that David the shepherd boy could play the harp, Saul sent for him and was cured by the boy's playing. In the poem David is alone with his sheep. He tells the story of his playing before Saul. See Critical Notes.

1 Abner, the cousin of Saul and the commander of his army. thou, David.

To betoken that Saul and the Spirit have ended their strife,
And that, faint in his triumph, the monarch
sinks back upon life. 10

2
"Yet now my heart leaps, O beloved! God's child with his dew
On thy gracious gold hair, and those lilies still living and blue
Just broken to twine round thy harp-strings, as if no wild heat
Were now raging to torture the desert!"

3
Then I, as was meet,
Knelt down to the God of my fathers, and rose on my feet, 15
And ran o'er the sand burnt to powder. The tent was unlooped,
I pulled up the spear that obstructed, and under I stooped,
Hands and knees on the slippery grass-patch,
all withered and gone,
That extends to the second enclosure, I groped
my way on Till I felt where the foldskirts fly open. Then once more I prayed, 20
And opened the foldskirts and entered, and was not afraid
But spoke, "Here is David, thy servant!"
And no voice replied.
At the first I saw naught but the blackness,
but soon I descried
A something more black than the blackness —
the vast, the upright
Main prop which sustains the pavilion; and slow into sight 25
Grew a figure against it, gigantic and blackest
of all
Then a sunbeam, that burst through the tent-roof, showed Saul.

4
He stood as erect as that tent-prop, both arms stretched out wide
On the great cross-support in the center, that goes to each side;
He relaxed not a muscle, but hung there as,
caught in his pangs 30
And waiting his change, the king-serpent all heavily hangs,
Far away from his kind, in the pine, till deliverance come
With the spring-time — so agonized Saul, drear and stark, blind and dumb

31 king-serpent, probably the boa-constrictor, waiting the change that will come with the sloughing of his skin in the spring

5
Then I tuned my harp — took off the lilies
we twine round its chords
Lest they snap 'neath the stress of the noon-tide — those sunbeams like swords! 35
And I first played the tune all our sheep know,
as, one after one,
So docile they come to the pen-door till folding be done
They are white and untorn By the bushes, for lo, they have fed
Where the long grasses stifle the water within the stream's bed;
And now one after one seeks its lodging, as star follows star 40
Into eve and the blue far above us — so blue and so far!

6
— Then the tune for which quails on the corn-land will each leave his mate
To fly after the player, then, what makes the crickets elate
Till for boldness they fight one another; and then, what has weight
To set the quick jerboa a-musing outside his sand house — 45
There are none such as he for a wonder, half bird and half mouse!
God made all the creatures and gave them
our love and our fear,
To give sign, we and they are his children, one family here.

7
Then I played the help-tune of our reapers, their wine-song, when hand
Grasps at hand, eye lights eye in good friendship, and great hearts expand 50
And grow one in the sense of this world's life
— And then, the last song
When the dead man is praised on his journey
— "Bear, bear him along,
With his few faults shut up like dead flowerets!
Are balm seeds not here
To console us? The land has none left such as he on the bier.
Oh, would we might keep thee, my brother!"
— And then, the glad chaunt 55
Of the marriage — first go the young maidens;
next, she whom we vaunt
As the beauty, the pride of our dwelling. —
And then, the great march Wherein man runs to man to assist him and buttress an arch
Naught can break; who shall harm them, our friends? Then, the chorus intoned

42 corn-land, grain-land 45 jerboa, the jumping hare, a small jumping animal of the rat family

As the Levites go up to the altar in glory enthroned. 60
But I stopped here; for here in the darkness
Saul groaned.

8

And I paused, held my breath in such silence,
and listened apart;
And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered; and sparkles 'gan dart
From the jewels that woke in his turban, at once with a start,
All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart. 65
So the head, but the body still moved not,
still hung there erect.
And I bent once again to my playing, pursued it unchecked,
As I sang:

9

"Oh, our manhood's prime vigor! No spirit
feels waste,
Not a muscle is stopped in its playing nor sinew unbraced.
Oh, the wild joys of living! the leaping from rock up to rock, 70
The strong rending of boughs from the fir-tree, the cool silver shock
Of the plunge in a pool's living water, the hunt
of the bear,
And the sultriness showing the lion is couched
in his lair.
And the meal, the rich dates yellowed over with gold dust divine,
And the locust-flesh steeped in the pitcher,
the full draft of wine, 75
And the sleep in the dried river-channel where bulrushes tell
That the water was wont to go warbling so softly and well.
How good is man's life, the mere living! how fit to employ
All the heart and the soul and the senses forever in joy!
Hast thou loved the white locks of thy father, whose sword thou didst guard 80
When he trusted thee forth with the armies,
for glorious reward?
Didst thou see the thin hands of thy mother
held up as men sung
The low song of the nearly-departed, and hear her faint tongue
Joining in while it could to the witness, 'Let one more attest,

I have lived, seen God's hand through a lifetime, and all was for best?" 85
Then they sung through their tears in strong triumph, not much, but the rest.
And thy brothers, the help and the contest,
the working whence grew
Such results, as from seething grape-bundles,
the spirit strained true,
And the friends of thy boyhood — that boy-hood of wonder and hope,
Present promise and wealth of the future beyond the eye's scope — 90
Till lo, thou art grown to a monarch, a people is thine;
And all gifts, which the world offers singly,
on one head combine!
On one head, all the beauty and strength, love and rage (like the throe
That, a-work in the rock, helps its labor and lets the gold go),
High ambition and deeds which surpass it,
fame crowning them — all 95
Brought to blaze on the head of one creature
— King Saul!"

10

And lo, with that leap of my spirit — heart,
hand, harp, and voice,
Each lifting Saul's name out of sorrow, each bidding rejoice
Saul's fame in the light it was made for — as when, dare I say,
The Lord's army, in rapture of service, strains through its array, 100
And upsoareth the cherubim-chariot—"Saul!"
cried I, and stopped,
And waited the thing that should follow Then Saul, who hung propped
By the tent's cross-support in the center, was struck by his name.
Have ye seen when Spring's arrowy summons goes right to the aim,
And some mountain — the last to withstand her, that held (he alone, 105 While the vale laughed in freedom and flowers)
on a broad bust of stone
A year's snow bound about for a breastplate
— leaves grasp of the sheet?
Fold on fold all at once it crowds thunderously
down to his feet,
And there fronts you, stark, black, but alive
yet, your mountain of old,
With his rents, the successive bequeathings of ages untold — 110
Yea, each harm got in fighting your battles,
each furrow and scar
Of his head thrust 'twixt you and the tempest
— all hail, there they are!
— Now again to be softened with verdure,
again hold the nest

60 Levites . . . enthroned The sons of Levi were priests. An account of the service required of them appears in 1 Chronicles, 23 24-32. 65 male-sapphire It reveals a star of bright rays. The ruby shows a bright red light at the center.

Of the dove, tempt the goat and its young to the green on his crest
 For their food in the ardors of summer. One long shudder thrilled 115
 All the tent till the very air tingled, then sank and was stilled
 At the King's self left standing before me, released and aware.
 What was gone, what remained? All to traverse 'twixt hope and despair,
 Death was past, life not come, so he waited.
 Awhile his right hand
 Held the brow, helped the eyes left too vacant forthwith to remand 120
 To their place what new objects should enter;
 'twas Saul as before.
 I looked up and dared gaze at those eyes, nor was hurt any more Than by slow pallid sunsets in autumn, ye watch from the shore,
 At their sad level gaze o'er the ocean — a sun's slow decline
 Over hills which, resolved in stern silence, o'er-lap and entwine 125
 Base with base to knit strength more intensely, so, arm folded arm
 O'er the chest whose slow heavings subsided

II

What spell or what charm
 (For awhile there was trouble within me), what next should I urge
 To sustain him where song had restored him?
 — Song filled to the verge
 His cup with the wine of this life, pressing all that it yields 130
 Of mere fruitage, the strength and the beauty,
 beyond, on what fields,
 Glean a vintage more potent and perfect to brighten the eye
 And bring blood to the lip, and commend them
 the cup they put by?
 He saith, "It is good"; still he drinks not, he lets me praise life,
 Gives assent, yet would die for his own part.

I2

Then fancies grew rife
 Which had come long ago on the pasture, when round me the sheep 136
 Fed in silence — above, the one eagle wheeled slow as in sleep;
 And I lay in my hollow and mused on the world that might lie
 'Neath his ken, though I saw but the strip
 'twixt the hill and the sky;
 And I laughed — "Since my days are ordained to be passed with my flocks, 140

Let me people at least, with my fancies, the plains and the rocks,
 Dream the life I am never to mix with, and image the show
 Of mankind as they live in those fashions I hardly shall know!
 Schemes of life, its best rules and right uses,
 the courage that gains,
 And the prudence that keeps what men strive for." And now these old trains 145
 Of vague thought came again; I grew surer, so, once more the string
 Of my harp made response to my spirit, as thus —

I3

"Yea, my King,"
 I began — "thou dost well in rejecting mere comforts that spring
 From the mere mortal life held in common by man and by brute;
 In our flesh grows the branch of this life, in our soul it bears fruit.
 Thou hast marked the slow rise of the tree —
 how its stem trembled first 151
 Till it passed the kid's lip, the stag's antler, then safely outburst
 The fan-branches all round, and thou mindest
 when these too, in turn,
 Broke a-bloom and the palm-tree seemed perfect; yet more was to learn,
 E'en the good that comes in with the palm-fruit. Our dates shall we slight, 155
 When their juice brings a cure for all sorrow?
 or care for the plight
 Of the palm's self whose slow growth produced them? Not so! stem and branch Shall decay, nor be known in their place, while the palm-wine shall stanch
 Every wound of man's spirit in winter I pour thee such wine.
 Leave the flesh to the fate it was fit for! the spirit be thine! 160
 By the spirit, when age shall o'ercome thee, thou still shalt enjoy
 More indeed, than at first when unconscious,
 the life of a boy.
 Crush that life, and behold its wine running!
 Each deed thou hast done
 Dies, revives, goes to work in the world; until e'en as the sun
 Looking down on the earth, though clouds spoil him, though tempests efface, 165
 Can find nothing his own deed produced not,
 must everywhere trace
 The results of his past summer-prime — so,
 each ray of thy will,
 Every flash of thy passion and prowess, long over, shall thrill
 Thy whole people, the countless, with ardor, till they too give forth

135 Pippa had fancies similar to those expressed in this section. See Pippa Passes, 104-13, page 170

A like cheer to their sons, who in turn, fill the South and the North 170
 With the radiance thy deed was the germ of Carouse in the past!
 But the license of age has its limit; thou diest
 at last:
 As the lion when age dims his eyeball, the rose
 at her height,
 So with man — so his power and his beauty forever take flight.
 No! Again a long draft of my soul-wine!
 Look forth o'er the years! 175
 Thou hast done now with eyes for the actual;
 begin with the seer's!
 Is Saul dead? In the depth of the vale make his tomb — bid arise
 A gray mountain of marble heaped foursquare, till, built to the skies,
 Let it mark where the great First King slumbers, whose fame would ye know?
 Up above see the rock's naked face, where the record shall go 180
 In great characters cut by the scribe — Such was Saul, so he did,
 With the sages directing the work, by the populace chid —
 For not half, they'll affirm, is comprised there!
 Which fault to amend,
 In the grove with his kind grows the cedar,
 whereon they shall spend (See, in tablets 'tis level before them) their praise, and record 185
 With the gold of the graver, Saul's story —
 the statesman's great word
 Side by side with the poet's sweet comment
 The river's a-wave
 With smooth paper-reeds grazing each other when prophet-winds rave;
 So the pen gives unborn generations their due and their part
 In thy being! Then, first of the mighty, thank God that thou art!" 190

14

And behold while I sang . . . but O Thou who didst grant me that day,
 And before it not seldom hast granted thy help to essay,
 Carry on and complete an adventure — my shield and my sword
 In that act where my soul was thy servant,
 thy word was my word —
 Still be with me, who then at the summit of human endeavor 195
 And scaling the highest, man's thought could, gazed hopeless as ever
 On the new stretch of heaven above me — till,
 mighty to save,

Just one lift of thy hand cleared that distance
 — God's throne from man's grave!
 Let me tell out my tale to its ending — my voice to my heart
 Which can scarce dare believe in what marvels last night I took part, 200
 As this morning I gather the fragments, alone
 with my sheep,
 And still fear lest the terrible glory evanish like sleep!
 For I wake in the gray dewy covert, while Hebron upheaves
 The dawn struggling with night on his shoulder, and Kidron retrieves
 Slow the damage of yesterday's sunshine.

15

I say then — my song
 While I sang thus, assuring the monarch, and ever more strong 206
 Made a proffer of good to console him — he slowly resumed
 His old motions and habitudes kingly The right hand replumed
 His black locks to their wonted composure, adjusted the swathes
 Of his turban, and see — the huge sweat that his countenance bathes, 210
 He wipes off with the robe; and he girds now
 his loins as of yore,
 And feels slow for the armlets of price, with the clasp set before
 He is Saul ye remember in glory — ere error had bent
 The broad brow from the daily communion;
 and still, though much spent
 Be the life and the bearing that front you, the same God did choose 215
 To receive what a man may waste, desecrate, never quite lose
 So sank he along by the tent-prop till, stayed by the pile
 Of his armor and war-cloak and garments, he leaned there awhile,
 And sat out my singing — one arm round the tent-prop, to raise
 His bent head, and the other hung slack —
 till I touched on the praise 220
 I foresaw from all men in all time, to the man patient there;
 And thus ended, the harp falling forward
 Then first I was 'ware
 That he sat, as I say, with my head just above
 his vast knees,
 Which were thrust out on each side around me, like oak roots which please

To encircle a lamb when it slumbers. I looked up to know ²²⁵
 If the best I could do had brought solace, he spoke not, but slow Lifted up the hand slack at his side, till he laid it with care
 Soft and grave, but in mild settled will, on my brow; through my hair
 The large fingers were pushed, and he bent back my head, with kind power —
 All my face back, intent to peruse it, as men do a flower. ²³⁰
 Thus held he me there with his great eyes that scrutinized mine —
 And, oh, all my heart how it loved him! but where was the sign?
 I yearned — “Could I help thee, my father,
 inventing a bliss,
 I would add, to that life of the past, both the future and this;
 I would give thee new life altogether, as good,
 ages hence, ²³⁵
 As this moment — had love but the warrant, love’s heart to dispense!”

16

Then the truth came upon me No harp more
 — no song more! Outbroke.

17

“I have gone the whole round of creation, I saw and I spoke;
 I, a work of God’s hand for that purpose, received in my brain
 And pronounced on the rest of his handwork
 — returned him again ²⁴⁰
 His creation’s approval or censure; I spoke as I saw;
 I report, as a man may of God’s work — all’s love, yet all’s law
 Now I lay down the judgeship he lent me.
 Each faculty tasked
 To perceive him, has gained an abyss, where a dewdrop was asked
 Have I knowledge? confounded it shrivels at Wisdom laid bare. ²⁴⁵
 Have I forethought? how purblind, how blank,
 to the Infinite Care!
 Do I task any faculty highest, to image success?
 I but open my eyes — and perfection, no more
 and no less,
 In the kind I imagined, full-fronts me, and God is seen God
 In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod. ²⁵⁰

And thus looking within and around me, I ever renew (With that stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too)
 The submission of man’s nothing-perfect to God’s all-complete,
 As by each new obeisance in spirit, I climb to his feet.
 Yet with all this abounding experience, this deity known, ²⁵⁵
 I shall dare to discover some province, some gift of my own
 There’s a faculty pleasant to exercise, hard to hoodwink,
 I am fain to keep still in abeyance (I laugh as I think),
 Lest, insisting to claim and parade in it, wot
 ye, I worst
 E’en the Giver in one gift — Behold, I could love if I durst! ²⁶⁰
 But I sink the pretension as fearing a man
 may o’ertake
 God’s own speed in the one way of love; I abstain for love’s sake.
 —What, my soul? see thus far and no farther? when doors great and small,
 Nine-and-ninety flew ope at our touch, should the hundredth appall?
 In the least things have faith, yet distrust in
 the greatest of all? ²⁶⁵
 Do I find love so full in my nature, God’s ultimate gift,
 That I doubt his own love can compete with it? Here, the parts shift?
 Here, the creature surpass the Creator — the end, what Began?
 Would I fain in my impotent yearning do all
 for this man,
 And dare doubt he alone shall not help him,
 who yet alone can? ²⁷⁰
 Would it ever have entered my mind, the bare will, much less power,
 To bestow on this Saul what I sang of, the marvelous dower
 Of the life he was gifted and filled with? to make such a soul,
 Such a body, and then such an earth for insphering the whole?
 And doth it not enter my mind (as my warm tears attest) ²⁷⁵
 These good things being given, to go on, and give one more, the best?
 Aye, to save and redeem and restore him,
 maintain at the height
 This perfection — succeed with life’s day-spring, death’s minute of night?
 Interpose at the difficult minute, snatch Saul
 the mistake,
 Saul the failure, the ruin he seems now — and bid him awake ²⁸⁰

237 Outbroke. David first played on his harp (lines 36-60), then he sang (lines 68-190), and finally he spoke (lines 237-312)

From the dream, the probation, the prelude, to find himself set Clear and safe in new light and new life — a new harmony yet
To be run, and continued, and ended — who knows? — or endure!
The man taught enough by life's dream, of the rest to make sure;
By the pain-throb, triumphantly winning intensified bliss, 285
And the next world's reward and repose, by the struggles in this.

18

"I believe it! 'Tis thou, God, that givest,
'tis I who receive;
In the first is the last, in thy will is my power to believe.
All's one gift; thou canst grant it moreover,
as prompt to my prayer
As I breathe out this breath, as I open these arms to the air 290
From thy will stream the worlds, life and nature, thy dread Sabaoth,
I will? — the mere atoms despise me! Why am I not loath
To look that, even that, in the face too? Why is it I dare Think but lightly of such impuissance? What stops my despair?
This — 'tis not what man Does which exalts him, but what man Would do! 295
See the King — I would help him but cannot
— the wishes fall through.
Could I wrestle to raise him from sorrow,
grow poor to enrich,
To fill up his life, starve my own out, I would — knowing which,
I know that my service is perfect. Oh, speak through me now!
Would I suffer for him that I love? So wouldst thou — so wilt thou! 300
So shall crown thee the topmost, ineffablest, utmost crown —
And thy love fill infinitude wholly, nor leave up nor down
One spot for the creature to stand in! It is by no breath,
Turn of eye, wave of hand, that salvation
joins issue with death!
As thy Love is discovered almighty, almighty be proved 305
Thy power, that exists with and for it, of being Beloved!
He who did most shall bear most, the strongest shall stand the most weak
'Tis the weakness in strength that I cry for!
my flesh, that I seek

In the Godhead! I seek and I find it. O Saul, it shall be
A Face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me, 310
Thou shalt love and be loved by, forever; a Hand like this hand
Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee!
See the Christ stand!"

19

I know not too well how I found my way home in the night.
There were witnesses, cohorts about me, to left and to right,
Angels, powers, the unuttered, unseen, the alive, the aware; 315
I repressed, I got through them as hardly, as strugglingly there,
As a runner beset by the populace famished
for news —
Life or death The whole earth was awakened,
hell loosed with her crews;
And the stars of night beat with emotion, and tingled and shot
Out in fire the strong pain of pent knowledge, but I fainted not, 320
For the Hand still impelled me at once and supported, suppressed
All the tumult, and quenched it with quiet,
and holy behest,
Till the rapture was shut in itself, and the earth sank to rest.
Anon at the dawn, all that trouble had withered from earth —
Not so much, but I saw it die out in the day's tender birth; 325
In the gathered intensity brought to the gray
of the hills,
In the shuddering forests' held breath, in the sudden wind-thrills,
In the startled wild beasts that bore off, each with eye sidling still Though averted with wonder and dread, in the birds stiff and chill
That rose heavily, as I approached them, made stupid with awe, 330
E'en the serpent that slid away silent — he felt the new law
The same stared in the white humid faces upturned by the flowers;
The same worked in the heart of the cedar and moved the vine-bowers,
And the little brooks, witnessing, murmured,
persistent and low,
With their obstinate, all but hushed voices —
"E'en so, it is so!"

(1845, 1855)

291 Sabaoth. The word literally means armies or hosts
It indicates the omnipotence of God

331 the new law, i.e., that God is infinite in love as well as in power

A WOMAN'S LAST WORD

Let's contend no more, Love,
Strive nor weep,
All be as before, Love,
—Only sleep!

What so wild as words are?
I and thou
In debate, as birds are,
Hawk on bough!

See the creature stalking
While we speak!
Hush and hide the talking,
Check on check!

What so false as truth is,
False to thee?
Where the serpent's tooth is Shun the tree —

Where the apple reddens
Never pry —
Lest we lose our Edens,
Eve and I.

Be a god and hold me
With a charm!
Be a man and fold me
With thine arm!

Teach me, only teach, Love!
As I ought
I will speak thy speech, Love,
Think thy thought —

Meet, if thou require it,
Both demands,
Laying flesh and spirit
In thy hands.

That shall be tomorrow,
Not tonight;
I must bury sorrow
Out of sight —

Must a little weep, Love (Foolish me!),
And so fall asleep, Love,
Loved by thee.

EVELYN HOPE

Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead!
Sit and watch by her side an hour
That is her book-shelf, this her bed,
She plucked that piece of geranium-flower,
Beginning to die too, in the glass;

Little has yet been changed, I think
The shutters are shut, no light may pass,
Save two long rays through the hinge's
chink.

Sixteen years old when she died!
Perhaps she had scarcely heard my name, 10
It was not her time to love; beside,
Her life had many a hope and aim,
Duties enough and little cares,
And now was quiet, now astir,
Till God's hand beckoned unawares — 15
And the sweet white brow is all of her.

Is it too late then, Evelyn Hope?
What, your soul was pure and true,
The good stars met in your horoscope,
Made you of spirit, fire, and dew — 20
And, just because I was thrice as old
And our paths in the world diverged so wide,
Each was naught to each, must I be told?
We were fellow mortals, naught beside?

No, indeed! for God above 25
Is great to grant, as mighty to make,
And creates the love to reward the love,
I claim you still, for my own love's sake!
Delayed it may be for more lives yet,
Through worlds I shall traverse, not a few,
Much is to learn, much to forget 31
Ere the time be come for taking you

But the time will come — at last it will,
When, Evelyn Hope, what meant (I shall
say)
In the lower earth, in the years long still, 35
That body and soul so pure and gay?
Why your hair was amber, I shall divine,
And your mouth of your own geranium's
red —
And what you would do with me, in fine,
In the new life come in the old one's stead. 40

I have lived (I shall say) so much since then,
Given up myself so many times,
Gained me the gains of various men,
Ransacked the ages, spoiled the climes,
Yet one thing, one, in my soul's full scope, 45
Either I missed or itself missed me:
And I want and find you, Evelyn Hope!
What is the issue? let us see!

I loved you, Evelyn, all the while!
My heart seemed full as it could hold, 50
There was place and to spare for the frank young smile,
And the red young mouth, and the hair's young gold
So, hush — I will give you this leaf to keep,

See, I shut it inside the sweet cold hand!
There, that is our secret, go to sleep! 55
You will wake, and remember, and understand. (1855)

LOVE AMONG THE RUINS

Where the quiet-colored end of evening smiles
Miles and miles
On the solitary pastures where our sheep
Half-asleep
Tinkle homeward through the twilight, stray or stop 5
As they crop —
Was the site once of a city great and gay
(So they say),
Of our country's very capital, its prince
Ages since 10
Held his court in, gathered councils, wielding far
Peace or war.

Now — the country does not even boast a tree,
As you see,
To distinguish slopes of verdure, certain rills
From the hills 16
Intersect and give a name to (else they run Into one),
Where the domed and daring palace shot its spires
Up like fires 20
O'er the hundred-gated circuit of a wall
Bounding all,
Made of marble, men might march on nor be pressed,
Twelve abreast.

And such plenty and perfection, see, of grass
Never was! 26
Such a carpet as, this summer-time, o'er-spreads
And embeds
Every vestige of the city, guessed alone,
Stock or stone — 30
Where a multitude of men breathed joy and woe
Long ago;
Just of glory pricked their hearts up, dread of shame
Struck them tame,
And that glory and that shame alike, the gold
Bought and sold 36

Now — the single little turret that remains
On the plains,
By the caper overrooted, by the gourd

Love among the Ruins 39 caper, a low prickly shrub of the Mediterranean region

Overscored, 40
While the patching houseleek's head of blossom winks
Through the chinks —
Marks the basement whence a tower in ancient time
Sprang sublime,
And a burning ring, all round, the chariots
traced 45
As they raced,
And the monarch and his minions and his dames
Viewed the games.

And I know, while thus the quiet-colored eve
Smiles to leave 50
To their folding, all our many-tinkling fleece
In such peace,
And the slopes and rills in undistinguished
gray
Melt away —
That a girl with eager eyes and yellow hair
Waits me there 56
In the turret whence the charioteers caught
soul
For the goal,
When the king looked, where she looks now, breathless, dumb
Till I come. 60

But he looked upon the city, every side,
Far and wide,
All the mountains topped with temples, all the glades'
Colonnades,
All the causeys, bridges, aqueducts — and
then, 65
All the men!
When I do come, she will speak not, she will
stand,
Either hand
On my shoulder, give her eyes the first embrace
Of my face, 70
Ere we rush, ere we extinguish sight and
speech
Each on each.

In one year they sent a million fighters forth
South and North,
And they built their gods a brazen pillar high
As the sky, 76
Yet reserved a thousand chariots in full force —
Gold, of course.
O heart! O blood that freezes, blood that burns!

41 houseleek, a common European plant with leaves clustered in a kind of rosette 65 causeys, causeways — that is, raised roads across low ground

Earth's returns 80
 For whole centuries of folly, noise and sin!
 Shut them in.
 With their triumphs and their glories and the
 rest!
 Love is best

UP AT A VILLA — DOWN IN THE CITY (AS DISTINGUISHED BY AN ITALIAN PERSON OF QUALITY)

Had I but plenty of money, money enough and to spare,
 The house for me, no doubt, were a house in the city-square;
 Ah, such a life, such a life, as one leads at the window there!

Something to see, by Bacchus, something to hear, at least!
 There, the whole day long, one's life is a perfect feast; 5
 While up at a villa one lives, I maintain it,
 no more than a beast.

Well now, look at our villa! stuck like the horn of a bull
 Just on a mountain-edge as bare as the creature's skull,
 Save a mere shag of a bush with hardly a leaf to pull!
 — I scratch my own, sometimes, to see if the hair's turned wool. 10

But the city, oh, the city — the square with the houses! Why?
 They are stone-faced, white as a curd, there's something to take the eye!
 Houses in four straight lines, not a single front
 awry;
 You watch who crosses and gossips, who saunters, who hurries by,
 Green blinds, as a matter of course, to draw
 when the sun gets high, 15
 And the shops with fanciful signs which are painted properly.

What of a villa? Though winter be over in March by rights,
 'Tis May perhaps ere the snow shall have withered well off the heights; You've the brown plowed land before, where the oxen steam and wheeze,
 And the hills over-smoked behind by the faint
 gray olive-trees 20

Up at a Villa—Down in the City 4 Bacchus, the god of
 wine

Is it better in May, I ask you? You've summer all at once,
 In a day he leaps complete with a few strong
 April suns
 'Mid the sharp short emerald wheat, scarce
 risen three fingers well,
 The wild tulip, at end of its tube, blows out its great red bell
 Like a thin clear bubble of blood, for the children to pick and sell 25

Is it ever hot in the square? There's a fountain to spout and splash!
 In the shade it sings and springs, in the shine
 such foambows flash
 On the horses with curling fish-tails, that prance and paddle and pash
 Round the lady atop in her conch — fifty gazers do not abash,
 Though all that she wears is some weeds round her waist in a sort of sash 30

All the year long at the villa, nothing to see though you linger,
 Except yon cypress that points like death's
 lean lifted forefinger
 Some think fireflies pretty, when they mix i'
 the corn and mingle,
 Or thrid the stinking hemp till the stalks of it seem a-tingle
 Late August or early September, the stunning cicala is shrill, 35
 And the bees keep their tiresome whine round
 the resinous firs on the hill.
 Enough of the seasons — I spare you the months of the fever and chill

Ere you open your eyes in the city, the blessed church-bells begin;
 No sooner the bells leave off than the diligence rattles in;
 You get the pick of the news, and it costs you never a pin 40
 By and by there's the traveling doctor gives pills, lets blood, draws teeth;
 Or the Pulcinello-trumpet breaks up the market beneath
 At the post-office such a scene-picture — the new play, piping hot!
 And a notice how, only this morning, three liberal thieves were shot.

29 conch, shell 32. cypress The cypress, an emblem of mourning, is a common tree in graveyards 33 corn, wheat and other small grains, not maize 34 thrif, thread, fly through 42 Pulcinello-trumpet, the signal of strolling players, announcing the coming of Pulcinello, the clown or buffoon of the puppet show 43 scene-picture, a picture advertising some new play 44 liberal thieves, members of the liberal, or revolutionary, party, working for Italian freedom from Austrian control

Above it, behold the Archbishop's most fatherly of rebukes,⁴⁵
 And beneath, with his crown and his lion
 some little new law of the Duke's!
 Or a sonnet with flowery marge, to the Reverend Don So-and-so,
 Who is Dante, Boccaccio, Petrarca, Saint Jerome,
 and Cicero,
 "And moreover" (the sonnet goes riming),
 "the skirts of Saint Paul has reached,
 Having preached us those six Lent-lectures more unctuous than ever he preached"
 Noon strikes — here sweeps the procession!
 our Lady borne smiling and smart⁵¹
 With a pink gauze gown all spangles, and seven swords stuck in her heart!
Bang-whang-whang goes the drum, toolle-to-
toolle the fife,
 No keeping one's haunches still; it's the greatest pleasure in life.

But bless you, it's dear — it's dear! fowls,
 wine, at double the rate⁵⁵
 They have clapped a new tax upon salt, and what oil pays passing the gate
 It's a horror to think of And so, the villa for me, not the city!
 Beggars can scarcely be choosers but still — ah, the pity, the pity!
 Look, two and two go the priests, then the monks with cowls and sandals,
 And the penitents dressed in white shirts,
 a-holding the yellow candles;⁶⁰
 One, he carries a flag up straight, and another
 a cross with handles,
 And the Duke's guard brings up the rear, for the better prevention of scandals, Bang-whang-whang goes the drum, toolle-to-
toolle the fife
 Oh, a day in the city-square, there is no such pleasure in life!

(1855)

47-50 sonnet . . . preached. The sonnet ranks the Reverend So-and-So with Dante (1265-1321), Boccaccio (1313-75), and Petrarch (1304-74), the three greatest Italian writers, with St. Jerome (340?-420), the most learned of the early Fathers of the Latin Church, with Cicero (106-43 B.C.), the famous Roman orator and statesman, and with St. Paul, the great Christian preacher of the first century A.D. 51 procession . . . borne, a religious procession bearing an image of the Virgin Mary 52 seven swords These symbolize the seven traditional sorrows of the Virgin Mary These are (1) her grief at the prophecy of Simeon that a sword should pierce her soul because of her Son (Luke, 2:34-35), (2) her affliction during the flight into Egypt (Matthew, 2:13-15), (3) her distress at the loss of her Son before finding Him in the Temple (Luke, 2:41-51), (4) her sorrow when she met her Son bearing His cross (John, 19:17), (5) her suffering at the sight of His agony (John, 19:25-30), (6) the wound to her heart when His side was pierced (John, 19:34), and (7) her agony at His burial (Matthew, 27:58-61) 56 a new tax upon salt A tax was levied upon all country produce brought into the city.

A TOCCATA OF GALUPPI'S

O Galuppi, Baldassare, this is very sad to find!

I can hardly misconceive you, it would prove me deaf and blind,

But although I take your meaning, 'tis with such a heavy mind!

Here you come with your old music, and here's all the good it brings.

What, they lived once thus at Venice where the merchants were the kings,⁵

Where St. Mark's is, where the Doges used to wed the sea with rings?

Aye, because the sea's the street there, and 'tis arched by—what you call —

Shylock's bridge with houses on it, where they kept the carnival.

I was never out of England — it's as if I saw it all.

Did young people take their pleasure when the sea was warm in May?¹⁰

Balls and masks begun at midnight, burning ever to mid-day,

When they made up fresh adventures for the morrow, do you say?

Was a lady such a lady, cheeks so round and lips so red —

On her neck the small face buoyant, like a bell-flower on its bed,

O'er the breast's superb abundance where a man might base his head?¹⁵

Well, and it was graceful of them — they'd break talk off and afford —

She, to bite her mask's black velvet — he, to finger on his sword,

While you sat and played Toccatas, stately at the clavichord?

A Toccata of Galuppi's A toccata (Italian toccare, to touch) is a musical composition characterized by lightness of tone and freedom of movement Baldassare Galuppi (1706-85) was a noted popular Italian musician and composer During his last years he was organist at St. Mark's Cathedral in Venice In the poem the toccata reveals to a scientific Englishman the gay, empty life of Venice of the 18th century Browning himself was fond of playing Galuppi's A Toccata is regarded as one of the finest of his music poems Cf. Abt Vogler, page 278

6 St. Mark's, the great cathedral in Venice Doges The Doge was the chief magistrate of the city to wed rings The ceremony of "wedding the Adriatic" was instituted by Pope Alexander III in 1174 He gave the doge a ring in token of the victory of the Venetians over Frederick Barbarossa, emperor of Germany, and desired the doge to throw a similar ring into the sea annually in commemoration of the event The ceremony denoted that the Adriatic Sea was subject to Venice as a wife was subject to her husband 8 Shylock's bridge, the Rialto, a bridge over the Grand Canal 18 clavichord, an old fashioned instrument with keys and strings, the predecessor of the modern piano

What? Those lesser thirds so plaintive, sixths diminished, sigh on sigh,
Told them something? Those suspensions, those solutions — "Must we die?" 20
Those commiserating sevenths — "Life might last! we can but try!"

"Were you happy?"—"Yes."—"And are you still as happy?"—"Yes. And you?"
—"Then, more kisses!"—"Did I stop them, when a million seemed so few?"
Hark, the dominant's persistence till it must be answered to!

So, an octave struck the answer. Oh, they praised you, I dare say! 25
"Brave Galuppi! that was music! good alike
at grave and gay!
I can always leave off talking when I hear a master play!"

Then they left you for their pleasure; till in due time, one by one,
Some with lives that came to nothing, some
with deeds as well undone,
Death stepped tacitly and took them where they never see the sun. 30

But when I sit down to reason, think to take my stand nor swerve,
While I triumph o'er a secret wrung from nature's close reserve,
In you come with your cold music till I creep through every nerve.

Yes, you, like a ghostly cricket, creaking
where a house was burned:
"Dust and ashes, dead and done with, Venice spent what Venice earned. 35
The soul, doubtless, is immortal — where a soul can be discerned.

"Yours for instance: you know physics, something of geology,
Mathematics are your pastime; souls shall rise
in their degree;
Butterflies may dread extinction — you'll not die, it cannot be!

"As for Venice and her people, merely born to bloom and drop, 40
Here on earth they bore their fruitage, mirth
and folly were the crop;
What of soul was left, I wonder, when the kissing had to stop?

19-24. In these lines Browning uses a number of technical musical terms the general meaning of which is made clear by accompanying phrases. 35-43 The quotation in these lines is what the music says to the speaker in the monologue concerning the men and women for whom life meant merely a butterfly pleasure

"Dust and ashes!" So you creak it, and I want the heart to scold.
Dear dead women, with such hair, too — what's become of all the gold Used to hang and brush their bosoms? I feel chilly and grown old. 45

OLD PICTURES IN FLORENCE

The morn when first it thunders in March,
The eel in the pond gives a leap, they say
As I leaned and looked over the aloed arch
Of the villa-gate this warm March day,
No flash snapped, no dumb thunder rolled 5
In the valley beneath where, white and wide
And washed by the morning water-gold,
Florence lay out on the mountain-side.

River and bridge and street and square
Lay mune, as much at my beck and call, 10
Through the live translucent bath of air,
As the sights in a magic crystal ball.
And of all I saw and of all I praised,
The most to praise and the best to see,
Was the startling bell-tower Giotto raised; 15
But why did it more than startle me?

Giotto, how, with that soul of yours,
Could you play me false who loved you so?
Some slights if a certain heart endures
Yet it feels, I would have your fellows
know! 20
I' faith, I perceive not why I should care
To break a silence that suits them best,
But the thing grows somewhat hard to bear
When I find a Giotto join the rest.

On the arch where olives overhead 25
Print the blue sky with twig and leaf (That sharp-curved leaf which they never shed),
'Twixt the aloes, I used to lean in chief,
And mark through the winter afternoons,
By a gift God grants me now and then, 30

Old Pictures in Florence In this poem Browning emphasizes the idea that art is continuous, that each period of art derives from the periods preceding. With this thought in mind, the poet pays homage to the great souls of the past and laments the fact that the world has forgotten them while in the presence of later masters. He stresses also the idea that the spiritual quality of art is far more important than perfection of artistic technique, that the soul surpasses the body as a theme of art. Cf. Adrea del Sarto, 97-98, 112-117, 194-197, pages 267, 268

12 a magic crystal ball, a crystal sphere used in fortune-telling. 15 Giotto, Giotto di Bondone (1276-1337), the greatest of the early Florentine artists. The bell-tower, or campanile, is that of the Cathedral of Florence. Giotto did not live to complete the tower, it was to have had a spire 100 feet high. See lines 136, 276 17-18 Giotto . . . so. For an explanation of this humorous rebuke, see lines 233-40 30 a gift, the gift of spiritual vision, the power to re-create the past

In the mild decline of those suns like moons,
Who walked in Florence, besides her men.

They might chirp and chaffer, come and go
For pleasure or profit, her men alive —
My business was hardly with them, I trow, 35
But with empty cells of the human hive;
— With the chapter-room, the cloister-porch,
The church's apsis, aisle or nave,
Its crypt, one fingers along with a torch,
Its face set full for the sun to shave. 40

Wherever a fresco peels and drops,
Wherever an outline weakens and wanes
Till the latest life in the painting stops, Stands One whom each fainter pulse-tick
pains;
One, wishful each scrap should clutch the 45
brick,
Each tinge not wholly escape the plaster,
A lion who dies of an ass's kick,
The wronged great soul of an ancient Master.

For, oh, this world and the wrong it does!
They are safe in heaven with their backs to it, 50
The Michaels and Rafaels, you hum and buzz
Round the works of, you of the little wit!
Do their eyes contract to the earth's old scope,
Now that they see God face to face,
And have all attained to be poets, I hope? 55
'Tis their holiday now, in any case.

Much they reckon of your praise and you!
But the wronged great souls — can they be quit
Of a world where their work is all to do,
Where you style them, you of the little wit,
Old Master This and Early the Other, 61
Not dreaming that Old and New are fellows,

A younger succeeds to an elder brother,
Da Vincis derive in good time from Dellos

And here where your praise might yield returns, 65
And a handsome word or two give help,
Here, after your kind, the mastiff grins
And the puppy pack of poodles yelp.
What, not a word for Stefano there,
Of brow once prominent and starry, 70

44 One, the spirit of one of the unappreciated early artists, lamenting the decay and the neglect of his frescoes 50 They, the great artists like Michelangelo (1475-1564) and Raphael (1483-1520) 64 Da Vinci, Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519), the famous medieval painter, musician, and engineer Dello Dello di Niccolò Delhi was a painter and sculptor of the early 15th century 67 grins, snarls. (When the influential critic speaks, all the little critics imitate him) 69 Stefano, a pupil of Giotto, called "Nature's Ape" because of his marked realistic tendencies

Called Nature's Ape, and the world's despair
For his peerless painting? (See Vasari)

There stands the Master. Study, my friends,
What a man's work comes to! So he plans
it,
Performs it, perfects it, makes amends 75
For the toiling and moiling, and then, sic transit
Happier the thrifty blind-folk labor,
With upturned eye while the hand is busy,
Not sidling a glance at the coin of their neighbor!
'Tis looking downward that makes one dizzy. 80

"If you knew their work you would deal your dole"

May I take upon me to instruct you?
When Greek Art ran and reached the goal,
Thus much had the world to boast in fructu—

The Truth of Man, as by God first spoken,
Which the actual generations garble, 86
Was re-uttered, and Soul (which Limbs be-token)
And Limbs (Soul informs) made new in marble.

So you saw yourself as you wished you were,
As you might have been, as you cannot be;
Earth here, rebuked by Olympus there, 91
And grew content in your poor degree
With your little power, by those statues' god-
head,
And your little scope, by their eyes' full
sway,
And your little grace, by their grace embodied, 95
And your little date, by their forms that stay.

You would fain be kinglier, say, than I am?
Even so, you will not sit like Theseus.
You would prove a model? The Son of Priam
Has yet the advantage in arms' and knees' 100
use
You're wroth — can you slay your snake like Apollo?

72 Vasari, Giorgio Vasari (1511-74), author of Lives of the Most Excellent Italian Architects, Painters, and Sculptors, a work much used by Browning 76 sic transit, a short form of Sic transit gloria mundi—so departs the glory of the world 81 If . . . dole, the remark of a conventional critic 85 in fructu, as fruit Greek art achieved perfection of the human form in marble 98 Theseus, the subject of a kingly statue in the frieze of the Parthenon, now in the British Museum Theseus was a legendary hero, son of Ægeus, king of Athens 99 The Son of Priam, Paris, the subject of a portion of the sculptures of Ægina He is kneeling and drawing the bow, a model of grace and beauty Priam was the last king of Troy 101 Apollo, a statue of the god of manly youth and beauty, of wisdom, etc At Delphi he slew an enormous python.

You're grieved — still Niobe's the grander!
 You live — there's the Racers' frieze to follow;
 You die — there's the dying Alexander.

So, testing your weakness by their strength,
 Your meager charms by their rounded beauty, 106
 Measured by Art in your breadth and length,
 You learned — to submit is a mortal's duty
 — When I say "you" 'tis the common soul,
 The collective, I mean: the race of Man 110
 That receives life in parts to live in a whole,
 And grow here according to God's clear plan.

Growth came when, looking your last on them
 all,
 You turned your eyes inwardly one fine day
 And cried with a start — What if we so small Be greater and grander the while than they? 116
 Are they perfect of lineament, perfect of stature?

In both, of such lower types are we Precisely because of our wider nature;
 For time, theirs — ours, for eternity. 120

Today's brief passion limits their range;
 It seethes with the morrow for us and more.
 They are perfect — how else? they shall never
 change

We are faulty — why not? we have time in store

The Artificer's hand is not arrested 125
 With us, we are rough-hewn, nowise polished;

They stand for our copy, and, once invested
 With all they can teach, we shall see them abolished.

'Tis a life-long toil till our lump be leaven —
 The better! What's come to perfection perishes. 130

Things learned on earth, we shall practice in
 heaven,

Works done least rapidly, Art most cherishes.

Thyself shalt afford the example, Giotto!

Thy one work, not to decrease or diminish,
 Done at a stroke, was just (was it not?)
 "O!" 135

Thy great Campanile is still to finish.

102. Niobe's, a statue representing Niobe mourning for her children, slain by Apollo and Artemis (children of Leto, wife of Zeus), because Niobe had expressed pride in having more children than Leto 103 the Racers' frieze, in the Parthenon. The figures of men and horses readily suggest life and action 104 the dying Alexander, a famous piece of Greek sculpture at Florence. Alexander (356-323 B.C.) was the great king of Macedon 135 "O!" When Pope Boniface VIII sought proof of Giotto's skill the artist with

Is it true that we are now, and shall be hereafter,

But what and where depend on life's minute?

Hails heavenly cheer or infernal laughter

Our first step out of the gulf or in it? 140

Shall Man, such step within his endeavor,

Man's face, have no more play and action

Than joy which is crystallized forever,

Or grief, an eternal petrification?

On which I conclude, that the early painters,

To cries of "Greek Art and what more wish
 you?" — 146

Replied, "To become now self-acquainters,

And paint man, man, whatever the issue!

Make new hopes shine through the flesh they fray,

New fears aggrandize the rags and tatters,

To bring the invisible full into play! 151

Let the visible go to the dogs — what matters?"

Give these, I exhort you, their guerdon and glory

For daring so much, before they well did it

The first of the new, in our race's story, 155

Beats the last of the old, 'tis no idle quiddit.

The worthies began a revolution,

Which if on earth you intend to acknowledge,

Why, honor them now! (ends my allocution)

Nor confer your degree when the folk leave college. 160

There's a fancy some lean to and others
 hate —

That, when this life is ended, begins

New work for the soul in another state,

Where it strives and gets weary, loses and wins;

Where the strong and the weak, this world's congeries, 165

Repeat in large what they practiced in small,

Through life after life in unlimited series;

Only the scale's to be changed, that's all.

Yet I hardly know. When a soul has seen

By the means of Evil that Good is best, 170

And, through earth and its noise, what is heaven's serene —

When our faith in the same has stood the test —

Why, the child grown man, you burn the rod,

one stroke drew a perfect circle. The Pope thereupon engaged Giotto to adorn the papal palace at Avignon, France. 145 the early painters, i.e., of the Italian Renaissance period 156 quiddit, quibble 159 allocution, an authoritative address 165 congeries, aggregation

The uses of labor are surely done;
There remaineth a rest for the people of God,
And I have had troubles enough, for one. 176

But at any rate I have loved the season
Of Art's spring-birth so dim and dewy;
My sculptor is Nicolo the Pisan,
My painter — who but Cimabue? 180
Nor ever was man of them all indeed,
From these to Ghiberti and Ghirlandajo,
Could say that he missed my critic-meed
So, now to my special grievance — heigh-ho!

Their ghosts still stand, as I said before, 185
Watching each fresco flaked and rasped, Blocked up, knocked out, or whitewashed
o'er —

No getting again what the church has grasped!
The works on the wall must take their chance;
"Works never conceded to England's thick
clime!" 190

(I hope they prefer their inheritance
Of a bucketful of Italian quick-lime)

When they go at length, with such a shaking
Of heads o'er the old delusion, sadly
Each master his way through the black streets taking, 195

Where many a lost work breathes though badly —
Why don't they bethink them of who has merited?

Why not reveal, while their pictures dree
Such doom, how a captive might be outferreted?

Why is it they never remember me? 200

Not that I expect the great Bigordi,
Nor Sandro to hear me, chivalric, bellicose,
Nor the wronged Lippino, and not a word I Say of a scrap of Frà Angelico's,
But are you too fine, Taddeo Gaddi, 205

179 Nicolo the Pisan, a famous architect and sculptor of the 13th century 180 Cimabue, Giovanni Cimabue (1240-1302), noted for his beautiful Madonnas, was the inspiration of Giotto 182 Ghiberti, Lorenzo Ghiberti (1381-1455), the great Florentine sculptor whose bronze doors of the Baptistery of Florence were said by Michelangelo to be worthy to be the gates of Paradise. Ghirlandajo, Domenico Ghirlandajo ("garland-maker"), a famous fresco painter of the 15th century 185 as I said before. See lines 41-48. 192 quick-lime. They have been given a coat of whitewash 198 dree, suffer, endure 201 Bigordi, Ghirlandajo (see note on line 182). Bigordi was his family name. 202 Sandro, Sandro Botticelli (1465-1515), one of the most famous of Florentine painters. 203 Lippino, Filippino Lippi (1460-1505), son of Frà Lippo Lippi, a noted Florentine painter. He was wronged in the fact that others were credited with his work. 204 Frà Angelico, the professional name of Giovanni da Fiesole (1387-1455). He was a Dominican friar, the greatest of the distinctly Christian painters 205 Taddeo Gaddi, both an architect and a painter (1300-66). He was the godson and the pupil of Giotto and worked on the campanile after Giotto's death

To grant me a taste of your intonaco,
Some Jerome that seeks the heaven with a sad eye?

Not a churlish saint, Lorenzo Monaco?

Could not the ghost with the close red cap,
My Pollajolo, the twice a craftsman, 210
Save me a sample, give me the hap
Of a muscular Christ that shows the drafts-
man?

No Virgin by him the somewhat petty,
Of finical touch and tempera crumbly —
Could not Alesso Baldovinetti 215
Contribute so much, I ask hum humbly?

Margheritone of Arezzo,
With the grave-clothes garb and swaddling barret

(Why purse up mouth and beak in a pet so,
You bald old saturnine poll-clawed parrot?),
Not a poor glimmering Crucifixion, 221
Where in the foreground kneels the donor?
If such remain, as is my conviction,
The hoarding it does you but little honor

They pass; for them the panels may thrill, 225
The tempera grow alive and tinglish,
Their pictures are left to the mercies still
Of dealers and stealers, Jews and the English,

Who, seeing mere money's worth in their
prize,
Will sell it to somebody calm as Zeno 230
At naked High Art, and in ecstasies
Before some clay-cold vile Carlino!

No matter for these! But Giotto, you,
Have you allowed, as the town-tongues babble it —

Oh, never! it shall not be counted true — 235
That a certain precious little tablet
Which Buonarroti eyed like a lover —
Was buried so long in oblivion's womb
And, left for another than I to discover, Turns up at last! and to whom? — to whom? 240

206 intonaco, the plaster-ground for fresco work 207 Jerome, Saint Jerome (340?-420), the most learned of the early Fathers of the Latin Church. He translated the Bible into the Latin Vulgate 208 Lorenzo Monaco, a monk and a conservative artist of the 14th century 210 Pollajolo, Antonio Pollajolo (1430-98), a Florentine painter, sculptor, and goldsmith 211 the hap, the good luck of finding 214 tempera, paint made by mixing pigment and some substance like white of egg 215 Alesso Baldovinetti, a Florentine painter and worker in mosaic (1422-99) 217 Margheritone of Arezzo, a painter, sculptor, and architect (1236-1313). His chief subject was the Crucifixion 218 barret, a little flat cap 230 Zeno, a Greek philosopher of the 3d century B.C. He founded the school of Stoics, noted for their calmness 232 some . . . Carlino, that is, some inane picture by Carlo Dolci, an uninspired artist of the 17th century 236 a certain . . . tablet, a beautiful Last Supper by Giotto, lost from the church of San Spirito and found while Browning was in Florence. The poet chides Giotto for allowing someone else to find the treasure 237 Buonarroti, Michelangelo

I, that have haunted the dim San Spirito
 (Or was it rather the Ognissanti?),
 Patient on altar-step planting a weary toe!
 Nay, I shall have it yet! Detur amanti!
 My Koh-i-noor — or (if that's a platitude) 245
 Jewel of Giamschid, the Persian Sofi's eye;
 So, in anticipative gratitude,
 What if I take up my hope and prophesy?

When the hour grows ripe, and a certain dotard 249
 Is pitched, no parcel that needs invoicing,
 To the worse side of the Mont St. Gothard,
 We shall begin by way of rejoicing;
 None of that shooting the sky (blank cartridge),
 Nor a civic guard, all plumes and lacquer,
 Hunting Radetzky's soul like a partridge 255
 Over Morello with squib and cracker.

This time we'll shoot better game and bag
 'em hot —

No mere display at the stone of Dante,
 But a kind of sober Witanagemot
 (Ex: "Casa Guidi," quod videas ante) 260 Shall ponder, once Freedom restored to Florence,

How Art may return that departed with
 her.
 Go, hated house, go each trace of the Lor-aine's,
 And bring us the days of Orgagna hither!

How we shall prologuize, how we shall perorate, 265
 Utter fit things upon art and history, Feel truth at blood-heat and falsehood at zero rate,

Make of the want of the age no mystery;
 Contrast the fructuous and sterile eras,
 Show — monarchy ever its uncouth cub licks 270

Out of the bear's shape into Chimæra's,
 While Pure Art's birth is still the republic's.

241 SAN SPIRITO, a church of the 14th century in Florence. The name means Holy Spirit. 242 the Ognissanti, All Saints Church in Florence. 244 Detur amanti, Let it be given to the one who loves it. 245 KOH-I-NOOR, a famous Indian diamond given to Queen Victoria in 1850. 246 Jewel of Giamschid, the fabulous ruby of Sultan Giamschid, owned by the Sofi — the shah of Persia. 251 MONT ST. GOTHARD, a mountain range of the Alps. The "worse side" of the range is the side toward Switzerland — that is, out of Italy. 255 RADETZKY, Joseph Wenzel Radetzky (1766-1858), an Austrian count and governor of the Austrian possessions in Upper Italy. 256 MORELLO, a mountain near Florence. 258 the stone of Dante, the stone where Dante often sat in Florence. It was often the place of patriotic gatherings. 259 WITANAGEMOT, the name of the famous Anglo-Saxon assembly, the forerunner of Parliament. 260 CASA GUIDI, a reference to Mrs Browning's Casa Guidi Windows, a long poem which was inspired by love of Italy (See page 373). 261 quod videas ante, which you may have seen before. 263 HATED HOUSE, the House of Lorraine, which through Duke Francis of Lorraine came into control of Tuscany in 1737. 264 ORGAGNA, a Florentine painter of the 14th century, when Italy was free. He was one of the most noted successors of Giotto.

Then one shall propose in a speech (curt Tuscan,
 Expurgate and sober, with scarcely an
 "issimo")
 To end now our half-told tale of Cambuscan,
 And turn the bell-tower's alt to altissimo, 276
 And fine as the beak of a young beccaccia
 The Campanile, the Duomo's fit ally,
 Shall soar up in gold full fifty braccia,
 Completing Florence, as Florence Italy. 280

Shall I be alive that morning the scaffold
 Is broken away, and the long-pent fire,
 Like the golden hope of the world, unaffailed Springs from its sleep, and up goes the spire
 While "God and the People" plain for its motto, 285
 Thence the new tricolor flaps at the sky?
 At least to foresee that glory of Giotto
 And Florence together, the first am I!
 (1855)

"DE GUSTIBUS —"

Your ghost will walk, you lover of trees,
 (If our loves remain)
 In an English lane,
 By a cornfield-side a-flutter with poppies
 Hark, those two in the hazel coppice — 5
 A boy and a girl, if the good fates please,
 Making love, say —
 The happier they!
 Draw yourself up from the light of the moon,
 And let them pass, as they will too soon, 10
 With the beanflowers' boon,
 And the blackbird's tune,
 And May, and June!

What I love best in all the world
 Is a castle, precipice-encurled, 15
 In a gash of the wind-grieved Apennine.
 Or look for me, old fellow of mine,
 (If I get my head from out the mouth
 O' the grave, and loose my spirit's bands,
 And come again to the land of lands) 20
 In a sea-side house to the farther South,
 Where the baked cicala dies of drouth,
 And one sharp tree — 'tis a cypress — stands,
 By the many hundred years red-rusted,
 Rough iron-spiked, ripe fruit-o'ercrusted, 25

273 TUSCAN, the literary language of Italy. 274 ISSIMO, a Latin superlative ending. 275 half-told tale of Cambuscan, a reference to The Squire's Tale, left unfinished by Chaucer. Browning has in mind the unfinished Campanile of Giotto. 276 alt to altissimo, high to highest. 277 beccaccia, woodcock. 278 the Duomo's, the Cathedral's. 279 braccia, cubits (Giotto's plan included a spire 100 feet high. It has never been built).
 "De Gustibus —". The full form of the Latin proverb is De gustibus non disputandum — There is no disputing about tastes.
 2 If our loves remain, if we live after death. 4 corn-field, grainfield, wheatfield.

My sentinel to guard the sands
 To the water's edge. For, what expands
 Before the house, but the great opaque
 Blue breadth of sea without a break?
 While, in the house, forever crumbles 30
 Some fragment of the frescoed walls,
 From blisters where a scorpion sprawls.
 A girl barefooted brings, and tumbles
 Down on the pavement, green-flesh melons,
 And says there's news today — the king 35
 Was shot at, touched in the liver-wing,
 Goes with his Bourbon arm in a sling—
 She hopes they have not caught the felons.
 Italy, my Italy!
 Queen Mary's saying serves for me — 40
 (When fortune's malice Lost her, Calais) —
 Open my heart and you will see
 Graved inside of it, "Italy."
 Such lovers old are I and she; 45
 So it always was, so shall ever be! (1855)

MY STAR

All that I know
 Of a certain star
 Is, it can throw
 (Like the angled spar)
 Now a dart of red, 5
 Now a dart of blue;
 Till my friends have said
 They would fain see, too,
 My star that dartles the red and the blue!
 Then it stops like a bird, like a flower, hangs furled. 10
 They must solace themselves with the Saturn above it
 What matter to me if their star is a world?
 Mine has opened its soul to me, therefore
 I love it. (1855)

ANY WIFE TO ANY HUSBAND

My love, this is the bitterest, that thou —
 Who art all truth, and who dost love me now
 As thine eyes say, as thy voice breaks to
 say —

36 the liver-wing, the right wing—that is, the right arm. 37. Bourbon Ferdinand II, king of the Two Sicilies, was a member of the House of Bourbon. Browning rejoices that the people of Italy are taking action against the Bourbons. See The Italian in England, page 209. 40 Queen Mary's saying. The French seaport of Calais was taken from England by the French in 1588, the last year of the reign of Queen Mary. She grieved for the loss so much that she declared that the word Calais would be found written on her heart.

My Star This lyric is supposed to refer to Mrs. Browning. The idea expressed is expanded in One Word More, lines 187-197, page 276. Cf. the lines from Book I of The Ring and the Book, page 298, and Prospect, page 295.

4 Like spar, like a prism, which reflects different colors from different angles

Shouldst love so truly, and couldst love me
 still
 A whole long life through, had but love its
 will, 5
 Would death that leads me from thee brook delay.

I have but to be by thee, and thy hand
 Will never let mine go, nor heart withstand
 The beating of my heart to reach its place
 When shall I look for thee and feel thee gone?
 When cry for the old comfort and find none? 11
 Never, I know! Thy soul is in thy face.

Oh, I should fade — 'tis willed so! Might I
 save,
 Gladly I would, whatever beauty gave
 Joy to thy sense, for that was precious too
 It is not to be granted. But the soul 16
 Whence the love comes, all ravage leaves that
 whole;
 Vainly the flesh fades, soul makes all things
 new.

It would not be because my eye grew dim
 Thou couldst not find the love there, thanks
 to Him 20
 Who never is dishonored in the spark
 He gave us from his fire of fires, and bade
 Remember whence it sprang, nor be afraid
 While that burns on, though all the rest grow dark.

So, how thou wouldst be perfect, white and clean 25
 Outside as inside, soul and soul's demesne
 Alike, this body given to show it by!
 Oh, three-parts through the worst of life's abyss,
 What plaudits from the next world after this,
 Couldst thou repeat a stroke and gain the
 sky! 30

And is it not the bitterer to think
 That disengage our hands and thou wilt sink
 Although thy love was love in very deed?
 I know that nature! Pass a festive day,
 Thou dost not throw its relic-flower away 35
 Nor bid its music's loitering echo speed.

Thou let'st the stranger's glove lie where it
 fell;
 If old things remain old things all is well,
 For thou art grateful as becomes man best;
 And hadst thou only heard me play one tune,
 Or viewed me from a window, not so soon 41
 With thee would such things fade as with the rest.

I seem to see! We meet and part; 'tis brief,
 The book I opened keeps a folded leaf,

The very chair I sat on, breaks the rank,
That is a portrait of me on the wall — 46
Three lines, my face comes at so slight a call,
And for all this, one little hour to thank!

But now, because the hour through years was fixed,
Because our inmost beings met and mixed, 50
Because thou once hast loved me — wilt thou dare
Say to thy soul and Who may list beside,
"Therefore she is immortally my bride;
Chance cannot change my love, nor time impair.

"So, what if in the dusk of life that's left, 55
I, a tired traveler of my sun bereft,
Look from my path when, mimicking the
same,
The fire-fly glimpses past me, come and gone?
—Where was it till the sunset? Where anon
It will be at the sunrise! What's to blame?"

Is it so helpful to thee? Canst thou take 61
The mimic up, nor, for the true thing's sake,
Put gently by such efforts at a beam?
Is the remainder of the way so long,
Thou need'st the little solace, thou the strong?
Watch out thy watch, let weak ones doze and dream! 66

Ah, but the fresher faces! "Is it true," Thou'lt ask, "some eyes are beautiful and
new?"

Some hair — how can one choose but grasp such wealth?
And if a man would press his lips to lips 70
Fresh as the wilding hedge-rose-cup there slips

The dewdrop out of, must it be by stealth?

"It cannot change the love still kept for Her,
More than if such a picture I prefer
Passing a day with, to a room's bare side; 75
The painted form takes nothing she possessed,
Yet, while the Titian's Venus lies at rest,
A man looks. Once more, what is there to chide?"

So must I see, from where I sit and watch,
My own self sell myself, my hand attach 80
Its warrant to the very thefts from me —
Thy singleness of soul that made me proud,
Thy purity of heart I loved aloud,
Thy man's-truth I was bold to bid God see!

Love so, then, if thou wilt! Give all thou canst 85

77 Titian's Venus, a painting of Venus, goddess of love, by Titian (1477-1576), one of the most illustrious artists of Italy.

Away to the new faces — disenfranchised,
(Say it and think it) obdurate no more,
Re-issue looks and words from the old mint,
Pass them afresh, no matter whose the print
Image and superscription once they bore! 90

Re-coin thyself and give it them to spend —
It all comes to the same thing at the end,
Since mine thou wast, mine art and mine shalt be,
Faithful or faithless, sealing up the sum
Or lavish of my treasure, thou must come 95
Back to the heart's place here I keep for
thee!

Only, why should it be with stain at all?
Why must I, 'twixt the leaves of coronal,
Put any kiss of pardon on thy brow?
Why need the other women know so much, 100
And talk together, "Such the look and such
The smile he used to love with, then as
now!"

Might I die last and show thee! Should I find
Such hardship in the few years left behind,
If free to take and light my lamp, and go
Into thy tomb, and shut the door and sit, 106
Seeing thy face on those four sides of it
The better that they are so blank, I know!

Why, time was what I wanted, to turn o'er Within my mind each look, get more and
more 110

By heart each word, too much to learn at
first:

And join thee all the fitter for the pause
'Neath the low doorway's lintel. That were cause

For lingering, though thou calledst, if I
durst!

And yet thou art the nobler of us two; 115
What dare I dream of, that thou canst not do, Outstripping my ten small steps with one stride?

I'll say then, here's a trial and a task —
Is it to bear? — if easy, I'll not ask:

Though love fail, I can trust on in thy pride. 120

Pride? — when those eyes forestall the life behind

The death I have to go through! — when I
find,

Now that I want thy help most, all of thee!
What did I fear? Thy love shall hold me fast
Until the little minute's sleep is past 125

And I wake saved. — And yet it will not
be! (1855)

TWO IN THE CAMPAGNA

I wonder do you feel today
 As I have felt since, hand in hand,
 We sat down on the grass, to stray
 In spirit better through the land,
 This morn of Rome and May? 5

For me, I touched a thought, I know,
 Has tantalized me many times
 (Like tuins of thread the spiders throw Mocking across our path) for rhymes
 To catch at and let go. 10

Help me to hold it! First it left
 The yellowing fennel, run to seed
 There, branching from the brickwork's cleft,
 Some old tomb's run, yonder weed
 Took up the floating weft, 15

Where one small orange cup amassed
 Five beetles — blind and green they grope
 Among the honey-mcal; and last,
 Everywhere on the grassy slope
 I traced it. Hold it fast! 20

The champaign with its endless fleece
 Of feathery grasses everywhere!
 Silence and passion, joy and peace,
 An everlasting wash of air —
 Rome's ghost since her decease. 25

Such life here, through such lengths of hours,
 Such miracles performed in play,
 Such primal naked forms of flowers,
 Such letting nature have her way
 While heaven looks from its towers! 30

How say you? Let us, O my dove,
 Let us be unshamed of soul,
 As earth lies bare to heaven above!
 How is it under our control
 To love or not to love? 35

I would that you were all to me,
 You that are just so much, no more.
 Nor yours nor mine, nor slave nor free!
 Where does the fault lie? What the core
 O' the wound, since wound must be? 40

I would I could adopt your will,
 See with your eyes, and set my heart

Two in the Campagna The Campagna di Roma is the large open space that lies around the city of Rome. It is called "Rome's ghost" (line 25), because it is dotted with ruins of ancient cities. It provides an admirable setting for the poem, which expresses the idea that no matter how close love brings two persons, they are still, forever, immutably alone. Cf. Arnold's Switzerland (Isolation), page 440.
 15 weft, the cross threads in weaving 21. champaign, the open space of the Campagna

Beating by yours, and drink my fill
 At your soul's springs — your part my part
 In life, for good and ill. 45

No I yearn upward, touch you close,
 Then stand away I kiss your cheek,
 Catch your soul's warmth — I pluck the rose
 And love it more than tongue can speak —
 Then the good minute goes. 50

Already how am I so far
 Out of that minute? Must I go
 Still like the thistle-ball, no bar.
 Onward, whenever light winds blow,
 Fixed by no friendly star? 55

Just when I seemed about to learn!
 Where is the thread now? Off again!
 The old trick! Only I discern —
 Infinite passion, and the pain
 Of finite hearts that yearn. (1855)

MISCONCEPTIONS

This is a spray the Bird clung to,
 Making it blossom with pleasure,
 Ere the high tree-top she sprung to,
 Fit for her nest and her treasure
 Oh, what a hope beyond measure 5
 Was the poor spray's, which the flying feet hung to —
 So to be singled out, built in, and sung to!

This is a heart the Queen leant on,
 Thrilled in a minute erratic,
 Ere the true bosom she bent on, 10
 Meet for love's regal dalmatic.
 Oh, what a fancy ecstatic
 Was the poor heart's, ere the wanderer went
 on —
 Love to be saved for it, proffered to, spent on!
 (1855)

ONE WAY OF LOVE

All June I bound the rose in sheaves.
 Now, rose by rose, I strip the leaves
 And strew them where Pauline may pass.
 She will not turn aside? Alas!
 Let them lie. Suppose they die? 5
 The chance was they might take her eye.

How many a month I strove to suit
 These stubborn fingers to the lute!
 Today I venture all I know.
 She will not hear my music? So! 10

Misconceptions 11 dalmatic, a robe worn by kings and high church officials

Break the string; fold music's wing:
Suppose Pauline had bade me sing!

My whole life long I learned to love.
This hour my utmost art I prove
And speak my passion — heaven or hell? 15
She will not give me heaven? 'Tis well!
Lose who may — I still can say,
Those who win heaven, blest are they!
(1855)

ANOTHER WAY OF LOVE

June was not over
Though past the full,
And the best of her roses
Had yet to blow,
When a man I know 5
(But shall not discover,
Since ears are dull,
And time discloses)
Turned him and said with a man's true air,
Half sighing a smile in a yawn, as 'twere — 10
"If I tire of your June, will she greatly care?"

Well, dear, in-doors with you!
True! serene deadness
Tries a man's temper.
What's in the blossom 15
June wears on her bosom?
Can it clear scores with you?
Sweetness and redness,
Eadem semper!
Go, let me care for it greatly or slightly! 20
If June mend her bower now, your hand left unightly
By plucking the roses — my June will do rightly.

And after, for pastime,
If June be refulgent
With flowers in completeness, 25
All petals, no prickles,
Delicious as trickles
Of wine poured at mass-time —
And choose One indulgent
To redness and sweetness; 30
Or if, with experience of man and of spider,
June use my June-lightning, the strong insectridder,
And stop the fresh film-work — why, June will consider.
(1855)

Another Way of Love This poem is spoken by a woman to an indifferent and impatient lover who tires of the monotony of roses always sweet and red. She bids him depart, and adds that to a more appreciative lover she may respond, or on the basis of present experience she may scorn the would-be lover. June symbolizes the speaker
6 discover, disclose. 19 Eadem semper, always the same. 32 June-lightning, scorn

RESPECTABILITY

Dear, had the world in its caprice
Deigned to proclaim, "I know you both,
Have recognized your plighted troth,
Am sponsor for you, live in peace!" —
How many precious months and years 5
Of youth had passed, that speed so fast,
Before we found it out at last,
The world, and what it fears!

How much of priceless life were spent
With men that every virtue decks, 10
And women models of their sex,
Society's true ornament —
Ere we dared wander, nights like this,
Through wind and rain, and watch the Seine,
And feel the Boulevard break again 15
To warmth and light and bliss!

I know! the world proscribes not love;
Allows my finger to caress
Your lips' contour and downiness,
Provided it supply a glove. 20
The world's good word! — the Institute!
Guizot receives Montalembert!
Eh? Down the court three lampions flare;
Put forward your best foot! (1855)

LOVE IN A LIFE

Room after room,
I hunt the house through
We inhabit together.
Heart, fear nothing, for, heart, thou shalt find her —
Next time, herself! — not the trouble behind 5
her
Left in the curtain, the couch's perfume!
As she brushed it, the cornice-wreath blossomed anew,
Yon looking-glass gleamed at the wave of her feather.

Respectability In this poem a lover speaks ironically of respectability that is purchased by paying homage to convention. The scene is laid in Paris

17-20. the world . . . glove. The world will allow the caress if we buy gloves from it—if we pay the price by being conventional. 21 the Institute, the Institute of France, a national society established in 1795 to promote science, literature, and art. 22 Guizot, François Guizot (1787-1874), a French statesman and historian and a member of the Constitutional Royalist party. Montalembert, Charles Montalembert (1810-70), a French publicist and historian and a member of the Liberal party. Guizot disliked Montalembert but welcomed him into the Institute as a matter of convention. 23 lampions, lamps, which indicate a place where respectables are gathered, hence you must be conventional as you approach, or be condemned

Love in a Life This poem and the poem following are supplementary in thought. In the first the lover finds his love always eluding him, like ideals, but he is confident that at any moment he may catch her. In the second poem the lover realizes that he cannot achieve his love, or ideal, but he resolves to devote his life to the quest

Yet the day wears,
 And door succeeds door; 10
 I try the fresh fortune —
 Range the wide house from the wing to the center.
 Still the same chance! she goes out as I enter Spend my whole day in the quest — who cares?
 But 'tis twilight, you see — with such suites 15
 to explore,
 Such closets to search, such alcoves to im-tune! (1855)

LIFE IN A LOVE

Escape me?
 Never —
 Beloved!
 While I am I, and you are you,
 So long as the world contains us both, 5
 Me the loving and you the loath,
 While the one eludes, must the other pursue.
 My life is a fault at last, I fear;
 It seems too much like a fate, indeed!
 Though I do my best I shall scarce succeed.
 But what if I fail of my purpose here? 11
 It is but to keep the nerves at strain,
 To dry one's eyes and laugh at a fall,
 And, baffled, get up and begin again —
 So the chase takes up one's life, that's all 15
 While, look but once from your farthest
 bound
 At me so deep in the dust and dark,
 No sooner the old hope goes to ground
 Than a new one, straight to the selfsame
 mark,
 I shape me — 20
 Ever
 Removed! (1855)

IN THREE DAYS

So, I shall see her in three days
 And just one night, but nights are short,
 Then two long hours, and that is morn.
 See how I come, unchanged, unworn!
 Feel, where my life broke off from thine, 5
 How fresh the splinters keep and fine —
 Only a touch and we combine!

Too long, this time of year, the days!
 But nights, at least the nights are short.
 As night shows where her one moon is, 10
 A hand's-breadth of pure light and bliss,
 So life's night gives my lady birth
 And my eyes hold her! What is worth
 The rest of heaven, the rest of earth?

O loaded curls, release your store 15
 Of warmth and scent, as once before
 The tingling hair did, lights and darks
 Outbreaking into fairy sparks,
 When under curl and curl I pried
 After the warmth and scent inside, 20
 Through lights and darks how manifold —
 The dark inspired, the light controlled!
 As early Art embrowns the gold.

What great fear, should one say, "Three days
 That change the world might change as well
 Your fortune; and if joy delays, 26
 Be happy that no worse befell!"
 What small fear, if another says,
 "Three days and one short night beside
 May throw no shadow on your ways; 30
 But years must teem with change untried,
 With chance not easily defied,
 With an end somewhere undescried "
 No fear! — or if a fear be born
 This minute, it dies out in scorn. 35
 Fear? I shall see her in three days
 And one night, now the nights are short,
 Then just two hours, and that is morn.
 (1855)

THE GUARDIAN-ANGEL

A PICTURE AT FANO

Dear and great Angel, wouldst thou only
 leave
 That child, when thou hast done with him,
 for me!
 Let me sit all the day here, that when eve
 Shall find performed thy special ministry,
 And time come for departure, thou, suspend-
 ing 5
 Thy flight, may'st see another child for tending,
 Another still, to quiet and retrieve.

Then I shall feel thee step one step, no more,
 From where thou standest now, to where I gaze,
 —And suddenly my head is covered o'er 10
 With those wings, white above the child who prays
 Now on that tomb — and I shall feel thee guarding
 Me, out of all the world; for me, discard-
 ing
 Yon heaven thy home, that waits and opes its door

The Guardian-Angel The title is taken from that of a painting by Giovanni Francesco Barbieri (1590-1666), nicknamed Guercino (line 36), "the squint-eyed" The picture is in the Church of San Agostino at Fano, an Italian city on the Adriatic Sea

I would not look up thither past thy head 15
 Because the door opes, like that child, I
 know,
 For I should have thy gracious face instead,
 Thou bird of God! And wilt thou bend me
 low
 Like him, and lay, like his, my hands together,
 And lift them up to pray, and gently tether
 Me, as thy lamb there, with thy garment's
 spread? 21

If this was ever granted, I would rest
 My head beneath thine, while thy healing
 hands
 Close-covered both my eyes beside thy breast, Pressing the brain, which too much thought expands, 25
 Back to its proper size again, and smoothing
 Distortion down till every nerve had sooth-
 ing,
 And all lay quiet, happy, and suppressed

How soon all worldly wrong would be repaired!
 I think how I should view the earth and skies 30
 And sea, when once again my brow was bared
 After thy healing, with such different eyes
 O world, as God has made it! All is beauty,
 And knowing this is love, and love is duty
 What further may be sought for or declared? 35

Guercino drew this angel I saw teach (Alfred, dear friend!) — that little child to pray,
 Holding the little hands up, each to each Pressed gently — with his own head turned
 away
 Over the earth where so much lay before him
 Of work to do, though heaven was opening o'er him, 41
 And he was left at Fano by the beach.

We were at Fano, and three times we went
 To sit and see him in his chapel there,
 And drink his beauty to our soul's content — 45
 My angel with me too, and since I care
 For dear Guercino's fame (to which in power
 And glory comes this picture for a dower, Fraught with a pathos so magnificent) —

And since he did not work thus earnestly 50
 At all times, and has else endured some
 wrong —

I took one thought his picture struck from
 me,
 And spread it out, translating it to song
 My love is here. Where are you, dear old
 friend?
 How rolls the Wairoa at your world's far
 end? 55
 This is Ancona, yonder is the sea.
 (1848; 1855)

MEMORABILIA

Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,
 And did he stop and speak to you,
 And did you speak to him again?
 How strange it seems and new!
 But you were living before that, 5
 And also you are living after,
 And the memory I started at —
 My starting moves your laughter!
 I crossed a moor, with a name of its own
 And a certain use in the world no doubt, 10
 Yet a hand's-breadth of it shines alone
 'Mid the blank miles round about,
 For there I picked up on the heather,
 And there I put inside my breast
 A molted feather, an eagle-feather! 15
 Well, I forget the rest.
 (1855)

POPULARITY

Stand still, true poet that you are!
 I know you, let me try and draw you
 Some night you'll fail us, when afar
 You rise, remember one man saw you,
 Knew you, and named a star! 5
 My star, God's glowworm! Why extend
 That loving hand of his which leads you,
 Yet locks you safe from end to end
 Of this dark world, unless he needs you,
 Just saves your light to spend? 10
 His clenched hand shall uncloze at last,
 I know, and let out all the beauty;
 My poet holds the future fast,
 Accepts the coming ages' duty,
 Their present for this past 15
 That day, the earth's feast-master's brow
 Shall clear, to God the chalice raising,

37 Alfred The poem is addressed to Alfred Dommett, one of Browning's warm friends, who was then in New Zealand. 43 We . . . went When the poem was written, Browning and Mrs Browning (the "angel" of line 46) were staying at Ancona (line 56), about 30 miles south of Fano

55 the Wairoa, a river in New Zealand
 Memorabilia The title means Things Worth Remembering. Browning first became acquainted with Shelley's poetry about 1825 and instantly fell under its spell.

"Others give best at first, but thou
Forever set'st our table praising,
Keep'st the good wine till now!" 20

Meantime, I'll draw you as you stand,
With few or none to watch and wonder;
I'll say — a fisher, on the sand
By Tyre the old, with ocean-plunder,
A netful, brought to land. 25

Who has not heard how Tyrian shells
Enclosed the blue, that dye of dyes
Whereof one drop worked miracles,
And colored like Astarte's eyes
Raw silk the merchant sells? 30

And each bystander of them all
Could criticize, and quote tradition
How depths of blue sublimed some pall —
To get which, pricked a king's ambition,
Worth scepter, crown, and ball. 35

Yet there's the dye, in that rough mesh,
The sea has only just o'er-whispered!
Live whelks, each lip's beard dripping fresh,
As if they still the water's lisp heard
Through foam the rock-weeds thresh. 40

Enough to furnish Solomon
Such hangings for his cedar-house,
That, when gold-robed he took the throne
In that abyss of blue, the Spouse
Might swear his presence shone 45

Most like the center-spike of gold
Which burns deep in the bluebell's womb
What time, with ardors manifold,
The bee goes singing to her groom,
Drunken and overbold. 50

Mere conchs! not fit for warp or woof!
Till cunning come to pound and squeeze
And clarify — refine to proof
The liquor filtered by degrees,
While the world stands aloof. 55

And there's the extract, flasked and fine,
And priced and salable at last!
And Hobbs, Nobbs, Stokes, and Nokes combine

18-20 Others . . . now See note on lines 759-60, p. 146
24 Tyre, a famous city of ancient Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean coast. The Phœnicians discovered the dye mentioned in the lines following. 29 Astarte, a Phœnician goddess of love and beauty. 33 pall, a rich cloth used as a covering. 38 whelks, shellfish. 41-44 Solomon, etc.
For the description of Solomon's temple and palace, see 1 Kings, 6-7. 44 the Spouse, Solomon's wife, Pharaoh's daughter. 48 What time, at the time when. 51 conchs, shells. 58 Hobbs . . . Nokes, the common run of humanity, like Tom, Dick, and Harry.

To paint the future from the past,
Put blue into their line. 60

Hobbs hints blue — straight he turtle eats,
Nobbs prints blue — claret crowns his cup,
Nokes outdares Stokes in azure feats —
Both gorge. Who fished the murex up?
What porridge had John Keats? 65

THE PATRIOT

AN OLD STORY

It was roses, roses, all the way,
With myrtle mixed in my path like mad,
The house-roofs seemed to heave and sway,
The church-spires flamed, such flags they had,
A year ago on this very day 5

The air broke into a mist with bells,
The old walls rocked with the crowd and cries
Had I said, "Good folk, mere noise repels —
But give me your sun from yonder skies!"
They had answered, "And afterward, what
else?" 10

Alack, it was I who leaped at the sun
To give it my loving friends to keep!
Naught man could do, have I left undone;
And you see my harvest, what I reap
This very day, now a year is run 15

There's nobody on the house-tops now —
Just a palsied few at the windows set,
For the best of the sight is, all allow,
At the Shambles' Gate — or, better yet,
By the very scaffold's foot, I trow. 20

I go in the rain, and, more than needs,
A rope cuts both my wrists behind,
And I think, by the feel, my forehead bleeds,
For they fling, whoever has a mind,
Stones at me for my year's misdeeds. 25

Thus I entered, and thus I go!
In triumphs, people have dropped down
dead
"Paid by the world, what dost thou owe Me?" — God might question, now instead,
'Tis God shall repay, I am safer so (1855)

64 murex, the shellfish from which the famous dye was made. 65 What . . . Keats? Browning imagines Keats as the literary fisherman who discovers the rich dye of words and images but gets nothing for it, other poets follow imitatively and get much.

The Patriot. This poem contains no direct historical reference. It is called "an old story" because it presents universal truth—the fickleness of popular approval.

19 Shambles' Gate. The shambles is a place for slaughtering animals.

A LIGHT WOMAN

So far as our story approaches the end,
Which do you pity the most of us three? —
My friend, or the mistress of my friend
With her wanton eyes, or me?

My friend was already too good to lose, 5
And seemed in the way of improvement
yet,
When she crossed his path with her huntingnoose,
And over him drew her net.

When I saw him tangled in her toils,
A shame, said I, if she adds just him 10
To her nine-and-ninety other spoils,
The hundredth for a whim!

And before my friend be wholly hers,
How easy to prove to him, I said,
An eagle's the game her pride prefers, 15
Though she snaps at a wren instead!

So I gave her eyes my own eyes to take,
My hand sought hers as in earnest need,
And round she turned for my noble sake,
And gave me herself indeed. 20

The eagle am I, with my fame in the world,
The wren is he, with his maiden face.
—You look away and your lip is curled?
Patience, a moment's space!

For see, my friend goes shaking and white;
He eyes me as the basilisk; 26
I have turned, it appears, his day to night,
Eclipsing his sun's disk.

And I did it, he thinks, as a very thief:
"Though I love her — that, he compre-hends — 30
One should master one's passions (love, in chief),
And be loyal to one's friends!"

And she — she lies in my hand as tame
As a pear late basking over a wall;
Just a touch to try and off it came; 35
'Tis mine — can I let it fall?

With no mind to eat it, that's the worst!
Were it thrown in the road, would the case assist?
'Twas quenching a dozen blue-flies' thirst
When I gave its stalk a twist. 40

26 basilisk, a fabulous monster said to be able to kill with a look

And I — what I seem to my friend, you see;
What I soon shall seem to his love, you
guess;
What I seem to myself, do you ask of me?
No hero, I confess.

'Tis an awkward thing to play with souls, 45
And matter enough to save one's own;
Yet think of my friend, and the burning coals
He played with for bits of stone!

One likes to show the truth for the truth;
That the woman was light is very true; 50
But suppose she says—Never mind that
youth!
What wrong have I done to you?

Well, anyhow, here the story stays,
So far at least as I understand;
And, Robert Browning, you writer of plays, 55
Here's a subject made to your hand!
(1855)

THE LAST RIDE TOGETHER

I said—Then, dearest, since 'tis so,
Since now at length my fate I know,
Since nothing all my love avails,
Since all my life seemed meant for, fails,
Since this was written and needs must be—s
My whole heart rises up to bless
Your name in pride and thankfulness!
Take back the hope you gave—I claim
Only a memory of the same,
—And this beside, if you will not blame, 10
Your leave for one more last ride with me.

My mistress bent that brow of hers;
Those deep dark eyes where pride demurs
When pity would be softening through,
Fixed me a breathing-while or two 15
With life or death in the balance: right!
The blood replenished me again;
My last thought was at least not vain:
I and my mistress, side by side
Shall be together, breathe and ride, 20
So, one day more am I deified.
Who knows but the world may end tonight?

Hush! If you saw some western cloud
All billowy-bosomed, over-bowed
By many benedictions—sun's 25
And moon's and evening-star's at once—
And so, you, looking and loving best,
Conscious grew, your passion drew
Cloud, sunset, moonrise, star-shine too,
Down on you, near and yet more near, 30
Till flesh must fade for heaven was here!—

Thus leant she and lingered—joy and fear!
Thus lay she a moment on my breast.

Then we began to ride. My soul
Smoothed itself out, a long-cramped scroll 35
Freshening and fluttering in the wind.
Past hopes already lay behind.

What need to strive with a life awry?
Had I said that, had I done this,
So might I gain, so might I miss. 40
Might she have loved me? Just as well
She might have hated; who can tell!
Where had I been now if the worst befell?
And here we are riding, she and I.

Fail I alone, in words and deeds? 45
Why, all men strive, and who succeeds?
We rode, it seemed my spirit flew,
Saw other regions, cities new,
As the world rushed by on either side
I thought—All labor, yet no less 50
Bear up beneath their unsuccess.
Look at the end of work, contrast
The petty done, the undone vast,
This present of theirs with the hopeful past!
I hoped she would love me, here we ride. 55

What hand and brain went ever paired?
What heart alike conceived and dared?
What act proved all its thought had been?
What will but felt the fleshly screen?
We ride and I see her bosom heave. 60
There's many a crown for who can reach.
Ten lines, a statesman's life in each!
The flag stuck on a heap of bones,
A soldier's doing! what atones?
They scratch his name on the Abbey-stones 65
My riding is better, by their leave.

What does it all mean, poet? Well,
Your brains beat into rhythm, you tell
What we felt only, you expressed
You hold things beautiful the best, 70
And place them in rime so, side by side
'Tis something, nay 'tis much; but then,
Have you yourself what's best for men?
Are you—poor, sick, old ere your time—
Nearer one whit your own sublime 75
Than we who never have turned a rime?
Sing, riding's a joy! For me, I ride.

And you, great sculptor—so, you gave
A score of years to Art, her slave,
And that's your Venus, whence we turn
To yonder girl that fords the burn!
You acquiesce, and shall I repine?
What, man of music, you grown gray
With notes and nothing else to say.

81. burn, brook.

Is this your sole praise from a friend, 85
"Greatly his opera's strains intend,
But in music we know how fashions end!"
I gave my youth; but we ride, in fine.

Who knows what's fit for us? Had fate
Proposed bliss here should sublimiate 90
My being—had I signed the bond—
Still one must lead some life beyond,
Have a bliss to die with, dim-described.
This foot once planted on the goal,
This glory-garland round my soul, 95
Could I descry such? Try and test!
I sink back shuddering from the quest.
Earth being so good, would heaven seem best?
Now, heaven and she are beyond this ride.

And yet—she has not spoke so long! 100
What if heaven be that, fair and strong
At life's best, with our eyes upturned
Whither life's flower is first discerned,
We, fixed so, ever should so abide?
What if we still ride on, we two, 105
With life forever old yet new,
Changed not in kind but in degree,
The instant made eternity—
And heaven just prove that I and she Ride, ride together, forever ride? 110

A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL

SHORTLY AFTER THE REVIVAL OF LEARNING
IN EUROPE

Let us begin and carry up this corpse,
Singing together.
Leave we the common crofts, the vulgar
thorpes,
Each in its tether
Sleeping safe on the bosom of the plain;
Cared-for till cock-crow;
Look out if yonder be not day again
Rimming the rock-row!
That's the appropriate country; there, man's
thought,
Rarer, intenser,
Self-gathered for an outbreak, as it ought,
Chafes in the censer.
Leave we the unlettered plain its herd and crop;

86 Greatly . . intend, have high aims 90 sublimiate, lift to its highest pitch

A Grammarian's Funeral. The speaker of the poem is a disciple of a dead scholar of the early Renaissance, noted for his passion for knowledge. He leads other disciples as they bear the body of their master to the top of a lofty mountain for burial at sunrise. See Critical Notes

3. crofts, enclosed farm lands thorpes, small villages.
7-8 day . . rock-row. The sun's rays are just hitting the rocky tops of the mountains 12 in the censer, in the crater of a smoking volcano.

Seek we sepulture
 On a tall mountain, cited to the top, 15
 Crowded with culture!
 All the peaks soar, but one the rest excels,
 Clouds overcome it,
 No! yonder sparkle is the citadel's
 Circling its summit 20
 Thither our path lies, wind we up the heights,
 Wait ye the warning?
 Our low life was the level's and the night's,
 He's for the morning
 Step to a tune, square chests, erect each head,
 'Ware the beholders! 26
 This is our master, famous, calm and dead,
 Borne on our shoulders

Sleep, crop and herd! sleep, darkling thorpe and croft,
 Safe from the weather! 30
 He whom we convoy to his grave aloft,
 Singing together,
 He was a man born with thy face and throat,
 Lyric Apollo!
 Long he lived nameless; how should Spring take note 35
 Winter would follow?
 Till lo, the little touch, and youth was gone!
 Cramped and diminished,
 Moaned he, "New measures, other feet anon!
 My dance is finished?" 40
 No, that's the world's way (keep the mountain-side,
 Make for the city!),
 He knew the signal, and stepped on with pride
 Over men's pity;
 Left play for work, and grappled with the
 world
 Bent on escaping;
 "What's in the scroll," quoth he, "thou
 keepest furled?
 Show me their shaping,
 Theirs who most studied man, the bard and sage—
 Give!"—So, he gowned him, 50
 Straight got by heart that book to its last page;
 Learned, we found him
 Yea, but we found him bald too, eyes like lead,
 Accents uncertain;
 "Time to taste life," another would have said.
 "Up with the curtain!" 56
 This man said rather, "Actual life comes next?
 Patience a moment!
 Grant I have mastered learning's crabbed
 text,

25-26 These lines are directions to the bearers, as are the passages in parentheses in lines 41, 73, 76, 90 34 Apollo, the Greek god of manly beauty and of music 47. scroll, manuscript. This was before the time of books 50 he gowned him, he put on the scholastic gown. 55-72. With these lines compare Cleon, 214-20 and 278-83, pp. 271, 272.

Still there's the comment. 60
 Let me know all! Prate not of most or least,
 Painful or easy!
 Even to the crumbs I'd fain eat up the feast,
 Aye, nor feel queasy "
 Oh, such a life as he resolved to live, 65
 When he had learned it,
 When he had gathered all books had to give!
 Sooner, he spurned it.
 Image the whole, then execute the parts—
 Fancy the fabric 70
 Quite, ere you build, ere steel strike fire from quartz,
 Ere mortar dab brick!

(Here's the town-gate reached, there's the market-place
 Gaping before us)
 Yea, this in him was the peculiar grace 75
 (Hearten our chorus!)
 That before living he'd learn how to live—
 No end to learning;
 Earn the means first—God surely will contrive
 Use for our earning 80
 Others mistrust and say, "But time escapes, Live now or never!"
 He said, "What's time? Leave Now for dogs and apes!
 Man has Forever "
 Back to his book then; deeper drooped his
 head;
Calculus racked him,
 Leaden before, his eyes grew dross of lead,
Tussis attacked him.
 "Now, master, take a little rest!"—not he!
 (Caution redoubled, 90
 Step two abreast, the way winds narrowly!)
 Not a whit troubled,
 Back to his studies, fresher than at first,
 Fierce as a dragon
 He (soul-hydroptic with a sacred thirst) 95
 Sucked at the flagon.
 Oh, if we draw a circle premature,
 Heedless of far gain,
 Greedy for quick returns of profit, sure
 Bad is our bargain! 100
 Was it not great? did not he throw on God
 (He loves the burthen)—
 God's task to make the heavenly period
 Perfect the earthen?
 Did not he magnify the mind, show clear 105
 Just what it all meant?
 He would not discount life, as fools do here,
 Paid by instalment
 He ventured neck or nothing—heaven's success
 Found, or earth's failure: 110

86 Calculus, the disease called the stone 88 Tussis, a bronchial cough. 95 soul-hydroptic, soul-thirsty.

"Wilt thou trust death or not?" He answered
 "Yes!
 Hence with life's pale lure!"
 That low man seeks a little thing to do,
 Sees it and does it;
 This high man, with a great thing to pursue,
 Dies ere he knows it. 116
 That low man goes on adding one to one,
 His hundred's soon hit;
 This high man, aiming at a million,
 Misses an unit. 120
 That, has the world here — should he need the next,
 Let the world mind him!
 This, throws himself on God, and unperplexed
 Seeking shall find him.
 So, with the throttling hands of death at strife, 125
 Ground he at grammar;
 Still, through the rattle, parts of speech were rife;
 While he could stammer
 He settled Hoti's business — let it be! — Properly based Oun — 130
 Gave us the doctrine of the enclitic De,
 Dead from the waist down.
 Well, here's the platform, here's the proper
 place;
 Hail to your purlieus,
 All ye highfliers of the feathered race, 135
 Swallows and curlews!
 Here's the top-peak; the multitude below
 Live, for they can, there;
 This man decided not to Live but Know —
 Bury this man there? 140
 Here — here's his place, where meteors shoot, clouds form,
 Lightnings are loosened,
 Stars come and go! Let joy break with the storm,
 Peace let the dew send!
 Lofty designs must close in like effects; 145
 Loftily lying,
 Leave him — still loftier than the world suspects,
 Living and dying. (1855)

THE STATUE AND THE BUST

There's a palace in Florence, the world knows
 well,
 And a statue watches it from the square,
 And this story of both do our townsmen tell

113-124 These lines express a favorite doctrine with Browning. Cf. Andrea del Sarto, page 266 127 the rattle, the death rattle in his throat 129-131 Hoti, oun, and de are Greek particles meaning respectively that, therefore, and toward. They involve critical points of syntax 134 purlieus, haunts
The Statue and the Bust See Critical Notes

Ages ago, a lady there,
 At the farthest window facing the East. 5
 Asked, "Who rides by with the royal air?"

The bridesmaids' prattle around her ceased,
 She leaned forth, one on either hand;
 They saw how the blush of the bride increased —

They felt by its beats her heart expand — 10
 As one at each ear and both in a breath
 Whispered, "The Great-Duke Ferdinand"

That selfsame instant, underneath,
 The Duke rode past in his idle way,
 Empty and fine like a swordless sheath. 15

Gay he rode, with a friend as gay,
 Till he threw his head back — "Who is she?"
 — "A bride the Riccardi brings home today"

Hair in heaps lay heavily
 Over a pale brow spirit-pure — 20
 Carved like the heart of the coal-black tree,

Crisped like a war-steed's encloure —
 And vainly sought to dissemble her eyes
 Of the blackest black our eyes endure,

And lo, a blade for a knight's emprise 25
 Filled the fine empty sheath of a man —
 The Duke grew straightway brave and wise

He looked at her, as a lover can;
 She looked at him, as one who awakes;
 The past was a sleep, and her life began. 30

Now, love so ordered for both their sakes,
 A feast was held that selfsame night
 In the pile which the mighty shadow makes

(For Via Larga is three-parts light,
 But the palace overshadows one, 35
 Because of a crime, which may God requite!)

To Florence and God the wrong was done,
 Through the first republic's murder there
 By Cosimo and his cursed son)

The Duke (with the statue's face in the square) 40
 Turned in the midst of his multitude
 At the bright approach of the bridal pair

22 encloure, mane 25 emprise, enterprise 33 the pile, a large building—the Duke's palace 36 a crime, the crime committed by Cosimo dei Medici (1389-1464) and his grandson Lorenzo (1449-92) in destroying the liberties of Florence Both were absolute lords and rulers of Florence virtually tyrants.

But next day passed, and next day yet,
With still fresh cause to wait one day more
Ere each leaped over the parapet.

And still, as love's brief morning wore, 130
With a gentle start, half smile, half sigh,
They found love not as it seemed before.

They thought it would work infallibly,
But not in despite of heaven and earth;
The rose would blow when the storm passed
by. 135

Meantime they could profit in winter's dearth
By store of fruits that supplant the rose;
The world and its ways have a certain
worth—

And to press a point while these oppose
Were simple policy; better wait: 140
We lose no friends and we gain no foes.

Meantime, worse fates than a lover's fate,
Who daily may ride and pass and look
Where his lady watches behind the grate!

And she — she watched the square like a book
Holding one picture and only one, 146
Which daily to find she undertook;

When the picture was reached the book was
done,
And she turned from the picture at night to scheme
Of tearing it out for herself next sun. 150

So weeks grew months, years; gleam by gleam
The glory dropped from their youth and love,
And both perceived they had dreamed a
dream,

Which hovered, as dreams do, still above;
But who can take a dream for a truth? 155
Oh, hide our eyes from the next remove!

One day as the lady saw her youth
Depart, and the silver thread that streaked
Her hair, and, worn by the serpent's tooth,

The brow so puckered, the chin so peaked —
And wondered who the woman was, 161
Hollow-eyed and haggard-cheeked,

Fronting her silent in the glass —
"Summon here," she suddenly said,
"Before the rest of my old self pass, 165

"Him, the Carver, a hand to aid,
Who fashions the clay no love will change,
And fixes a beauty never to fade.

"Let Robbia's craft so apt and strange Arrest the remains of young and fair, 170
And rivet them while the seasons range.

"Make me a face on the window there,
Waiting as ever, mute the while,
My love to pass below in the square!

"And let me think that it may beguile 175
Dreary days which the dead must spend
Down in their darkness under the aisle,

"To say, 'What matters it at the end?
I did no more while my heart was warm
Than does that image, my pale-faced friend.'

"Where is the use of the lip's red charm, 181
The heaven of hair, the pride of the brow,
And the blood that blues the inside arm —

"Unless we turn, as the soul knows how,
The earthly gift to an end divine? 185
A lady of clay is as good, I trow."

But long ere Robbia's cornice, fine,
With flowers and fruits which leaves enlace,
Was set where now is the empty shrine —

(And, leaning out of a bright blue space, 190
As a ghost might lean from a chink of sky,
The passionate pale lady's face —

Eying ever, with earnest eye
And quick-turned neck at its breathless
stretch,
Someone who ever is passing by —) 195

The Duke had sighed like the simplest wretch
In Florence, "Youth — my dream escapes!
Will its record stay?" And he bade them fetch

Some subtle molder of brazen shapes —
"Can the soul, the will, die out of a man 200
Ere his body find the grave that gapes?

"John of Douay shall effect my plan,
Set me on horseback here aloft,
Alive, as the crafty sculptor can,

"In the very square I have crossed so oft, 205
That men may admire, when future suns
Shall touch the eyes to a purpose soft,

129 the parapet, the barrier between them 159 the serpent's tooth, probably ingratitude and dilatoriness on the part of her lover, the Duke

169 Robbia's craft Della Robbia is the name of a distinguished family of Florentine artists, the last one of whom died in 1566 "Robbia's craft" refers to relief work in marble, bronze, and terra-cotta 202 John of Douay, usually called Giovanni da Bologna (1524-1608), a noted sculptor of Italy.

"While the mouth and the brow stay brave
in bronze —
Admire and say, 'When he was alive
How he would take his pleasure once!' 210

"And it shall go hard but I contrive
To listen the while, and laugh in my tomb
At idleness which aspires to strive"

So! While these wait the trump of doom,
How do their spirits pass, I wonder, 215
Nights and days in the narrow room?

Still, I suppose, they sit and ponder
What a gift life was, ages ago,
Six steps out of the chapel yonder.

Only they see not God, I know, 220
Nor all that chivalry of his,
The soldier-saints who, row on row,

Burn upward each to his point of bliss —
Since, the end of life being manifest,
He had burned his way through the world to
this. 225

I hear you reproach, "But delay was best,
For their end was a crime" — Oh, a crime will do
As well, I reply, to serve for a test,

As a virtue golden through and through,
Sufficient to vindicate itself 230
And prove its worth at a moment's view!

Must a game be played for the sake of pelf?
Where a button goes, 'twere an epigram
To offer the stamp of the very Guelph.

The true has no value beyond the sham; 235
As well the counter as coin, I submit,
When your table's a hat, and your prize, a dram

Stake your counter as boldly every whit,
Venture as warily, use the same skill,
Do your best, whether winning or losing it,

If you choose to play! — is my principle. 241
Let a man contend to the uttermost
For his life's set prize, be it what it will!

The counter our lovers staked was lost
As surely as if it were lawful coin; 245
And the sin I impute to each frustrate ghost

Is — the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin,
Though the end in sight was a vice, I say
You of the virtue (we issue join)
How strive you? De te, fabulal 250

"CHILDE ROLAND TO THE DARK TOWER CAME"

My first thought was, he lied in every word,
That hoary cripple, with malicious eye
Askance to watch the working of his lie
On mine, and mouth scarce able to afford Suppression of the glee, that pursed and scored 5
Its edge, at one more victim gained there-
by.

What else should he be set for, with his staff?
What, save to waylay with his lies, ensnare
All travelers who might find him posted
there,
And ask the road? I guessed what skull-like
laugh 10
Would break, what crutch 'gin write my epitaph
For pastime in the dusty thoroughfare,

If at his counsel I should turn aside
Into that ominous tract which, all agree,
Hides the Dark Tower Yet acquiescingly
I did turn as he pointed — neither pride 16
Nor hope rekindling at the end desried,
So much as gladness that some end might
be.

For, what with my whole world-wide wander-
ing,
What with my search drawn out through years, my hope 20
Dwindled into a ghost not fit to cope
With that obstreperous joy success would bring —
I hardly tried now to rebuke the spring
My heart made, finding failure in its scope.

As when a sick man very near to death 25
Seems dead indeed, and feels begin and end
The tears, and takes the farewell of each
friend,
And hears one bid the other go, draw breath
Freelier outside ("since all is o'er," he saith,
"And the blow fallen no grieving can amend"), 30

250 De te, fabula, the fable is told concerning yourself
See Critical Notes

Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came. The title Childe was given to a young knight who had not yet distinguished himself. See Critical Notes

14 all agree So the cripple says.

234 To offer . . . Guelph, to offer real money bearing the impress of the crown. The Guelphs were the ruling faction in Italy from the 12th to the 15th centuries.

While some discuss if near the other graves
 Be room enough for this, and when a day
 Suits best for carrying the corpse away,
 With care about the banners, scarves and staves,
 And still the man hears all, and only craves 35
 He may not shame such tender love and
 stay.

Thus, I had so long suffered in this quest,
 Heard failure prophesied so oft, been writ
 So many times among "The Band" — to
 wit,
 The knights who to the Dark Tower's search addressed 40
 Their steps — that just to fail as they, seemed
 best,
 And all the doubt was now — should I be fit?

So, quiet as despair, I turned from him,
 That hateful cripple, out of his highway
 Into the path he pointed All the day 45
 Had been a dreary one at best, and dim
 Was settling to its close, yet shot one grim
 Red leer to see the plain catch its estray.

For mark! no sooner was I fairly found
 Pledged to the plain, after a pace or two, 50
 Than, pausing to throw backward a last view
 O'er the safe road, 'twas gone; gray plain all
 round—
 Nothing but plain to the horizon's bound.
 I might go on, naught else remained to do

So, on I went I think I never saw 55
 Such starved ignoble nature; nothing
 throve;
 For flowers — as well expect a cedar grove!
 But cockle, spurge, according to their law
 Might propagate their kind, with none to awe,
 You'd think, a burr had been a treasure
 trove. 60

No! penury, inertness, and grimace,
 In some strange sort, were the land's portion "See
 Or shut your eyes," said Nature peevishly,
 "It nothing skills — I cannot help my case;
 'Tis the Last Judgment's fire must cure this
 place, 65
 Calcine its clods, and set my prisoners free "

If there pushed any ragged thistle-stalk Above its mates, the head was chopped, the bents

Were jealous else What made those holes and rents
 In the dock's harsh swarth leaves, bruised as to balk 70
 All hope of greenness? 'Tis a brute must walk
 Pashing their life out, with a brute's intents.

As for the grass, it grew as scant as hair
 In leprosy; thin dry blades pricked the mud,
 Which underneath looked kneaded up with
 blood 75
 One stiff blind horse, his every bone a-stare,
 Stood stupefied, however he came there—
 Thrust out past service from the devil's stud!

Alive? he might be dead for aught I know,
 With that red gaunt and colloped neck
 a-strain, 80
 And shut eyes underneath the rusty mane, Seldom went such grotesqueness with such
 woe;
 I never saw a brute I hated so;
 He must be wicked to deserve such pain.

I shut my eyes and turned them on my heart.
 As a man calls for wine before he fights, 86
 I asked one draft of earlier, happier sights,
 Ere fitly I could hope to play my part.
 Think first, fight afterwards — the soldier's
 art,
 One taste of the old time sets all to rights. 90

Not it! I fancied Cuthbert's reddening face
 Beneath its garniture of curly gold,
 Dear fellow, till I almost felt him fold
 An arm in mine to fix me to the place,
 That way he used. Alas, one night's disgrace! 95
 Out went my heart's new fire and left it
 cold.

Giles then, the soul of honor — there he stands
 Frank as ten years ago when knighted first.
 What honest man should dare (he said) he
 durst.

Good — but the scene shifts — faugh! what hangman hands 100
 Pin to his breast a parchment? His own bands
 Read it. Poor traitor, spit upon and curst!

Better this present than a past like that,
 Back therefore to my darkening path again!
 No sound, no sight as far as eye could strain 105
 Will the night send a howlet or a bat?
 I asked — when something on the dismal flat
 Came to arrest my thoughts and change their train.

48 estrays, the one who has strayed—namely, Childe
 Roland 64 skills, matters 66 Calcine, reduce to powder by heat 68 bents, coarse grasses

80 colloped, marked with ridges

A sudden little river crossed my path
 As unexpected as a serpent comes. 110
 No sluggish tide congenial to the glooms;
 This, as it frothed by, might have been a bath
 For the fiend's glowing hoof — to see the wrath
 Of its black eddy bespate with flakes and spumes.

So petty yet so spiteful! All along, 115
 Low scrubby alders kneeled down over it;
 Drenched willows flung them headlong in a
 fit
 Of mute despair, a suicidal throng;
 The river which had done them all the wrong,
 Whate'er that was, rolled by, deterred no
 whit. 120

Which, while I forded — good saints, how I feared
 To set my foot upon a dead man's cheek,
 Each step, or feel the spear I thrust to seek
 For hollows, tangled in his hair or beard!
 — It may have been a water-rat I speared, 125
 But, ugh! it sounded like a baby's shriek.

Glad was I when I reached the other bank
 Now for a better country. Vain presage!
 Who were the strugglers, what war did they wage,
 Whose savage trample thus could pad the dank 130
 Soil to a plash? Toads in a poisoned tank,
 Or wild cats in a red-hot iron cage —

The fight must so have seemed in that fell cirque.
 What penned them there, with all the plain to choose?
 No footprint leading to that horrid mews,
 None out of it. Mad brewage set to work 136
 Their brains, no doubt, like galley-slaves the Turk
 Pits for his pastime, Christians against Jews.

And more than that — a furlong on — why,
 there!
 What bad use was that engine for, that wheel, 140
 Or brake, not wheel — that harrow fit to reel
 Men's bodies out like silk? with all the air
 Of Tophet's tool, on earth left unaware,
 Or brought to sharpen its rusty teeth of steel.

Then came a bit of stubbed ground, once a
 wood, 145
 Next a marsh, it would seem, and now mere
 earth
 Desperate and done with — so a fool finds mirth,
 Makes a thing and then mars it, till his mood
 Changes and off he goes! — within a rood, Bog, clay and rubble, sand and stark black dearth. 150

Now blotches rankling, colored gay and grim,
 Now patches where some leanness of the soil's
 Broke into moss or substances like boils,
 Then came some palsied oak, a cleft in him
 Like a distorted mouth that splits its rim 155
 Gaping at death, and dies while it recoils.

And just as far as ever from the end!
 Naught in the distance but the evening,
 naught
 To point my footstep further! At the
 thought,
 A great black bird, Apollyon's bosom-friend,
 Sailed past, nor beat his wide wing dragon-penned 161
 That brushed my cap — perchance the guide I sought.

For, looking up, aware I somehow grew,
 'Spite of the dusk, the plain had given place
 All round to mountains — with such name to grace 165
 Mere ugly heights and heaps now stolen in
 view.
 How thus they had surprised me — solve it,
 you!
 How to get from them was no clearer case

Yet half I seemed to recognize some trick
 Of mischief happened to me, God knows
 when — 170
 In a bad dream perhaps. Here ended, then,
 Progress this way. When, in the very nick
 Of giving up, one time more, came a click
 As when a trap shuts — you're inside the den!

Burningly it came on me all at once, 175
 This was the place! those two hills on the
 right,
 Crouched like two bulls locked horn in horn
 in fight;

114 bespate, spattered. 130 pad, tread down 131.
 plash, puddle 135 mews, enclosure, pen. 143. Tophet, an Old Testament name for hell from Revelation, 9 11 — "And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name . is like those in a dragon's wing 174 As when, etc Cf.

 Duncce,
 Dotard, a-doing at the very nonce,
 After a life spent training for the sight! 180

What in the midst lay but the Tower itself?
 The round squat turret, blind as the fool's
 heart,
 Built of brown stone, without a counterpart
 In the whole world. The tempest's mocking

Points to the shipman thus the unseen shelf 185
 He strikes on, only when the timbers start

Not see? because of night perhaps? — why,
 day

Came back again for that! before it left,
 The dying sunset kindled through a cleft;
 The hills, like giants at a hunting, lay, 190
 Chin upon hand, to see the game at bay —
 "Now stab and end the creature — to the heft!"

Not hear? when noise was everywhere! it tolled

Increasing like a bell. Names in my ears,
 Of all the lost adventurers my peers — 195
 How such a one was strong, and such was bold,

And such was fortunate, yet each of old Lost, lost! one moment knelled the woe of
 years.

There they stood, ranged along the hillsides,
 met

To view the last of me, a living frame 200

 Dauntless the slug-horn to my lips I set,

 THE QUEEN

CONSTANCE and NORBERT

Norbert Now!

Constance. Not now!

Nor. Give me them again, those hands;
 Put them upon my forehead — how it throbs!
 Press them before my eyes, the fire comes
 through!

179 nonce, moment 203 slug-horn, trumpet The word is really slogan. It had formerly been misused by Chatterton to mean trumpet.
In a Balcony See Critical Notes.

You cruellest, you dearest in the world,
 Let me! The Queen must grant whate'er I
 ask — 5

How can I gain you and not ask the Queen?
 There she stays waiting for me, here stand
 you;

Some time or other this was to be asked;
 Now is the one time — what I ask, I gain.

Let me ask now, Love!

Con. Do, and ruin us! 10

Nor. Let it be now, Love! All my soul breaks forth.

How I do love you! Give my love its way!
 A man can have but one life and one death,
 One heaven, one hell. Let me fulfill my fate—
 Grant me my heaven now! Let me know you
 mine, 15

Prove you mine, write my name upon your
 brow,

Hold you and have you, and then die away,
 If God please, with completion in my soul!

Con. I am not yours then? How content this man!

I am not his — who change into himself, 20
 Have passed into his heart and beat its beats,
 Who give my hands to him, my eyes, my hair,
 Give all that was of me away to him —

So well, that now, my spirit turned his own,
 Takes part with him against the woman here,
 Bids him not stumble at so mere a straw 25

As caring that the world be cognizant
 How he loves her and how she worships him.
 You have this woman, not as yet that world.

Go on, I bid, nor stop to care for me 30
 By saving what I cease to care about,

The courtly name and pride of circumstance—
 The name you'll pick up and be cumbered
 with

Just for the poor parade's sake, nothing more,
 Just that the world may slip from under
 you — 35

Just that the world may cry, "So much for
 him —

The man predestined to the heap of crowns,
 There goes his chance of winning one, at least!"

Nor. The world!

Con. You love it! Love me quite as well,
 And see if I shall pray for this in vain! 40
 Why must you ponder what it knows or thinks?

Nor You pray for — what, in vain?

Con. Oh, my heart's heart,
 How I do love you, Norbert! That is right.
 But listen, or I take my hands away! 44
 You say, "Let it be now", you would go
 now

20 who. The antecedent of who is I 25 the woman here, that is, myself 40 for this, for the concealment of our love

And tell the Queen, perhaps six steps from us,
You love me — so you do, thank God!

Nor Thank God!

Con. Yes, Norbert — but you fain would tell your love,

And, what succeeds the telling, ask of her
My hand. Now take this rose and look at it,
Listening to me You are the minister, 51
The Queen's first favorite, nor without a cause.

Tonight completes your wonderful year's-work

(This palace-feast is held to celebrate),
Made memorable by her life's success, 55
The junction of two crowns, on her sole head,
Her house had only dreamed of anciently,
That this mere dream is grown a stable truth, Tonight's feast makes authentic Whose the praise?

Whose genius, patience, energy, achieved 60
What turned the many heads and broke the hearts?

You are the fate, your minute's in the heaven Next comes the Queen's turn "Name your own reward!"

With leave to clench the past, chain the to-
come,

Put out an arm and touch and take the sun
And fix it ever full-faced on your earth, 66
Possess yourself supremely of her life —

You choose the single thing she will not grant,
Nay, very declaration of which choice
Will turn the scale and neutralize your work,
At best she will forgive you, if she can 71
You think I'll let you choose — her cousin's
hand?

Nor Wait First, do you retain your old belief

The Queen is generous — nay, is just?

Con There, there!

So men make women love them, while they
know 75

No more of women's hearts than . . . look
you here,

You that are just and generous beside.

Make it your own case! For example now,
I'll say — I let you kiss me, hold my hands —
Why? do you know why? I'll instruct you,
then — 80

The kiss, because you have a name at court,
This hand and this, that you may shut in
each

A jewel, if you please to pick up such.
That's horrible? Apply it to the Queen —
Suppose I am the Queen to whom you speak.
"I was a nameless man, you needed me; 86
Why did I proffer you my aid? — There stood
A certain pretty cousin at your side.

Why did I make such common cause with
you?

Access to her had not been easy else. 90

You give my labor here abundant praise?

'Faith, labor, which she overlooked, grew
play.

How shall your gratitude discharge itself?

Give me her hand!"

Nor And still I urge the same

Is the Queen just? just — generous or no! 95

Con Yes, just You love a rose (no harm in that),

But was it for the rose's sake or mine

You put it in your bosom? Mine, you said —

Then, mine you still must say or else be false.

You told the Queen you served her for her-
self, 100

If so, to serve her was to serve yourself,

She thinks, for all your unbelieving face!

I know her. In the hall, six steps from us,

One sees the twenty pictures, there's a life

Better than life, and yet no life at all 105

Conceive her born in such a magic dome,

Pictures all round her! Why, she sees the
world,

Can recognize its given things and facts,

The fight of giants or the feast of gods,

Sages in senate, beauties at the bath, 110

Chases and battles, the whole earth's display,

Landscape and sea-piece, down to flowers and
fruit —

And who shall question that she knows them
all,

In better semblance than the things outside?

Yet bring into the silent gallery 115

Some live thing to contrast in breath and
blood,

Some lion, with the painted lion there —

You think she'll understand composedly?

— Say, "That's his fellow in the hunting-piece

Yonder, I've turned to praise a hundred
times?" 120

Not so. Her knowledge of our actual earth,

Its hopes and fears, concerns and sympathies,

Must be too far, too mediate, too unreal.

The real exists for us outside, not her;

How should it, with that life in these four walls, 125

That father and that mother, first to last

No father and no mother — friends, a heap,

Lovers, no lack — a husband in due time,

And every one of them alike a lie!

Things painted by a Rubens out of naught 130

Into what kindness, friendship, love should be,

All better, all more grandiose than the life,

Only no life; mere cloth and surface-paint,

49 succeeds, follows 62 your heaven, this is your supreme moment—the stars are favorable to you

92 overlooked, supervised 123 mediate, indirect
130 Rubens, Peter Paul Rubens (1577-1640), a noted
Flemish painter

You feel, while you admire. How should she feel?
 Yet now that she has stood thus fifty years 135
 The sole spectator in that gallery,
 You think to bring this warm real struggling love
 In to her of a sudden, and suppose She'll keep her state untroubled? Here's the truth —
 She'll apprehend truth's value at a glance, 140
 Prefer it to the pictured loyalty?
 You only have to say, "So men are made,
 For this they act, the thing has many names,
 But this the right one; and now, Queen, be just!"
 Your life slips back; you lose her at the word:
 You do not even for amends gain me 146
 He will not understand! oh, Norbert, Norbert,
 Do you not understand?
Nor. The Queen's the Queen,
 I am myself — no picture, but alive
 In every nerve and every muscle, here 150
 At the palace-window o'er the people's street,
 As she in the gallery where the pictures glow,
 The good of life is precious to us both.
 She cannot love; what do I want with rule?
 When first I saw your face a year ago 155
 I knew my life's good, my soul heard one voice —
 "The woman yonder, there's no use of life
 But just to obtain her! heap earth's woes in one
 And bear them — make a pile of all earth's joys
 And spurn them, as they help or help not this; 160
 Only, obtain her!" How was it to be?
 I found you were the cousin of the Queen;
 I must then serve the Queen to get to you.
 No other way. Suppose there had been one,
 And I, by saying prayers to some white star
 With promise of my body and my soul, 166
 Might gain you — should I pray the star or no?
 Instead, there was the Queen to serve! I served,
 Helped, did what other servants failed to do.
 Neither she sought nor I declared my end 170
 Her good is hers, my recompense be mine —
 I therefore name you as that recompense
 She dreamed that such a thing could never be?
 Let her wake now. She thinks there was more cause
 In love of power, high fame, pure loyalty? 175
 Perhaps she fancies men wear out their lives
 Chasing such shades Then, I've a fancy too,
 I worked because I want you with my soul,
 I therefore ask your hand. Let it be now!
Con. Had I not loved you from the very first, 180

Were I not yours, could we not steal out thus
 So wickedly, so wildly, and so well,
 You might become impatient. What's conceived
 Of us without here, by the folk within?
 Where are you now? immersed in cares of state — 185
 Where am I now? intent on festal robes —
 We two, embracing under death's spread hand!
 What was this thought for, what that scruple of yours
 Which broke the council up? — to bring about
 One minute's meeting in the corridor! 190
 And then the sudden sleights, strange secrecies,
 Complots inscrutable, deep telegraphs,
 Long-planned chance-meetings, hazards of a look,
 "Does she know? does she not know? saved or lost?"
 A year of this compression's ecstasy 195
 All goes for nothing! you would give this up
 For the old way, the open way, the world's,
 His way who beats, and his who sells his wife!
 What tempts you? — their notorious happiness
 Makes you ashamed of ours? The best you'll gain 200
 Will be — the Queen grants all that you require,
 Concedes the cousin, rids herself of you
 And me at once, and gives us ample leave
 To live like our five hundred happy friends
 The world will show us with officious hand 205
 Our chamber-entry, and stand sentinel
 Where we so oft have stolen across its traps!
 Get the world's warrant, ring the falcons' feet,
 And make it duty to be bold and swift,
 Which long ago was nature. Have it so! 210
 We never hawked by rights till flung from fist?
 Oh, the man's thought! no woman's such a fool.
Nor. Yes, the man's thought and my thought, which is more —
 One made to love you, let the world take note!
 Have I done worthy work? Be love's the praise, 215
 Though hampered by restrictions, barred against
 By set forms, blinded by forced secrecies!
 Set free my love, and see what love can do
 Shown in my life — what work will spring from that!
 The world is used to have its business done 220

205-207 With these lines cf. lines 232-233 and 625-627
 208. ring the falcons' feet Rings in which to fasten the leashes were put on the feet of the falcons preparatory to hunting.

On other grounds, find great effects produced
For power's sake, fame's sake, motives in men's mouth.

So, good; but let my low ground shame their
high!

Truth is the strong thing. Let man's life be true!

And love's the truth of mine. Time prove
the rest! 225

I choose to wear you stamped all over me,
Your name upon my forehead and my breast,
You, from the sword's blade to the ribbon's
edge,

That men may see, all over, you in me —
That pale loves may die out of their pretense
In face of mine, shames thrown on love fall off 231

Permit this, Constance! Love has been so
long

Subdued in me, eating me through and
through,

That now 'tis all of me and must have way.
Think of my work, that chaos of intrigues, 235
Those hopes and fears, surprises and delays,
That long endeavor, earnest, patient, slow,
Trembling at last to its assured result;
Then think of this revulsion! I resume
Life after death (it is no less than life, 240
After such long unlovely laboring days),
And liberate to beauty life's great need
O' the beautiful, which, while it prompted
work,

Suppressed itself awhile. This eve's the
time,

This eve intense with yon first trembling star
We seem to pant and reach; scarce aught between 246

The earth that rises and the heaven that bends,
All nature self-abandoned, every tree
Flung as it will, pursuing its own thoughts
And fixed so, every flower and every weed, 250
No pride, no shame, no victory, no defeat;
All under God, each measured by itself
These statues round us stand abrupt, distinct,
The strong in strength, the weak in weakness
fixed,

The Muse forever wedded to her lyre, 255
Nymph to her fawn, and Silence to her rose;
See God's approval on his universe!

Let us do so — aspire to live as these
In harmony with truth, ourselves being true!
Take the first way, and let the second come!
My first is to possess myself of you, 261
The music sets the march-step — forward,
then!

And there's the Queen, I go to claim you of,
The world to witness, wonder, and applaud
Our flower of life breaks open. No delay! 265

Con. And so shall we be ruined, both of us
Norbert, I know her to the skin and bone;

You do not know her, were not born to it,
To feel what she can see or cannot see Love, she is generous — aye, despite your
smile, 270

Generous as you are; for, in that thin frame,
Pain-twisted, punctured through and through with cares,

There lived a lavish soul until it starved,
Debarred of healthy food Look to the soul —
Pity that, stoop to that, ere you begin 275
(The true man's-way) on justice and your rights,

Exactions and acquittance of the past!
Begin so — see what justice she will deal!
We women hate a debt as men a gift.
Suppose her some poor keeper of a school 280
Whose business is to sit through summer months

And dole out children leave to go and play,
Herself superior to such lightness — she
In the arm-chair's state and pedagogic pomp —

To the life, the laughter, sun and youth outside — 285

We wonder such a face looks black on us?
I do not bid you wake her tenderness
(That were vain truly — none is left to wake),
But let her think her justice is engaged
To take the shape of tenderness, and mark 290
If she'll not coldly pay its warmest debt!
Does she love me, I ask you? not a whit;
Yet, thinking that her justice was engaged
To help a kinswoman, she took me up —
Did more on that bare ground than other loves 295

Would do on greater argument For me,
I have no equivalent of such cold kind
To pay her with, but love alone to give
If I give anything. I give her love,
I feel I ought to help her, and I will 300
So, for her sake, as yours, I tell you twice
That women hate a debt as men a gift
If I were you, I could obtain this grace —
Could lay the whole I did to love's account,
Nor yet be very false as courtiers go — 305
Declaring my success was recompense,
It would be so, in fact — what were it else?
And then, once loose her generosity —
Oh, how I see it! then, were I but you
To turn it, let it seem to move itself, 310
And make it offer what I really take,
Accepting just, in the poor cousin's hand,
Her value as the next thing to the Queen's — Since none love queens directly, none dare
that, 314

And a thing's shadow or a name's mere echo
Suffices those who miss the name and thing!
You pick up just a ribbon she has worn,
To keep in proof how near her breath you
came

Say, I'm so near I seem a piece of her — 319
Ask for me that way — oh, you understand —
You'd find the same gift yielded with a grace,
Which, if you make the least show to extort . . .

—You'll see! and when you have ruined both
of us,

Dissertate on the Queen's ingratitude!

Nor. Then, if I turn it that way, you consent? 325

'Tis not my way; I have more hope in truth
Still, if you won't have truth — why, this indeed,

Were scarcely false, as I'd express the sense.
Will you remain here?

Con. O best heart of mine,
How I have loved you! then, you take my
way? 330

Are mine as you have been her minister,
Work out my thought, give it effect for me,
Paint plain my poor conceit and make it serve?

I owe that withered woman everything — Life, fortune, you, remember! Take my
part — 335

Help me to pay her! Stand upon your rights?
You, with my rose, my hands, my heart on
you?

Your rights are mine — you have no rights
but mine.

Nor. Remain here. How you know me!

Con. Ah, but still — [He breaks from her; she remains. Dance-music from within.]

(Enter the QUEEN)

Queen Constance? She is here, as he said.
Speak quick! 340

Is it so? Is it true or false? One word!

Con. True.

Queen. Mercifullest Mother, thanks to
thee!

Con. Madam?

Queen. I love you, Constance, from my
soul.

Now say once more, with any words you will,
'Tis true, all true, as true as that I speak 345

Con. Why should you doubt it?

Queen. Ah, why doubt? why doubt?

Dear, make me see it! Do you see it so?
None see themselves; another sees them best.
You say "why doubt it?" — you see him and
me.

It is because the Mother has such grace 350
That if we had but faith — wherein we fail —
Whate'er we yearn for would be granted us;
Yet still we let our whims prescribe despair,
Our fancies thwart and cramp our will and
power,

And while accepting life, abjure its use. 355

Constance, I had abjured the hope of love
And being loved, as truly as yon palm
The hope of seeing Egypt from that plot

Con. Heaven!

Queen. But it was so, Constance, it was so!
Men say — or do men say it? fancies say — 360
"Stop here, your life is set, you are grown
old.

Too late — no love for you, too late for love —
Leave love to girls. Be queen; let Constance
love!"

One takes the hint — half meets it like a
child,

Ashamed at any feelings that oppose. 365
"O love, true, never think of love again!
I am a queen; I rule, not love, forsooth "

So it goes on; so a face grows like this,
Hair like this hair, poor arms as lean as these,
Till — nay, it does not end so, I thank God!

Con. I cannot understand —

Queen. The happier you! 371
Constance, I know not how it is with men;
For women (I am a woman now like you)
There is no good of life but love — but love!
What else looks good, is some shade flung from love; 375

Love gilds it, gives it worth. Be warned by
me,

Never you cheat yourself one instant! Love,
Give love, ask only love, and leave the rest!
O Constance, how I love you!

Con. I love you.

Queen. I do believe that all is come through
you. 380

I took you to my heart to keep it warm
When the last chance of love seemed dead in
me;

I thought your fresh youth warmed my withered heart.

Oh, I am very old now, am I not?

Not so! it is true and it shall be true! 385

Con. Tell it me; let me judge if true or false.

Queen. Ah, but I fear you! You will look at me

And say, "She's old, she's grown unlovely quite

Who ne'er was beauteous; men want beauty
still." 389

Well, so I feared — the curse! so I felt sure!

Con. Be calm. And now you feel not sure,
you say?

Queen. Constance, he came — the coming was not strange —

Do not I stand and see men come and go?

I turned a half-look from my pedestal Where I grow marble — "one young man the
more! 395

He will love someone, that is naught to me,
What would he with my marble stateliness?"
Yet this seemed somewhat worse than heretofore,

The man more gracious, youthful, like a god,
And I still older, with less flesh to change —
We two those dear extremes that long to
touch 401

It seemed still harder when he first began
To labor at those state-affairs, absorbed
The old way for the old end — interest 404
Oh, to live with a thousand beating hearts
Around you, swift eyes, serviceable hands,
Professing they've no care but for your cause, Thought but to help you, love but for your-
self —

And you the marble statue all the time 409
They praise and point at as preferred to life,
Yet leave for the first breathing woman's
smile,

First dancer's, gypsy's, or street baladine's!
Why, how I have ground my teeth to hear men's speech

Stifled for fear it should alarm my ear, 414
Their gait subdued lest step should startle me,
Their eyes declined, such queendom to respect,

Their hands alert, such treasure to preserve,
While not a man of them broke rank and
spoke,

Wrote me a vulgar letter all of love, 419
Or caught my hand and pressed it like a hand!
There have been moments, if the sentinel
Lowering his halbert to salute the queen,
Had flung it brutally and clasped my knees,
I would have stooped and kissed him with
my soul.

Con. Who could have comprehended?

Queen. Aye, who — who? 425
Why, no one, Constance, but this one who did Not they, not you, not I. Even now perhaps It comes too late — would you but tell the
truth.

Con. I wait to tell it

Queen. Well, you see, he came,
Outfaced the others, did a work this year 430
Exceeds in value all was ever done,
You know — it is not I who say it — all
Say it. And so (a second pang and worse)
I grew aware not only of what he did,
But why so wondrously. Oh, never work 435
Like his was done for work's ignoble sake —
Souls need a finer aim to light and lure!
I felt, I saw, he loved — loved somebody
And Constance, my dear Constance, do you
know,

I did believe this while 'twas you he loved

Con. Me, madam?

Queen It did seem to me, your face 441
Met him where'er he looked, and whom but
you

Was such a man to love? It seemed to me,
You saw he loved you, and approved his love,
And both of you were in intelligence. 445
You could not loiter in that garden, step
Into this balcony, but I straight was stung
And forced to understand. It seemed so true,
So right, so beautiful, so like you both,
That all this work should have been done by
him 450

Not for the vulgar hope of recompense,
But that at last — suppose, some night like
this —

Borne on to claim his due reward of me,
He might say, "Give her hand and pay me
so" 454

And I (O Constance, you shall love me now!)
I thought, surmounting all the bitterness,
"And he shall have it. I will make her blest,
My flower of youth, my woman's self that
was,

My happiest woman's self that might have been!

These two shall have their joy and leave me
here" 460

Yes — yes!

Con. Thanks!

Queen And the word was on my lips
When he burst in upon me I looked to hear
A mere calm statement of his just desire
For payment of his labor When — O heaven,
How can I tell you? Lightning on my eyes 465
And thunder in my ears proved that first
word

Which told 'twas love of me, of me, did all —
He loved me — from the first step to the last,
Loved me!

Con. You hardly saw, scarce heard him
speak

Of love, what if you should mistake?

Queen No, no — 470
No mistake! Ha, there shall be no mistake!
He had not dared to hint the love he felt —
You were my reflex — (how I understood!)
He said you were the ribbon I had worn, 474
He kissed my hand, he looked into my eyes,
And love, love came at end of every phrase
Love is begun; this much is come to pass;
The rest is easy Constance, I am yours!
I will learn, I will place my life on you; 479
Teach me but how to keep what I have won!
Am I so old? This hair was early gray;
But joy ere now has brought hair brown again,
And joy will bring the cheek's red back, I feel
I could sing once too; that was in my youth
Still, when men paint me, they declare me
. . . yes, 485
Beautiful — for the last French painter did!

I know they flatter somewhat; you are frank —

I trust you How I loved you from the first!
Some queens would hardly seek a cousin out
And set her by their side to take the eye; 490
I must have felt that good would come from you.

I am not generous — like him — like you!
But he is not your lover after all;
It was not you he looked at Saw you him?
You have not been mistaking words or looks?
He said you were the reflex of myself. 496
And yet he is not such a paragon
To you, to younger women who may choose
Among a thousand Norberts. Speak the truth! 499

You know you never named his name to me,
You know, I cannot give him up — ah God,
Not up now, even to you!

Con. Then calm yourself.

Queen. See, I am old — look here, you happy girl!

I will not play the fool, deceive — ah, whom?
'Tis all gone, put your cheek beside my cheek
And what a contrast does the moon behold! 506
But then I set my life upon one chance,
The last chance and the best — am I not left,
My soul, myself? All women love great men
If young or old, it is in all the tales; 510
Young beauties love old poets who can love —
Why should not he, the poems in my soul,
The passionate faith, the pride of sacrifice,
Life-long, death-long? I throw them at his feet 514

Who cares to see the fountain's very shape,
Whether it be a Triton's or a Nymph's
That pours the foam, makes rainbows all around?

You could not praise indeed the empty conch;
But I'll pour floods of love and hide myself
How I will love him! Cannot men love love? 520

Who was a queen and loved a poet once,
Humpbacked, a dwarf? Ah, women can do that!

Well, but men too; at least, they tell you so
They love so many women in their youth,
And even in age they all love whom they please; 525

And yet the best of them confide to friends
That 'tis not beauty makes the lasting love —
They spend a day with such and tire the next.
They like soul — well then, they like phantasy,

Novelty even Let us confess the truth, 530

516 Triton, a sea-god, part man, part horse, and part fish. He blew a twisted seashell to calm or raise the waves.
521 a queen once This may refer to Françoise d'Aubigne, Marquise de Maintenon (1635-1719), who first married the deformed Scarron, a French poet and dramatist, and after his death became the consort of King Louis XIV

Horrible though it be, that prejudice,
Prescription . . . curses! they will love a queen
They will, they do; and will not, does not — he?

Con. How can he? You are wedded, 'tis a name,

We know, but still a bond. Your rank remains, 535
His rank remains How can he, nobly souled
As you believe and I incline to think,
Aspire to be your favorite, shame and all?

Queen. Hear her! There, there now — could she love like me?

What did I say of smooth-cheeked youth and grace? 540

See all it does or could do! so youth loves!
Oh, tell him, Constance, you could never do
What I will — you, it was not born in! I
Will drive these difficulties far and fast 544
As yonder mists curdling before the moon.
I'll use my light too, gloriously retrieve
My youth from its enforced calamity,
Dissolve that hateful marriage, and be his,
His own in the eyes alike of God and man.

Con. You will do — dare do . . . pause on what you say! 550

Queen. Hear her! I thank you, sweet, for that surprise

You have the fair face, for the soul, see mine!
I have the strong soul, let me teach you, here.

I think I have borne enough and long enough,
And patiently enough, the world remarks, 555
To have my own way now, unblamed by all.
It does so happen (I rejoice for it)

This most un hoped-for issue cuts the knot.
There's not a better way of settling claims 559
Than this; God sends the accident express.

And were it for my subjects' good, no more,
'Twere best thus ordered I am thankful now,

Mute, passive, acquiescent I receive,
And bless God simply, or should almost fear
To walk so smoothly to my ends at last. 565
Why, how I baffle obstacles, spurn fate!

How strong I am! Could Norbert see me now!

Con. Let me consider. It is all too strange.

Queen. You, Constance, learn of me, do you, like me! 569

You are young, beautiful; my own, best girl,
You will have many lovers, and love one —
Light hair, not hair like Norbert's, to suit yours,

Taller than he is, since yourself are tall.
Love him, like me! Give all away to him, 574
Think never of yourself, throw by your pride,
Hope, fear — your own good as you saw it once,

And love him simply for his very self.
Remember, I (and what am I to you?)

Would give up all for one, leave throne, lose
life, 579

Do all but just unlove him! He loves me.

Con He shall

Queen You, step inside my inmost heart!
Give me your own heart, let us have one
heart!

I'll come to you for counsel; "this he says,
This he does, what should this amount to,
pray?

Beseech you, change it into current coin! 585
Is that worth kisses? Shall I please him
there?"

And then we'll speak in turn of you — what
else?

Your love, according to your beauty's worth,
For you shall have some noble love, all gold, Whom choose you? We will get him at your choice 590

— Constance, I leave you Just a minute
since,

I felt as I must die or be alone,
Breathing my soul into an ear like yours,
Now, I would face the world with my new
life,

Wear my new crown I'll walk around the rooms, 595

And then come back and tell you how it feels How soon a smile of God can change the
world!

How we are made for happiness — how work
Grows play, adversity a winning fight!

True, I have lost so many years, what then?

Many remain; God has been very good 601

You, stay here! 'Tis as different from dreams,
From the mind's cold calm estimate of bliss,
As these stone statues from the flesh and
blood

The comfort thou hast caused mankind, God's moon! 605

*She goes out, leaving CONSTANCE. Dance-music
from within.*

(NORBERT enters.)

Nor. Well? we have but one minute and one word!

Con. I am yours, Norbert!

Nor. Yes, mine

Con Not till now!

You were mine Now I give myself to you
Nor Constance?

Con Your own! I know the thriftier
way

Of giving — haply, 'tis the wiser way. 610

Meaning to give a treasure, I might dole

Coin after coin out (each, as that were all,

With a new largess still at each despair)

And force you keep in sight the deed, preserve 614

Exhaustless till the end my part and yours,

My giving and your taking; both our joys
Dying together. Is it the wiser way?

I choose the simpler, I give all at once.

Know what you have to trust to, trade upon!

Use it, abuse it — anything but think 620

Hereafter, "Had I known she loved me so,
And what my means, I might have thriven with it."

This is your means. I give you all myself.

Nor. I take you and thank God.

Con. Look on through years!

We cannot kiss, a second day like this; 625

Else were this earth no earth.

Nor. With this day's heat

We shall go on through years of cold.

Con. So, best!

— I try to see those years — I think I see.

You walk quick, and new warmth comes, your look back 629

And lay all to the first glow — not sit down

Forever brooding on a day like this

While seeing embers whiten and love die.

Yes, love lives best in its effect; and mine,

Full in its own life, yearns to live in yours.

Nor Just so. I take and know you all at
once. 635

Your soul is disengaged so easily,

Your face is there, I know you, give me time,

Let me be proud and think you shall know me

My soul is slower, in a life I roll 639

The minute out whereto you condense yours —

The whole slow circle round you I must move,

To be just you I look to a long life

To decompose this minute, prove its worth.

'Tis the sparks' long succession one by one

Shall show you, in the end, what fire was crammed 645

In that mere stone you struck, how could you
know,

If it lay ever unproved in your sight,

As now my heart lies? Your own warmth would hide

Its coldness, were it cold.

Con. But how prove, how?

Nor. Prove in my life, you ask?

Con. Quick, Norbert — how? 650

Nor. That's easy told. I count life just a
stuff

To try the soul's strength on, educe the man.

Who keeps one end in view makes all things
serve

As with the body — he who hurls a lance

Or heaps up stone on stone, shows strength alike; 655

So must I seize and task all means to prove

And show this soul of mine, you crown as
yours,

And justify us both.

Con. Could you write books,
Paint pictures! One sits down in poverty 659
And writes or paints, with pity for the rich

Nor. And loves one's painting and one's writing, then,
And not one's mistress! All is best, believe,
And we best as no other than we are.
We live, and they experiment on life — 664
Those poets, painters, all who stand aloof
To overlook the farther. Let us be The thing they look at! I might take your
face

And write of it and paint it — to what end?
For whom? What pale dictatress in the air 669
Feeds, smiling sadly, her fine ghost-like form
With earth's real blood and breath, the beau-teous life

She makes despised forever? You are mine,
Made for me, not for others in the world,
Nor yet for that which I should call my art,
The cold calm power to see how fair you
look. 675

I come to you; I leave you not, to write
Or paint You are, I am; let Rubens there Paint us!

Con. So, best!

Nor. I understand your soul;
You live, and rightly sympathize with life,
With action, power, success. This way is straight; 680
And time were short beside, to let me change
The craft my childhood learnt; my craft shall serve.

Men set me here to subjugate, enclose,
Manure their barren lives, and force thence
fruit 684

First for themselves, and afterward for me
In the due tithe; the task of some one soul,
Through ways of work appointed by the
world.

I am not bid create — men see no star
Transfiguring my brow to warrant that —
But find and bind and bring to bear their wills 690

So I began, tonight sees how I end.
What if it see, too, power's first outbreak here
Amid the warmth, surprise, and sympathy,
And instincts of the heart that teach the
head? 694

What if the people have discerned at length
The dawn of the next nature, novel brain
Whose will they venture in the place of theirs, Whose work, they trust, shall find them as novel ways

To untried heights which yet he only sees? 699
I felt it when you kissed me See this Queen,
This people — in our phrase this mass of
men —

See how the mass lies passive to my hand
Now that my hand is plastic, with you by

To make the muscles iron! Oh, an end 704
Shall crown this issue as this crowns the first!
My will be on the people! then, the strain,
The grappling of the potter with his clay,
The long uncertain struggle — the success
And consummation of the spirit-work, 709
Some vase shape to the curl of the god's lip,
While rounded fair for human sense to see
The Graces in a dance men recognize
With turbulent applause and laughs of heart!
So triumph ever shall renew itself;
Ever shall end in efforts higher yet, 715
Ever begin . . .

Con. I ever helping?

Nor. Thus!

(As he embraces her, the QUEEN enters.)

Con. Hist, madam! So have I performed
my part.

You see your gratitude's true decency,
Norbert? A little slow in seeing it!
Begin, to end the sooner! What's a kiss? 720

Nor. Constance?

Con. Why, must I teach it you again?
You want a witness to your dullness, sir?
What was I saying these ten minutes long?
Then I repeat—when some young handsome
man

Like you has acted out a part like yours, 725
Is pleased to fall in love with one beyond,
So very far beyond him, as he says—
So hopelessly in love that but to speak
Would prove him mad—he thinks judiciously,

And makes some insignificant good soul, 730
Like me, his friend, adviser, confidant,
And very stalking-horse to cover him
In following after what he dares not face—
When his end's gained (sir, do you understand?)—

When she, he dares not face, has loved him
first — 735

May I not say so, madam? — tops his hope,
And overpasses so his wildest dream,
With glad consent of all, and most of her
The confidant who brought the same about —
Why, in the moment when such joy explodes,
I do hold that the merest gentleman 741
Will not start rudely from the stalking-horse,
Dismiss it with a "There, enough of you!"
Forget it, show his back unmannerly;

But like a liberal heart will rather turn 745
And say, "A tingling time of hope was ours;
Betwixt the fears and falterings, we two lived
A chanceful time in waiting for the prize;
The confidant, the Constance, served not ill.
And though I shall forget her in good time, 750
Her use being answered now, as reason bids,
Nay as herself bids from her heart of hearts—
Still, she has rights, the first thanks go to her,

The first good praise goes to the prosperous tool,
And the first—which is the last—rewarding
kiss "

Nor. Constance, it is a dream—ah, see,
you smile!

Con. So, now his part being properly performed,

Madam, I turn to you and finish mine
As duly, I do justice in my turn.
Yes, madam, he has loved you—long and
well;

He could not hope to tell you so—'twas I
Who served to prove your soul accessible;
I led his thoughts on, drew them to their place
When they had wandered else into despair,
And kept love constant toward its natural aim

Enough, my part is played; you stoop half-
way

And meet us royally and spare our fears;
'Tis like yourself He thanks you, so do I.
Take him—with my full heart! my work is praised

By what comes of it Be you happy, both!
Yourself—the only one on earth who can—
Do all for him, much more than a mere heart
Which though warm is not useful in its warmth

As the silk vesture of a queen! fold that Around him gently, tenderly For him—
For him—he knows his own part!

Nor. Have you done?
I take the jest at last Should I speak now?
Was yours the wager, Constance, foolish child,
Or did you but accept it? Well—at least
You lose by it.

Con. Nay, madam, 'tis your turn!
Restrain him still from speech a little more,
And make him happier as more confident!

Pity him, madam; he is timid yet!
Mark, Norbert! Do not shrink now! Here
I yield

My whole right in you to the Queen, observe!
With her go put in practice the great schemes
You deem with, follow the career else closed—
Be all you cannot be except by her!

Behold her!—Madam, say for pity's sake
Anything—frankly say you love him! Else
He'll not believe it; there's more earnest in
His fear than you conceive—I know the man!

Nor. I know the woman somewhat, and confess

I thought she had jested better; she begins
To overcharge her part. I gravely wait
Your pleasure, madam; where is my reward?

Queen. Norbert, this wild girl—whom I recognize

Scarce more than you do, in her fancy-fit,
Eccentric speech, and variable mirth,

Not very wise perhaps and somewhat bold,
Yet suitable, the whole night's work being strange—

May still be right, I may do well to speak
And make authentic what appears a dream
To even myself. For, what she says is true, Yes, Norbert—what you spoke just now of
love,

Devotion, stirred no novel sense in me,
But justified a warmth felt long before
Yes, from the first—I loved you, I shall say Strange! but I do grow stronger, now 'tis
said.

Your courage helps mine; you did well to
speak

Tonight, the night that crowns your twelve-months' toil;

But still I had not waited to discern Your heart so long, believe me! From the first

The source of so much zeal was almost plain,
In absence even of your own words just now
Which hazarded the truth. 'Tis very strange,
But takes a happy ending—in your love
Which mine meets; be it so! as you choose
me,

So I choose you

Nor. And worthily you choose
I will not be unworthy your esteem,

No, madam I do love you, I will meet
Your nature, now I know it This was well

I see—you dare and you are justified;
But none had ventured such experiment,
Less versed than you in nobleness of heart,

Less confident of finding such in me
I joy that thus you test me ere you grant
The dearest, richest, beauteousest, and best

Of women to my arms, 'tis like yourself.
So—back again into my part's set words—
Devotion to the uttermost is yours,

But no, you cannot, madam, even you,
Create in me the love our Constance does
Or—something truer to the tragic phrase—

Not yon magnolia-bell superb with scent
Invites a certain insect—that's myself—
But the small eye-flower nearer to the ground

I take this lady.

Con. Stay—not hers, the trap—Stay, Norbert—that mistake were worst of
all!

He is too cunning, madam! It was I,
I, Norbert, who . . .

Nor. You, was it, Constance? Then,
But for the grace of this divinest hour

Which gives me you, I might not pardon here!
I am the Queen's, she only knows my brain,
She may experiment upon my heart

And I instruct her too by the result.
But you, Sweet, you who know me, who so
long

Have told my heartbeats over, held my life
In those white hands of yours—it is not
well!

Con. Tush! I have said it, did I not say it all? 850

The life, for her—the heartbeats, for her sake!

Nor. Enough! My cheek grows red, I think. Your test?

There's not the meanest woman in the world,
Not she I least could love in all the world,
Whom, did she love me, had love proved itself, 855

I dare insult as you insult me now.

Constance, I could say, if it must be said,
"Take back the soul you offer, I keep mine!"
But—"Take the soul still quivering on your
hand,

The soul so offered, which I cannot use, 860
And, please you, give it to some playful friend,
For—what's the trifle he requites me with?

I, tempt a woman, to amuse a man,
That two may mock her heart if it succumb?
No, fearing God and standing 'neath his
heaven, 865

I would not dare insult a woman so,
Were she the meanest woman in the world,
And he, I cared to please, ten emperors!

Con. Norbert!

Nor. I love once as I live but once. 869
What case is this to think or talk about?
I love you. Would it mend the case at all
If such a step as this killed love in me?

Your part were done; account to God for it!
But mine—could murdered love get up again,
And kneel to whom you please to designate,
And make you mirth? It is too horrible. 876
You did not know this, Constance? Now you
know

That body and soul have each one life, but
one;

And here's my love, here, living, at your feet

Con. See the Queen! Norbert—this one more last word— 880

If thus you have taken jest for earnest—thus Loved me in earnest . . .

Nor. Ah, no jest holds here!

Where is the laughter in which jests break up,
And what this horror that grows palpable? 884
Madam—why grasp you thus the balcony?
Have I done ill? Have I not spoken truth?
How could I other? Was it not your test,
To try me, what my love for Constance
meant?

Madam, your royal soul itself approves,
The first, that I should choose thus! so one takes 890

A beggar—asks him, what would buy his
child?

And then approves the expected laugh of scorn

Returned as something noble from the rags Speak, Constance, I'm the beggar! Ha, what's
this? 894

You two glare each at each like panthers now.
Constance, the world fades; only you stand
there!

You did not, in tonight's wild whirl of things,
Sell me—your soul of souls, for any price?
No—no—'tis easy to believe in you!

Was it your love's mad trial to o'erstep 900
Mine by this vain self-sacrifice? Well, still—Though I might curse, I love you I am love
And cannot change; love's self is at your feet!

[The Queen goes out.]

Con. Feel my heart; let it die against your
own!

Nor. Against my own. Explain not; let this be! 905

This is life's height

Con. Yours, yours, yours!

Nor. You and I—

Why care by what meanders we are here
I' the center of the labyrinth? Men have died Trying to find this place, which we have found.

Con. Found, found! 909

Nor. Sweet, never fear what she can do!
We are past harm now.

Con. On the breast of God

I thought of men—as if you were a man.
Tempting him with a crown!

Nor. This must end here,
It is too perfect.

Con. There's the music stopped. 914
What measured heavy tread? It is one blaze
About me and within me.

Nor. Oh, some death
Will run its sudden finger round this spark
And sever us from the rest!

Con. And so do well

Now the doors open—

Nor. 'Tis the guard comes

Con. Kiss!
(1853, 1855)

"TRANSCENDENTALISM: A POEM IN TWELVE BOOKS"

Stop playing, poet! May a brother speak?
'Tis you speak, that's your error. Song's our
art:

Whereas you please to speak these naked
thoughts

Instead of draping them in sights and sounds.

"Transcendentalism: A Poem in Twelve Books" This is addressed to an imaginary poet who is supposed to be writing a poem on transcendentalism, a system of speculative philosophy. Berdoo thinks that Browning intended the poem as an answer to the critics who had accused him of philosophizing instead of writing poetry.

— True thoughts, good thoughts, thoughts fit to treasure up! 5

But why such long proslution and display,
Such turning and adjustment of the harp,
And taking it upon your breast, at length,
Only to speak dry words across its strings?
Stark-naked thought is in request enough; 10
Speak prose and hollo it till Europe hears!
The six-foot Swiss tube, braced about with bark,
Which helps the hunter's voice from Alp to Alp —
Exchange our harp for that — who hinders
you? 2

But here's your fault; grown men want thought, you think, 15
Thought's what they mean by verse, and seek in verse,

Boys seek for images and melody,
Men must have reason — so, you aim at
men

Quite otherwise! Objects throng our youth,
'tis true;

We see and hear and do not wonder much: 20
If you could tell us what they mean, indeed!
As German Boehme never cared for plants
Until it happened, a-walking in the fields,
He noticed all at once that plants could speak,
Nay, turned with loosened tongue to talk with him. 25

That day the daisy had an eye indeed —
Colloquized with the cowslip on such themes!
We find them extant yet in Jacob's prose.
But by the time youth slips a stage or two While reading prose in that tough book he wrote 30

(Collating and emendating the same
And settling on the sense most to our mind),
We shut the clasps and find life's summer
past.

Then, who helps more, pray, to repair our loss —

Another Boehme with a tougher book 35
And subtler meanings of what roses say —
Or some stout Mage like him of Halberstadt, John, who made things Boehme wrote thoughts about?

He with a "look you!" vents a brace of rimes,
And in there breaks the sudden rose herself,
Over us, under, round us every side, 41
Nay, in and out the tables and the chairs
And musty volumes, Boehme's book and all —

12 The six-foot Swiss tube, a kind of wooden trumpet used by Alpine hunters 22 Boehme, Jacob Boehme (1575-1624), a German mystical writer who professed to know all mysteries through actual observation of them. He declared that he was able to see into the being of God and into the heart of things 37 him of Halberstadt, John of Halberstadt, a German magician and astrologer who is said to have made flowers bloom in winter by magic Cf Chaucer's Franklin's Tale for a story of a similar feat

Buries us with a glory, young once more,
Pouring heaven into this shut house of life. 45

So come, the harp back to your heart again!
You are a poem, though your poem's naught
The best of all you showed before, believe,
Was your own boy-face o'er the finer chords
Bent, following the cherub at the top 50
That points to God with his paired half-moon wings.

(1855)

HOW IT STRIKES A CONTEMPORARY

I only knew one poet in my life;
And this, or something like it, was his way.

You saw go up and down Valladolid,
A man of mark, to know next time you saw.
His very serviceable suit of black 5
Was courtly once and conscientious still,
And many might have worn it, though none
did,

The cloak, that somewhat shone and showed the threads,

Had purpose, and the ruff, significance.
He walked and tapped the pavement with his cane, 10

Scenting the world, looking it full in face,
An old dog, bald and blundish, at his heels.
They turned up, now, the alley by the church,
That leads nowhither; now, they breathed
themselves

On the main promenade just at the wrong
time. 15

You'd come upon his scrutinizing hat,
Making a peaked shade blacker than itself
Against the single window spared some house
Intact yet with its moldered Moorish work —

Or else surprise the ferrel of his stick 20
Trying the mortar's temper 'tween the chinks
Of some new shop a-building, French and fine
He stood and watched the cobbler at his trade,
The man who slices lemons into drink,
The coffee-roaster's brazier, and the boys 25
That volunteer to help him turn its winch.

He glanced o'er books on stalls with half an
eye,

And fly-leaf ballads on the vender's string,
And broad-edge bold-print posters by the wall
He took such cognizance of men and things,
If any beat a horse, you felt he saw, 31

How It Strikes a Contemporary This poem, spoken by a Spanish gentleman from the city of Valladolid, in northern Spain, suggests that the function of the poet is "scenting the world, looking it full in face" (line 11)

7. many might . . . none did, that is, it was out of style 11-32. Scenting . . . note These lines are said to reflect Browning's own habits 28 fly-leaf ballads, flying ballads, or broadsides—i.e., ballads printed on one side of large sheets of paper

If any cursed a woman, he took note;
Yet stared at nobody — you stared at him,
And found, less to your pleasure than surprise,

He seemed to know you and expect as much.
So, next time that a neighbor's tongue was loosed, 36

It marked the shameful and notorious fact,
We had among us, not so much a spy,
As a recording chief-inquisitor,
The town's true master if the town but knew!
We merely kept a governor for form, 41
While this man walked about and took account

Of all thought, said, and acted, then went home,

And wrote it fully to our Lord the King,
Who has an itch to know things, he knows
why, 45

And reads them in his bedroom of a night.
Oh, you might smile! there wanted not a
touch,

A tang of . . . well, it was not wholly ease
As back into your mind the man's look came.
Stricken in years a little — such a brow 50
His eyes had to live under! — clear as flint
On either side the formidable nose
Curved, cut, and colored like an eagle's claw.
Had he to do with A's surprising fate?

When altogether old B disappeared 55
And young C got his mistress — was't our
friend,

His letter to the King, that did it all?
What paid the bloodless man for so much
pains?

Our Lord the King has favorites manifold,
And shifts his ministry some once a month; 60
Our city gets new governors at whiles —
But never word or sign, that I could hear,
Notified to this man about the streets
The King's approval of those letters conned
The last thing duly at the dead of night 65
Did the man love his office? Frowned our Lord,

Exhorting, when none heard — "Beseech me
not!

Too far above my people — beneath me!
I set the watch — how should the people
know? 69

Forget them, keep me all the more in
mind!"

Was some such understanding 'twixt the two?

I found no truth in one report at least —
That if you tracked him to his home, down lanes

Beyond the Jewry, and as clean to pace,
You found he ate his supper in a room 75

Blazing with lights, four Titians on the wall,
And twenty naked girls to change his plate!
Poor man, he lived another kind of life
In that new stuccoed third house by the bridge,

Fresh-painted, rather smart than otherwise!
The whole street might o'erlook him as he
sat, 81

Leg crossing leg, one foot on the dog's back,
Playing a decent cribbage with his maid (Jacynth, you're sure her name was) o'er the cheese

And fruit, three red halves of starved winter-pears, 85

Or treat of radishes in April. Nine, Ten, struck the church clock; straight to bed went he.

My father, like the man of sense he was,
Would point him out to me a dozen times;
" 'St — 'St," he'd whisper, "the Corregidor!"
I had been used to think that personage 91
Was one with lacquered breeches, lustrous belt,

And feathers like a forest in his hat,
Who blew a trumpet and proclaimed the
news,

Announced the bull-fights, gave each church
its turn, 95

And memorized the miracle in vogue!
He had a great observance from us boys;
We were in error; that was not the man.

I'd like now, yet had haply been afraid,
To have just looked, when this man came to
die, 100

And seen who lined the clean gay garret-sides
And stood about the neat low truckle-bed,
With the heavenly manner of relieving guard.
Here had been, mark, the general-in-chief,
Through a whole campaign of the world's life and death, 105

Doing the King's work all the dim day long,
In his old coat and up to knees in mud,
Smoked like a herring, dining on a crust —
And, now the day was won, relieved at once!
No further show or need for that old coat, 110
You are sure, for one thing! Bless us, all the while

How sprucely we are dressed out, you and I!
A second, and the angels alter that.

Well, I could never write a verse — could you?
Let's to the Prado and make the most of
time. 115

(1855)

76 Titians, paintings by Titian (1477-1575), a noted Italian painter. 90 the Corregidor, the title of the chief magistrate of the city. 115 the Prado, the name of the fashionable promenade of Madrid, copied by other Spanish cities.

AN EPISTLE

CONTAINING THE STRANGE MEDICAL EXPERIENCE OF KARSHISH, THE ARAB PHYSICIAN

Karshish, the picker-up of learning's crumbs,
The not-incurious in God's handiwork—
This man's-flesh He hath admirably made,
Blown like a bubble, kneaded like a paste,
To coop up and keep down on earth a space
That puff of vapor from His mouth, man's
soul —

To Abib, all-sagacious in our art,
Breeder in me of what poor skill I boast,
Like me inquisitive how pricks and cracks Befall the flesh through too much stress and
strain, 10

Whereby the wily vapor fain would slip
Back and rejoin its source before the term —
And aptest in contrivance (under God)
To baffle it by deftly stopping such —
The vagrant Scholar to his Sage at home 15 Sends greeting (health and knowledge, fame with peace)

Three samples of true snake-stone — rarer
still,

One of the other sort, the melon-shaped (But fitter, pounded fine, for charms than drugs),

And writeth now the twenty-second time 20

My journeyings were brought to Jericho;
Thus I resume. Who studious in our art
Shall count a little labor unrepaid?

I have shed sweat enough, left flesh and bone
On many a flinty furlong of this land. 25

Also, the country-side is all on fire
With rumors of a marching hitherward,
Some say Vespasian cometh, some, his son
A black lynx snarled and pricked a tufted ear;
Lust of my blood inflamed his yellow balls; 30
I cried and threw my staff and he was gone
Twice have the robbers stupped and beaten
me,

And once a town declared me for a spy;
But at the end, I reach Jerusalem, 34
Since this poor covert where I pass the night,
This Bethany, lies scarce the distance thence
A man with plague-sores at the third degree Runs till he drops down dead. Thou laughest
here!

'Sooth, it elates me, thus reposed and safe,
'To void the stuffing of my travel-scrip 40

An Epistle. This poem is based upon the account of Christ's raising of Lazarus from the dead told in John, 11 1-44. Cf. Tennyson's In Memoriam, 31-32, page 63. The epistle is written from Bethany in Judea by a wandering scholar-physician to the sage Abib, his master in the science of medicine. Both Karshish and Abib are imaginary.
17 snake-stone, a stone used as a charm to cure snake bites. 21 Jericho, an important city of ancient Palestine. Karshish's last letter covered his travels as far as Jericho. 28 Vespasian (9-79 A.D.) He led a campaign against the Jews in 67. His son Titus destroyed Jerusalem in 70.

And share with thee whatever Jewry yields
A viscid choler is observable

In tertians, I was nearly bold to say,
And falling-sickness hath a happier cure
Than our school wots of, there's a spider
here 45

Weaves no web, watches on the ledge of
tombs,

Sprinkled with mottles on an ash-gray back,
Take five and drop them . . . but who knows
his mind,

The Syrian runagate I trust this to?
His service payeth me a sublimate 50

Blown up his nose to help the ailing eye.
Best wait, I reach Jerusalem at morn,
There set in order my experiences,
Gather what most deserves, and give thee
all —

Or I might add, Judæa's gum-tragacanth 55
Scales off in purer flakes, shines clearer-grained,

Cracks 'twixt the pestle and the porphyry —
In fine, exceeds our produce. Scalp-disease
Confounds me, crossing so with leprosy —
Thou hadst admired one sort I gained at Zoar — 60

But zeal outruns discretion. Here I end

Yet stay, my Syrian blinketh gratefully,
Protesteth his devotion is my price —
Suppose I write what harms not, though he steal?

I half resolve to tell thee, yet I blush, 65
What set me off a-writing first of all.

An itch I had, a sting to write, a tang!
For, be it this town's barrenness — or else —
The Man had something in the look of him —
His case has struck me far more than 'tis
worth 70

So, pardon if — lest presently I lose
In the great press of novelty at hand
The care and pains this somehow stole from
me —

I bid thee take the thing while fresh in mind,
Almost in sight — for, wilt thou have the
truth? 75

The very man is gone from me but now,
Whose ailment is the subject of discourse.
Thus then, and let thy better wit help all!

'Tis but a case of mania — subinduced
By epilepsy, at the turning-point 80

43 tertians, persons afflicted with intermittent fever.
44 falling-sickness, epilepsy. This disease was ascribed by Karshish to Lazarus, who exemplified the "happier cure."
45 a spider, probably the Zebra spider. The use of spiders in medicine is an old practice. 48 his mind, the mind of the messenger who is to carry the letter. 50 a sublimate, some kind of medicine. 55 gum-tragacanth, a kind of gum used in medicine. 57 the porphyry, a kind of stone used for pulverizing drugs. 60 Zoar, a city southeast of the Dead Sea. It is mentioned in Genesis, 13 10 and in Deuteronomy, 34 3. 69 The Man, Lazarus.

Of trance prolonged unduly some three days,
When, by the exhibition of some drug
Or spell, exorcization, stroke of art Unknown to me and which 'twere well to
know,

The evil thing out-breaking all at once 85
Left the man whole and sound of body indeed —

But, flinging (so to speak) life's gates too wide,
Making a clear house of it too suddenly,
The first conceit that entered might inscribe
Whatever it was minded on the wall 90
So plainly at that vantage, as it were,
(First come, first served) that nothing subsequent

Attaineth to erase those fancy-scrawls
The just-returned and new-established soul
Hath gotten now so thoroughly by heart 95
That henceforth she will read or these or none
And first — the man's own firm conviction rests

That he was dead (in fact they buried him)
— That he was dead and then restored to life
By a Nazarene physician of his tribe: 100
— 'Sayeth, the same bade "Rise," and he did
rise.

"Such cases are diurnal," thou wilt cry
Not so this figment! — not, that such a fume,
Instead of giving way to time and health,
Should eat itself into the life of life, 105
As saffron tingeth flesh, blood, bones and all!
For see, how he takes up the after-life.

The man — it is one Lazarus, a Jew,
Sanguine, proportioned, fifty years of age,
The body's habit wholly laudable, 110
As much, indeed, beyond the common health
As he were made and put aside to show.

Think, could we penetrate by any drug
And bathe the wearied soul and worried flesh,
And bring it clear and fair, by three days'
sleep! 115

Whence has the man the balm that brightens
all?

This grown man eyes the world now like a
child.

Some elders of his tribe, I should premise,
Led in their friend, obedient as a sheep,
To bear my inquisition. While they spoke,
Now sharply, now with sorrow — told the case — 121

He listened not except I spoke to him,
But folded his two hands and let them talk,
Watching the flies that buzzed: and yet no fool.

And that's a sample how his years must go
Look, if a beggar, in fixed middle-life, 126

Should find a treasure — can he use the same
With straitened habits and with tastes starved
small,

And take at once to his impoverished brain
The sudden element that changes things, 130
That sets the undreamed-of rapture at his
hand

And puts the cheap old joy in the scorned dust?

Is he not such an one as moves to mirth —
Warily parsimonious, when no need,
Wasteful as drunkenness at undue times? 135
All prudent counsel as to what befits
The golden mean, is lost on such an one;
The man's fantastic will is the man's law.

So here — we call the treasure knowledge, say,
Increased beyond the fleshly faculty — 140
Heaven opened to a soul while yet on earth,
Earth forced on a soul's use while seeing
heaven;

The man is witless of the size, the sum,
The value in proportion of all things,
Or whether it be little or be much. 145

Discourse to him of prodigious armaments
Assembled to besiege his city now,
And of the passing of a mule with gourds —
'Tis one! Then take it on the other side,
Speak of some trifling fact — he will gaze rapt
With stupor at its very littleness 151
(Far as I see), as if in that indeed

He caught prodigious import, whole results;
And so will turn to us the bystanders
In ever the same stupor (note this point) 155
That we too see not with his opened eyes
Wonder and doubt come wrongly into play,
Preposterously, at cross purposes.

Should his child sicken unto death — why,
look

For scarce abatement of his cheerfulness, 160
Or pretermission of the daily craft!
While a word, gesture, glance from that same
child

At play or in the school or laid asleep
Will startle him to an agony of fear,
Exasperation, just as like. Demand 165
The reason why — "'Tis but a word," object —

"A gesture" — he regards thee as our lord
Who lived there in the pyramid alone,
Looked at us (dost thou mind?) when, being young,

We both would unadvisedly recite 170
Some charm's beginning, from that book of
his,

Able to bid the sun throb wide and burst
All into stars, as suns grown old are wont.
Thou and the child have each a veil alike

82 exhibition, the act of administering a remedy 83 exorcization, the act of expelling an evil spirit by the use of a holy name 102. diurnal, daily 103 such a fume, such a vaporish fancy. 113 could we, if only we could 161 pretermission, omission, interruption 167. our lord, some sage under whom they had studied Cf line 254,

page 260.

Thrown o'er your heads, from under which ye
both 175
Stretch your blind hands and trifle with a match

Over a mine of Greek fire, did ye know!
He holds on firmly to some thread of life
(It is the life to lead perforce)
Which runs across some vast distracting orb
Of glory on either side that meager thread, 181
Which, conscious of, he must not enter yet —
The spiritual life around the earthly life.
The law of that is known to him as this,
His heart and brain move there, his feet stay
here. 185

So is the man perplexed with impulses
Sudden to start off crosswise, not straight on,
Proclaiming what is right and wrong across,
And not along, this black thread through the blaze —

"It should be" balked by "here it cannot be"
And oft the man's soul springs into his face 191
As if he saw again and heard again
His sage that bade him "Rise" and he did
rise

Something, a word, a tick o' the blood within Admonishes, then back he sinks at once 195
To ashes, who was very fire before,
In sedulous recurrence to his trade
Whereby he earneth him the daily bread,
And studiously the humbler for that pride,
Professedly the faultier that he knows 200
God's secret, while he holds the thread of life
Indeed the especial marking of the man
Is prone submission to the heavenly will — Seeing it, what it is, and why it is
'Sayeth, he will wait patient to the last 205
For that same death which must restore his being

To equilibrium, body loosening soul
Divorced even now by premature full growth,
He will live, nay, it pleaseth him to live
So long as God please, and just how God
please. 210

He even seeketh not to please God more (Which meaneth, otherwise) than as God
please.

Hence, I perceive not he affects to preach
The doctrine of his sect whate'er it be,
Make proselytes as madmen thirst to do; 215
How can he give his neighbor the real ground,
His own conviction? Ardent as he is —
Call his great truth a lie, why, still the old
"Be it as God please" reassureth him
I probed the sore as thy disciple should. 220
"How, beast," said I, "this stolid carelessness
Sufficeth thee, when Rome is on her march

To stamp out like a little spark thy town,
Thy tribe, thy crazy tale, and thee at once?"
He merely looked with his large eyes on me
The man is apathetic, you deduce? 226
Contrariwise, he loves both old and young,
Able and weak, affects the very brutes
And birds — how say I? flowers of the field —
As a wise workman recognizes tools 230
In a master's workshop, loving what they make.

Thus is the man as harmless as a lamb;
Only impatient, let him do his best,
At ignorance and carelessness and sin —
An indignation which is promptly curbed: 235
As when in certain travel I have feigned
To be an ignoramus in our art
According to some preconceived design,
And happened to hear the land's practitioners,
Steeped in conceit sublimed by ignorance, 240
Prattle fantastically on disease,
Its cause and cure — and I must hold my
peace!

Thou wilt object — Why have I not ere this Sought out the sage himself, the Nazarene Who wrought this cure, inquiring at the source, 215

Conferring with the frankness that befits?
Alas! it grieveth me, the learned leech
Perished in a tumult many years ago,
Accused — our learning's fate — of wizardry,
Rebellion, to the setting up a rule 250
And creed prodigious as described to me
His death, which happened when the earthquake fell

(Prefiguring, as soon appeared, the loss
To occult learning in our lord the sage
Who lived there in the pyramid alone), 255
Was wrought by the mad people — that's their wont!

On vain recourse, as I conjecture it,
To his tried virtue, for miraculous help —
How could he stop the earthquake? That's their way!

The other imputations must be lies; 260
But take one, though I loathe to give it thee,
In mere respect for any good man's fame.
(And after all, our patient Lazarus Is stark mad, should we count on what he says?

Perhaps not; though in writing to a leech 265
'Tis well to keep back nothing of a case)
This man so cured regards the curer, then,
As — God forgive me! who but God himself,
Creator and sustainer of the world,

177 Greek fire, some highly inflammable substance, supposed to contain sulphur, niter, and naphtha. Since it was first used in 673 A.D. in the siege of Constantinople by the Saracens, the reference here is an anachronism.

252 the earthquake The record of the earthquake at the time of the Crucifixion is found in Matthew, 27:51 — "And behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent."

That came and dwelt in flesh on it awhile! 270
 — 'Sayeth that such an one was born and lived,
 Taught, healed the sick, broke bread at his own house,
 Then died, with Lazarus by, for aught I know,
 And yet was . . . what I said nor choose repeat,
 And must have so avouched himself, in fact,
 In hearing of this very Lazarus, 276
 Who saith — but why all this of what he saith?
 Why write of trivial matters, things of price
 Calling at every moment for remark?
 I noticed on the margin of a pool 280
 Blue-flowering borage, the Aleppo sort,
 Aboundeth, very nitrous It is strange!

Thy pardon for this long and tedious case,
 Which, now that I review it, needs must seem Unduly dwelt on, prolixly set forth! 285
 Nor I myself discern in what is writ
 Good cause for the peculiar interest
 And awe indeed this man has touched me
 with.

Perhaps the journey's end, the weariness
 Had wrought upon me first. I met him thus:
 I crossed a ridge of short sharp broken hills 291
 Like an old lion's cheek teeth. Out there
 came

A moon made like a face with certain spots
 Multiform, manifold, and menacing;
 Then a wind rose behind me. So we met 295
 In this old sleepy town at unaware,
 The man and I. I send thee what is writ.
 Regard it as a chance, a matter risked
 To this ambiguous Syrian — he may lose,
 Or steal, or give it thee with equal good. 300
 Jerusalem's repose shall make amends
 For time this letter wastes, thy time and
 mine,
 Till when, once more thy pardon and fare-
 well!

The very God! think, Abib; dost thou
 think? 304
 So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving too —
 So, through the thunder comes a human voice Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here!
 Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself!
 Thou hast no power nor mayst conceive of
 mine,

But love I gave thee, with myself to love, 310
 And thou must love me who have died for
 thee!"

The madman saith He said so, it is strange

FRA LIPPO LIPPI

I am poor brother Lippo, by your leave!
 You need not clap your torches to my face.
 Zooks, what's to blame? you think you see a monk!

What, 'tis past midnight, and you go the rounds,

And here you catch me at an alley's end 5
 Where sportive ladies leave their doors ajar?
 The Carmine's my cloister, hunt it up.

Do — harry out, if you must show your zeal,
 Whatever rat, there, haps, on his wrong hole,
 And nip each softling of a wee white mouse,
Weke, weke, that's crept to keep him company! 11

Aha, you know your betters! Then, you'll
 take

Your hand away that's fiddling on my throat,
 And please to know me likewise. Who am I?
 Why, one, sir, who is lodging with a friend 15
 Three streets off — he's a certain . . . how d' ye call?

Master — a . . . Cosimo of the Medici,
 I' the house that caps the corner. Boh! you were best!

Remember and tell me, the day you're hanged,
 How you affected such a gullet's-gripe! 20

But you, sir, it concerns you that your knaves
 Pick up a manner nor discredit you;
 Zooks, are we pilchards, that they sweep the streets

And count fair prize what comes into their net?

He's Judas to a tittle, that man is! 25
 Just such a face! Why, sir, you make amends.
 Lord, I'm not angry! Bid your handogs go
 Drink out this quarter-florin to the health
 Of the munificent House that harbors me
 (And many more beside, lads! more beside!)
 And all's come square again. I'd like his
 face — 31

His, elbowing on his comrade in the door
 With the pike and lantern—for the slave that holds

John Baptist's head a-dangle by the hair
 With one hand ("Look you, now," as who should say) 35

Fra Lippo Lippi Fra Lippo Lippi (1406-69) was a famous Florentine painter of the 15th century. The account upon which Browning based his interpretation of Lippo's life and art was found in Vasari's Lives of the Painters. The poem is addressed to Florentine guards who have caught Lippo in a nocturnal frolic. See Critical Notes

3 Zooks, an oath shortened from Gadzooks. 7. The Carmine's. Lippo entered the monastery of the Carmelite friars of the Carmine in Florence in 1420. 17 Cosimo of the Medici Cosimo de' Medici (1389-1464) was a rich Florentine banker, statesman, and patron of art and literature. The Medici palace, now known as the Palazzo Riccardi, is on the corner of Via Cavours and Via Gori. See The Statue and the Bust, page 239. 23 pilchards, a kind of cheap common fish. 33-34 the slave . . . hair, an imaginary picture. In Lippo's real picture of the beheading of John the Baptist, the head is carried on a great platter by Salome, the daughter of Herodias. The account is found in Matthew, 14 1-11.

And his weapon in the other, yet unwiped!
It's not your chance to have a bit of chalk,
A wood-coal or the like? or you should see!
Yes, I'm the painter, since you style me so.
What, brother Lippo's doings, up and down,
You know them and they take you? like
enough! 41

I saw the proper twinkle in your eye —
'Tell you, I liked your looks at very first Let's sit and set things straight now, hip to haunch.

Here's spring come, and the nights one makes up bands 45

To roam the town and sing out carnival,
And I've been three weeks shut within my mew,

A-painting for the great man, saints and saints
And saints again. I could not paint all night —
Ouf! I leaned out of window for fresh air 50
There came a hurry of feet and little feet,
A sweep of lute-strings, laughs, and whiffs of
song —

*Flower o' the broom,
Take away love, and our earth is a tomb!*

Flower o' the quince, 55
I let Lisa go, and what good in life since?

Flower o' the thyme — and so on Round they went

Scarce had they turned the corner when a titter

Like the skipping of rabbits by moonlight —
three slim shapes,

And a face that looked up . . . zooks, sir,
flesh and blood, 60

That's all I'm made of! Into shreds it went,
Curtain and counterpane and coverlet,
All the bed-furniture — a dozen knots,
There was a ladder! Down I let myself,
Hands and feet, scrambling somehow, and so dropped, 65

And after them. I came up with the fun Hard by Saint Laurence, hail fellow, well
met —

*Flower o' the rose,
If I've been merry, what matter who knows?*

And so as I was stealing back again 70
To get to bed and have a bit of sleep
Ere I rise up tomorrow and go work
On Jerome knocking at his poor old breast
With his great round stone to subdue the flesh,

46 carnival, a period of gayety preceding Lent 47 mew, coop, pen (Lippo had been engaged to paint pictures in the palace and had been locked in a room until the work should be done) 52 song. The song that follows is a stornello, a kind of short folk song of the Italians usually improvised on the name of a flower or some other familiar object. 67 Saint Laurence, the Church of San Lorenzo 73 Jerome . . . breast. Saint Jerome (340?-420) was the most learned of the early Fathers of the Latin Church. He lived in the desert for several years as a penance for his youthful sins. Early Christian art depicted him on his knees before a crucifix, beating his breast with a stone.

You snap me of the sudden Ah, I see! 75
Though your eye twinkles still, you shake your head —

Mine's shaved — a monk, you say — the sting's in that!

If Master Cosimo announced himself,
Mum's the word naturally, but a monk!
Come, what am I a beast for? tell us, now! 80
I was a baby when my mother died
And father died and left me in the street
I starved there, God knows how, a year or two

On fig-skins, melon-parings, rinds and shucks,
Refuse and rubbish One fine frosty day, 85
My stomach being empty as your hat,
The wind doubled me up and down I went
Old Aunt Lapaccia trussed me with one hand
(Its fellow was a stinger as I knew),
And so along the wall, over the bridge, 90
By the straight cut to the convent Six words
there,

While I stood munching my first bread that month

"So, boy, you're minded," quoth the good fat
father,

Wiping his own mouth — 'twas reflection-
time —

"To quit this very miserable world? 95
Will you renounce" "the mouthful of bread?" thought I,

By no means! Brief, they made a monk of
me,

I did renounce the world, its pride and greed,
Palace, farm, villa, shop, and banking-house,
Trash, such as these poor devils of Medici
Have given their hearts to — all at eight years
old 101

Well, sir, I found in time, you may be sure,
'Twas not for nothing — the good bellyful,
The warm serge and the rope that goes all
round,

And day-long blessed idleness beside! 105
"Let's see what the urchin's fit for" — that came next.

Not overmuch their way, I must confess
Such a to-do! They tried me with their books, Lord, they'd have taught me Latin in pure waste! 110

Flower o' the clove,
All the Lahn I construe is "amo," I love!
But, mind you, when a boy starves in the streets

Eight years together, as my fortune was,
Watching folk's faces to know who will fling
The bit of half-stripped grape-bunch he desires, 115
And who will curse or kick him for his pains —

88 Aunt Lapaccia Mona Lapaccia, his father's sister trussed, held firmly.

Which gentleman processional and fine,
Holding a candle to the Sacrament,
Will wink and let him lift a plate and catch
The droppings of the wax to sell again, 120
Or holla for the Eight and have him whipped — How say I? — nay, which dog bites, which lets drop

His bone from the heap of offal in the street —
Why, soul and sense of him grow sharp alike,
He learns the look of things, and none the less
For admonition from the hunger-pinch. 126

I had a store of such remarks, be sure,
Which, after I found leisure, turned to use.
I drew men's faces on my copy-books,
Scrawled them within the antiphony's
marge, 130

Joined legs and arms to the long music-notes,
Found eyes and nose and chin for A's and B's,
And made a string of pictures of the world
Betwixt the ins and outs of verb and noun,
On the wall, the bench, the door. The monks looked black 135

"Nay," quoth the Prior, "turn him out, d'ye
say?"

In no wise Lose a crow and catch a lark
What if at last we get our man of parts,
We Carmelites, like those Camaldolese
And Preaching Friars, to do our church up fine 140

And put the front on it that ought to be!"
And hereupon he bade me daub away.
Thank you! my head being crammed, the walls a blank,

Never was such prompt disburdening.
First, every sort of monk, the black and white,
I drew them, fat and lean; then, folk at
church, 146

From good old gossips waiting to confess
Their cribs of barrel-droppings, candle-ends —
To the breathless fellow at the altar-foot,
Fresh from his murder, safe and sitting there
With the little children round him in a row 151
Of admiration, half for his beard and half
For that white anger of his victim's son
Shaking a fist at him with one fierce arm,
Signing himself with the other because of
Christ 155

117 gentleman processional, etc., gentlemen wearing fine ecclesiastical robes and walking in the religious procession. 121 the Eight, the magistrates who governed Florence. 130 the antiphony's marge, the margins of the books used by the choir. 131. the long music-notes. The medieval music notes were square or oblong, with long stems. 139-140 Carmelites, Camaldolese, Preaching Friars. The Carmelites were monks of the Order of Mount Carmel in Syria, the Camaldolese belonged to the convent of Camaldoli, near Florence, the Preaching Friars are the Dominicans, named after St. Dominic. They were called Brothers Preachers by Pope Innocent III in 1215. These orders owned various monasteries and churches and wanted to possess the greatest religious paintings. 148 Their cribs, etc., small thefts of wine, wax, etc. 150 safe, because he was in a sacred place, which, by the law of the medieval church protected him from arrest. 154-155 Shaking . . . Christ. Revenge and religion are at war in him.

(Whose sad face on the cross sees only this After the passion of a thousand years),
Till some poor girl, her apron o'er her head
(Which the intense eyes looked through), came at eve

On tiptoe, said a word, dropped in a loaf, 160
Her pair of earrings and a bunch of flowers
(The brute took growling), prayed, and so was gone.

I painted all, then cried, "'Tis ask and have;
Choose, for more's ready!" — laid the ladder flat, 164

And showed my covered bit of cloister-wall
The monks closed in a circle and praised loud Till checked, taught what to see and not to
see,

Being simple bodies — "That's the very man!
Look at the boy who stoops to pat the dog!
That woman's like the Prior's niece who comes
To care about his asthma, it's the life!" 171
But there my triumph's straw-fire flared and funked;

Their betters took their turn to see and say;
The Prior and the learned pulled a face
And stopped all that in no time "How?
what's here?" 175

Quite from the mark of painting, bless us all!
Faces, arms, legs, and bodies like the true
As much as pea and pea! It's devil's-game!
Your business is not to catch men with show,
With homage to the perishable clay, 180
But lift them over it, ignore it all,
Make them forget there's such a thing as flesh.
Your business is to paint the souls of men —
Man's soul, and it's a fire, smoke . . . no, it's not . . .

It's vapor done up like a new-born babe 185
(In that shape when you die it leaves your mouth) —

It's . . . well, what matters talking, it's the
soul!

Give us no more of body than shows soul!
Here's Giotto, with his Saint a-praising God,
That sets us praising — why not stop with
him? 190

Why put all thoughts of praise out of our head
With wonder at lines, colors, and what not?
Paint the soul, never mind the legs and arms!
Rub all out, try at it a second time

Oh, that white smallish female with the breasts, 195

She's just my niece . . . Herodias, I would
say —

Who went and danced and got men's heads cut off!

157 passion, suffering. 189 Giotto, Giotto di Bondone (1276-1337), a famous Florentine painter, architect, and sculptor. See note on line 15, page 224. He expressed the soul in his paintings and cared nothing for realistic art. Lippo and Gudi (line 276) introduced realism, which Lippo here defends. 196. Herodias. See note on lines 33-34, p. 261.

Have it all out!" Now, is this sense, I ask?
A fine way to paint soul, by painting body
So ill the eye can't stop there, must go further And can't fare worse! Thus, yellow does for
white 201

When what you put for yellow's simply black,
And any sort of meaning looks intense
When all beside itself means and looks naught.
Why can't a painter lift each foot in turn, 205
Left foot and right foot, go a double step,
Make his flesh liker and his soul more like,
Both in their order? Take the prettiest face,
The Prior's niece . . . patron-saint — is it so pretty

You can't discover if it means hope, fear, 210
Sorrow or joy? won't beauty go with these?
Suppose I've made her eyes all right and blue,
Can't I take breath and try to add life's flash,
And then add soul and heighten them threefold?

Or say there's beauty with no soul at all 215
(I never saw it — put the case the same);
If you get simple beauty and naught else,
You get about the best thing God invents—
That's somewhat; and you'll find the soul you have missed,

Within yourself, when you return him thanks.
"Rub all out!" Well, well, there's my life, in short, 221

And so the thing has gone on ever since I'm grown a man no doubt, I've broken bounds,

You should not take a fellow eight years old
And make him swear to never kiss the girls. 225
I'm my own master, paint now as I please —
Having a friend, you see, in the Corner-house!
Lord, it's fast holding by the rings in front —
Those great rings serve more purposes than just

To plant a flag in, or tie up a horse! 230
And yet the old schooling sticks, the old grave
eyes

Are peeping o'er my shoulder as I work,
The heads shake still — "It's art's decline,
my son!"

You're not of the true painters, great and old,
Brother Angelico's the man, you'll find, 235
Brother Lorenzo stands his single peer —
Fag on at flesh, you'll never make the third!"
Flower o' the pine,

You keep your mistr . . . manners, and I'll stick to mine!

I'm not the third, then, bless us, they must
know! 240

228 the rings in front, big iron rings on the front of the palace. Lippi used them in climbing in and out of his window 235 Brother Angelico, Fra Angelico, Giovanni da Fiesole (1387-1455), the greatest of the medieval school of religious artists who "painted souls" 236 Brother Lorenzo, Lorenzo Monaco, a painter of the Order of the Camaldolese, who also "painted souls"

Don't you think they're the likeliest to know,
They with their Latin? So, I swallow my rage,

Clench my teeth, suck my lips in tight, and paint

To please them — sometimes do and sometimes don't;

For, doing most, there's pretty sure to come
A turn, some warm eve finds me at my saints — 246

A laugh, a cry, the business of the world (Flower o' the peach,

Death for us all, and his own life for each!) —
And my whole soul revolves, the cup runs
over, 250

The world and life's too big to pass for a
dream,

And I do these wild things in sheer despite,
And play the fooleries you catch me at,
In pure rage! The old mill-horse, out at grass
After hard years, throws up his stiff heels so,
Although the miller does not preach to him 256
The only good of grass is to make chaff.

What would men have? Do they like grass or no —

May they or mayn't they? All I want's the
thing

Settled forever one way. As it is, 260
You tell too many lies and hurt yourself,

You don't like what you only like too much,
You do like what, if given you at your word,
You find abundantly detestable

For me, I think I speak as I was taught, 265
I always see the garden and God there

A-making man's wife, and, my lesson learned—
The value and significance of flesh —
I can't unlearn ten minutes afterwards

You understand me; I'm a beast, I know
But see, now — why, I see as certainly 271

As that the morning-star's about to shine,
What will hap some day. We've a youngster
here

Comes to our convent, studies what I do,
Slouches and stares and lets no atom drop. 275

His name is Guidi — he'll not mind the monks —

They call him Hulking Tom, he lets them
talk;

He picks my practice up — he'll paint apace,
I hope so — though I never live so long,

I know what's sure to follow. You be judge!
You speak no Latin more than I, belike; 281

However, you're my man, you've seen the
world —

The beauty and the wonder and the power,

276 Guidi, Tommaso Guidi, or Masaccio (1401-28), nicknamed Hulking Tom. He is said to have been the first Italian artist to paint a nude figure. He was Lippo's master, not his disciple.

The shapes of things, their colors, lights and shades,
Changes, surprises — and God made it all! 285
— For what? Do you feel thankful, aye or no,

For this fair town's face, yonder river's line,
The mountain round it and the sky above,
Much more the figures of man, woman, child,
These are the frame to? What's it all about?
To be passed over, despised? or dwelt upon,
Wondered at? Oh, this last of course! — you say. 292

But why not do as well as say — paint these
Just as they are, careless what comes of it?
God's works — paint any one, and count it crime 295

To let a truth slip Don't object, "His works
Are here already; nature is complete:
Suppose you reproduce her — which you can't —

There's no advantage! you must beat her, then."

For, don't you mark? we're made so that we love 300

First when we see them painted, things we have passed

Perhaps a hundred times nor cared to see;
And so they are better, painted — better to us,

Which is the same thing Art was given for that;

God uses us to help each other so, 305
Lending our minds out. Have you noticed, now,

Your cullion's hanging face? A bit of chalk,
And trust me but you should, though! How much more,

If I drew higher things with the same truth!
That were to take the Prior's pulpit-place, 310
Interpret God to all of you! Oh, oh,

It makes me mad to see what men shall do
And we in our graves! This world's no blot for us,

Nor blank, it means intensely, and means good —

To find its meaning is my meat and drink. 315
"Aye, but you don't so instigate to prayer!"
Strikes in the Prior; "when your meaning's plain

It does not say to folk — remember matins,
Or, mind you fast next Friday!" Why, for this

What need of art at all? A skull and bones,
Two bits of stick nailed crosswise, or, what's best, 321

A bell to chime the hour with, does as well
I painted a Saint Laurence six months since

307 cullion, a low fellow 323 a Saint Laurence, a picture of St Laurence, who was martyred in 258 by being burned to death on a gridiron

At Prato, splashed the fresco in fine style;
"How looks my painting, now the scaffold's down?" 325

I ask a brother. "Hugely," he returns —
"Already not one phiz of your three slaves
Who turn the Deacon off his toasted side,
But's scratched and prodded to our heart's content,

The pious people have so eased their own 330
With coming to say prayers there in a rage,
We get on fast to see the bricks beneath.
Expect another job this time next year,
For pity and religion grow i' the crowd —
Your painting serves its purpose!" Hang the fools! 335

— That is — you'll not mistake an idle word
Spoke in a huff by a poor monk, God wot,
Tasting the air this spicy night, which turns
The unaccustomed head like Chianti wine!
Oh, the church knows! don't misreport me, now! 340

It's natural a poor monk out of bounds
Should have his apt word to excuse himself;
And hearken how I plot to make amends.

I have bethought me: I shall paint a piece
. . . There's for you! Give me six months,
then go, see 345

Something in Sant' Ambrogio's! Bless the nuns!

They want a cast o' my office. I shall paint
God in the midst, Madonna and her babe,
Ringed by a bowery, flowery angel-brood,
Lilies and vestments and white faces, sweet
As puff on puff of grated orris-root 351
When ladies crowd to Church at midsummer
And then i' the front, of course a saint or two —

Saint John, because he saves the Florentines,
Saint Ambrose, who puts down in black and white 355

The convent's friends and gives them a long day,

And Job, I must have him there past mistake,
The man of Uz (and Us without the z, Painters who need his patience). Well, all these

Secured at their devotion, up shall come 360
Out of a corner when you least expect,
As one by a dark stair into a great light,
Music and talking, who but Lippo! I! —

324 At Prato Some of Lippo's most important work is in the Cathedral at Prato, a town near Florence 339 Chianti wine, wine from Chianti, a region south of Florence 346 Sant' Ambrogio's, Saint Ambrose's Church in Florence Saint Ambrose was a famous church leader during the fourth century He became Bishop of Milan in 374 347-389 I shall paint, etc. The picture described is The Coronation of the Virgin, now in the Academy of Fine Arts, Florence The model for the Virgin was Lucrezia Buti, Lippo's mistress 354 Saint John, St John the Baptist, the patron saint of Florence 361-363 Out of a corner . . . I Lippo's head appears in the lower right-hand corner of the picture

Mazed, motionless, and moonstruck — I'm the man!

Back I shunk — what is this I see and hear?
I, caught up with my monk's-things by mis-
take, 366

My old serge gown and rope that goes all
round,

I, in this presence, this pure company!
Where's a hole, where's a corner for escape?
Then steps a sweet angelic slip of a thing 370
Forward, puts out a soft palm: "Not so fast!"
— Addresses the celestial presence, "Nay,
He made you and devised you, after all,
Though he's none of you! Could Saint John there draw —

His camel-hair make up a painting-brush? 375
We come to brother Lippo for all that,
Iste perfect opus!" So, all smile —

I shuffle sideways with my blushing face
Under the cover of a hundred wings Thrown like a spread of kirtles when you're
gay 380

And play hot cockles, all the doors being shut,
Till, wholly unexpected, in there pops
The hothead husband! Thus I scuttle off
To some safe bench behind, not letting go
The palm of her, the little lily thing 385
That spoke the good word for me in the nick,

Like the Prior's niece . . . Saint Lucy, I would say

And so all's saved for me, and for the church
A pretty picture gained Go, six months
hence!

Your hand, sir, and good-by, no lights, no lights! 390

The street's hushed, and I know my own way
back,

Don't fear me! There's the gray beginning.

ANDREA DEL SARTO

CALLED "THE FAULTLESS PAINTER"

But do not let us quarrel any more,
No, my Lucrezia; bear with me for once.
Sit down and all shall happen as you wish.
You turn your face, but does it bring your
heart?

374-375 Saint John . . . camel-hair Cf Mark, 16 —
"And John was clothed with camel's hair" 377 Iste perfect opus, this one did the work The inscription is on a scroll in the picture 381. hot cockles, an old English game in which a blindfolded player tries to guess who strikes him.

Andrea del Sarto Andrea d'Angelo di Francesca (1486-1531) was called "del Sarto" because he was the son of a tailor (sarto). The perfection of his frescoes in the Church of the Annunziata in Florence won him the title of "The Faultless Painter" In 1512 he married Lucrezia del Fede, whose influence led Andrea to neglect his art work. The poem is based upon the account of Andrea found in Vasari's Lives of the Painters See Critical Notes

I'll work then for your friend's friend, never
fear, 5

Treat his own subject after his own way,
Fix his own time, accept too his own price,
And shut the money into this small hand
When next it takes mine. Will it? tenderly?
Oh, I'll content him — but tomorrow, Love!
I often am much wearier than you think, 11
This evening more than usual, and it seems
As if — forgive now — should you let me sit Here by the window with your hand in mine
And look a half-hour forth on Fiesole, 15
Both of one mind, as married people use,
Quietly, quietly the evening through,
I might get up tomorrow to my work
Cheerful and fresh as ever Let us try
Tomorrow, how you shall be glad for this! 20
Your soft hand is a woman of itself,
And mine the man's bared breast she curls inside

Don't count the time lost, neither, you must serve

For each of the five pictures we require —
It saves a model So! keep looking so — 25
My serpentining beauty, rounds on rounds!
— How could you ever prick those perfect cars,

Even to put the pearl there! oh, so sweet —
My face, my moon, my everybody's moon,
Which everybody looks on and calls his, 30
And, I suppose, is looked on by in turn,
While she looks — no one's very dear, no less
You smile? why, there's my picture ready
made,

There's what we painters call our harmony!
A common grayness silvers everything — 35
All in a twilight, you and I alike —
You, at the point of your first pride in me (That's gone, you know), but I, at every point;

My youth, my hope, my art, being all toned
down

To yonder sober pleasant Fiesole. 40
There's the bell clinking from the chapel-top,
That length of convent-wall across the way
Holds the trees safer, huddled more inside,
The last monk leaves the garden, days decrease,

And autumn grows, autumn in everything 45
Eh? the whole seems to fall into a shape
As if I saw alike my work and self
And all that I was born to be and do,
A twilight-piece Love, we are in God's hand
How strange now looks the life he makes us lead; 50

So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!
I feel he laid the fetter, let it be!

15 Fiesole, a suburb of Florence 23-25 you must serve . . . a model Lucrezia is discernible in almost all of the women of Andrea's pictures

This chamber, for example — turn your head —
 All that's behind us! You don't understand,
 Nor care to understand, about my art, 55
 But you can hear at least when people speak,
 And that cartoon, the second from the door —
 It is the thing, Love! so such thing should be —
 Behold Madonna! — I am bold to say.
 I can do with my pencil what I know, 60
What I see, what at bottom of my heart
I wish for, if I ever wish so deep —
 Do easily, too — when I say perfectly,
 I do not boast, perhaps, yourself are judge,
 Who listened to the Legate's talk last week, 65
 And just as much they used to say in France
 At any rate, 'tis easy, all of it!
 No sketches first, no studies — that's long past;
 I do what many dream of all their lives —
 Dream? strive to do, and agonize to do, 70
 And fail in doing I could count twenty such
 On twice your fingers, and not leave this town,
 Who strive — you don't know how the others strive
 To paint a little thing like that you smeared
 Carelessly passing with your robes afloat — 75
 Yet do much less, so much less, Someone says
 (I know his name, no matter) — so much less!
 Well, less is more, Lucrezia; I am judged
 There burns a truer light of God in them,
 In their vexed, beating, stuffed, and stopped-up brain, 80
 Heart, or whate'er else, than goes on to prompt
 This low-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand of mine
 Their works drop groundward, but themselves, I know,
 Reach many a time a heaven that's shut to me,
 Enter and take their place there sure enough,
 Though they come back and cannot tell the world 86
 My works are nearer heaven, but I sit here
 The sudden blood of these men! at a word —
 Praise them, it boils, or blame them, it boils too
 I, painting from myself and to myself, 90
 Know what I do, am unmoved by men's blame
 Or their praise either. Somebody remarks
 Morello's outline there is wrongly traced,
 His hue mistaken; what of that? or else,
 Rightly traced and well ordered; what of that?
 Speak as they please, what does the mountain care? 96

65 the Legate's talk The Legate was the representative of the Pope 93 Morello's outline Morello is a high peak of the Apennines, north of Florence

Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
 Or what's a heaven for? All is silver-gray
 Placid and perfect with my art: the worse!
 I know both what I want and what might gain, 100
 And yet how profitless to know, to sigh,
 "Had I been two, another and myself,
 Our head would have o'erlooked the world!"
 No doubt
 Yonder's a work now, of that famous youth,
 The Urbinate, who died five years ago 105
 ('Tis copied, George Vasari sent it me)
 Well, I can fancy how he did it all,
 Pouring his soul, with kings and popes to see,
 Reaching, that heaven might so replenish him,
 Above and through his art — for it gives way
 That arm is wrongly put — and there again —
 A fault to pardon in the drawing's lines, 112
 Its body, so to speak, its soul is right,
 He means right — that, a child may understand
 Still, what an arm! and I could alter it,
 But all the play, the insight, and the stretch —
 Out of me, out of me! And wherefore out? 117
 Had you enjoined them on me, given me soul,
 We might have risen to Rafael, I and you!
 Nay, Love, you did give all I asked, I think —
 More than I merit, yes, by many times
 But had you — oh, with the same perfect brow,
 And perfect eyes, and more than perfect mouth,
 And the low voice my soul hears, as a bird
 The fowler's pipe, and follows to the snare —
 Had you, with these the same, but brought a mind! 126
 Some women do so Had the mouth there urged,
 "God and the glory! never care for gain.
 The present by the future, what is that?
 Live for fame, side by side with Agnolo! 130
 Rafael is waiting; up to God, all three!"
 I might have done it for you So it seems,
 Perhaps not All is as God overrules
 Beside, incentives come from the soul's self,
 The rest avail not Why do I need you? 135
 What wife had Rafael, or has Agnolo?
 In this world, who can do a thing, will not;
 And who would do it, cannot, I perceive,
 Yet the will's somewhat — somewhat, too,
 the power —
 And thus we half-men struggle. At the end,

97-98 Ah . . . heaven for Cf. A Death in the Desert, 424-31, page 287; Cleon, 114, page 270; Rabbi Ben Ezra, 40-41, page 280; and Saul, 295, page 219 105. The Urbinate, Raphael Sanzio (1483-1520), one of the greatest of Italian painters. He was born in the city of Urbino 106 George Vasari, 1512-74, a pupil of Andrea del Sarto's, and author of The Lives of the Most Eminent Painters, Sculptors, and Architects. 130 Agnolo, Michelangelo (1475-1564), famous as a painter, sculptor, architect, and poet

God, I conclude, compensates, punishes 141
 'Tis safer for me, if the award be strict,
 That I am something underrated here,
 Poor this long while, despised, to speak the
 truth
 I dared not, do you know, leave home all day,
 For fear of chancing on the Paris lords. 146
 The best is when they pass and look aside;
 But they speak sometimes, I must bear it all Well may they speak! That Francis, that first
 time,
 And that long festal year at Fontainebleau!
 I surely then could sometimes leave the
 ground, 151
 Put on the glory, Rafael's daily wear,
 In that humane great monarch's golden
 look —
 One finger in his beard or twisted curl
 Over his mouth's good mark that made the
 smile, 155
 One arm about my shoulder, round my neck,
 The jingle of his gold chain in my ear —
 I painting proudly with his breath on me,
 All his Court round him, seeing with his eyes,
 Such frank French eyes, and such a fire of
 souls 160
 Profuse, my hand kept plying by those hearts,
 And, best of all, this, this, this face beyond,
 This in the background, waiting on my work,
 To crown the issue with a last reward!
 A good time, was it not, my kingly days? 165
 And had you not grown restless . . . but I
 know —
 'Tis done and past, 'twas right, my instinct
 said,
 Too live the life grew, golden and not gray,
 And I'm the weak-eyed bat no sun should tempt
 Out of the grange whose four walls make his
 world 170
 How could it end in any other way?
 You called me, and I came home to your
 heart
 The triumph was — to reach and stay there,
 since
 I reached it ere the triumph, what is lost?
 Let my hands frame your face in your hair's
 gold, 175
 You beautiful Lucrezia that are mine!
 "Rafael did this, Andrea painted that;
 The Roman's is the better when you pray,
 But still the other's Virgin was his wife" —
 Men will excuse me I am glad to judge 180
 Both pictures in your presence, clearer grows

My better fortune, I resolve to think.
 For, do you know, Lucrezia, as God lives,
 Said one day Agnolo, his very self,
 To Rafael . . . I have known it all these
 years . . . 185
 (When the young man was flaming out his
 thoughts
 Upon a palace-wall for Rome to see,
 Too lifted up in heart because of it),
 "Friend, there's a certain sorry little scrub Goes up and down our Florence, none cares
 how, 190
 Who, were he set to plan and execute
 As you are, pricked on by your popes and
 kings,
 Would bring the sweat into that brow of
 yours!"
 To Rafael's! — And indeed the arm is wrong.
 I hardly dare . . . yet, only you to see, 195
 Give the chalk here — quick, thus the line should go!
 Ay, but the soul! he's Rafael! rub it out!
 Still, all I care for, if he spoke the truth
 (What he? why, who but Michel Agnolo?
 Do you forget already words like those?), 200
 If really there was such a chance, so lost —
 Is, whether you're — not grateful — but more pleased
 Well, let me think so And you smile indeed!
 This hour has been an hour! Another smile?
 If you would sit thus by me every night, 205
 I should work better, do you comprehend?
 I mean that I should earn more, give you
 more
 See, it is settled dusk now, there's a star, Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the
 wall,
 The cue-owls speak the name we call them
 by 210
 Come from the window, love — come in, at
 last,
 Inside the melancholy little house
 We built to be so gay with God is just King Francis may forgive me, oft at nights
 When I look up from painting, eyes tired
 out, 215
 The walls become illumined, brick from brick
 Distinct, instead of mortar, fierce bright gold,
 That gold of his I did cement them with!
 Let us but love each other Must you go?
 That Cousin here again? he waits outside?
 Must see you — you, and not with me?
 Those loans? 221
 More gaming debts to pay? you smiled for
 that?

149 That Francis, Francis I, king of France (1494-1547). He had invited Andrea to come to Fontainebleau, the seat of the richest of the royal palaces. While engaged upon important work there, Andrea was suddenly called home by Lucrezia. He was given money with which to secure works of art for the French king, but he purchased a house with it for Lucrezia. 178 The Roman's, Raphael's 186-188 When . . . it, probably a reference to Raphael's decorations made in certain rooms of the Vatican under Julius II (1443-1513). 210 cue-owls, small European owls. 220 Cousin, a euphemism for lover. Cf. lines 29-32.

Well, let smiles buy me! have you more to spend?

While hand and eye and something of a heart
Are left me, work's my ware, and what's it worth? 225

I'll pay my fancy. Only let me sit
The gray remainder of the evening out,
Idle, you call it, and muse perfectly
How I could paint, were I but back in France,
One picture, just one more — the Virgin's face, 230
Not yours this time! I want you at my side

To hear them — that is, Michel Agnolo —
Judge all I do and tell you of its worth.
Will you? Tomorrow, satisfy your friend.
I take the subjects for his corridor, 235
Finish the portrait out of hand — there, there,
And throw him in another thing or two
If he demurs; the whole should prove enough
To pay for this same Cousin's freak. Be-side —

What's better and what's all I care about —
Get you the thirteen scudi for the ruff! 241
Love, does that please you? Ah, but what does he,

The Cousin! what does he to please you more?

I am grown peaceful as old age tonight.
I regret little, I would change still less 245
Since there my past life lies, why alter it?
The very wrong to Francis! — it is true
I took his coin, was tempted and complied,
And built this house and sinned, and all is said.

My father and my mother died of want. 250
Well, had I riches of my own? you see
How one gets rich! Let each one bear his lot

They were born poor, lived poor, and poor they died;

And I have labored somewhat in my time
And not been paid profusely. Some good son 255

Paint my two hundred pictures — let him try!

No doubt, there's something strikes a balance. Yes,

You loved me quite enough, it seems tonight
This must suffice me here. What would one have?

In heaven, perhaps, new chances, one more chance — 260

Four great walls in the New Jerusalem,
Meted on each side by the angel's reed,
For Leonard, Rafael, Agnolo, and me

241 scudi, plural of scudo, an Italian coin worth about one dollar 261 the New Jerusalem For a description of the New Jerusalem and its walls, see Revelation, 21 10-21 263 Leonard, Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519), one of the greatest of Italian painters

To cover — the three first without a wife, 264
While I have mine! So — still they overcome
Because there's still Lucrezia — as I choose.

Again the Cousin's whistle! Go, my Love (1855)

CLEON

"As certain also of your own poets have said" —

Cleon the poet (from the sprinkled isles,
Lily on lily, that o'erlace the sea,
And laugh their pride when the light wave lpsps "Greece") —

To Protus in his Tyranny: much health!

They give thy letter to me, even now; 5
I read and seem as if I heard thee speak.

The master of thy galley still unlades
Gift after gift; they block my court at last
And pile themselves along its portico
Royal with sunset, like a thought of thee; 10
And one white she-slave from the group dispersed

Of black and white slaves (like the checker-work

Pavement, at once my nation's work and gift,
Now covered with this settle-down of doves),
One lyric woman, in her crocus vest 15
Woven of sea-wools, with her two white hands
Commends to me the strainer and the cup
Thy lip hath bettered ere it blesses mine.

Well-counseled, king, in thy munificence!
For so shall men remark, in such an act 20
Of love for him whose song gives life its joy,
Thy recognition of the use of life,
Nor call thy spirit barely adequate

To help on life in straight ways, broad enough
For vulgar souls, by ruling and the rest 25

Thou, in the daily building of thy tower —
Whether in fierce and sudden spasms of toil,
Or through dim lulls of unapparent growth,
Or when the general work 'mid good acclaim
Climbed with the eye to cheer the architect —
Didst ne'er engage in work for mere work's sake — 31

Hadst ever in thy heart the luring hope
Of some eventual rest a-top of it,
Whence, all the tumult of the building hushed,
Thou first of men mightst look out to the East; 35

Cleon In this poem Cleon is imagined as a Greek poet replying to a letter written by Protus, an imaginary king, who has been his friend and patron. The quotation is from Acts, 17 28. The thought expressed in the poem is characteristic of that of the Greek philosophers of the first century.

1 the sprinkled isles, probably the Sporades, lying east of Greece 4 Tyranny, used in the ancient Greek sense, referring to any ruler who had absolute power

The vulgar saw thy tower, thou sawest the sun

For this, I promise on thy festival
To pour libation, looking o'er the sea,
Making this slave narrate thy fortunes, speak Thy great words, and describe thy royal
face — 40

Wishing thee wholly where Zeus lives the most,

Within the eventual element of calm

Thy letter's first requirement meets me here.

It is as thou hast heard. in one short life
I, Cleon, have effected all those things 45
Thou wonderingly dost enumerate.

That epos on thy hundred plates of gold
Is mine — and also mine the little chant,
So sure to rise from every fishing-bark
When, lights at prow, the seamen haul their
net 50

The image of the sun-god on the phare,
Men turn from the sun's self to see, is mine,
The Pœcile, o'er-storied its whole length,
As thou didst hear, with painting, is mine too.
I know the true proportions of a man 55

And woman also, not observed before,
And I have written three books on the soul,
Proving absurd all written hitherto,
And putting us to ignorance again
For music — why, I have combined the
moods, 60

Inventing one In brief, all arts are mine;
Thus much the people know and recognize,
Throughout our seventeen islands. Marvel
not

We of these latter days, with greater mind
Than our forerunners, since more composite,
Look not so great, beside their simple way, 66
To a judge who only sees one way at once,
One mind-point and no other at a time —
Compares the small part of a man of us
With some whole man of the heroic age, 70
Great in his way — not ours, nor meant for
ours

And ours is greater, had we skill to know,
For, what we call this life of men on earth,
This sequence of the soul's achievements here
Being, as I find much reason to conceive, 75
Intended to be viewed eventually
As a great whole, not analyzed to parts,
But each part having reference to all —
How shall a certain part, pronounced complete,

41 Zeus, the chief of the Grecian gods 47 That epos . . . gold, epic poem, engraved on golden plates 51 sun-god . . . phare, the statue of Apollo on the lighthouse The word phare is derived from the island of Pharos, the site of a great lighthouse 53 The Pœcile, the Portico at Athens, covered with painted scenes of war 60 moods In Greek music the moods were the scales

Endure effacement by another part? 80
Was the thing done? — then, what's to do
again?

See, in the checkered pavement opposite,
Suppose the artist made a perfect rhomb,
And next a lozenge, then a trapezoid —
He did not overlay them, superimpose 85

The new upon the old and blot it out,
But laid them on a level in his work,
Making at last a picture; there it lies
So, first the perfect separate forms were made,
The portions of mankind, and after, so, 90
Occurred the combination of the same

For where had been a progress, otherwise?
Mankind, made up of all the single men —
In such a synthesis the labor ends
Now mark me! those divine men of old time
Have reached, thou sayest well, each at one point 96

The outside verge that rounds our faculty,
And where they reached, who can do more than reach?

It takes but little water just to touch
At some one point the inside of a sphere, 100
And, as we turn the sphere, touch all the rest
In due succession; but the finer air,
Which not so palpably nor obviously (Though no less universally) can touch
The whole circumference of that emptied sphere, 105

Fills it more fully than the water did,
Holds thrice the weight of water in itself
Resolved into a subtler element
And yet the vulgar call the sphere first full
Up to the visible height — and after, void, 110
Not knowing air's more hidden properties
And thus our soul, misknown, cries out to Zeus

To vindicate his purpose in our life:
Why stay we on the earth unless to grow?
Long since, I imaged, wrote the fiction out, 115
That he or other god descended here
And, once for all, showed simultaneously
What, in its nature, never can be shown,
Piecemeal or in succession — showed, I say,
The worth both absolute and relative 120
Of all his children from the birth of time,
His instruments for all appointed work
I now go on to image — might we hear
The judgment which should give the due to
each, 124

Show where the labor lay and where the ease,
And prove Zeus' self, the latent everywhere!
This is a dream — but no dream, let us hope,
That years and days, the summers and the springs,
Follow each other with unwaning powers 129
The grapes which dye thy wine are richer far.

114 Why stay to grow? Cf. Andrea del Sarto, 97-98, page 267, and A Death in the Desert, 421-431, page 287

Through culture, than the wild wealth of the rock,
 The suave plum than the savage-tasted drupe,
 The pastured honey-bee drops choicer sweet,
 The flowers turn double, and the leaves turn
 flowers,
 That young and tender crescent-moon, thy slave, 135
 Sleeping above her robe as buoyed by clouds,
 Refines upon the women of my youth.
 What, and the soul alone deteriorates?
 I have not chanted verse like Homer, no —
 Nor swept string like Terpander, no — nor carved 140
 And painted men like Phidias and his friend,
 I am not great as they are, point by point.
 But I have entered into sympathy
 With these four, running these into one soul,
 Who, separate, ignored each other's art. 145
 Say, is it nothing that I know them all?
 The wild flower was the larger; I have dashed
 Rose-blood upon its petals, pricked its cup's
 Honey with wine, and driven its seed to fruit,
 And show a better flower if not so large: 150
 I stand myself Refer this to the gods
 Whose gift alone it is! which, shall I dare
 (All pride apart) upon the absurd pretext
 That such a gift by chance lay in my hand,
 Discourse of lightly or depreciate? 155
 It might have fallen to another's hand; what
 then?
 I pass too surely; let at least truth stay!

And next, of what thou followest on to ask.
 This being with me as I declare, O king,
 My works, in all these vancolored kinds, 160
 So done by me, accepted so by men —
 Thou askest, if (my soul thus in men's hearts)
 I must not be accounted to attain
 The very crown and proper end of life?
 Inquiring thence how, now life closeth up, 165
 I face death with success in my right hand
 Whether I fear death less than dost thyself
 The fortunate of men? "For" (writest thou)
 "Thou leavest much behind, while I leave
 naught
 Thy life stays in the poems men shall sing, 170
 The pictures men shall study, while my life,
 Complete and whole now in its power and joy,
 Dies altogether with my brain and arm,
 Is lost indeed, since, what survives myself?
 The brazen statue to o'erlook my grave, 175
 Set on the promontory which I named
 And that — some supple courtier of my heir

Shall use its robed and sceptered arm, perhaps,
 To fix the rope to, which best drags it down
 I go then; triumph thou, who dost not go!"

Nay, thou art worthy of hearing my whole
 mind. 181
 Is this apparent, when thou turn'st to muse
 Upon the scheme of earth and man in chief,
 That admiration grows as knowledge grows?
 That imperfection means perfection hid, 185
 Reserved in part, to grace the after-time?
 If, in the morning of philosophy,
 Ere aught had been recorded, nay perceived,
 Thou, with the light now in thee, couldst have looked
 On all earth's tenantry, from worm to bird, 190
 Ere man, her last, appeared upon the stage —
 Thou wouldst have seen them perfect, and deduced
 The perfectness of others yet unseen.
 Conceding which — had Zeus then questioned
 thee,
 "Shall I go on a step, improve on this, 195
 Do more for visible creatures than is done?"
 Thou wouldst have answered, "Aye, by making each
 Grow conscious in himself — by that alone
 All's perfect else, the shell sucks fast the rock,
 The fish strikes through the sea, the snake
 both swims 200
 And slides, forth range the beasts, the birds
 take flight,
 Till life's mechanics can no further go —
 And all this joy in natural life is put
 Like fire from off thy finger into each,
 So exquisitely perfect is the same 205
 But 'tis pure fire, and they mere matter are,
 It has them, not they it, and so I choose
 For man, thy last premeditated work
 (If I might add a glory to the scheme),
 That a third thing should stand apart from
 both, 210
 A quality arise within his soul,
 Which, intro-active, made to supervise
 And feel the force it has, may view itself,
 And so be happy " Man might live at first
 The animal life; but is there nothing more?
 In due time, let him critically learn 216
 How he lives; and, the more he gets to know
 Of his own life's adaptabilities,
 The more joy-giving will his life become
 Thus man, who hath this quality, is best 220

But thou, king, hadst more reasonably said
 "Let progress end at once — man make no
 step

132 drupe, any fruit containing a stone, like a plum or a peach. Cleon contrasts the cultivated plum and the wild plum. 140 Terpander, a famous Greek musician of the seventh century B.C. He was known as "the father of Greek music." 141 Phidias, a great Athenian sculptor of the fifth century B.C. His friend was Pericles, the ruler of Athens (444-429 B.C.).

181-186 Nay. after-time Compare Abt Vogler, 65-96, page 279. 214-220 Man best Compare A Grammarian's Funeral, 56-72, page 238.

Beyond the natural man, the better beast,
 Using his senses, not the sense of sense."
 In man there's failure, only since he left 225
 The lower and unconscious forms of life.
 We called it an advance, the rendering plain Man's spirit might grow conscious of man's
 life,
 And, by new lore so added to the old,
 Take each step higher over the brute's head
 This grew the only life, the pleasure-house, 231 Watch-tower, and treasure-fortress of the
 soul,
 Which whole surrounding flats of natural life
 Seemed only fit to yield subsistence to,
 A tower that crowns a country. But alas, 235
 The soul now climbs it just to perish there!
 For thence we have discovered ('tis no
 dream —
 We know this, which we had not else perceived)
 That there's a world of capability
 For joy, spread round about us, meant for us,
 Inviting us, and still the soul craves all, 241
 And still the flesh replies, "Take no jot more Than ere thou clombst the tower to look abroad!
 Nay, so much less as that fatigue has brought Deduction to it" We struggle, fain to enlarge 245
 Our bounded physical reciprocity,
 Increase our power, supply fresh oil to life,
 Repair the waste of age and sickness, no,
 It skills not! — life's inadequate to joy,
 As the soul sees joy, tempting life to take 250
 They praise a fountain in my garden here
 Wherein a Naiad sends the water-bow
 Thin from her tube; she smiles to see it rise
 What if I told her, it is just a thread
 From that great river which the hills shut
 up,
 And mock her with my leave to take the
 same? 256
 The artificer has given her one small tube Past power to widen or exchange — what boots
 To know she might spout oceans if she could?
 She cannot lift beyond her first thin thread,
 And so a man can use but a man's joy 261
 While he sees God's. Is it for Zeus to boast,
 "See, man, how happy I live, and despair —
 That I may be still happier — for thy use!"
 If this were so, we could not thank our lord,
 As hearts beat on to doing; 'tis not so — 266
 Mahce it is not Is it carelessness?
 Still, no. If care — where is the sign? I ask,
 And get no answer, and agree in sum,
 O king, with thy profound discouragement,

Who seest the wider but to sigh the more 271
 Most progress is most failure; thou sayest
 well

The last point now: — thou dost except a
 case —
 Holding joy not impossible to one
 With artist-gifts — to such a man as I 275
 Who leave behind me living works indeed,
 For, such a poem, such a painting lives.
 What? dost thou verily trip upon a word,
 Confound the accurate view of what joy is (Caught somewhat clearer by my eyes than thine) 280
 With feeling joy? confound the knowing how
 And showing how to live (my faculty)
 With actually living? — Otherwise
 Where is the artist's vantage o'er the king?
 Because in my great epos I display 285
 How divers men young, strong, fair, wise, can act —
 Is this as though I acted? If I paint, Carve the young Phœbus, am I therefore
 young?
 Methinks I'm older that I bowed myself
 The many years of pain that taught me
 art!
 Indeed, to know is something, and to prove 291
 How all this beauty might be enjoyed, is more,
 But, knowing naught, to enjoy is something
 too.
 Yon rower, with the molded muscles there,
 Lowering the sail, is nearer it than I. 295
 I can write love-odes; thy fair slave's an ode
 I get to sing of love, when grown too gray
 For being beloved, she turns to that young
 man,
 The muscles all a-ripple on his back.
 I know the joy of kingship; well, thou art
 king! 300

"But," sayest thou — and I marvel, I repeat,
 To find thee trip on such a mere word —
 "what
 Thou writest, paintest, stays, that does not
 die:
 Sappho survives, because we sing her songs,
 And Æschylus, because we read his plays!" 305 Why, if they live still, let them come and
 take Thy slave in my despite, drink from thy cup,
 Speak in my place. Thou diest while I survive?
 Say rather that my fate is deadlier still,

288 Phœbus, Apollo. See line 51 296 I . . . ode

In this, that every day my sense of joy 310
Grows more acute, my soul (intensified
By power and insight) more enlarged, more keen;

While every day my hairs fall more and more,
My hand shakes, and the heavy years increase —

The horror quickening still from year to year,
The consummation coming past escape, 316
When I shall know most, and yet least enjoy —

When all my works wherein I prove my
worth,

Being present still to mock me in men's mouths,

Alive still, in the praise of such as thou, 320
I, I the feeling, thinking, acting man,

The man who loved his life so over-much,
Sleep in my urn It is so horrible,

I dare at times imagine to my need
Some future state revealed to us by Zeus, 325

Unlimited in capability
For joy, as this is in desire for joy —

To seek which, the joy-hunger forces us:
That, stung by straitness of our life, made strait 329

On purpose to make prized the life at large —
Freed by the throbbing impulse we call death,

We burst there as the worm into the fly,
Who, while a worm still, wants his wings

But no!
Zeus has not yet revealed it, and alas,

He must have done so, were it possible! 335

Live long and happy, and in that thought
die —

Glad for what was! Farewell. And for the
rest,

I cannot tell thy messenger aright
Where to deliver what he bears of thine

To one called Paulus; we have heard his fame
Indeed, if Christ be not one with him — 341

I know not, nor am troubled much to know.
Thou canst not think a mere barbarian Jew,

As Paulus proves to be, one circumcised,
Hath access to a secret shut from us? 345

Thou wrongest our philosophy, O king,
In stooping to inquire of such an one,

As if his answer could impose at all!
He writeth, doth he? well, and he may write

Oh, the Jew findeth scholars! certain slaves
Who touched on this same isle, preached him and Christ; 351

And (as I gathered from a bystander)
Their doctrine could be held by no sane man

ONE WORD MORE

TO E. B. B.

I

There they are, my fifty men and women
Naming me the fifty poems finished!
Take them, Love, the book and me together;
Where the heart lies, let the brain lie also 2

Rafael made a century of sonnets, 5
Made and wrote them in a certain volume
Dinted with the silver-pointed pencil
Else he only used to draw Madonnas;
These, the world might view — but one, the volume.

Who that one, you ask? Your heart instructs
you. 10

Did she live and love it all her lifetime?
Did she drop, his lady of the sonnets,

Die, and let it drop beside her pillow
Where it lay in place of Rafael's glory,

Rafael's cheek so duteous and so loving — 15
Cheek, the world was wont to hail a painter's,
Rafael's cheek, her love had turned a poet's?

3

You and I would rather read that volume
(Taken to his beating bosom by it),

Lean and list the bosom-beats of Rafael, 20
Would we not? than wonder at Madonnas —
Her, San Sisto names, and Her, Foligno,

Her, that visits Florence in a vision,
Her, that's left with lilies in the Louvre —

Seen by us and all the world in circle. 25

4

You and I will never read that volume.
Guido Reni, like his own eye's apple

Guarded long the treasure-book and loved it
Guido Reni dying, all Bologna

One Word More This poem was originally appended to the volume of Browning's poems called Men and Women
It is a deeply personal poem addressed to Mrs. Browning
Other poems written by Browning in praise of his wife are My Star, page 229, the selection from Book I of The Ring and the Book, page 298, Proem to The Two Poets of Croisic, and
By the Fireside

2 Naming me, furnishing me with the name of the volume 5 Rafael, Raphael Sanzio (1483-1520), one of the greatest of Italian painters. Only four of his sonnets exist, and there is no authentic record of the others having been written. The "lady of the sonnets" of line 12 is said to have been named Margharita, her likeness appears in several of Raphael's paintings 21-24 Madonnas . . .
Louvre Of the fifty or more Madonnas painted by Raphael, the four mentioned here are the most important. The Sistine Madonna, at Dresden, the Madonna of Foligno, at Rome, the Madonna del Granduca, at Florence, and probably the Madonna of the Garden (La Belle Jardinière), at the Louvre, in Paris. The one at Rome was painted as a votive offering for Sigismund Corti of Foligno, in the one at Florence the Madonna is represented as appearing to a votary in a vision 27 Guido Reni (1575-1642), a painter of Bologna, a city in northern Italy. The "treasure-book" he owned contained one hundred of Raphael's original designs, but no sonnets

Cried, and the world cried too, "Ours, the treasure!" 30
Suddenly, as rare things will, it vanished.

5

Dante once prepared to paint an angel—
Whom to please? You whisper "Beatrice"
While he mused and traced it and retraced it (Peradventure with a pen corroded) 35
Still by drops of that hot ink he dipped for,
When, his left-hand i' the hair o' the wicked,
Back he held the brow and pricked its stigma,
Bit into the live man's flesh for parchment,
Loosed him, laughed to see the writing rankle,
Let the wretch go festering through Florence) — 41

Dante, who loved well because he hated,
Hated wickedness that hinders loving,
Dante standing, studying his angel —
In there broke the folk of his Inferno 45
Says he — "Certain people of importance" (Such he gave his daily dreadful line to)
"Entered and would seize, forsooth, the poet."
Says the poet — "Then I stopped my painting"

6

You and I would rather see that angel, 50
Painted by the tenderness of Dante —
Would we not? — than read a fresh Inferno.

7

You and I will never see that picture
While he mused on love and Beatrice,
While he softened o'er his outlined angel, 55
In they broke, those "people of importance",
We and Bice bear the loss forever

8

What of Rafael's sonnets, Dante's picture?
This: no artist lives and loves, that longs not
Once, and only once, and for one only 60
(Ah, the prize!), to find his love a language
Fit and fair and simple and sufficient —
Using nature that's an art to others,
Not, this one time, art that's turned his nature
Aye, of all the artists living, loving, 65
None but would forego his proper dowry —
Does he paint? he fain would write a poem —
Does he write? he fain would paint a picture,

32-33 Dante . . . Beatrice Dante, Italy's greatest poet (1265-1321), loved Beatrice Portinari, whom he immortalized in his Vita Nuova and his Divina Commedia. At the close of the Vita Nuova Dante states that on the first anniversary of the death of Beatrice he wished to paint an angel as a memorial to her. He says too that he was interrupted by "certain people of importance" (line 46) 35-41 Peradventure . . . Florence. The Divina Commedia consists of the Inferno, the Purgatorio, and the Paradiso. Dante freely consigned his enemies, living or dead, to appropriate places in Inferno or Purgatory. Lines 35-41 refer to incidents in sections 32-33 of the Inferno. The man referred to in lines 37-38 was dead, but the man of lines 39-41 was alive 57 Bice, Beatrice

Put to proof art alien to the artist's,
Once, and only once, and for one only, 70
So to be the man and leave the artist,
Gain the man's joy, miss the artist's sorrow

9

Wherefore? Heaven's gift takes earth's abatement!

He who smites the rock and spreads the water,
Bidding drink and live a crowd beneath him,
Even he, the minute makes immortal, 76
Proves, perchance, but mortal in the minute,
Desecrates, belike, the deed in doing.
While he smites, how can he but remember,
So he smote before, in such a peril, 80
When they stood and mocked — "Shall smiting help us?"

When they drank and sneered — "A stroke is easy!"

When they wiped their mouths and went their journey,

Throwing him for thanks — "But drought was pleasant"

Thus old memories mar the actual triumph,
Thus the doing savors of disrelish, 86
Thus achievement lacks a gracious somewhat,
O'er-importuned brows becloud the mandate,
Carelessness or consciousness — the gesture
For he bears an ancient wrong about him, 90
Sees and knows again those phalanx'd faces,
Hears, yet one time more, the 'customed prelude —

"How shouldst thou, of all men, smite, and save us?"

Guesses what is like to prove the sequel —
"Egypt's flesh-pots — nay, the drought was better" 95

10

Oh, the crowd must have emphatic warrant!
Theirs, the Sinai-forehead's cloven brilliance.
Right-arm's rod-sweep, tongue's imperial fiat.
Never dares the man put off the prophet

11

Did he love one face from out the thousands (Were she Jethro's daughter, white and wifely,
Were she but the Ethiopian bondslave), 102
He would envy yon dumb patient camel,
Keeping a reserve of scanty water
Meant to save his own life in the desert, 105

74 He who, etc. The experience of Moses is cited as an example of the "artist's sorrow". The story of the smiting of the rock by Moses is found in Exodus, 16-19, and in Numbers, 20 95 Egypt's better. The Israelites murmured against Moses in the wilderness because they had no food and said, "Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full" (Exodus, 16:3) 97. Sinai-forehead's . . . brilliance, a reference to the appearance of God in the thunder and lightning on Mount Sinai, as told in Exodus, 19 101 Jethro's daughter, Zipporah, the wife of Moses (see Exodus, 2 and 18) 102 the Ethiopian bondslave, the Ethiopian woman whom Moses married (see Numbers, 12:1)

Ready in the desert to deliver (Kneeling down to let his breast be opened)
Hoard and life together for his mistress

12

I shall never, in the years remaining, 109
Paint you pictures, no, nor carve you statues,
Make you music that should all-express me,
So it seems—I stand on my attainment.
This of verse alone, one life allows me;
Verse and nothing else have I to give you
Other heights in other lives, God willing, 115
All the gifts from all the heights, your own,
Love!

13

Yet a semblance of resource avails us—
Shade so finely touched, love's sense must seize it
Take these lines, look lovingly and nearly, 119
Lines I write the first time and the last time
He who works in fresco, steals a hair-brush,
Curbs the liberal hand, subservient proudly,
Cramps his spirit, crowds its all in little,
Makes a strange art of an art familiar,
Fills his lady's missal-marge with flowerets.
He who blows through bronze may breathe through silver, 126
Fitly serenade a slumbrous princess.
He who writes may write for once as I do.

14

Love, you saw me gather men and women,
Live or dead or fashioned by my fancy, 130
Enter each and all, and use their service,
Speak from every mouth—the speech, a poem.

Hardly shall I tell my joys and sorrows,
Hopes and fears, belief and disbelieving;
I am mine and yours—the rest be all men's,
Karshish, Cleon, Norbert, and the fifty 136
Let me speak this once in my true person,
Not as Lippo, Roland, or Andrea,
Though the fruit of speech be just this sentence:

Pray you, look on these my men and women,
Take and keep my fifty poems finished, 141
Where my heart lies, let my brain lie also!
Poor the speech; be how I speak, for all things

15

Not but that you know me! Lo, the moon's
self!
Here in London, yonder late in Florence, 145
Still we find her face, the thrice-transfigured

120 Lines . . . time This is the only poem of Browning's written in rimeless five-foot trochaics 125 missalmarge, border of the prayer-book 136-138 Karshish.
Andrea Lines 136-138 mention the characters found in six of the poems included in Men and Women 144-146 Lo thrice-transfigured They had recently watched the new moon in Florence, now in London they see her in her last quarter

Curving on a sky imbrued with color,
Drifted over Fiesole by twilight,
Came she, our new crescent of a hair'sbreadth

Full she flared it, lamping Samminiato, 150
Rounder 'twixt the cypresses and rounder,
Perfect till the nightingales applauded.
Now, a piece of her old self, impoverished,
Hard to greet, she traverses the house-roofs,
Hurries with unhandsome thrift of silver, 155
Goes dispiritedly, glad to finish.

16

What, there's nothing in the moon noteworthy?

Nay; for if that moon could love a mortal,
Use, to charm him (so to fit a fancy),
All her magic ('tis the old sweet mythos), 160
She would turn a new side to her mortal,
Side unseen of herdsman, huntsman, steers-
man—

Blank to Zoroaster on his terrace,
Blind to Galileo on his turret,
Dumb to Homer, dumb to Keats—him,
even! 165

Think, the wonder of the moonstruck mortal—

When she turns round, comes again in heaven,
Opens out anew for worse or better!
Proves she like some portent of an iceberg
Swimming full upon the ship it founders, 170
Hungry with huge teeth of splintered crystals?

Proves she as the paved work of a sapphire Seen by Moses when he climbed the mountain?

Moses, Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu
Climbed and saw the very God, the Highest,
Stand upon the paved work of a sapphire 176
Like the bodied heaven in his clearness
Shone the stone, the sapphire of that paved
work,

When they ate and drank and saw God also!

17

What were seen? None knows, none ever shall know. 180
Only this is sure—the sight were other, religion, about 500 B.C. He studied the heavenly bodies while meditating upon religious themes 164 Galileo, others who had been entranced by the moon, had not caught all her magic 176-179 paved work . . . God also Cf Exodus, 24 9-10—"Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, and they saw the God of Israel, and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness."

Not the moon's same side, born late in Florence, Dying now impoverished here in London.
God be thanked, the meanest of his creatures
Boasts two soul-sides, one to face the world
with, 185
One to show a woman when he loves her!

18

This I say of me, but think of you, Love!
This to you — yourself my moon of poets!
Ah, but that's the world's side, there's the wonder,
Thus they see you, praise you, think they know you! 190
There, in turn I stand with them and praise
you —
Out of my own self, I dare to phrase it
But the best is when I glide from out them,
Cross a step or two of dubious twilight,
Come out on the other side, the novel 195
Silent silver lights and darks undreamed of,
Where I hush and bless myself with silence

19

Oh, their Rafael of the dear Madonnas,
Oh, their Dante of the dread Inferno, 199
Wrote one song — and in my brain I sing it,
Drew one angel — borne, see, on my bosom!

BEN KARSHOOK'S WISDOM

1

"Would a man 'scape the rod?"
Rabbi Ben Karshook saith,
"See that he turn to God
The day before his death."

"Aye, could a man inquire
When it shall come?" I say.
The Rabbi's eye shoots fire —
"Then let him turn today!"

5

2

Quoth a young Sadducee:
"Reader of many rolls,
Is it so certain we
Have, as they tell us, souls?"

10

"Son, there is no reply!"
The Rabbi bit his beard:

"Certain, a soul have I —
We may have none," he sneered. 15

Thus Karshook, the Hiram's-Hammer,
The Right-hand Temple-column,
Taught babes in grace their grammar,
And struck the simple, solemn. 20
(1854, 1856)

TOO LATE

Here was I with my arm and heart
And brain, all yours for a word, a want
Put into a look — just a look, your part —
While mine, to repay it . . . vainest vaunt
Were the woman, that's dead, alive to hear, 5
Had her lover, that's lost, love's proof to show!
But I cannot show it; you cannot speak
From the churchyard neither, miles removed,
Though I feel by a pulse within my cheek,
Which stabs and stops, that the woman I
loved 10
Needs help in her grave and finds none near,
Wants warmth from the heart which sends it — so!

Did I speak once angrily, all the drear days
You lived, you woman I loved so well,
Who married the other? Blame or praise, 15
Where was the use then? Time would tell,
And the end declare what man for you,
What woman for me, was the choice of God
But, Edith dead! no doubting more!
I used to sit and look at my life 20
As it rippled and ran till, right before,
A great stone stopped it, oh, the strife
Of waves at the stone some devil threw
In my life's midcurrent, thwarting God!

But either I thought, "They may churn and
chide 25
Awhile, my waves which came for their joy
And found this horrible stone full-tide;
Yet I see just a thread escape, deploy
Through the evening-country, silent and safe,
And it suffers no more till it finds the sea"
Or else I would think, "Perhaps some night 31
When new things happen, a meteor-ball
May slip through the sky in a line of light,
And earth breathe hard, and landmarks
fall,

Ben Karshook's Wisdom Karshook is Hebrew for thistle
The character is imaginary

9. Sadducee. The Sadducees were a sect of the Jews composed largely of the priestly aristocracy (2d century B.C. to 1st century A.D.) They denied the Resurrection, personal immortality, etc

17-18 Hiram's-Hammer . . . Temple-column, a reference to Hiram, a Phoenician king, described as a skillful worker in brass on Solomon's Temple. He set up two brass pillars—the one on the right was named Jachin, signifying stability, the one on the left, Boaz, signifying strength (see
1 Kings, 7 13-22).

And my waves no longer champ nor chafe, 35
Since a stone will have rolled from its place, let be!"

But, dead! All's done with; wait who may,
Watch and wear and wonder who will
Oh, my whole life that ends today!
Oh, my soul's sentence, sounding still, 40
"The woman is dead that was none of his;
And the man that was none of hers may
go!"

There's only the past left; worry that!
Wreak, like a bull, on the empty coat,
Rage, its late wearer is laughing at! 45
Tear the collar to rags, having missed his
throat;
Strike stupidly on — "This, this, and this,
Where I would that a bosom received the blow!"

I ought to have done more; once my speech,
And once your answer, and there, the end,
And Edith was henceforth out of reach! 51
Why, men do more to deserve a friend,
Be rid of a foe, get rich, grow wise,
Nor, folding their arms, stare fate in the
face
Why, better even have burst like a thief 55
And borne you away to a rock for us two,
In a moment's horror, bright, bloody, and brief,
Then changed to myself again — "I slew
Myself in that moment; a ruffian lies Somewhere; your slave, see, born in his
place!" 60

What did the other do? You be judge!
Look at us, Edith! Here are we both!
Give him his six whole years; I grudge
None of the life with you, nay, loathe
Myself that I grudged his start in advance 65
Of me who could overtake and pass.
But, as if he loved you! No, not he,
Nor any one else in the world, 'tis plain;
Who ever heard that another, free 69
As I, young, prosperous, sound, and sane,
Poured life out, proffered it — "Half a glance
Of those eyes of yours and I drop the glass!"

Handsome, were you? 'Tis more than they held,
More than they said; I was 'ware and watched;
I was the scapegrace, this rat belled 75
The cat, this fool got his whiskers scratched
The others? No head that was turned, no
heart
Broken, my lady, assure yourself!
Each soon made his mind up; so and so
Married a dancer, such and such 80

Stole his friend's wife, stagnated slow,
Or maundered, unable to do as much,
And muttered of peace where he had no part;
While, hid in the closet, laid on the shelf —

On the whole, you were let alone, I think! 85
So you looked to the other, who acquiesced;
My rival, the proud man — prize your pink
Of poets! A poet he was! I've guessed;
He rimed you his rubbish nobody read,
Loved you and doved you — did not I
laugh! 90
There was a prize! But we both were tried.
Oh, heart of mine, marked broad with her
mark,
Tekel, found wanting, set aside,
Scorned! See, I bled these tears in the dark
Till comfort come and the last be bled; 95
He? He is tagging your epitaph.

If it would only come over again!
— Time to be patient with me, and probe
This heart till you punctured the proper vein,
Just to learn what blood is; twitch the robe 100
From that blank lay-figure your fancy draped, Prick the leathern heart till the — verses spirt!
And late it was easy; late, you walked
Where a friend might meet you, Edith's
name
Arose to one's lip if one laughed or talked; 105
If I heard good news, you heard the same,
When I woke, I knew that your breath escaped;
I could bide my time, keep alive, alert.

And alive I shall keep and long, you will see!
I knew a man, was kicked like a dog 110
From gutter to cesspool; what cared he Solong as he picked from the filth his prog?
He saw youth, beauty, and genius die,
And jollily lived to his hundredth year.
But I will live otherwise, none of such life!
At once I begin as I mean to end 116
Go on with the world, get gold in its strife, Give your spouse the slip and betray your
friend!
There are two who decline, a woman and I,
And enjoy our death in the darkness here.

I liked that way you had with your curls 121
Wound to a ball in a net behind;
Your cheek was chaste as a Quaker-girl's;

93 Tekel, one of the words of the mysterious writing on the wall of Belshazzar's palace, interpreted by Daniel (Daniel, 5 1-31) It means "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting" (v 27) 96. tagging, supplying with rimes 112. prog, food

And your mouth — there was never, to my
mind,
Such a funny mouth, for it would not shut, 125
And the dented chin too — what a chin!
There were certain ways when you spoke,
some words
That you know you never could pronounce
You were thin, however; like a bird's
Your hand seemed — some would say, the pounce 130
Of a scaly-footed hawk — all but!
The world was right when it called you thin.

But I turn my back on the world; I take
Your hand, and kneel, and lay to my lips.
Bid me live, Edith! Let me slake 135
Thrust at your piersence! Fear no slips,
'Tis your slave shall pay, while his soul endures,
Full due, love's whole debt, summum jus
My queen shall have high observance, planned
Courtship made perfect, no least line 140
Crossed without warrant There you stand,
Warm too, and white too; would this wine
Had washed all over that body of yours,
Ere I drank it, and you down with it, thus!

ABT VOGLER

(AFTER HE HAS BEEN EXTEMPORIZING
UPON THE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT OF HIS INVENTION)

Would that the structure brave, the manifold music I build,
Bidding my organ obey, calling its keys to their work,
Claiming each slave of the sound, at a touch,
as when Solomon willed Armies of angels that soar, legions of demons that lurk,
Man, brute, reptile, fly — alien of end and of
aim, 5
Adverse, each from the other heaven-high, hell-deep removed —
Should rush into sight at once as he named the ineffable Name,
And pile him a palace straight, to pleasure
the princess he loved!

Would it might tarry like his, the beautiful building of mine,

This which my keys in a crowd pressed and importuned to raise! 10
Ah, one and all, how they helped, would dis-
part now and now combine, Zealous to hasten the work, heighten their master his praise!
And one would bury his brow with a blind
plunge down to hell,
Burrow awhile and build, broad on the roots of things,
Then up again swim into sight, having based me my palace well, 15
Founded it, fearless of flame, flat on the nether springs

And another would mount and march, like the excellent minion he was,
Aye, another and yet another, one crowd
but with many a crest,
Raising my rampired walls of gold as transparent as glass,
Eager to do and die, yield each his place to
the rest; 20
For higher still and higher (as a runner tips with fire,
When a great illumination surprises a festal
night —
Outlined round and round Rome's dome from space to spire)
Up, the pinnacled glory reached, and the pride of my soul was in sight.

In sight? Not half! for it seemed, it was certain, to match man's birth, 25 Nature in turn conceived, obeying an impulse as I;
And the emulous heaven yearned down, made effort to reach the earth,
As the earth had done her best, in my passion, to scale the sky,
Novel splendors burst forth, grew familiar and dwelt with mine,
Not a point nor peak but found and fixed its wandering star — 30
Meteor-moons, balls of blaze; and they did not pale nor pine,
For earth had attained to heaven — there was no more near nor far.

Nay, more, for there wanted not who walked in the glare and glow,
Presences plain in the place, or, fresh from the Protoplast,

Abt Vogler Georg Joseph Vogler (1749-1814), also known as Abbé (or Abt) Vogler, was a noted German musician. He invented a kind of small organ called the orchestrion. He was a skilled organist and composer.

from the open space between the colonnades to the cross on top of the dome. The cathedral is often illuminated for special festivals 34 fresh . . . Protoplast, fresh from the mass of protoplasm — i.e., just created.

Furnished for ages to come, when a kindlier wind should blow, 35
 Lured now to begin and live, in a house to their liking at last;
 Or else the wonderful Dead who have passed through the body and gone,
 But were back once more to breathe in an old world worth their new.
 What never had been, was now, what was, as it shall be anon;
 And what is — shall I say, matched both? for
 I was made perfect, too. 40

All through my keys that gave their sounds
 to a wish of my soul,
 All through my soul that praised as its wish flowed visibly forth,
 All through music and me! For think, had I painted the whole,
 Why, there it had stood, to see, nor the process so wonder-worth;
 Had I written the same, made verse — still,
 effect proceeds from cause, 45
 Ye know why the forms are fair, ye hear how the tale is told,
 It is all triumphant art, but art in obedience to laws,
 Painter and poet are proud in the artist-list enrolled. —

But here is the finger of God, a flash of the will that can,
 Existent behind all laws, that made them
 and, lo, they are! 50
 And I know not if, save in this, such gift be allowed to man,
 That out of three sounds he frame, not a fourth sound, but a star
 Consider it well: each tone of our scale in itself is naught;
 It is everywhere in the world — loud, soft,
 and all is said —
 Give it to me to use! I mix it with two in my thought — 55
 And there! Ye have heard and seen, consider, and bow the head!

Well, it is gone at last, the palace of music I reared;
 Gone! and the good tears start, the praises
 that come too slow;
 For one is assured at first, one scarce can say that he feared,
 That he even gave it a thought, the gone
 thing was to go. 60

43-44 had I painted . . . wonder-worth, if I had painted the structure, there it would be to look at, but the process of painting would not be worth much wonder since it would have conformed to recognized laws

Never to be again! But many more of the kind
 As good, nay, better perchance; is this your comfort to me?
 To me, who must be saved because I cling with my mind
 To the same, same self, same love, same
 God, aye, what was, shall be.

Therefore to whom turn I but to thee, the ineffable Name? 65
 Builder and maker, thou, of houses not made with hands!
 What, have fear of change from thee who art ever the same?
 Doubt that thy power can fill the heart that thy power expands?
 There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;
 The evil is null, is naught, is silence implying sound; 70
 What was good shall be good, with, for evil,
 so much good more;
 On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven
 a perfect round.

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist,
 Not its semblance, but itself, no beauty, nor good, nor power
 Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist 75
 When eternity affirms the conception of an
 hour.
 The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,
 The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,
 Are music sent up to God by the lover and
 the bard
 Enough that he heard it once, we shall hear it by and by. 80

And what is our failure here but a triumph's evidence
 For the fullness of the days? Have we withered or agonized?
 Why else was the pause prolonged but that singing might issue thence?
 Why rushed the discords in, but that harmony should be prized?
 Sorrow is hard to bear, and doubt is slow to
 clear, 85
 Each sufferer says his say, his scheme of the weal and woe

66 Builder and maker Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Hebrews, 11:10) houses . . . hands. "For we know that if our earthly house were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" (2 Corinthians, 5:1).

But God has a few of us whom he whispers in the ear,
The rest may reason and welcome, 'tis we musicians know

Well, it is earth with me; silence resumes her reign

I will be patient and proud, and soberly
acquiesce. 90

Give me the keys. I feel for the common chord again,

Sliding by semitones till I sink to the minor
— yes,

And I blunt it into a ninth, and I stand on alien ground,

Surveying awhile the heights I rolled from into the deep,

Which, hark, I have dared and done, for my resting-place is found, 95

The C Major of this life, so, now I will try to sleep. (1864)

RABBI BEN EZRA

Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made
Our times are in his hand
Who saith, "A whole I planned, 5
Youth shows but half Trust God; see all,
nor be afraid!"

Not that, amassing flowers,
Youth sighed, "Which rose make ours,
Which lily leave and then as best recall?"
Not that, admiring stars, 10
It yearned, "Nor Jove, nor Mars,
Mine be some figured flame which blends, transcends them all!"

Not for such hopes and fears
Annulling youth's brief years,
Do I remonstrate—folly wide the mark! 15
Rather I prize the doubt
Low kinds exist without,
Finished and finite clods, untroubled by a spark.

91-96 common chord, etc As the musician had mounted to supreme heights of thought through the medium of his art, so he now descends to level ground He strikes different chords—plaintive and poignant minors, then reassuring harmonies that lead at last to C major, the natural scale without variations of sharps and flats, hence symbolic of the common level of everyday life

Rabbi Ben Ezra. Rabbi Ben Ezra was a distinguished Jewish philosopher, physician, astronomer, and poet of the largely from his writings, the poem is one of the best expressions of Browning's own philosophy of life.

Poor vaunt of life indeed,
Were man but formed to feed 20
On joy, to solely seek and find and feast
Such feasting ended, then
As sure an end to men;
Irks care the crop-full bird? Frets doubt the maw-crammed beast?

Rejoice we are allied 25
To that which doth provide
And not partake, effect and not receive!
A spark disturbs our clod,
Nearer we hold of God
Who gives, than of his tribes that take, I must believe. 30

Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go!
Be our joys three-parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain, 35
Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!

For thence — a paradox
Which comforts while it mocks —
Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail.
What I aspired to be, 40
And was not, comforts me,
A brute I might have been, but would not sink i' the scale.

What is he but a brute
Whose flesh has soul to suit,
Whose spirit works lest arms and legs want
play? 45
To man, propose this test —
Thy body at its best,
How far can that project thy soul on its lone
way?

Yet gifts should prove their use:
I own the Past profuse 50
Of power each side, perfection every turn,
Eyes, ears took in their dole,
Brain treasured up the whole;
Should not the heart beat once, "How good to live and learn"?

Not once beat, "Praise be thine! 55
I see the whole design,
I, who saw power, see now Love perfect too;
Perfect I call thy plan.
Thanks that I was a man!
Maker, remake, complete — I trust what thou shalt do!" 60

24 Irks . . . bird, does care irk the crop-full bird? 40-41
What me Cf Saul, 295-296, page 219 57 I . . . too.
Cf Saul, 242, 305-306, pages 218, 219

For pleasant is this flesh;
Our soul, in its rose-mesh
Pulled ever to the earth, still yearns for rest.
Would we some prize might hold
To match those manifold 65
Possessions of the brute — gain most, as we did best!

Let us not always say,
"Spite of this flesh today
I strove, made head, gained ground upon the
whole!"
As the bird wings and sings,
Let us cry, "All good things
Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul!"

Therefore I summon age
To grant youth's heritage,
Life's struggle having so far reached its term.
Thence shall I pass, approved 76
A man, for aye removed
From the developed brute — a god, though in the germ.

And I shall thereupon
Take rest, ere I be gone 80
Once more on my adventure brave and new,
Fearless and unperplexed,
When I wage battle next,
What weapons to select, what armor to indue

Youth ended, I shall try 85
My gain or loss thereby;
Leave the fire ashes, what survives is gold.
And I shall weigh the same,
e life its praise or blame.
The end, all lay in dispute; I shall know, being
It is old. 90

the Past."

For more is not reserved
To man, with soul just nerved
To act tomorrow what he learns today; 105
Here, work enough to watch
The Master work, and catch Hints of the proper craft, tricks of the tool's true play.

As it was better, youth
Should strive, through acts uncouth, 110
Toward making, than repose on aught found
made;
So, better, age, exempt
From strife, should know, than tempt Further. Thou waitedst age; wait death nor be afraid!

Enough now, if the Right 115
And Good and Infinite
Be named here, as thou callest thy hand thine own,
With knowledge absolute,
Subject to no dispute
From fools that crowded youth, nor let thee feel alone. 120

Be there, for once and all,
Severed great minds from small,
Announced to each his station in the Past!
Was I, the world arraigned,
Were they, my soul disdained, 125
Right? Let age speak the truth and give us peace at last!

Now, who shall arbitrate?
Ten men love what I hate,
Shun what I follow, slight what I receive,
Ten, who in ears and eyes 130
Match me. We all surmise,
They this thing, and I that; whom shall my soul believe?

Not on the vulgar mass
Called "work," must sentence pass —
Things done, that took the eye and had the price, 135
O'er which, from level stand,
The low world laid its hand,
Found straightway to its mind, could value in a trice:

But all, the world's coarse thumb
And finger failed to plumb, 140
So passed in making up the main account,
All instincts immature,

All purposes unsure,
That weighed not as his work, yet swelled
the man's amount:

Thoughts hardly to be packed 145
Into a narrow act,
Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
All I could never be,
All, men ignored in me,
This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped 150

Aye, note that Potter's wheel,
That metaphor! and feel Why time spins fast, why passive lies our clay —
Thou, to whom fools propound,
When the wine makes its round, 155
"Since life fleets, all is change; the Past gone, seize today!"

Fool! All that is, at all,
Lasts ever, past recall,
Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure
What entered into thee, 160
That was, is, and shall be Time's wheel runs back or stops, Potter and

He fixed thee 'mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, would fain arrest — 165
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

What though the earlier grooves,
Which ran the laughing loves 170
Around thy base, no longer pause and press?
What though, about thy rim,
Skull-things in order grim
Grow out, in graver mood, obey the sterner stress?

Look not thou down but up! 175
To uses of a cup,
The festal board, lamp's flash, and trumpet's
peal,
The new wine's foaming flow,
The Master's lips aglow!
Thou, heaven's consummate cup, what needst
thou with earth's wheel? 180

151 that Potter's wheel. Cf Isaiah, 64 8 — "But now, O Lord, thou art our father, we are the clay, and thou our potter, and we all are the work of thy hand" Cf also FitzGerald's Rubáiyát, 325-360, pp 421-22 157-162 Fool, etc Compare Abi Vogler, 69-80, page 279

But I need, now as then,
Thee, God, who moldest men;
And since, not even while the whirl was worst,
Did I — to the wheel of life
With shapes and colors rife, 185
Bound dizzily — mistake my end, to slake
Thy thirst.

So, take and use Thy work,
Amend what flaws may lurk,
What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past
the aim!
My times be in Thy hand! 190
Perfect the cup as planned!
Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same! (1864)

A DEATH IN THE DESERT

A Death in the Desert This poem presents the an imaginary scene in which the aged Apostle St dying in a cave in the desert He is attended anc by five devoted companions The opening lines, 1-12, "P", to have been written by the owner of the parchment i the famous incident is recorded The supposed autho narrative was Pamphylax, of the city of Antioch, in Th He and Xanthus were present at the death of the Apo 2 rolls, manuscripts rolled up. 4 Epsilon and Mu t 1 Xi (line 7) are letters of the Greek alphabet Epsilon and Mu mark divisions of the parchment, Xi is its letter or number 6 terebinth, the turpentine tree 10 I may not write it. He is probably illiterate 23 the decree, i.e., one for persecuting the Christians, probably the one issued by Domitian (51-96), the emperor of Rome

Reached there a little, and we would not lose
The last of what might happen on his face.
I at the head, and Xanthus at the feet,
With Valens and the Boy, had lifted him, 30
And brought him from the chamber in the depths,
And laid him in the light where we might see;
For certain smiles began about his mouth,
And his lids moved, presageful of the end.

Beyond, and halfway up the mouth o' the cave, 35
The Bactrian convert, having his desire,
Kept watch, and made pretense to graze a goat
That gave us milk, on rags of various herb,
Plantain and quitch, the rocks' shade keeps
alive—

So that if any thief or soldier passed 40
(Because the persecution was aware),
Yielding the goat up promptly with his life,
Such man might pass on, joyful at a prize,
Nor care to pry into the cool o' the cave.
Outside was all noon and the burning blue. 45

"Here is wine," answered Xanthus — dropped a drop;
I stooped and placed the lap of cloth aright,
Then chafed his right hand, and the Boy his
left,
But Valens had bethought him, and produced
And broke a ball of nard, and made perfume
Only, he did — not so much wake, as — turn
And smile a little, as a sleeper does 52
If any dear one call him, touch his face —
And smiles and loves, but will not be disturbed.

Then Xanthus said a prayer, but still he slept
It is the Xanthus that escaped to Rome, 56
Was burned, and could not write the chronicle.

Then the Boy sprang up from his knees, and ran,
Stung by the splendor of a sudden thought,
And fetched the seventh plate of graven lead
Out of the secret chamber, found a place, 61
Pressing with finger on the deeper dints,
And spoke, as 'twere his mouth proclaiming
first,
"I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Whereat he opened his eyes wide at once, 65
And sat up of himself, and looked at us;

And thenceforth nobody pronounced a word.
Only, outside, the Bactrian cried his cry
Like the lone desert-bird that wears the ruff,
As signal we were safe, from time to time. 70

First he said, "If a friend declared to me,
This my son Valens, this my other son,
Were James and Peter — nay, declared as
well

This lad was very John — I could believe!
— Could, for a moment, doubtlessly believe;
So is myself withdrawn into my depths, 76
The soul retreated from the perished brain
Whence it was wont to feel and use the world
Through these dull members, done with long ago

Yet I myself remain; I feel myself— 80
And there is nothing lost. Let be, awhile!"

[This is the doctrine he was wont to teach,
How divers persons witness in each man,
Three souls which make up one soul; first, to
wit,

A soul of each and all the bodily parts, 85
Seated therein, which works, and is what Does,

And has the use of earth, and ends the man
Downward; but, tending upward for advice,
Grows into, and again is grown into
By the next soul, which, seated in the brain,
Useth the first with its collected use, 91
And feeleth, thinketh, willeth — is what Knows;

Which, duly tending upward in its turn,
Grows into, and again is grown into
By the last soul, that uses both the first, 95
Subsisting whether they assist or no,
And, constituting man's self, is what Is —
And leans upon the former, makes it play,
As that played off the first: and, tending up,
Holds, is upheld by, God, and ends the man
Upward in that dread point of intercourse, 101
Nor needs a place, for it returns to Him.
What Does, what Knows, what Is; three souls, one man.

No call to write again — I found a way,

His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow, and his eyes were as a flame of fire, And his feet like unto fine brass . . . Men should, for love's sake, in love's strength believe;

Or I would pen a letter to a friend
 And urge the same as friend, nor less nor
 more 150

Friends said I reasoned rightly, and believed
 But at the last, why, I seemed left alive
 Like a sea-jelly weak on Patmos strand,
 To tell dry sea-beach gazers how I fared
 When there was mid-sea, and the mighty
 things; 155

Left to repeat, 'I saw, I heard, I knew,'
 And go all over the old ground again,
 With Antichrist already in the world,
 And many Antichrists, who answered prompt,
 'Am I not Jasper as thyself art John?' 160
 Nay, young, whereas through age thou mayest forget;
 Wherefore, explain, or how shall we believe?' 165

I never thought to call down fire on such,
 Or, as in wonderful and early days,
 Pick up the scorpion, tread the serpent
 dumb;

But patient stated much of the Lord's life 166
 Forgotten or misdelivered, and let it work,
 Since much that at the first, in deed and word,
 Lay simply and sufficiently exposed,
 Had grown (or else my soul was grown to
 match, 170

Fed through such years, familiar with such
 light,

Guarded and guided still to see and speak)
 Of new significance and fresh result;
 What first were guessed as points, I now knew
 stars,

And named them in the Gospel I have writ
 For men said, 'It is getting long ago, 176
 Where is the promise of his coming?' —
 asked

These young ones in their strength, as loath to
 wait,

Of me who, when their sires were born, was
 old.

I, for I loved them, answered, joyfully, 180
 Since I was there, and helpful in my age;
 And, in the main, I think such men believed
 Finally, thus endeavoring, I fell sick,
 Ye brought me here, and I supposed the end,
 And went to sleep with one thought that, at
 least, 185

Though the whole earth should lie in wickedness,

We had the truth, might leave the rest to God.

148 Men . . . believe. The Gospel of John, in its mild-ness of tone and spirit, stresses the Godlikeness of Christ through his manifestation of divine love 156 I saw . . .
knew. These expressions appear frequently in Revelation 158 Antichrist, a personification of sin and evil in the world See John, 2 18, 22

Yet now I wake in such decrepitude
As I have slidden down and fallen afar,
Past even the presence of my former self, 190
Grasping the while for stay at facts which snap,

Till I am found away from my own world,
Feeling for foothold through a blank profound,
Along with unborn people in strange lands,
Who say — I hear said or conceive they say —
'Was John at all, and did he say he saw?' 196
Assure us, ere we ask what he might see!

"And how shall I assure them? Can they share —

They, who have flesh, a veil of youth and
strength
About each spirit, that needs must bide its
time, 200

Living and learning still as years assist
Which wear the thickness thin, and let man
see —

With me who hardly am withheld at all,
But shudderingly, scarce a shred between,
Lie bare to the universal prick of light? 205
Is it for nothing we grow old and weak,
We whom God loves? When pain ends, gain ends too.

To me, that story — aye, that Life and Death
Of which I wrote 'it was' — to me, it is;
— Is, here and now; I apprehend naught
else.

Is not God now i' the world his power first
made? 211

Is not his love at issue still with sin,
Visibly when a wrong is done on earth?
Love, wrong, and pain, what see I else around?
Yea, and the Resurrection and Uprise 215
To the right hand of the throne — what is it beside,

When such truth, breaking bounds, o'erfloods
my soul,

And, as I saw the sin and death, even so
See I the need yet transiency of both,
The good and glory consummated thence? 220
I saw the power; I see the Love, once weak,
Resume the Power, and in this word 'I see,'
Lo, there is recognized the Spirit of both,
That moving o'er the spirit of man, unblinds
His eye and bids him look. These are, I see,
But ye, the children, his beloved ones too, 226
Ye need — as I should use an optic glass

I wondered at erewhile, somewhere i' the
world,

It had been given a crafty smith to make;
A tube, he turned on objects brought too
close, 230

Lying confusedly insubordinate
For the unassisted eye to master once:
Look through his tube, at distance now they
lay,

Become succinct, distinct, so small, so clear!
Just thus, ye needs must apprehend what
truth 235

I see, reduced to plain historic fact,
Diminished into clearness, proved a point
And far away; ye would withdraw your sense
From out eternity, strain it upon time,
Then stand before that fact, that Life and
Death, 240

Stay there at gaze, till it dispart, disspread,
As though a star should open out, all sides,
Grow the world on you, as it is my world.

"For life, with all it yields of joy and woe,
And hope and fear — believe the aged
friend — 245

Is just our chance o' the prize of learning love,
How love might be, hath been indeed, and is,
And that we hold thenceforth to the uttermost
Such prize despite the envy of the world,
And, having gained truth, keep truth; that is
all. 250

But see the double way wherein we are led,
How the soul learns diversely from the flesh!
With flesh, that hath so little time to stay,
And yields mere basement for the soul's em-
prise,

Expect prompt teaching. Helpful was the
light, 255

And warmth was cherishing, and food was choice

To every man's flesh, thousand years ago,
As now to yours and mine; the body sprang
At once to the height, and stayed. but the soul — no!

Since sages who, this noontide, meditate 260
In Rome or Athens, may descry some point
Of the eternal power, hid yestereve,
And, as thereby the power's whole mass extends,

So much extends the ether floating o'er
The love that tops the might, the Christ in
God. 265

Then, as new lessons shall be learned in these Till earth's work stop and useless time run out,
So duly, daily, needs provision be
For keeping the soul's prowess possible,
Building new barriers as the old decay, 270
Saving us from evasion of life's proof,
Putting the question ever, 'Does God love,
And will ye hold that truth against the world?'

188-197. Yet now . . . might see. In these lines Browning prepares for the prophetic utterances of John against later attacks on Christian belief. Dying persons were long regarded as gifted with prophecy. Cf. Arnold's Sohrab and

Shakespeare's Richard II, II, i, 5-16. 208 that story, as recorded in the Gospel of John 221-222. I see . . . Power.

of optical toy or magnifying glass set in a tube

Ye know there needs no second proof with
 good 274
 Gained for our flesh from any earthly source,
 We might go freezing, ages, give us fire —
 Thereafter we judge fire at its full worth,
 And guard it safe through every chance, ye
 know!
 That fable of Prometheus and his theft,
 How mortals gained Jove's fiery flower, grows
 old 280
 (I have been used to hear the pagans own)
 And out of mind, but fire, howe'er its birth,
 Here is it, precious to the sophist now
 Who laughs the myth of Æschylus to scorn,
 As precious to those satyrs of his play, 285
 Who touched it in gay wonder at the thing.
 While were it so with the soul — this gift of
 truth,
 Once grasped, were this our soul's gain safe,
 and sure
 To prosper as the body's gain is wont —
 Why, man's probation would conclude, his
 earth 290
 Crumble; for he both reasons and decides,
 Weighs first, then chooses will he give up fire
 For gold or purple, once he knows its worth?
 Could he give Christ up were his worth as
 plain?
 Therefore, I say, to test man, the proofs shift,
 Nor may he grasp that fact like other fact, 296
 And straightway in his life acknowledge it,
 As, say, the indubitable bliss of fire.
 Sigh ye, 'It had been easier once than now'?
 To give you answer I am left alive, 300
 Look at me who was present from the first!
 Ye know what things I saw, then came a test,
 My first, befitting me who so had seen
 'Forsake the Christ thou sawest transfigured,
 him
 Who trod the sea and brought the dead to
 life? 305
 What should wring this from thee?' — ye laugh and ask What wrung it? Even a torchlight and a noise,
 The sudden Roman faces, violent hands,
 And fear of what the Jews might do! Just
 that.

279 Prometheus . . . theft Grieved at the neglect of mankind by the gods, Prometheus stole fire from heaven and carried it in a hollow reed to man. In anger Zeus (Jove) bound Prometheus to a mountain where a vulture daily fed upon his liver. 283-285 sophist . . . play. The sophists were teachers of rhetoric, philosophy, and conduct, in ancient Greece. They flourished in the 5th century B.C. They ridiculed traditional mythology, such as the myth of Prometheus, which was used by Æschylus (525-456 B.C.), the great Greek tragic dramatist, in his Prometheus Bound. This was a dramatic trilogy, only one part of which is preserved, in the lost parts the satyrs may have touched the fire as Browning imagines. The satyrs were demigods, half man and half goat, given to riotous merriment. 305 Who life, incidents recorded in John, 6:15-21, and 11:1-44

And it is written, 'I forsook and fled' 310
 There was my trial, and it ended thus Aye, but my soul had gained its truth, could
 grow;
 Another year or two — what little child,
 What tender woman, that had seen no least
 Of all my sights, but barely heard them told,
 Who did not clasp the cross with a light
 laugh, 316
 Or wrap the burning robe round, thanking
 God?
 Well, was truth safe forever, then? Not so Already had begun the silent work
 Whereby truth, deadened of its absolute blaze, Might need love's eye to pierce the o'er-stretched doubt 321
 Teachers were busy, whispering 'All is true
 As the aged ones report; but youth can reach Where age gropes dimly, weak with stir and
 strain,
 And the full doctrine slumbers till today' 325
 Thus, what the Roman's lowered spear was
 found,
 A bar to me who touched and handled truth,
 Now proved the glozing of some new shrewd
 tongue,
 This Ebion, this Cerinthus, or their mates,
 Till imminent was the outcry 'Save our
 Christ!' 330
 Whereon I stated much of the Lord's life
 Forgotten or misdelivered, and let it work
 Such work done, as it will be, what comes next?
 What do I hear say, or conceive men say,
 'Was John at all, and did he say he saw?' 335
 Assure us, ere we ask what he might see!

"Is this indeed a burden for late days,
 And may I help to bear it with you all,
 Using my weakness which becomes your
 strength?
 For if a babe were born inside this grot, 340
 Grew to a boy here, heard us praise the sun,
 Yet had but yon sole glimmer in light's
 place —
 One, loving him and wishful he should learn,
 Would much rejoice himself was blinded first Month by month here, so made to understand 345
 How eyes, born darkling, apprehend amiss.
 I think I could explain to such a child
 There was more glow outside than gleams he caught,

310 I forsook and fled The account of Christ's desertion by his disciples when he was betrayed and taken by the mob is found in Matthew, 26:47-56, Mark, 14:43-50, and John, 18:1-12. 326 found, i.e. found to be. 328 proved, i.e. proved to be. 329 Ebion, Cerinthus Ebion and Cerinthus were early heretics who believed Jesus to have been a mere man, though possessed of divine power. The Gospel of St. John is said to have been written against them. St. Luke and St. Paul were also said to have written against them.

Aye, nor need urge 'I saw it, so believe!'
It is a heavy burden you shall bear 350
In latter days, new lands, or old grown
strange,

Left without me, which must be very soon
What is the doubt, my brothers? Quick with it!
I see you stand conversing, each new face,
Either in fields, of yellow summer eves, 355
On islets yet unnamed amid the sea;
Or pace for shelter 'neath a portico
Out of the crowd in some enormous town
Where now the larks sing in a solitude;
Or muse upon blank heaps of stone and sand
Idly conjectured to be Ephesus; 361
And no one asks his fellow any more
'Where is the promise of his coming?' but
'Has he revealed in any of his lives,
As Power, as Love, as Influencing Soul?' 365

"Quick, for time presses, tell the whole mind
out,

And let us ask and answer and be saved!
My book speaks on, because it cannot pass;
One listens quietly, nor scoffs but pleads,
'Here is a tale of things done ages since; 370
What truth was ever told the second day?
Wonders, that would prove doctrine, go for naught

Remains the doctrine, love; well, we must
love,

And what we love most, power and love in
one,

Let us acknowledge on the record here, 375
Accepting these in Christ. Must Christ then
be?

Has he been? Did not we ourselves make
him?

Our mind receives but what it holds, no more.
First of the love, then, we acknowledge
Christ —

A proof we comprehend his love, a proof 380
We had such love already in ourselves,

Knew first what else we should not recognize
'Tis mere projection from man's inmost mind,
And, what he loves, thus falls reflected back,

Becomes accounted somewhat out of him, 385
He throws it up in air, it drops down earth's,
With shape, name, story added, man's old
way

How prove you Christ came otherwise at least?

Next try the power. he made and rules the
world;

Certes there is a world once made, now ruled,
Unless things have been ever as we see 391

353 my brothers, Christians of the distant future
361 Ephesus, an ancient Greek city on the coast of Asia Minor 368 speaks on, i.e., to future ages 371. What day He seems to mean that tradition cannot be trusted 385 somewhat out of him, something drawn out of him

Our sires declared a charioteer's yoked steeds Brought the sun up the east and down the
west,

Which only of itself now rises, sets,
As if a hand impelled it and a will — 395
Thus they long thought, they who had will
and hands;

But the new question's whisper is distinct,
Wherefore must all force needs be like ourselves?

We have the hands, the will; what made and drives

The sun is force, is law, is named, not known, While will and love we do know; marks of
these, 401

Eye-witnesses attest, so books declare —

As that, to punish or reward our race,
The sun at undue times arose or set

Or else stood still: what do not men affirm?
But earth requires as urgently reward 406

Or punishment today as years ago,
And none expects the sun will interpose;
Therefore it was mere passion and mistake,
Or erring zeal for right, which changed the
truth. 410

Go back, far, farther, to the birth of things;
Ever the will, the intelligence, the love,
Man's! — which he gives, supposing he but finds,

As late he gave head, body, hands, and feet,
To help these in what forms he called his gods.
First, Jove's brow, Juno's eyes were swept
away, 416

But Jove's wrath, Juno's pride continued long,
As last, will, power, and love discarded these,
So law in turn discards power, love, and will
What proveth God is otherwise at least? 420
All else, projection from the mind of man!

"Nay, do not give me wine, for I am strong,
But place my gospel where I put my hands

"I say that man was made to grow, not stop,
That help, he needed once, and needs no
more, 425

Having grown but an inch by, is withdrawn.
For he hath new needs, and new helps to
these.

This imports solely, man should mount on
each

New height in view; the help whereby he mounts,

392-393 a charioteer's . west. In Greek mythology Phoebus Apollo, the sun-god, drove westerly all day in his flaming chariot of the sun 405 stood still. At Joshua's command the sun stood still until the Gibeonites had avenged themselves upon their enemies (see Joshua, 10 12-14) 416 Jove's Juno's. Juno was queen of the gods and wife of Jove 418 these, Jove's wrath and Juno's pride 424-431
I say . . . the Truth. These lines contain a favorite doctrine of Browning Cf. Andrea del Sarto, 97-98, page 267,

The ladder-rung his foot has left, may fall, 430
Since all things suffer change save God the
Truth.

Man apprehends him newly at each stage
Whereat earth's ladder drops, its service
done,

And nothing shall prove twice what once was proved.

You stick a garden-plot with ordered twigs 435
To show inside lie germs of herbs unborn,
And check the careless step would spoil their birth,

But when herbs wave, the guardian twigs may
go,

Since should ye doubt of virtues, question kinds,

It is no longer for old twigs ye look, 440
Which proved once underneath lay store of
seed,

But to the herb's self, by what light ye boast,
For what fruit's signs are This book's fruit is plain,

Nor miracles need prove it any more.

Doth the fruit show? Then miracles bade
'ware 445

At first of root and stem, saved both till now
From trampling ox, rough boar, and wanton
goat

What? Was man made a wheelwork to wind
up,

And be discharged, and straight wound up anew?

No! — grown, his growth lasts, taught, he ne'er forgets, 450

May learn a thousand things, not twice the
same

"This might be pagan teaching; now hear
mine.

"I say, that as the babe, you feed awhile,
Becomes a boy and fit to feed himself,
So, minds at first must be spoon-fed with
truth, 455

When they can eat, babe's nurture is withdrawn

I fed the babe whether it would or no;
I bid the boy or feed himself or starve
I cried once, "That ye may believe in Christ,
Behold this blind man shall receive his sight!"
I cry now, "Urgest thou, for I am shrewd" 461
And smile at stories how John's word could cure —

Repeat that miracle and take my faith?

I say, that miracle was duly wrought
When, save for it, no faith was possible 465

Whether a change were wrought 't the shows
o' the world,

Whether the change came from our minds which see

Of shows o' the world so much as and no more
Than God wills for his purpose — what do I See now, suppose you, there where you see
rock 470

Round us? — I know not, such was the effect,
So faith grew, making void more miracles
Because too much, they would compel, not help

I say, the acknowledgment of God in Christ
Accepted by thy reason, solves for thee 475

All questions in the earth and out of it,
And has so far advanced thee to be wise
Wouldst thou unprove this to re-prove the proved?

In life's mere minute, with power to use that proof,

Leave knowledge and revert to how it sprung?
Thou hast it; use it and forthwith, or die! 481

"For I say, this is death and the sole death,
When a man's loss comes to him from his gain,

Darkness from light, from knowledge ignorance,

And lack of love from love made manifest, 485
A lamp's death when, replete with oil, it
chokes,

A stomach's when, surcharged with food, it starves

With ignorance was surety of a cure
When man, appalled at nature, questioned
first,

"What if there lurk a might behind this might?"
He needed satisfaction God could give, 491

And did give, as ye have the written word;
But when he finds might still redouble might,
Yet asks, "Since all is might, what use of will?"
— Will, the one source of might — he being
man 495

With a man's will and a man's might, to teach
In little how the two combine in large — That man has turned round on himself and
stands,

Which in the course of nature is, to die

"And when man questioned, 'What if there be love 500

Behind the will and might, as real as they?" —
He needed satisfaction God could give,
And did give, as ye have the written word,
But when, beholding that love everywhere,
He reasons, "Since such love is everywhere,
And since ourselves can love and would be
loved, 506

460 Behold . . . sight. The healing of the blind man is recorded in John, 9 1-25. In 20 30-31 John states that the miracles "are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God."

We ourselves make the love, and Christ was
not' —

How shall ye help this man who knows himself

That he must love and would be loved again,
Yet, owning his own love that proveth Christ,
Rejecteth Christ through very need of him?
The lamp o'erswims with oil, the stomach
flags

Loaded with nurture, and that man's soul dies.

"If he rejoin, 'But this was all the while
A trick, the fault was, first of all, in thee, 515
Thy story of the places, names, and dates,
Where, when, and how the ultimate truth had
rise —

Thy prior truth, at last discovered none,
Whence now the second suffers detriment
What good of giving knowledge if, because 520
O' the manner of the gift, its profit fail?
And why refuse what modicum of help
Had stopped the after-doubt, impossible
I' the face of truth — truth absolute, uniform?
Why must I hit of this and miss of that, 525
Distinguish just as I be weak or strong,
And not ask of thee and have answer prompt,
Was this once, was it not once? — then and
now

And evermore, plain truth from man to man.
Is John's procedure just the heathen bard's?
Put question of his famous play again, 531
How, for the ephemerals' sake, Jove's fire was filched,

And carried in a cane and brought to earth;
The fact is in the fable, cry the wise,
Mortals obtained the boon, so much is fact, 535
Though fire be spirit and produced on earth
As with the Titan's, so now with thy tale;
Why breed in us perplexity, mistake,
Nor tell the whole truth in the proper words?"

"I answer, Have ye yet to argue out 540
The very primal thesis, plainest law —
Man is not God, but hath God's end to serve,
A master to obey, a course to take,
Somewhat to cast off, somewhat to become?
Grant this, then man must pass from old to
new, 545

From vain to real, from mistake to fact,
From what once seemed good, to what now proves best.

How could man have progression otherwise?
Before the point was mooted 'What is God?'
No savage man inquired 'What am myself?'

Much less replied, 'First, last, and best of
things.' 551

Man takes that title now if he believes
Might can exist with neither will nor love,
In God's case — what he names now Nature's Law —

While in himself he recognizes love 555
No less than might and will: and rightly takes.

Since if man prove the sole existent thing
Where these combine, whatever their degree,
However weak the might or will or love,
So they be found there, put in evidence — 560
He is as surely higher in the scale
Than any might with neither love nor will,
As life, apparent in the poorest midge (When the faint dust-speck flits, ye guess its wing),

Is marvelous beyond dead Atlas' self — 565
Given to the nobler midge for resting-place!
Thus, man proves best and highest — God,
in fine,

And thus the victory leads but to defeat,
The gain to loss, best rise to the worst fall,
His life becomes impossible, which is death

"But if, appealing thence, he cower, avouch
He is mere man, and in humility 572
Neither may know God nor mistake himself,
I point to the immediate consequence
And say, by such confession straight he falls
Into man's place, a thing nor God nor beast,
Made to know that he can know and not
more;

Lower than God, who knows all and can all,
Higher than beasts, which know and can so
far

As each beast's limit, perfect to an end, 580
Nor conscious that they know, nor craving
more,

While man knows partly but conceives beside,
Creeps ever on from fancies to the fact,
And in this striving, this converting air
Into a solid he may grasp and use, 585
Finds progress, man's distinctive mark alone,
Not God's, and not the beasts' — God is,
they are,

Man partly is and wholly hopes to be
Such progress could no more attend his soul,
Were all it struggles after found at first 590
And guesses changed to knowledge absolute,
Than motion wait his body, were all else
Than it the solid earth on every side,
Where now through space he moves from rest
to rest.

Man, therefore, thus conditioned, must expect

523 Had stopped, would have stopped 530 the eus Bound* 532 ephemerals', mortals' 537 the Titan's

answer Lines 540-633 express Browning's own philosophy

552 that title, the title of "First, last, and best of things"
565 Atlas' self. Atlas was a giant Titan who warred against Zeus and who was forced to carry the heavens on his head and hands

He could not, what he knows now, know at
first, 596

What he considers that he knows today,
Come but tomorrow, he will find misknown;
Getting increase of knowledge, since he learns
Because he lives, which is to be a man, 600
Set to instruct himself by his past self:
First, like the brute, obliged by facts to learn,
Next, as man may, obliged by his own mind,
Bent, habit, nature, knowledge turned to law.

God's gift was that man should conceive of
truth 605

And yearn to gain it, catching at mistake,
As midway help till he reach fact indeed
The statuary, ere he mold a shape,
Boasts a like gift — the shape's idea — and
next

The aspiration to produce the same; 610
So, taking clay, he calls his shape thereout,
Cries ever, 'Now I have the thing I see';
Yet all the while goes changing what was wrought,

From falsehood like the truth, to truth itself
How were it had he cried, 'I see no face, 615
No breast, no feet i' the ineffectual clay'?
Rather commend him that he clapped his
hands,

And laughed, 'It is my shape and lives again!'
Enjoyed the falsehood, touched it on to truth,
Until yourselves applaud the flesh indeed 620
In what is still flesh-imitating clay
Right in you, right in him, such way be man's!

God only makes the live shape at a jet
Will ye renounce this pact of creatureship?
The pattern on the Mount subsists no more,
Seemed awhile, then returned to nothing-
ness;

But copies, Moses strove to make thereby, 627
Serve still and are replaced as time requires
By these, make newest vessels, reach the type!
If ye demur, this judgment on your head, 630
Never to reach the ultimate, angels' law,
Indulging every instinct of the soul
There where law, life, joy, impulse are one
thing!

"Such is the burden of the latest time.
I have survived to hear it with my ears, 635
Answer it with my lips; does this suffice?
For if there be a further woe than such,
Wherein my brothers struggling need a hand,
So long as any pulse is left in mine,
May I be absent even longer yet, 640
Plucking the blind ones back from the abyss,
Though I should tarry a new hundred years!"

623 at a jet, in a moment 625 pattern on the Mount, a reference to the commandments given to Moses by God on Mount Sinai (see Exodus, 19-20)

But he was dead; 'twas about noon, the day
Somewhat declining We five buried him
That eve, and then, dividing, went five ways,
And I, disguised, returned to Ephesus. 646

By this, the cave's mouth must be filled with
sand

Valens is lost, I know not of his trace;
The Bactrian was but a wild childish man,
And could not write nor speak, but only loved
So, lest the memory of this go quite, 651
Seeing that I tomorrow fight the beasts,
I tell the same to Phœbas, whom believe!
For many look again to find that face,
Beloved John's to whom I ministered, 655
Somewhere in life about the world, they err—
Either mistaking what was darkly spoke
At ending of his book, as he relates,
Or misconceiving somewhat of this speech
Scattered from mouth to mouth, as I suppose Believe ye will not see him any more 661
About the world with his divine regard!
For all was as I say, and now the man
Lies as he lay once, breast to breast with God

[Cerinthus read and mused; one added this

"If Christ, as thou affirmest, be of men 666 Mere man, the first and best but nothing
more —

Account him, for reward of what he was,
Now and forever, wretchedest of all
For see, himself conceived of life as love, 670
Conceived of love as what must enter in,
Fill up, make one with his each soul he loved Thus much for man's joy, all men's joy for
him.

Well, he is gone, thou sayest, to fit reward
But by this time are many souls set free, 675
And very many still retained alive;
Nay, should his coming be delayed awhile,
Say, ten years longer (twelve years, some compute),

See if, for every finger of thy hands,
There be not found, that day the world shall
end, 680

Hundreds of souls, each holding by Christ's
word
That he will grow incorporate with all,

652 fight the beasts. This was the method of his martyrdom 653 Phœbas, the person to whom Pamphylax told the incident related in the poem 658 as he relates, a reference to John, 21 20-25 When Christ appeared to the disciples after the Resurrection, Peter asked him what John should do Jesus replied "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me" Verse 23 states that "then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die Yet Jesus said not unto him, He should not die, but, 'If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?'" 662 regard, look 666-687 If Christ, etc These lines are addressed to Cerinthus (see note on line 329) Pamphylax states that Cerinthus could not be saved unless he accepted Christ as God

With me as Pamphylax, with him as John, Groom for each bride! Can a mere man do
this?

Yet Christ saith, this he lived and died to do.
Call Christ, then, the illimitable God, 686
Or lost!

But 'twas Cerinthus that is lost]

CALIBAN UPON SETEBOS;

OR, NATURAL THEOLOGY IN THE ISLAND

"Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself "

['Will sprawl, now that the heat of day is best,
Flat on his belly in the pit's much mire,
With elbows wide, fists clenched to prop his chin.

And, while he kicks both feet in the cool slush,
And feels about his spine small eft-things
course, 5

Run in and out each arm, and make him
laugh;

And while above his head a pompion-plant,
Coating the cave-top as a brow its eye,
Creeps down to touch and tickle hair and beard,

And now a flower drops with a bee inside, 10
And now a fruit to snap at, catch and crunch—
He looks out o'er yon sea, which sunbeams
cross

And recross till they weave a spider-web (Meshes of fire, some great fish breaks at times),

And talks to his own self, howe'er he please,
Touching that other, whom his dam called
God. 16

Because to talk about Him, vexes — ha,
Could He but know! and time to vex is now,
When talk is safer than in winter-time.

Moreover Prosper and Miranda sleep 20
In confidence he drudges at their task;

683 With me . . . John Christ and Pamphylax are to be one, so Christ and John Caliban upon Setebos. Caliban is a kind of semi-intellectual monster, one of the servants of Prospero and his daughter Miranda on the island in Shakespeare's The Tempest. He was the son of the witch Sycorax, who worshiped a god called Setebos, the god of the Patagonians. Caliban sees this god as a capricious and willful being like himself. The poem is therefore a satire on Calvinism and the anthropomorphic idea of God. The quotation at the head of the poem is taken from Psalms, 50 21. It is spoken by God to the wicked.

1-23. 'Will . . . speech. In the first twenty-three lines Caliban describes his physical background and the reason for his theological speculations. In most of the poem he speaks of himself in the third person 5. eft-things, lizard-like animals 7 pompion-plant, a vine of the pumpkin family 17 Him. Pronouns referring to Setebos are capitalized 18 time . . . now, in summer, when Setebos is likely to be away from the island. In winter he would usually be at home, on or near the island.

And it is good to cheat the pair, and gibe,
Letting the rank tongue blossom into speech]

Setebos, Setebos, and Setebos! 24
'Thinketh He dwelleth i' the cold o' the moon.

'Thinketh He made it, with the sun to match,
But not the stars; the stars came otherwise,
Only made clouds, winds, meteors, such as
that;

Also this isle, what lives and grows thereon,
And snaky sea which rounds and ends the
same. 30

'Thinketh, it came of being ill at ease;
He hated that He cannot change His cold,
Nor cure its ache. 'Hath spied an icy fish
That longed to 'scape the rock-stream where she lived,

And thaw herself within the lukewarm brine
O' the lazy sea her stream thrusts far amid, 36
A crystal spike 'twixt two warm walls of wave;
Only, she ever sickened, found repulse
At the other kind of water, not her life (Green-dense and dim-delicious, bred o' the sun), 40

Flounced back from bliss she was not born to breathe,
And in her old bounds buried her despair,
Hating and loving warmth alike: so He.

'Thinketh, He made thereat the sun, this isle, Trees and the fowls here, beast and creeping
thing; 45

Yon otter, sleek-wet, black, lithe as a leech,
Yon auk, one fire-eye in a ball of foam,
That floats and feeds; a certain badger brown
He hath watched hunt with that slant white-wedge eye

By moonlight; and the pie with the long
tongue 50

That pricks deep into oakwarts for a worm,
And says a plain word when she finds her
prize,

But will not eat the ants; the ants themselves
That build a wall of seeds and settled stalks
About their hole — He made all these and
more, 55

Made all we see, and us, in spite, how else?
He could not, Himself, make a second self
To be His mate — as well have made Himself,
He would not make what He mislikes or slights,

An eyesore to Him, or not worth His pains,
But did, in envy, listlessness, or sport, 61
Make what Himself would fain, in a manner,
be —

Weaker in most points, stronger in a few,

Worthy, and yet mere playthings all the while,
Things He admires and mocks too — that
is it. 65

Because, so brave, so better though they be,
It nothing skills if He begin to plague.

Look now, I melt a gourd-fruit into mash,
Add honeycomb and pods, I have perceived,
Which bite like finches when they bill and
kiss — 70

Then, when froth rises bladdery, drink up all,
Quick, quick, till maggots scamper through my brain;

Last, throw me on my back i' the seeded thyme,

And wanton, wishing I were born a bird.

Put case, unable to be what I wish, 75

I yet could make a live bird out of clay,
Would not I take clay, pinch my Caliban

Able to fly? — for, there, see, he hath wings,
And great comb like the hoopoe's to admire,

And there, a sting to do his foes offense; 80

There, and I will that he begin to live,

Fly to yon rock-top, nip me off the horns

Of grigs high up that make the merry din,

Saucy through their veined wings, and mind me not

In which feat, if his leg snapped, brittle clay,

And he lay stupid-like — why, I should laugh,

And if he, spying me, should fall to weep, 87

Beseech me to be good, repair his wrong,

Bid his poor leg smart less or grow again —

Well, as the chance were, this might take or
else 90

Not take my fancy, I might hear his cry,

And give the manikin three sound legs for one,

Or pluck the other off, leave him like an egg,

And lessoned he was mine and merely clay

Were this no pleasure, lying in the thyme, 95

Drinking the mash, with brain become alive,

Making and marring clay at will? So He.

'Thinketh, such shows nor right nor wrong in
Him,

Nor kind, nor cruel; He is strong and Lord

'Am strong myself compared to yonder crabs

That march now from the mountain to the

sea; 101

'Let twenty pass, and stone the twenty-first,

Loving not, hating not, just choosing so

'Say, the first straggler that boasts purple spots

Shall join the file, one pincer twisted off; 105

'Say, this bruised fellow shall receive a worm,

71 bladdery, in bubbles like bladders 75 Put case, etc
If Caliban were the Creator, he would do things out of spite or envy, or as an exercise of absolute will; so does Setebos 79 hoopoe, a kind of bird with a beautiful crest. 83 grigs, crickets. 103 Loving . . . so. This line and lines 98-108 correspond with the Calvinistic doctrine of election and reprobation, whereby some persons are predestined to eternal life and others to eternal death.

And two worms he whose nippers end in red,
As it likes me each time, I do. So He.

Well then, 'supposeth He is good i' the main,
Placable if His mind and ways were guessed,
But rougher than His handiwork, be sure! 111
Oh, He hath made things worthier than Him-
self,

And envieth that, so helped, such things do
more

Than He who made them! What consoles but
this?

That they, unless through Him, do naught at
all, 115

And must submit, what other use in things?

'Hath cut a pipe of pithless elder-joint

That, blown through, gives exact the scream
o' the jay

When from her wing you twitch the feathers
blue;

Sound this, and little birds that hate the jay Flock within stone's throw, glad their foe is hurt 121

Put case such pipe could prattle and boast forsooth,

"I catch the birds, I am the crafty thing,
I make the cry my maker cannot make

With his great round mouth, he must blow through mine!" 125

Would not I smash it with my foot? So He

But wherefore rough, why cold and ill at ease?

Aha, that is a question! Ask, for that,

What knows — the something over Setebos

That made Him, or He, may be, found and
fought, 130

Worsted, drove off, and did to nothing, perchance.

There may be something quiet o'er His head,

Out of His reach, that feels nor joy nor grief,

Since both derive from weakness in some way

I joy because the quails come; would not
joy 135

Could I bring quails here when I have a mind,

This Quiet, all it hath a mind to, doth

'Esteemeth stars the outposts of its couch,

But never spends much thought nor care that
way

It may look up, work up — the worse for
those 140

It works on! 'Careth but for Setebos

The many-handed as a cuttle-fish,

Who, making Himself feared through what
He does,

Looks up, first, and perceives he cannot soar

To what is quiet and hath happy life, 145

Next looks down here, and out of very spite

Makes this a bauble-word to ape yon real,

These good things to match those as hips do grapes.

'Tis solace making baubles, aye, and sport.
 Himself peeped late, eyed Prosper at his books
 Careless and lofty, lord now of the isle; 151
 Vexed, 'stitched a book of broad leaves, arrow-shaped,
 Wrote thereon, he knows what, prodigious
 words;
 Has peeled a wand and called it by a name;
 Weareth at whiles for an enchanter's robe 155
 The cyed skin of a supple oncelot;
 And hath an ounce sleeker than youngling
 mole,
 A four-legged serpent he makes cower and couch,
 Now snarl, now hold its breath and mind his
 eye,
 And saith she is Miranda and my wife 160
 'Keeps for his Ariel a tall pouch-bill crane
 He bids go wade for fish and straight disgorge,
 Also a sea-beast, lumpish, which he snared, Blinded the eyes of, and brought somewhat tame,
 And split its toe-webs, and now pens the drudge 165
 In a hole o' the rock and calls him Caliban —
 A bitter heart that bides its time and bites
 'Plays thus at being Prosper in a way,
 Taketh his mirth with make-believes. So He.

His dam held that the Quiet made all things
 Which Setebos vexed only; 'holds not so. 171
 Who made them weak, meant weakness He might vex.
 Had He meant other, while His hand was in,
 Why not make horny eyes no thorn could
 prick,
 Or plate my scalp with bone against the snow,
 Or overscale my flesh 'neath joint and joint,
 Like an orc's armor? Aye — so spoil His sport! 177
 He is the One now; only He doth all.

'Saith, He may like, perchance, what profits
 Him.
 Aye, himself loves what does him good, but
 why? 180
 'Gets good no otherwise This blinded beast
 Loves whoso places flesh-meat on his nose,
 But, had he eyes, would want no help, but
 hate
 Or love, just as it liked him, He hath eyes.
 Also it pleaseth Setebos to work, 185
 Use all His hands, and exercise much craft,
 By no means for the love of what is worked
 'Tasteth, himself, no finer good i' the world
 When all goes right, in this safe summer-time,

And he wants little, hungers, aches not
 much, 190
 Than trying what to do with wit and strength
 'Falls to make something, 'piled yon pile of turfs,
 And squared and stuck there squares of soft white chalk,
 And, with a fish-tooth, scratched a moon on
 each,
 And set up endwise certain spikes of tree, 195
 And crowned the whole with a sloth's skull
 a-top,
 Found dead i' the woods, too hard for one to kill
 No use at all i' the work, for work's sole sake,
 'Shall some day knock it down again So He
 'Saith He is terrible; watch His feats in proof!
 One hurricane will spoil six good months'
 hope 201
 He hath a spite against me, that I know,
 Just as He favors Prosper, who knows why?
 So it is, all the same, as well I find.
 'Wove wattles half the winter, fenced them firm 205
 With stone and stake to stop she-tortoises
 Crawling to lay their eggs here; well, one wave,
 Feeling the foot of Him upon its neck,
 Gaped as a snake does, lolled out its large
 tongue,
 And licked the whole labor flat — so much for spite. 210

'Saw a ball flame down late (yonder it lies) Where, half an hour before, I slept i' the shade.
 Often they scatter sparkles, there is force!
 'Dug up a newt He may have envied once
 And turned to stone, shut up inside a stone.
 Please Him and hinder this? — What Prosper
 does? 216
 Aha, if He would tell me how! Not He!
 There is the sport; discover how or die!
 All need not die, for of the things o' the isle
 Some flee afar, some dive, some run up trees
 Those at His mercy — why, they please Him
 most 221
 When . . . when . . . well, never try the same way twice!
 Repeat what act has pleased, He may grow
 wroth.
 You must not know His ways, and play Him
 off,
 Sure of the issue 'Doth the like himself. 225
 'Spareth a squirrel that it nothing fears
 But steals the nut from underneath my thumb,

156 oncelot, the ounce, or snow leopard 161 Ariel, an airy spirit in the service of Prospero 177 orc, a sea monster

196 sloth, a slow-moving animal resembling the anteater 205 wattles, twigs

And when I threat, bites stoutly in defense,
'Spareth an urchin that contrariwise,
Curls up into a ball, pretending death 230
For fight at my approach — the two ways
please.

But what would move my choler more than
this,

That either creature counted on its life
Tomorrow and next day and all days to come,
Saying, forsooth, in the inmost of its heart, 235
"Because he did so yesterday with me,
And otherwise with such another brute,
So must he do henceforth and always" —
Aye?

Would teach the reasoning couple what
"must" means!

'Doth as he likes, or wherefore Lord? So He.

'Conceiveth all things will continue thus, 241
And we shall have to live in fear of Him
So long as He lives, keeps His strength; no
change,

If He have done His best, make no new world
To please Him more, so leave off watching
this — 245

If He surprise not even the Quiet's self
Some strange day — or, suppose, grow into it
As grubs grow butterflies, else, here we are,
And there is He, and nowhere help at all

'Believeth with the life, the pain shall stop.
His dam held different, that after death 251
He both plagued enemies and feasted friends
Idly! He doth His worst in this our life,
Giving just respite lest we die through pain,
Saving last pain for worst — with which, an
end 255

Meanwhile, the best way to escape His ire
Is, not to seem too happy. 'Sees, himself,
Yonder two flies, with purple films and pink,
Bask on the pompion-bell above, kills both
'Sees two black painful beetles roll their ball
On head and tail as if to save their lives, 261 Moves them the stuck away they strive to clear.

Even so, 'would have Him misconceive, suppose

This Caliban strives hard and ails no less,
And always, above all else, envies Him; 265
Wherefore he mainly dances on dark nights,
Moans in the sun, gets under holes to laugh,
And never speaks his mind save housed as
now

Outside, 'groans, cur-es. If He caught me
here,

O'erheard this speech, and asked "What chucklest at?" 270

'Would, to appease Him, cut a finger off,
Or of my three kid yearlings burn the best,

Or let the toothsome apples rot on tree,
Or push my tame beast for the orc to taste —
While myself lit a fire, and made a song 275
And sung it, "*What I hate, be consecrate
To celebrate Thee and Thy state, no mate
For Thee; what see for envy in poor me?*"
Hoping the while, since evils sometimes mend, Warts rub away, and sores are cured with slime, 280
That some strange day, will either the Quiet catch
And conquer Setebos, or likelier He Decrepid may doze, doze, as good as die

[What, what? A curtain o'er the world at once!

Crickets stop hissing; not a bird — or, yes, 285
There scuds His raven that has told Him all!
It was fool's play, this prattling! Ha! The wind

Shoulders the pillared dust, death's house o'
the move,

And fast invading fires begin! White blaze —
A tree's head snaps — and there, there, there,
there, there, 290

His thunder follows! Fool to gibe at Him!
Lo! 'Lieth flat and loveth Setebos!

'Maketh his teeth meet through his upper lip,
Will let those quails fly, will not eat this month

One little mess of whelks, so he may
'scape! (1864)

CONFESSIONS

What is he buzzing in my ears?

"Now that I come to die,
Do I view the world as a vale of tears?"
Ah, reverend sir, not I!

What I viewed there once, what I view again
Where the physic bottles stand 6
On the table's edge — is a suburb lane,
With a wall to my bedside hand

That lane sloped, much as the bottles do,
From a house you could descry 10
O'er the garden-wall, is the curtain blue
Or green to a healthy eye?

To mine, it serves for the old June weather
Blue above lane and wall;
And that farthest bottle labeled "Ether" 15
Is the house o'ertopping all.

At a terrace, somewhere near the stopper,
There watched for me, one June,
A girl, I know, sir, it's improper,
My poor mind's out of tune 20

Only, there was a way . . . you crept
 Close by the side, to dodge Eyes in the house, two eyes except;
 They styled their house "The Lodge."
 What right had a lounge up their lane? 25
 But, by creeping very close,
 With the good wall's help — their eyes might strain
 And stretch themselves to Oes,
 Yet never catch her and me together,
 As she left the attic, there, 30
 By the rim of the bottle labeled "Ether,"
 And stole from stair to stair,
 And stood by the rose-wreathed gate Alas,
 We loved, sir — used to meet,
 How sad and bad and mad it was — 35
 But then, how it was sweet! (1864)

PROSPICE

Fear death? — to feel the fog in my throat,
 The mist in my face,
 When the snows begin, and the blasts denote
 I am nearing the place,
 The power of the night, the press of the storm,
 The post of the foe, 6
 Where he stands, the Arch Fear in a visible form,
 Yet the strong man must go
 For the journey is done and the summit attained,
 And the barriers fall, 10
 Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained,
 The reward of it all
 I was ever a fighter, so — one fight more,
 The best and the last!
 I would hate that death bandaged my eyes,
 and forbore, 15
 And bade me creep past
 No! let me taste the whole of it, fare like my peers,
 The heroes of old,
 Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
 Of pain, darkness, and cold 20
 For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
 The black minute's at end,
 And the elements' rage, the fiend-voices that rave,
 Shall dwindle, shall blend,

Shall change, shall become first a peace out of
 pain, 25
 Then a light, then thy breast,
 O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee
 again,
 And with God be the rest!
 (1861; 1864)

YOUTH AND ART

It once might have been, once only
 We lodged in a street together,
 You, a sparrow on the housetop lonely,
 I, a lone she-bird of his feather
 Your trade was with sticks and clay, 5
 You thumbed, thrust, patted, and polished,
 Then laughed "They will see some day
 Smith made, and Gibson demolished"
 My business was song, song, song;
 I chirped, cheeped, trilled, and twittered, 10
 "Kate Brown's on the boards ere long,
 And Gris's existence embittered!"
 I earned no more by a warble
 Than you by a sketch in plaster;
 You wanted a piece of marble, 15
 I needed a music-master
 We studied hard in our styles,
 Chipped each at a crust like Hindus,
 For air, looked out on the tiles,
 For fun, watched each other's windows. 20
 You lounged, like a boy of the South,
 Cap and blouse — nay, a bit of beard too,
 Or you got it, rubbing your mouth
 With fingers the clay adhered to.
 And I — soon managed to find 25
 Weak points in the flower-fence facing,
 Was forced to put up a blind
 And be safe in my corset-lacing
 No harm! It was not my fault
 If you never turned your eye's tail up 30
 As I shook upon E in alt.,
 Or ran the chromatic scale up;
 For spring bade the sparrows pair,
 And the boys and girls gave guesses,
 And stalls in our street looked rare 35
 With bulrush and watercresses.

 Why did not I put a power

A FACE

If one could have that little head of hers
 Painted upon a background of pale gold,
 Such as the Tuscan's early art prefers!
 No shade encroaching on the matchless mold
 Of those two lips, which should be opening soft 5
 In the pure profile — not as when she laughs,
 For that spoils all, but rather as if aloft
 Yon hyacinth, she loves so, leaned its staff's
 Burden of honey-colored buds to kiss
 And capture 'twixt the lips apart for this. 10
 Then her lithe neck, three fingers might sui-
 round,

How it should waver on the pale gold ground
 Up to the fruit-shaped, perfect chin it lifts!
 I know, Correggio loves to mass, in rifts
 Of heaven, his angel faces, orb on orb 15
 Breaking its outline, burning shades absorb,
 But these are only massed there, I should think,
 Waiting to see some wonder momentarily
 Grow out, stand full, fade slow against the sky (That's the pale ground you'd see this sweet face by), 20
 All heaven, meanwhile, condensed into one
 eye
 Which fears to lose the wonder, should it wink. (1864)

A LIKENESS

Some people hang portraits up
 In a room where they dine or sup;
 And the wife clinks tea-things under,
 And her cousin, he stirs his cup,
 Asks, "Who was the lady, I wonder?" 5
 "'Tis a daub John bought at a sale,"
 Quoth the wife — looks black as thunder
 "What a shade beneath her nose!
 Snuff-taking, I suppose" —
 Adds the cousin, while John's coins all 10
 Or else, there's no wife in the case,
 But the portrait's queen of the place,
 Alone 'mid the other spoils
 Of youth — masks, gloves, and foils,
 And pipe-sticks, rose, cherry-tree, jasmine, 15
 And the long whip, the tandem-lasher,
 And the cast from a fist ("not, alas! mine,
 But my master's, the Tipton Slasher"),
 And the cards where pistol-balls mark ace,
 And a satin shoe used for cigar-case, 20
 And the chamois-horns ("shot in the Chablais"),

And prints — Rarey drumming on Cruiser,
 And Sayers, our champion, the bruiser,
 And the little edition of Rabelais:
 Where a friend, with both hands in his pockets, 25
 May saunter up close to examine it,
 And remark a good deal of Jane Lamb in it,
 "But the eyes are half out of their sockets;
 That hair's not so bad, where the gloss is,
 But they've made the girl's nose a proboscis,
 Jane Lamb, that we danced with at Vichy! 31
 What, is not she Jane? Then, who is she?"

All that I own is a print,
An etching, a mezzotint;
'Tis a study, a fancy, a fiction, 35
Yet a fact (take my conviction)
Because it has more than a hint
Of a certain face I never Saw elsewhere touch or trace of
In women I've seen the face of: 40
Just an etching, and, so far, clever.

I keep my prints, an imbroglio,
Fifty in one portfolio.
When somebody tries my claret,
We turn round chairs to the fire, 45
Chirp over days in a garret,
Chuckle o'er increase of salary,
Taste the good fruits of our leisure,
Talk about pencil and lyre,
And the National Portrait Gallery, 50
Then I exhibit my treasure
After we've turned over twenty,
And the debt of wonder my crony owes
Is paid to my Marc Antonios,
He stops me — "Festina lentè!" 55
What's that sweet thing there, the etching?"
How my waistcoat-strings want stretching,
How my cheeks grow red as tomatoes,
How my heart leaps! But hearts, after leaps, ache.

"By the bye, you must take, for a keepsake,
That other, you praised, of Volpato's " 61
The fool! would he try a flight further and
say —
He never saw, never before today,
What was able to take his breath away,
A face to lose youth for, to occupy age 65
With the dream of, meet death with — why,
I'll not engage
But that, half in a rapture and half in a rage,
I should toss him the thing's self — "'Tis only a duplicate,
A thing of no value! Take it, I supplicate!"

APPARENT FAILURE

"We shall soon lose a celebrated building "

—Paris Newspaper

No, for I'll save it! Seven years since,
I passed through Paris, stopped a day
To see the baptism of your Prince;
Saw, made my bow, and went my way.

Apparent Failure Browning wrote this poem in an effort to save from destruction the famous Paris Morgue on the bank of the Seine River. He had visited the Morgue in 1856, when he was first in Paris to see the baptism of Prince
Louis Napoleon, son of Emperor Napoleon III, born March 16, 1856

Walking the heat and headache off, 5
I took the Seine-side, you surmise,
Thought of the Congress, Gortschakoff,
Cavour's appeal and Buol's replies,
So sauntered till — what met my eyes?

Only the Doric little Morgue! 10
The dead-house where you show your drowned.
Petrarch's Vaucluse makes proud the Sorgue;
Your Morgue has made the Seine renowned
One pays one's debt in such a case;
I plucked up heart and entered — stalked,
Keeping a tolerable face 16
Compared with some whose cheeks were chalked.
Let them! No Briton's to be balked!

First came the silent gazers; next,
A screen of glass, we're thankful for; 20
Last, the sight's self, the sermon's text,
The three men who did most abhor
Their life in Paris yesterday,
So killed themselves, and now, enthroned
Each on his copper couch, they lay 25
Fronting me, waiting to be owned
I thought, and think, their sin's atoned.

Poor men, God made, and all for that!
The reverence struck me, o'er each head
Religiously was hung its hat, 30
Each coat dripped by the owner's bed,
Sacred from touch; each had his berth,
His bounds, his proper place of rest,
Who last night tenanted on earth
Some arch, where twelve such slept abreast —
Unless the plain asphalt seemed best. 36

How did it happen, my poor boy?
You wanted to be Buonaparte
And have the Tuileries for toy,
And could not, so it broke your heart? 40
You, old one by his side, I judge,
Were, red as blood, a socialist,
A leveler! Does the Empire grudge
You've gained what no Republic missed?
Be quiet, and unclench your fist! 45

And this — why, he was red in vain,
Or black — poor fellow that is blue!
What fancy was it turned your brain?

7 the Congress. The Congress of Paris, composed of representatives of several European powers, met in Paris in 1856 to discuss the unity of Italy. Prince Alexander Gortschakoff (1798-1883) represented Russia, Count Camillo di
Cavour (1810-61), Sardinia, Count von Buol-Schauenstein (1797-1865), Austria. Cavour was the great unifier of Italy.

the Sorgue River in southeastern France. The famous

Avignon. 39 Tuileries, the royal palace in Paris. 46-47

Oh, women were the prize for you!
 Money gets women, cards and dice 50
 Get money, and ill-luck gets just
 The copper couch and one clear nice
 Cool squirt of water o'er your bust,
 The right thing to extinguish lust!

It's wiser being good than bad; 55
 It's safer being meek than fierce;
 It's fitter being sane than mad.
 My own hope is, a sun will pierce
 The thickest cloud earth ever stretched,
 That, after Last, returns the First, 60
 Though a wide compass round be fetched,
 That what began best, can't end worst,
 Nor what God blessed once, prove accurst

From BOOK I

THE RING AND THE BOOK

O lyric Love, half angel and half bird,
 And all a wonder and a wild desire —
 Boldest of hearts that ever braved the sun
 Took sanctuary within the holier blue,
 And sang a kindred soul out to his face — 5
 Yet human at the red-ripe of the heart —
 When the first summons from the darkling
 earth
 Reached thee amid thy chambers, blanched
 their blue,
 And bared them of the glory — to drop down,
 To toil for man, to suffer or to die — 10
 This is the same voice. can thy soul know
 change?
 Hail then, and hearken from the realms of
 help!
 Never may I commence my song, my due
 To God who best taught song by gift of thee,
 Except with bent head and beseeching
 hand — 15
 That still, despite the distance and the dark,
 What was, again may be, some interchange Of grace, some splendor once thy very
 thought,
 Some benediction anciently thy smile:
 — Never conclude, but raising hand and head
 Thither where eyes, that cannot reach, yet yearn 21
 For all hope, all sustainment, all reward,
 Their utmost up and on — so blessing back

The Ring and the Book See Critical Notes
Book I 1-25 O lyric Love, etc. These are the closing lines of Book I. They are intended as an invocation to Mrs Browning, who died in 1861. 23 so blessing back, etc.
 My eyes yearn for reward from you in heaven—a glimpse of some whiteness glorified by your presence, of some wanness reflected wherever you walk, which will be evidence of your blessing to me. Blessing is a participle modifying whiteness and wanness, both nouns are parallel in construction with hope and reward (line 22)

In those thy realms of help, that heaven thy
 home,
 Some whiteness which, I judge, thy face makes proud, 25
 Some wanness where, I think, thy foot may fall!

BOOK VI

GIUSEPPE CAPONSACCHI

Answer you, Sirs? Do I understand aright?
 Have patience! In this sudden smoke from hell —
 So things disguise themselves — I cannot see
 My own hand held thus broad before my face
 And know it again. Answer you? Then that means 5
 Tell over twice what I, the first time, told
 Six months ago, 'twas here, I do believe,
 Fronting you same three in this very room,
 I stood and told you, yet now no one laughs,
 Who then . . . nay, dear my lords, but laugh
 you did, 10
 As good as laugh, what in a judge we style
 Laughter — no levity, nothing indecorous, lords!
 Only — I think I apprehend the mood
 There was the blameless shrug, permissible
 smirk,
 The pen's pretense at play with the pursed
 mouth, 15
 The titter stifled in the hollow palm
 Which rubbed the eyebrow and caressed the nose,
 When I first told my tale; they meant, you
 know,
 "The sly one, all this we are bound believe!
 Well, he can say no other than what he says
 We have been young, too — come, there's greater guilt! 21
 Let him but decently disembroil himself,
 Scramble from out the scrape nor move the mud —
 We solid ones may risk a finger-stretch!"
 And now you sit as grave, stare as aghast 25
 As if I were a phantom; now 'tis — "Friend, Collect yourself!" — no laughing matter
 more —
 "Counsel the Court in this extremity, Tell us again!" — tell that, for telling which,
 I got the jocular piece of punishment, 30
 Was sent to lounge a little in the place
 Whence now of a sudden here you summon me

Book VI Giuseppe Caponsacchi Caponsacchi, summoned before the Court, tells the story of his efforts to help Pom-pilia. He had told the same story some months before when on trial with Pompilia. While he is speaking, Pompilia is in the hospital, dying from wounds inflicted by Guido.
 30 jocular . . . punishment The Court had previously decided against Pompilia and Caponsacchi and had banished Caponsacchi for three years to Civita Vecchia, a seaport near Rome. Pompilia had been sent to a convent.

To take the intelligence from just — your lips!
You, Judge Tommati, who then tittered
most —

That she I helped eight months since to escape
Her husband, was retaken by the same, 36
Three days ago, if I have seized your sense
(I being disallowed to interfere,
Meddle or make in a matter none of mine, 39
For you and law were guardians quite enough
O' the innocent, without a pert priest's help) —
And that he has butchered her accordingly,

As she foretold and as myself believed —
And, so foretelling and believing so, 44
We were prevented, both of us, the merry way:
Therefore, tell once again the tale! For what?
Pompilia is only dying while I speak!
Why does the mirth hang fire and miss the
smile?

My masters, there's an old book, you should con

For strange adventures, applicable yet, 50
'Tis stuffed with. Do you know that there was once

This thing: a multitude of worthy folk
Took recreation, watched a certain group
Of soldiery intent upon a game —
How first they wrangled, but soon fell to
play, 55

Threw dice — the best diversion in the world.
A word in your ear — they are now casting lots,

Aye, with that gesture quaint and cry uncouth,

For the coat of One murdered an hour ago!
I am a priest — talk of what I have learned
Pompilia is bleeding out her life belike, 61
Gasping away the latest breath of all,
This minute, while I talk — not while you
laugh

Yet, being sobered now, what is it you ask
By way of explanation? There's the fact! 65
It seems to fill the universe with sight
And sound — from the four corners of this earth

Tells itself over, to my sense at least.
But you may want it lower set i' the scale —
Too vast, too close it clangs in the ear, perhaps; 70

You'd stand back just to comprehend it more.
Well then, let me, the hollow rock, condense
The voice o' the sea and wind, interpret you
The mystery of this murder. God above!
It is too paltry, such a transference 75
O' the storm's roar to the cranny of the stone!

This deed, you saw begin — why does its end
Surprise you? Why should the event enforce
The lesson, we ourselves learned, she and I,
From the first o' the fact, and taught you, all
in vain? 80

This Guido from whose throat you took my grasp,

Was this man to be favored, now, or feared,
Let do his will, or have his will restrained,
In the relation with Pompilia? — say!

Did any other man need interpose — 85
Oh, though first comer, though as strange at the work

As fribble must be, coxcomb, fool that's near
To knave as, say, a priest who fears the
world —

Was he bound brave the peril, save the doomed, 89

Or go on, sing his snatch and pluck his flower,
Keep the straight path and let the victim die?
I held so; you decided otherwise,

Saw no such peril, therefore no such need
To stop song, loosen flower, and leave path.
Law,

Law was aware and watching, would suffice,
Wanted no priest's intrusion, palpably 96
Pretense, too manifest a subterfuge!

Whereupon I, priest, coxcomb, fribble, and
fool,

Ensconced me in my corner, thus rebuked,
A kind of culprit, over-zealous hound 100
Kicked for his pains to kennel; I gave place
To you, and let the law reign paramount
I left Pompilia to your watch and ward,
And now you point me — there and thus she lies!

Men, for the last time, what do you want with me? 105

Is it — you acknowledge, as it were, a use,
A profit in employing me? — at length
I may conceivably help the august law?
I am free to break the blow, next hawk that swoops

On next dove, nor miss much of good repute?
Or what if this your summons, after all, 111

Be but the form of mere release, no more,
Which turns the key and lets the captive go?
I have paid enough in person at Civita,
Am free — what more need I concern me
with? 115

Thank you! I am rehabilitated then,
A very reputable priest. But she —
The glory of life, the beauty of the world,
The splendor of heaven . . . well, Sirs, does no one move?

Do I speak ambiguously? The glory, I say,
And the beauty, I say, and splendor, still say I, 121

57-59 casting lots. One Cf Matthew, 27 35 — "And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, 'They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots,'"

87. fribble, a frivolous person.

Who, priest and trained to live my whole life
long

On beauty and splendor, solely at their source,
God — have thus recognized my food in her,
You tell me, that's fast dying while we talk,
Pompilia! How does lenity to me 126
Remit one death-bed pang to her? Come,
smile!

The proper wink at the hot-headed youth
Who lets his soul show, through transparent
words.

The mundane love that's sin and scandal too!
You are all struck acquiescent now, it seems,
It seems the oldest, gravest signor here, 132
Even the redoubtable Tommati, sits Chopfallen — understands how law might
take

Service like mine, of brain and heart and hand,
In good part. Better late than never, law! 136
You understand of a sudden, gospel too
Has a claim here, may possibly pronounce
Consistent with my priesthood, worthy Christ,
That I endeavored to save Pompilia?

Then, 140

You were wrong, you see. That's well to see, though late.

That's all we may expect of man, this side
The grave, his good is — knowing he is bad
Thus will it be with us when the books ope
And we stand at the bar on judgment-day. 145
Well, then, I have a mind to speak, see cause
To relume the quenched flax by this dreadful
light,

Burn my soul out in showing you the truth
I heard, last time I stood here to be judged,
What is priest's-duty — labor to pluck tares
And weed the corn of Molinism, let me 151
Make you hear, this time, how, in such a case,
Man, be he in the priesthood or at plow,
Mindful of Christ or marching step by step
With . . . what's his style, the other potentate
Who bids have courage and keep honor safe,
Nor let minuter admonition tease? — 157
How he is bound, better or worse, to act.
Earth will not end through this misjudgment,
no!

For you and the others like you sure to come,
Fresh work is sure to follow — wickedness 161
That wants withstanding Many a man of
blood,

Many a man of guile will clamor yet,
Bid you redress his grievance — as he clutched
The prey, forsooth a stranger stepped between,

151 Molinism, the doctrine taught by Miguel de Molinos (1640-97), a Spanish priest who lived in Rome. He considered abstinence, penance, etc., of little value except at the beginning of a course of self-discipline. His teaching was condemned by the Pope in 1687. 155 potentate, a satirical reference to Satan

And there's the good gripe in pure waste!

My part 166

Is done, i' the doing it, I pass away
Out of the world I want no more with earth
Let me, in heaven's name, use the very snuff
O' the taper in one last spark shall show truth
For a moment, show Pompilia who was true!
Not for her sake, but yours, if she is dead, 172
Oh, Sirs, she can be loved by none of you
Most or least priestly! Saints, to do us good,
Must be in heaven, I seem to understand, 175
We never find them saints before, at least
Be her first prayer then presently for you —
She has done the good to me . . .

What is all this?

There, I was born, have lived, shall die, a fool!
This is a foolish outset — might with cause 180
Give color to the very lie o' the man,
The murderer — make as if I loved his wife
In the way he called love He is the fool
there!

Why, had there been in me the touch of taint,
I had picked up so much of knaves'-policy 185
As hide it, keep one hand pressed on the place
Suspected of a spot would damn us both
Or no, not her! — not even if any of you Dares think that I, i' the face of death, her
death

That's in my eyes and ears and brain and
heart, 190

Lie — if he does, let him! I mean to say,
So he stop there, stay thought from smirching
her

The snow-white soul that angels fear to take Untenderly But, all the same, I know
I too am taintless, and I bare my breast 195
You can't think, men as you are, all of you,
But that, to hear thus suddenly such an end
Of such a wonderful white soul, that comes
Of a man and murderer calling the white
black,

Must shake me, trouble and disadvantage
Sirs, 200
Only seventeen!

Why, good and wise you are!

You might at the beginning stop my mouth,
So, none would be to speak for her, that knew
I talk impertinently, and you bear,
All the same This it is to have to do 205
With honest hearts, they easily may err,
But in the main they wish well to the truth
You are Christians; somehow, no one ever plucked

A rag, even, from the body of the Lord,
To wear and mock with, but, despite him-
self,

He looked the greater and was the better
Yes, 211

I shall go on now. Does she need or not

I keep calm? Calm I'll keep as monk that croons
Transcribing battle, earthquake, famine, plague,
From parchment to his cloister's chronicle 215
Not one word more from the point now!

I begin

Yes, I am one of your body and a priest.
Also I am younger son o' the House
Oldest now, greatest once, in my birth-town
Arezzo, I recognize no equal there— 220
(I want all arguments, all sorts of arms
That seem to serve—use this for a reason,
wait!),
Not therefore thrust into the Church, because O' the piece of bread one gets there. We were first

Of Fiesole, that rings still with the fame 225
Of Capo-in-Sacco, our progenitor.
When Florence ruined Fiesole, our folk
Migrated to the victor-city, and there
Flourished—our palace and our tower attest,
In the Old Mercato—this was years ago, 230
Four hundred, full—no, it wants fourteen just
Our arms are those of Fiesole itself,
The shield quartered with white and red, a branch

Are the Salviati of us, nothing more.
That were good help to the Church? But better still— 235

Not simply for the advantage of my birth
I' the way of the world, was I proposed for priest,

But because there's an illustration, late
I' the day, that's loved and looked to as a saint

Still in Arezzo, he was bishop of, 240
Sixty years since, he spent to the last doir
His bishop's-revenue among the poor,
And used to tend the needy and the sick,
Barefoot, because of his humility.
He it was—when the Granduke Ferdinand
Swore he would raze our city, plow the place
And sow it with salt, because we Aretines 247
Had tied a rope about the neck, to hale

218-219 son . . . Oldest. Caponsacchi's church was that of S. Maria della Pieve, in Arezzo, a city about 100 miles north of Rome 222 use . . . wait, I use this reference to my church for a reason that will appear later 225 Fiesole, a suburb of Florence 226 Capo-in-Sacco. The name means Head in the Sack 227 Florence ruined Fiesole. This happened in 1125, although Caponsacchi's exact figures (line 231) would place the event in 1312, which is 386 years before the time of his speech—1698 Dante refers to the moving of the Caponsacchi family from Fiesole to Florence in Paradiso, 15 139-148, written about 1312 It is mentioned by one of Dante's ancestors who died about 1148 A lady of the Caponsacchi family was the mother of Dante's Beatrice 230 Old Mercato, the old market-place in Florence 234 Salviati, a well-known Italian family 241 doir, a small Dutch coin, worth about one-fourth of a cent 245 the Granduke Ferdinand, Ferdinand II, Grand Duke of Tuscany, 1621-70, grandson of Ferdinand I 247 Aretines the men of Arezzo

The statue of his father from its base
For hate's sake—he availed by prayers and tears 250

To pacify the Duke and save the town.
This was my father's father's brother. You
see,

For his sake, how it was I had a right
To the selfsame office, bishop in the egg,
So, grew i' the garb and prattled in the school,
Was made expect, from infancy almost, 256
The proper mood o' the priest; till time ran by
And brought the day when I must read the vows,

Declare the world renounced, and undertake
To become priest and leave probation—leap
Over the ledge into the other life, 261
Having gone trippingly hitherto up to the
height

O'er the wan water. Just a vow to read!

I stopped short, awe-struck "How shall holiest flesh

Engage to keep such vow inviolate, 265
How much less mine? I know myself too
weak,

Unworthy! Choose a worthier, stronger man!"
And the very Bishop smiled and stopped my
mouth

In its mid-protestation "Incapable?
Qualmish of conscience? Thou ingenuous
boy! 270

Clear up the clouds and cast thy scruples far!
I satisfy thee there's an easier sense
Wherein to take such vow than suits the first Rough rigid reading. Mark what makes all smooth,

Nay, has been even a solace to myself! 275
The Jews who needs must, in their synagogue,
Utter sometimes the holy name of God,
A thing their superstition boggles at,
Pronounce aloud the ineffable sacrosanct—
How does their shrewdness help them? In this wise: 280

Another set of sounds they substitute,
Jumble so consonants and vowels—how Should I know?—that there grows from out the old

Quite a new word that means the very same—
And o'er the hard place slide they with a
smile. 285

Giuseppe Maria Caponsacchi mine,
Nobody wants you in these latter days
To prop the Church by breaking your backbone—

As the necessary way was once, we know,

249 statue of his father, the statue of Ferdinand I (1549-1609), erected in front of the cathedral in 1595 Cf The Statue and the Bust, page 239 279 ineffable sacro- sanct, the unspeakable holy name The Jews, out of reverence, do not pronounce the name of Jehovah, they substitute the name Adonai, meaning Lord

When Diocletian flourished and his like 290
 That building of the buttress-work was done
 By martyrs and confessors, let it bide,
 Add not a brick, but, where you see a chink,
 Stuck in a sprig of ivy or root a rose
 Shall make amends and beautify the pile! 295
 We profit as you were the painfullest
 O' the martyrs, and you prove yourself a match

For the cruellest confessor ever was,
 If you march boldly up and take your stand
 Where their blood soaks, their bones yet strew
 the soil, 300
 And cry 'Take notice, I the young and free
 And well-to-do i' the world, thus leave the
 world,
 Cast in my lot thus with no gay young world
 But the grand old Church, she tempts me of the two!'

Renounce the world? Nay, keep and give it us! 305

Let us have you, and boast of what you bring
 We want the pick o' the earth to practice
 with,

Not its offscouring, halt and deaf and blind
 In soul and body There's a rubble-stone Unfit for the front o' the building, stuff to stow 310

In a gap behind and keep us weather-tight,
 There's porphyry for the prominent place.
 Good lack!

Saint Paul has had enough and to spare, I trow,

Of ragged runaway Onesimus;
 He wants the right-hand with the signet-ring
 Of King Agrippa, now, to shake and use 316
 I have a heavy scholar cloistered up,
 Close under lock and key, kept at his task
 Of letting Fénelon know the fool he is,
 In a book I promise Christendom next spring.
 Why, if he covets so much meat, the clown, 321
 As a lark's wing next Friday, or, any day,
 Diversion beyond catching his own fleas,
 He shall be properly swinged, I promise him
 But you, who are so quite another paste 325
 Of a man — do you obey me? Cultivate Assiduous that superior gift you have
 Of making madrigals (who told me? Ah!);
 Get done a Marinesque Adoniad straight
 With a pulse o' the blood a-pricking, here and
 there, 330
 That I may tell the lady, 'And he's ours!''

290 Diocletian, emperor of Rome (284-305) He persecuted the Christians 314 Onesimus, mentioned in Paul's Epistle to Philemon, 110-18 316 King Agrippa Paul, while held a prisoner by Festus, was brought before King Agrippa The account appears in Acts, 25-26 319 Fénelon, a French preacher, Archbishop of Cambrai (1651-1751), who adopted the doctrines of Molinos (see note on line 151) 329 Marinesque Adoniad, a poem in the manner of a popular poem called L'Adone, written by Giovanni Marino, an Italian poet (1569-1625)

So I became a priest Those terms changed
 all —

I was good enough for that, nor cheated so,
 I could live thus and still hold head erect.
 Now you see why I may have been before 335
 A fribble and coxcomb, yet, as priest, break
 word

Nowise, to make you disbelieve me now
 I need that you should know my truth. Well,
 then,

According to prescription did I live —
 Conformed myself, both read the breviary 340
 And wrote the rimes, was punctual to my
 place

I' the Pieve, and as diligent at my post
 Where beauty and fashion rule I throve
 apace,

Sub-deacon, Canon, the authority
 For delicate play at tarocs, and arbiter 345
 O' the magnitude of fan-mounts, all the while Wanting no whit the advantage of a hint
 Benignant to the promising pupil — thus
 "Enough attention to the Countess now,
 The young one; 'tis her mother rules the roast, 350

We know where, and puts in a word, go pay
 Devoir tomorrow morning after Mass!
 Break that rash promise to preach, Passion-
 week!

Has it escaped you the Archbishop grunts
 And snuffles when one grieves to tell his
 Grace 355

No soul dares treat the subject of the day
 Since his own masterly handling it (ha, ha!)
 Five years ago — when somebody could help
 And touch up an odd phrase in time of need
 (He, he!) — and somebody helps you, my son!
 Therefore, don't prove so indispensable 361
 At the Pieve, sit more loose i' the seat, nor
 grow

A fixture by attendance morn and eve!
 Arezzo's just a haven midway Rome —
 Rome's the eventual harbor — make for port, Crowd sail, crack cordage! And your cargo
 be 366

A polished presence, a genteel manner, wit
 At will, and tact at every pore of you!
 I sent our lump of learning, Brother Clout,
 And Father Slouch, our piece of piety, 370
 To see Rome and try suit the Cardinal.
 Thither they clump-clumped, beads and book
 in hand,

And ever since 'tis meat for man and maid
 How both flopped down, prayed blessing on bent pate 374

Bald many an inch beyond the tonsure's need,
 Never once dreaming, the two moony dolt,

342 the Pieve, his church 345 tarocs, a kind of card game 353 Passion-week, the week before Easter, in which Christ's sufferings are commemorated

There's nothing moves his Eminence so much
As — far from all this awe at sanctitude —
Heads that wag, eyes that twinkle, modified mirth

At the closet-lectures on the Latin tongue 380
A lady learns so much by, we know where Why, body o' Bacchus, you should crave his rule

For pauses in the elegiac couplet, chasms
Permissible only to Catullus! There!
Now go to duty, brisk, break Priscian's head
By reading the day's office — there's no help.
You've Ovid in your poke to plaster that; 387
Amen's at the end of all. Then sup with me!"

Well, after three or four years of this life,
In prosecution of my calling, I 390
Found myself at the theater one night
With a brother Canon, in a mood and mind
Proper enough for the place, amused or no;
When I saw enter, stand, and seat herself
A lady, young, tall, beautiful, strange and sad.
It was as when, in our cathedral once, 396
As I got yawningly through matin-song,
I saw facchini bear a burden up,
Base it on the high-altar, break away
A board or two, and leave the thing inside 400
Lofty and lone; and lo, when next I looked,
There was the Rafael! I was still one stare,
When — "Nay, I'll make her give you back your gaze" —

Said Canon Conti; and at the word he tossed
A paper-twist of comfits to her lap, 405
And dodged and in a trice was at my back Nodding from over my shoulder. Then she turned,
Looked our way, smiled the beautiful sad
strange smile.

"Is not she fair? 'Tis my new cousin," said he.
"The fellow lurking there i' the black o' the box 410

Is Guido, the old scapegrace; she's his wife, Married three years since. How his Count-ship sulks!

He has brought little back from Rome beside,
After the bragging, bullying. A fair face,
And — they do say — a pocketful of gold 415
When he can worry both her parents dead
I don't go much there, for the chamber's cold
And the coffee pale. I got a turn at first Paying my duty; I observed they crouched —
The two old frightened family specters —
close 420

In a corner, each on each like mouse on mouse
I' the cat's cage Ever since, I stay at home.
Hallo, there's Guido, the black, mean, and small,

Bends his brows on us — please to bend your
own

On the shapely nether limbs of Light-skirts
there 425

By way of a diversion! I was a fool
To fling the sweetmeats. Prudence, for God's
love!

Tomorrow I'll make my peace, e'en tell some fib,

Try if I can't find means to take you there."

That night and next day did the gaze endure,
Burnt to my brain, as sunbeam through shut
eyes, 431

And not once changed the beautiful sad
strange smile

At vespers Conti leaned beside my seat
I' the choir — part said, part sung — "In ex-cel-sis —

All's to no purpose; I have louted low, 435
But he saw you staring — quia sub — don't incline

To know you nearer; him we would not hold
For Hercules — the man would lick your shoe
If you and certain efficacious friends

Managed him warily — but there's the wife.
Spare her, because he beats her, as it is, 441
She's breaking her heart quite fast enough — jam tu —

So, be you rational and make amends
With little Light-skirts yonder — in secula Secu-lo-o-o-o-rum. Ah, you rogue! Everyone
knows 445

What great dame she makes jealous; one against one,
Play, and win both!"

Sirs, ere the week was out,
I saw and said to myself, "Light-skirts hides teeth

Would make a dog sick — the great dame shows spite

Should drive a cat mad, 'tis but poor work
this — 450

Counting one's fingers till the sonnet's
crowned.

I doubt much if Marino really be
A better bard than Dante after all.

'Tis more amusing to go pace at eve
I' the Duomo — watch the day's last gleam outside 455

Turn, as into a skirt of God's own robe,

434 In ex-cel-sis, etc., in the highest forever and ever These Latin phrases are found in numerous places in the ritual of the Roman Catholic Church. 438 Hercules, a famous hero in Greek and Roman mythology 452-453 I doubt . . . after all See line 329 455 the Duomo, the cathedral

Those lancet-windows' jeweled miracle —
 Than go eat the Archbishop's ortolans, Digest his jokes. Luckily Lent is near;
 Who cares to look will find me in my stall 460
 At the Pieve, constant to this faith at least —
 Never to write a canzonet any more."

So, next week, 'twas my patron spoke abrupt,
 In altered guise, "Young man, can it be true
 That after all your promise of sound fruit, 465
 You have kept away from Countess young or
 old

And gone play truant in church all day long?
 Are you turning Molinist?" I answered quick.
 "Sir, what if I turned Christian? It might be
 The fact is, I am troubled in my mind, 470
 Beset and pressed hard by some novel
 thoughts

This your Arezzo is a limited world,
 There's a strange Pope — 'tis said, a priest who thinks

Rome is the port, you say; to Rome I go 474
 I will live alone — one does so in a crowd —
 And look into my heart a little " "Lent Ended" — I told friends — "I shall go to Rome."

One evening I was sitting in a muse
 Over the opened "Summa," darkened round
 By the mid-March twilight, thinking how my
 life 480
 Had shaken under me — broke short indeed
 And showed the gap 'twixt what is, what should be —

And into what abyssm the soul may slip,
 Leave aspiration here, achievement there,
 Lacking omnipotence to connect extremes —
 Thinking moreover . . . oh, thinking, if you like, 486

How utterly dissociated was I,
 A priest and celibate, from the sad strange
 wife

Of Guido — just as an instance to the point, Naught more — how I had a whole store of strengths 490

Eating into my heart, which craved employ,
 And she, perhaps, need of a finger's help —
 And yet there was no way in the wide world
 To stretch out mine and so relieve myself —
 How when the page o' the "Summa" preached its best, 495

Her smile kept glowing out of it, as to mock
 The silence we could break by no one word —
 There came a tap without the chamber-door,

And a whisper, when I bade who tapped speak
 out,
 And, in obedience to my summons, last 500
 In glided a masked muffled mystery,
 Laid lightly a letter on the opened book,
 Then stood with folded arms and foot demure,
 Pointing as if to mark the minutes' flight.

I took the letter, read to the effect 505
 That she, I lately flung the comfits to,
 Had a warm heart to give me in exchange,
 And gave it — loved me and confessed it thus,
 And bade me render thanks by word of mouth,
 Going that night to such a side o' the house 510
 Where the small terrace overhangs a street
 Blind and deserted, not the street in front:
 Her husband being away, the surly patch,
 At his villa of Vittiano.

"And you?" — I asked;
 "What may you be?" "Count Guido's kind of
 maid — 515
 Most of us have two functions in his house.
 We all hate him, the lady suffers much,
 'Tis just we show compassion, furnish help,
 Specially since her choice is fixed so well.
 What answer may I bring to cheer the sweet Pompila?"

Then I took a pen and wrote 521
 "No more of this! That you are fair, I know,
 But other thoughts now occupy my mind.
 I should not thus have played the insensible
 Once on a time What made you — may one
 ask — 525
 Marry your hideous husband? 'Twas a fault,
 And now you taste the fruit of it Farewell "

"There!" smiled I as she snatched it and was
 gone —
 "There, let the jealous miscreant — Guido's
 self,
 Whose mean soul grins through this transparent trick — 530

Be balked so far, defrauded of his aim!
 What fund of satisfaction to the knave,
 Had I kicked this his messenger downstairs,
 Trussed to the middle of her impudence,
 And set his heart at ease so! No, indeed! 535
 There's the reply which he shall turn and twist

At pleasure, snuff at till his brain grow drunk,
 As the bear does when he finds a scented glove
 That puzzles him — a hand and yet no hand,
 Of other perfume than his own foul paw! 540
 Last month, I had doubtless chosen to play
 the dupe,
 Accepted the mock-invitation, kept

457 lancet-window, window shaped like a lance 458 ortolan, a kind of bird, regarded as a table delicacy 462 canzonet, a short song in one, two, or three parts 473 a strange Pope, Pope Innocent XII (1691-1700) 479 Sum- ma, Summa Theologiae (Summary of Theology), a work by Thomas Aquinas (1227-74), a famous theologian and phillosopher

513 patch, dolt, clown 514 Vittiano, a village nine miles from Arezzo on the road to Perugia

The sham appointment, cudgel beneath cloak,
Prepared myself to pull the appointer's self
Out of the window from his hiding-place 545
Behind the gown of this part-messenger
Part-mistress who would personate the wife.
Such had seemed once a jest permissible,
Now, I am not i' the mood."

Back next morn brought
The messenger, a second letter in hand. 550
"You are cruel, Thyrsis, and Myrtilla moans
Neglected but adores you, makes request
For mercy: why is it you dare not come?
Such virtue is scarce natural to your age —
You must love someone else; I hear you do, 555
The Baron's daughter or the Advocate's wife,
Or both — all's one, would you make me the third —

I take the crumbs from table gratefully Nor grudge who feasts there. 'Faith, I blush and blaze!

Yet if I break all bounds, there's reason sure.
Are you determinedly bent on Rome? 561
I am wretched here, a monster tortures me,
Carry me with you! Come and say you will!
Concert this very evening! Do not write!
I am ever at the window of my room 565
Over the terrace, at the Ave. Come!"

I questioned — lifting half the woman's mask
To let her smile loose "So, you gave my line
To the merry lady?" "She kissed off the wax,

And put what paper was not kissed away 570
In her bosom to go burn; but merry, no!
She wept all night when evening brought no
friend,

Alone, the unkind missive at her breast,
Thus Philomel, the thorn at her breast too,
Sings" . . . "Writes this second letter?"

"Even so! 575
Then she may peep at vespers forth?" —
"What risk

Do we run o' the husband?" — "Ah — no risk at all!

He is more stupid even than jealous. Ah —
That was the reason? Why, the man's away!
Beside, his bugbear is that friend of yours, 580
Fat little Canon Conti. He fears him, How should he dream of you? I told you
truth:

He goes to the villa at Vittiano — 'tis
The time when Spring-sap rises in the vine — Spends the night there And then his wife's a child, 585

551 Thyrsis, Myrtilla. These are common names of lovers in pastoral poetry 566 at the Ave, at the hour of evening prayer, when the Ave Maria (Hail Mary) is sung 574-575 Thus Philomel . . . Sings The nightingale (Philomel) was said to sing more sweetly than usual just before death.

Does he think a child outwits him? A mere
child —

Yet so full-grown, a dish for any duke
Don't quarrel longer with such cates, but
come!"

I wrote, "In vain do you solicit me.
I am a priest, and you are wedded wife, 590
Whatever kind of brute your husband prove
I have scruples, in short. Yet should you really show

Sign at the window . . . but nay, best be
good!

My thoughts are elsewhere." — "Take her
that!"

— "Again

Let the incarnate meanness, cheat and spy, 595
Mean to the marrow of him, make his heart
His food, anticipate hell's worm once more!
Let him watch shivering at the window — aye,
And let this hybrid, this his light-of-love
And lackey-of-lies — a sage economy — 600
Paid with embracings for the rank brass coin —

Let her report and make him chuckle o'er
The breakdown of my resolution now,
And lour at disappointment in good time!
— So tantalize and so enrage by turns, 605
Until the two fall each on the other like
Two famished spiders, as the coveted fly,
That toys long, leaves their net and them at
last!"

And so the missives followed thick and fast
For a month, say — I still came at every turn 610

On the soft sly adder, endlong 'neath my tread.

I was met i' the street, made sign to in the church,

A slip was found i' the door-sill, scribbled
word

'Twixt page and page o' the prayer-book in my place.

A crumpled thing dropped even before my feet, 615

Pushed through the blind, above the terrace-rail,

As I passed, by day, the very window once
And ever from corners would be peering up
The messenger, with the selfsame demand,
"Obdurate still, no flesh but adamant? 620
Nothing to cure the wound, assuage the throe
O' the sweetest lamb that ever loved a bear?"
And ever my one answer in one tone —

"Go your ways, temptress! Let a priest read,
pray,

Unplugged of vain talk, visions not for him!

In the end, you'll have your will and ruin
me!" 626

One day, a variation; thus I read:
"You have gained little by timidity
My husband has found out my love at length,
Sees cousin Conti was the stalking-horse, 630
And you the game he covered, poor fat soul!
My husband is a formidable foe,
Will stick at nothing to destroy you Stand
Prepared, or better, run till you reach Rome!
I bade you visit me, when the last place 635
My tyrant would have turned suspicious at,
Or cared to seek you in, was . . . why say,
where?"

But now all's changed, beside, the season's
past

At the villa — wants the master's eye no
more

Anyhow, I beseech you, stay away 640
From the window! He might well be posted
there"

I wrote — "You raise my courage, or call up
My curiosity, who am but man.
Tell him he owns the palace, not the street
Under — that's his and yours and mine alike
If it should please me pad the path this eve,
Guido will have two troubles — first to get 647
Into a rage, and then get out again.
Be cautious, though: at the Avel"

You of the court,
When I stood question here and reached this
point 650

O' the narrative — search notes and see and
say

If someone did not interpose with smile
And sneer, "And prithee why so confident That the husband must, of all needs, not the
wife,

Fabricate thus — what if the lady loved? 655
What if she wrote the letters?"

Learned Sir,
I told you there's a picture in our church.
Well, if a low-browed verger sidled up
Bringing me, like a blotch, on his prod's point,
A transfixed scorpion, let the reptile writhe,
And then said, "See a thing that Rafael
made — 661

This venom issued from Madonna's mouth!"
I should reply, "Rather, the soul of you
Has issued from your body, like from like,
By way of the ordure-corner!"

But no less, 665
I tired of the same long black teasing lie
Obtruded thus at every turn, the pest

658 verger, an official who takes care of the interior of a church building

Was far too near the picture, anyhow.
One does Madonna service, making clowns
Remove their dung-heap from the sacristy. 670
"I will to the window, as he tempts," said I
"Yes, whom the easy love has failed allure,
This new bait of adventure tempts — thinks
he.

Though the imprisoned lady keeps afar,
There will they lie in ambush, heads alert, 675
Kith, kin, and Count mustered to bite my heel.

No mother nor brother viper of the brood
Shall scuttle off without the instructive bruise!"

So I went, crossed street and street: "The next street's turn,

I stand beneath the terrace, see, above, 680
The black of the ambush-window Then, in
place

Of hand's throw of soft prelude over lute,
And cough that clears way for the ditty
last" —

I began to laugh already — "he will have
'Out of the hole you hide in, on to the front,
Count Guido Franceschini, show yourself! 686
Hear what a man thinks of a thing like you,
And after, take this foulness in your face!"

The words lay living on my lip, I made
The one turn more — and there at the window
stood, 690
Framed in its black square length, with lamp
in hand,

Pomplia; the same great, grave, grievful air
As stands i' the dusk, on altar that I know,
Left alone with one moonbeam in her cell,
Our Lady of all the Sorrows Ere I knelt — 695
Assured myself that she was flesh and blood —
She had looked one look and vanished

I thought — "Just so,
It was herself, they have set her there to watch —

Stationed to see some wedding-band go by,
On fair pretense that she must bless the
bride, 700

Or wait some funeral with friends wind past,
And crave peace for the corpse that claims its due.

She never dreams they used her for a snare,
And now withdraw the bait has served its
turn

Well done, the husband, who shall fare the
worse!" 705

And on my lip again was — "Out with thee,

695 Our Lady of all the Sorrows, a picture of the Virgin Mary, painted with a sword in her breast to represent her griefs, as stated in Luke, 11 35 — "A sword shall pierce through thine own soul also" For the Seven Sorrows of the Virgin see the note on line 52, page 223.

Guido!" When all at once she reappeared,
But, this time, on the terrace overhead,
So close above me, she could almost touch
My head if she bent down; and she did bend,
While I stood still as stone, all eye, all ear 711

She began — "You have sent me letters, Sir
I have read none — I can neither read nor write,

But she you gave them to, a woman here,
One of the people in whose power I am, 715
Partly explained their sense, I think, to me
Obliged to listen while she inculcates
That you, a priest, can dare love me, a wife,
Desire to live or die as I shall bid
(She makes me listen if I will or no), 720
Because you saw my face a single time.
It cannot be she says the thing you mean;
Such wickedness were deadly to us both
But good true love would help me now so
much —

I tell myself, you may mean good and true.
You offer me, I seem to understand, 726
Because I am in poverty and starve, Much money, where one piece would save my
life.

The silver cup upon the altar-cloth
Is neither yours to give nor mine to take; 730
But I might take one bit of bread therefrom,
Since I am starving, and return the rest,
Yet do no harm: this is my very case.
I am in that strait, I may not dare abstain
From so much of assistance as would bring 735
The guilt of theft on neither you nor me;
But no superfluous particle of aid.
I think, if you will let me state my case,
Even had you been so fancy-fevered here,
Not your sound self, you must grow healthy
now — 740

Care only to bestow what I can take.
That it is only you in the wide world,
Knowing me nor in thought nor word nor
deed,

Who, all unprompted save by your own heart,
Came proffering assistance now—were strange,
But that my whole life is so strange, as
strange 746

It is, my husband, whom I have not wronged, Should hate and harm me. For his own soul's sake,

Hinder the harm! But there is something
more,

And that the strangest: it has got to be 750
Somehow for my sake too, and yet not mine
— This is a riddle — for some kind of sake
Not any clearer to myself than you,
And yet as certain as that I draw breath —
I would fain live, not die — oh no, not die!
My case is, I was dwelling happily 756
At Rome with those dear Comparini called

Father and mother to me, when at once
I found I had become Count Guido's wife,
Who then, not waiting for a moment, changed
Into a fury of fire, if once he was 761
Merely a man. His face threw fire at mine,
He laid a hand on me that burned all peace,
All joy, all hope, and last all fear away,
Dipping the bough of life, so pleasant once, 765
In fire which shriveled leaf and bud alike,
Burning not only present life but past,
Which you might think was safe beyond his reach.

He reached it, though, since that beloved pair,
My father once, my mother all those years, 770
That loved me so, now say I dreamed a dream
And bid me wake, henceforth no child of theirs,

Never in all the time their child at all.
Do you understand? I cannot; yet so it is.
Just so I say of you that proffer help: 775
I cannot understand what prompts your soul,
I simply needs must see that it is so,
Only one strange and wonderful thing more
They came here with me, those two dear ones, kept

All the old love up, till my husband, till 780
His people here so tortured them, they fled.
And now, is it because I grow in flesh
And spirit one with him their torturer,
That they, renouncing him, must cast off me?
If I were graced by God to have a child, 785
Could I one day deny God graced me so?
Then, since my husband hates me, I shall break

No law that reigns in this fell house of hate,
By using — letting have effect so much
Of hate as hides me from that whole of hate
Would take my life which I want and must have — 791

Just as I take from your excess of love
Enough to save my life with, all I need.
The Archbishop said to murder me were sin;
My leaving Guido were a kind of death 795
With no sin — more death, he must answer
for.

Hear now what death to him and life to you
I wish to pay and owe. Take me to Rome!
You go to Rome, the servant makes me hear
Take me as you would take a dog, I think, 800
Masterless left for strangers to maltreat;
Take me home like that — leave me in the house

Where the father and the mother are; and
soon

They'll come to know and call me by my
name,

Their child once more, since child I am, for
all 805

They now forget me, which is the worst o'
the dream —

And the way to end dreams is to break them,
stand,
Walk, go. Then help me to stand, walk, and
go!

The Governor said the strong should help the
weak;

You know how weak the strongest women are.
How could I find my way there by myself? 811
I cannot even call out, make them hear —
Just as in dreams, I have tried and proved the fact.

I have told this story and more to good great
men,

'The Archbishop and the Governor, they smiled 815

'Stop your mouth, fair one!' — presently they frowned,

'Get you gone, disengage you from our feet'
I went in my despair to an old priest,

Only a friar, no great man like these two,
But good, the Augustinian, people name 820
Romano — he confessed me two months since He fears God; why then needs he fear the
world?

'And when he questioned how it came about
That I was found in danger of a sin —

Despair of any help from providence — 825
'Since, though your husband outrage you,'

said he,
'That is a case too common, the wives die
Or live, but do not sin so deep as this' —

'Then I told — what I never will tell you — How, worse than husband's hate, I had to bear 830

The love — soliciting to shame called love —
Of his brother — the young idle priest 1' the house

With only the devil to meet there. 'This is
grave —

Yes, we must interfere I counsel — write
To those who used to be your parents once, 835
Of dangers here, bid them convey you hence'

'But,' said I, 'when I neither read nor write'
Then he took pity and promised 'I will write'

If he did so — why, they are dumb or dead,
Either they give no credit to the tale, 840

Or else, wrapped wholly up in their own joy
Of such escape, they care not who cries, still
I' the clutches. Anyhow, no word arrives.

All such extravagance and dreadfulness 844
Seems incident to dreaming, cured one way —
Wake me! The letter I received this morn

Said — if the woman spoke your very sense —
'You would die for me.' I can believe it now,

For now the dream gets to involve yourself
First of all, you seemed wicked and not good,

In writing me those letters; you came in 851
Like a thief upon me. I this morning said
In my extremity, entreat the thief!

Ty if he have in him no honest touch!

A thief might save me from a murderer 855
'Twas a thief said the last kind word to Christ.
Christ took the kindness and forgave the theft,

And so did I prepare what I now say
But now, that you stand and I see your face,
Though you have never uttered word yet —
well, I know, 860

Here too has been dream-work, delusion too,
And that at no time, you with the eyes here,
Ever intended to do wrong by me,
Nor wrote such letters therefore It is false,
And you are true, have been true, will be
true. 865

To Rome then — when is it you take me
there?

Each minute lost is mortal When? — I ask "

I answered, "It shall be when it can be
I will go hence and do your pleasure, find
The sure and speedy means of travel, then 870
Come back and take you to your friends in
Rome

There wants a carriage, money, and the rest —
A day's work by tomorrow at this time
How shall I see you and assure escape?"

She replied, "Pass, tomorrow at this hour 875
If I am at the open window, well;
If I am absent, drop a handkerchief
And walk by! I shall see from where I watch,
And know that all is done. Return next
eve,

And next, and so till we can meet and speak!"
"Tomorrow at this hour I pass," said I 881
She was withdrawn.

Here is another point
I bid you pause at When I told thus far,
Someone said, subtly, "Here at least was found
Your confidence in error — you perceived 885
The spirit of the letters, in a sort,
Had been the lady's, if the body should be Supplied by Guido: say, he forged them all!
Here was the unforced fact — she sent for
you,

Spontaneously elected you to help, 890
— What men call, loved you; Guido read her
mind,

Gave it expression to assure the world
The case was just as he foresaw He wrote,
She spoke "

Sirs, that first simile serves still —
That falsehood of a scorpion hatched, I say,

856 the last kind word to Christ See the account of the Crucifixion in Luke, 23 32-34 One of the thieves "said unto Jesus, 'Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom' And Jesus said unto him, 'Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise'" 894 that first simile See lines 656 665, page 306

Nowhere i' the world but in Madonna's
mouth. 896
Go on! Suppose, that falsehood foiled, next
Pictured Madonna raised her painted hand,
Fixed the face Rafael bent above the Babe,
On my face as I flung me at her feet; 900
Such miracle vouchsafed and manifest,
Would that prove the first lying tale was true?
Pompilia spoke, and I at once received,
Accepted my own fact, my miracle
Self-authorized and self-explained — she chose
To summon me and signify her choice. 906
Afterward — oh! I gave a passing glance
To a certain ugly cloud-shape, goblin-shred
Of hell-smoke hurrying past the splendid moon
Out now to tolerate no darkness more, 910
And saw right through the thing that tried to
pass
For truth and solid, not an empty lie.
"So, he not only forged the words for her
But words for me, made letters he called
mine,
What I sent, he retained, gave these in place,
All by the mistress-messenger! As I 916
Recognized her, at potency of truth,
So she, by the crystalline soul, knew me,
Never mistook the signs Enough of this —
Let the wrath go to nothingness again, 920
Here is the orb, have only thought for her!"
"Thought?" nay, Sirs, what shall follow was not thought;
I have thought sometimes, and thought long and hard
I have stood before, gone round a serious
thing,
Tasked my whole mind to touch and clasp it
close, 925
As I stretch forth my arm to touch this bar
God and man, and what duty I owe both —
I dare to say I have confronted these
In thought, but no such faculty helped here
I put forth no thought — powerless, all that
night 930
I paced the city, it was the first spring.
By the invasion I lay passive to,
In rushed new things, the old were rapt away;
Alike abolished — the imprisonment
Of the outside air, the inside weight o' the
world 935
That pulled me down Death meant, to spurn
the ground,
Soar to the sky — die well and you do that.
The very immolation made the bliss,
Death was the heart of life, and all the harm
My folly had crouched to avoid, now proved a veil 940
Hiding all gain my wisdom strove to grasp —

As if the intense center of the flame
Should turn a heaven to that devoted fly
Which hitherto, sophist alike and sage,
Saint Thomas with his sober gray goose-quill,
And sinner Plato by Cephisian reed, 946
Would fain, pretending just the insect's good,
Whisk off, drive back, consign to shade again.
Into another state, under new rule
I knew myself was passing swift and sure; 950
Whereof the initiatory pang approached,
Felicitous annoy, as bitter-sweet
As when the virgin-band, the victors chaste,
Feel at the end the earthly garments drop,
And rise with something of a rosy shame 955
Into immortal nakedness: so I Lay, and let come the proper throe would thrill
Into the ecstasy and outthrob pain.

I' the gray of dawn it was I found myself
Facing the pillared front o' the Pieve — mine,
My church; it seemed to say for the first
time,
"But am not I the Bride, the mystic love 962
O' the Lamb, who took thy plighted troth,
my priest,
To fold thy warm heart on my heart of stone
And freeze thee nor unfasten any more? 965
This is a fleshly woman — let the free
Bestow their life-blood; thou art pulseless
now!"
See! Day by day I had risen and left this church
At the signal waved me by some foolish fan,
With half a curse and half a pitying smile 970
For the monk I stumbled over in my haste,
Prostrate and corpse-like at the altar-foot
Intent on his corona; then the church
Was ready with her quip, if word conduced,
To quicken my pace nor stop for prating —
"There!
Be thankful you are no such ninny, go 976
Rather to teach a black-eyed novice cards
Than gabble Latin and protrude that nose Smooth to a sheep's through no brains and much faith!"
That sort of incentive! Now the church changed tone — 980
Now, when I found out first that life and
death
Are means to an end, that passion uses both,
Indisputably mistress of the man
Whose form of worship is self-sacrifice,
Now, from the stone lungs sighed the scannel
voice, 985

945 Saint Thomas, Saint Thomas Aquinas (see note on line 479, page 304) 946 sinner Plato by Cephisian reed Plato was a famous Greek philosopher (427-347 B.C.). He was called sinner because he was a pagan. The Cephissus was a river near Athens 963 the Lamb, Christ 973 corona, rosary 985 scannel, weak

"Leave that live passion, come be dead with
me!" 986
As if, i' the fabled garden, I had gone
On great adventure, plucked in ignorance
Hedge-fruit, and feasted to satiety,
Laughing at such high fame for hips and haws,
And scorned the achievement; then come all at once 991
O' the prize o' the place, the thing of perfect
gold,
The apple's self — and, scarce my eye on that,
Was 'wake as well o' the seven-fold dragon's
watch.

Sirs, I obeyed. Obedience was too strange —
This new thing that had been struck into me
By the look o' the lady — to dare disobey 997
The first authoritative word 'Twas God's.
I had been lifted to the level of her,
Could take such sounds into my sense. I said,
"We two are cognizant o' the Master now;
She it is bids me bow the head How true, 1002
I am a priest! I see the function here;
I thought the other way self-sacrifice:
This is the true, seals up the perfect sum.
I pay it, sit down, silently obey." 1006

So, I went home Dawn broke, noon broadened, I —

I sat stone-still, let time run over me.
The sun slanted into my room, had reached
The west I opened book — Aquinas blazed
With one black name only on the white page.
I looked up, saw the sunset, vespers rang 1012
"She counts the minutes till I keep my word
And come say all is ready I am a priest.
Duty to God is duty to her, I think 1015
God, who created her, will save her too
Some new way, by one miracle the more,
Without me Then, prayer may avail perhaps"

I went to my own place i' the Pieve, read
The office, I was back at home again 1020 Sitting i' the dark "Could she but know — but know

That, were there good in this distinct from God's,

Really good as it reached her, though procured

By a sin of mine — I should sin, God forgives
She knows it is no fear withholds me — fear?
Of what? Suspense here is the terrible thing
If she should, as she counts the minutes, come
On the fantastic notion that I fear 1028
The world now, fear the Archbishop, fear perhaps

Count Guido, he who, having forged the lies,

May wait the work, attend the effect — I
fear 1031
The sword of Guido! Let God see to that — Hating lies, let not her believe a lie!"

Again the morning found me "I will work, Tie down my foolish thoughts. Thank God so far! 1035
I have saved her from a scandal, stopped the tongues
Had broken else into a cackle and hiss
Around the noble name Duty is still Wisdom; I have been wise " So the day wore,

At evening — "But, achieving victory, 1040
I must not blink the priest's peculiar part,
Nor shrink to counsel, comfort Priest and
friend —

How do we discontinue to be friends?
I will go minister, advise her seek Help at the source — above all, not despair
There may be other happier help at hand 1046
I hope it — wherefore then neglect to say?"

There she stood — leaned there, for the second
time,

Over the terrace, looked at me, then spoke:
"Why is it you have suffered me to stay 1050
Breaking my heart two days more than was need?"

Why delay help, your own heart yearns to give?

You are again here, in the selfsame mind,
I see here, steadfast in the face of you —
You grudge to do no one thing that I ask Why then is nothing done? You know my need 1056

Still, through God's pity on me, there is
time

And one day more; shall I be saved or no?"

I answered — "Lady, waste no thought, no
word

Even to forgive me! Care for what I care —
Only! Now follow me as I were fate! 1061
Leave this house in the dark tomorrow night,
Just before daybreak; there's new moon this
eve —

It sets, and then begins the solid black
Descend, proceed to the Torrione, step 1065
Over the low dilapidated wall,
Take San Clemente; there's no other gate
Unguarded at the hour Some paces thence
An inn stands, cross to it, I shall be there"

She answered, "If I can but find the way 1070
But I shall find it. Go now!"

987 fabled garden, the Garden of the Hesperides, where the golden apple was guarded by a dragon (line 994)

1065-1067 Torrione . . San Clemente The Torrione was a part of the wall adjacent to the San Clemente gate at the extreme north end of Arezzo

I did go,
Took rapidly the route myself prescribed,
Stopped at Torrione, climbed the ruined place,
Proved that the gate was practicable, reached
The inn, no eye, despite the dark, could miss,
Knocked there and entered, made the host
secure: 1076

"With Caponsacchi it is ask and have,
I know my betters. Are you bound for Rome?
I get swift horse and trusty man," said he.

Then I retraced my steps, was found once
more

In my own house for the last time, there lay
The broad pale opened "Summa." "Shut his book, 1082

There's other showing! 'Twas a Thomas too Obtained — more favored than his namesake
here —

A gift, tied faith fast, foiled the tug of doubt—
Our Lady's girdle, down he saw it drop 1086
As she ascended into heaven, they say
He kept that safe and bade all doubt adieu.
I too have seen a lady and hold a grace."

I know not how the night passed. Morning
broke; 1090

Presently came my servant. "Sir, this eve —
Do you forget?" I started. "How forget?
What is it you know?" "With due submission, Sir,

This being last Monday in the month but one,
And a vigil, since tomorrow is Saint George,
And feast-day, and moreover day for copes,
And Canon Conti now away a month, 1097
And Canon Crispi sour because, forsooth,
You let him sulk in stall and bear the brunt
Of the octave . . . Well, Sir, 'tis important!"

"True!

Hearken, I have to start for Rome this night.
No word, lest Crispi overboil and burst! 1102
Provide me with a laic dress! Throw dust
I' the Canon's eye, stop his tongue's scandal
so!

See there's a sword in case of accident "
I knew the knave, the knave knew me.

And thus 1106

Through each familiar hindrance of the day
Did I make steadily for its hour and end —
Felt time's old barrier-growth of right and fit
Give way through all its twines, and let me
go 1110

1086-1087 Our Lady's girdle . . . heaven As the Virgin Mary ascended into heaven, tradition reports that her girdle, which had been loosened, fell into the hands of St Thomas, the doubting apostle 1095 Saint George, the patron saint of England His day is April 23 1096 cope, an ecclesiastical vestment 1099 stall, a seat in the choir of a church, for officiating clergy 1100 octave, the week after a church festival, in this instance, April 14 to 21 inclusive 1103 laic, secular

Use and wont recognized the excepted man,
Let speed the special service — and I sped
Till, at the dead between midnight and morn,
There was I at the goal, before the gate,
With a tune in the ears, low leading up to
loud, 1115

A light in the eyes, faint that would soon be flare,

Ever some spiritual witness new and new
In faster frequency, crowding solitude
To watch the way o' the warfare — till, at
last,

When the ecstatic minute must bring birth,
Began a whiteness in the distance, waxed 1121
Whiter and whiter, near grew and more near,
Till it was she; there did Pompilia come.

The white I saw shine through her was her
soul's,

Certainly, for the body was one black, 1125
Black from head down to foot She did not
speak,

Glided into the carriage — so a cloud
Gathers the moon up "By San Spirito,
To Rome, as if the road burned underneath!
Reach Rome, then hold my head in pledge, I pay 1130

The run and the risk to heart's content!"
Just that

I said — then, in another tick of time,
Sprang, was beside her, she and I alone.

So it began, our flight through dusk to clear,
Through day and night and day again to night
Once more, and to last dreadful dawn of all
Sirs, how should I lie quiet in my grave 1137
Unless you suffer me wring, drop by drop,
My brain dry, make a riddance of the drench
Of minutes with a memory in each, 1140
Recorded motion, breath or look of hers,
Which poured forth would present you one pure glass,

Mirror you plain — as God's sea, glassed in
gold,

His saints — the perfect soul Pompilia? Men,
You must know that a man gets drunk with
truth 1145

Stagnant inside him! Oh, they've killed her,
Sirs!

Can I be calm?

Calmly! Each incident

Proves, I maintain, that action of the flight
For the true thing it was. The first faint scratch

O' the stone will test its nature, teach its
worth 1150

To idiots who name Parian — coprolite.

1128 San Spirito, a gate at the south end of Arezzo 1143 God's sea, glassed. Cf Revelation, 4 6 — "And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal" 1151 Parian, pure marble from Paros, a Greek island in the Aegean Sea coprolite, a piece of petrified dung

After all, I shall give no glare — at best
Only display you certain scattered lights
Lamping the rush and roll of the abyss,
Nothing but here and there a fire-point pricks
Wavelet from wavelet Well!

For the first hour 1156
We both were silent in the night, I know,
Sometimes I did not see nor understand
Blackness engulfed me—partial stupor, say—
Then I would break way, breathe through the surprise, 1160

And be aware again, and see who sat
In the dark vest with the white face and
hands.

I said to myself — “I have caught it, I conceive

The mind o’ the mystery, ’tis the way they wake

And wait, two martyrs somewhere in a tomb,
Each by each as their blessing was to die, 1166
Some signal they are promised and expect —
When to arise before the trumpet scares:

So, through the whole course of the world
they wait

The last day, but so fearless and so safe! 1170
No otherwise, in safety and not fear,
I lie, because she lies too by my side ”

You know this is not love, Sirs — it is faith,
The feeling that there’s God, he reigns and rules 1174

Out of this low world — that is all; no harm!
At time she drew a soft sigh — music seemed Always to hover just above her lips,
Not settle — break a silence music too

In the determined morning, I first found
Her head erect, her face turned full to me, 1180
Her soul intent on mine through two wide
eyes.

I answered them “You are saved hitherto
We have passed Perugia — gone round by the
wood,

Not through, I seem to think — and opposite
I know Assisi, this is holy ground ” 1185
Then she resumed. “How long since we both
left

Arczzo?” — “Years — and certain hours beside ”

It was at . . . ah, but I forget the names!
’Tis a mere post-house and a hovel or two;
I left the carriage and got bread and wine
And brought it her. — “Does it detain to eat?” 1191

“ — They stay perforce, change horses —
therefore eat!

We lose no minute; we arrive, be sure!”

1183 Perugia, a city about forty miles from Arczzo, on the road to Rome 1185 holy ground, holy because St. Francis was born there in 1182. He was the founder of the Order of Franciscan monks and of the monastery of St. Francis

This was — I know not where — there’s a great hill

Close over, and the stream has lost its bridge,
One fords it She began — “I have heard say
Of some sick body that my mother knew, 1197
’Twas no good sign when in a lumb diseased
All the pain suddenly departs — as if

The guardian angel discontinued pain 1200
Because the hope of cure was gone at last,
The lumb will not again exert itself,

It needs be pained no longer so with me —
My soul whence all the pain is past at once,
All pain must be to work some good in the
end 1205

True, this I feel now, this may be that good,
Pain was because of — otherwise, I fear!”

She said — a long while later in the day,
When I had let the silence be — abrupt — “Have you a mother?” “She died, I was born ” 1210

“A sister then?” “No sister.” “Who was
it —

What woman were you used to serve this way,
Be kind to, till I called you and you came?”
I did not like that word Soon afterward —
“Tell me, are men unhappy, in some kind 1215
Of mere unhappiness at being men,

As women suffer, being womanish?
Have you, now, some unhappiness, I mean,
Born of what may be man’s strength over-
much,

To match the undue susceptibility, 1220
The sense at every pore when hate is close?
It hurts us if a baby hides its face
Or child strikes at us punily, calls names

Or makes a mouth — much more it stranger
men

Laugh or frown — just as that were much to
bear! 1225

Yet rocks split — and the blow-ball does no
more,

Quivers to feathery nothing at a touch,
And strength may have its drawback, weakness ’scapes ”

Once she asked, “What is it that made you
smile,

At the great gate with the eagles and the snakes, 1230

Where the company entered, ’tis a long time since?”

“ — Forgive — I think you would not understand.

Ah, but you ask me — therefore, it was this
That was a certain bishop’s villa-gate
(I knew it by the eagles), and at once 1235
Remember this same bishop was just he

People of old were wont to bid me please
 If I would catch preferment, so, I smiled
 Because an impulse came to me, a whim —
 What if I prayed the prelate leave to speak,
 Began upon him in his presence-hall 1241
 — 'What, still at work so gray and obsolete?
 Still rocheted and mitered more or less?
 Don't you feel all that out of fashion now?
 I find out when the day of things is done!' "

At eve we heard the angelus; she turned — 1246
 "I told you I can neither read nor write.
 My life stopped with the play-time; I will learn,

If I begin to live again; but you —
 Who are a priest — wherefore do you not read
 The service at this hour? Read Gabriel's
 song, 1251
 The lesson, and then read the little prayer
 To Raphael, proper for us travelers!"
 I did not like that, neither, but I read.

When we stopped at Foligno it was dark. 1255
 The people of the post came out with lights.
 The driver said, "This time tomorrow, may Saints only help, relays continue good,
 Nor robbers hinder, we arrive at Rome"
 I urged — "Why tax your strength a second
 night? 1260

Trust me, alight here and take brief repose!
 We are out of harm's reach, past pursuit; go
 sleep

If but an hour! I keep watch, guard the while Herc in the doorway." But her whole face changed —

The misery grew again about her mouth; 1265
 The eyes burned up from faintness, like the fawn's
 Tired to death in the thicket, when she feels
 The probing spear o' the huntsman. "Oh, no
 stay!"

She cried, in the fawn's cry, "On to Rome, on, on —
 Unless 'tis you who fear — which cannot be!"

We did go on all night; but at its close 1271
 She was troubled, restless, moaned low, talked at whiles
 To herself, her brow on quiver with the
 dream

1243 rocheted and mitered. The rochet is a close-fitting linen vestment resembling the surplice. The miter is the official headdress of a bishop. 1246 the angelus, a prayer spoken at the sound of the bell at morning, noon, and night. It consists of Gabriel's salutation (line 1251) to Mary—Ave Maria (Hail Mary), etc. 1251 Gabriel's song, a hymn in the Roman Catholic breviary for the feast of St. Gabriel, the Archangel 1252-1253 prayer To Raphael, a prayer in the Roman Catholic breviary for the feast of St. Raphael, an angel mentioned in the apocryphal book of Tobit. He is represented as a traveler. 1255 Foligno, a small town about twenty miles from Perugia, and ten from Assisi.

Once, wide awake, she menaced, at arms
 length

Waved away something — "Never again with
 you! 1275

My soul is mine, my body is my soul's;
 You and I are divided evermore
 In soul and body. Get you gone!" Then I —
 "Why, in my whole life I have never prayed!
 Oh, if the God, that only can, would help!
 Am I his priest with power to cast out fiends?
 Let God arise and all his enemies 1282
 Be scattered!" By morn, there was peace, no sigh

Out of the deep sleep.

When she woke at last,
 I answered the first look — "Scarce twelve hours more, 1285

Then, Rome! There probably was no pursuit,

There cannot now be peril, bear up brave!
 Just some twelve hours to press through to the prize,

Then, no more of the terrible journey!"
 "Then, 1289

No more o' the journey; if it might but last!
 Always, my life long, thus to journey still!
 It is the interruption that I dread —

With no dread, ever to be here and thus!
 Never to see a face nor hear a voice!

Yours is no voice, you speak when you are
 dumb; 1295

Nor face — I see it in the dark. I want
 No face nor voice that change and grow unkind."

That I liked, that was the best thing she said

In the broad day, I dared entreat, "Descend!"
 I told a woman, at the garden-gate 1300
 By the post-house, white and pleasant in the
 sun,

"It is my sister — talk with her apart!
 She is married and unhappy, you perceive,
 I take her home because her head is hurt,
 Comfort her as you women understand!" 1305

So, there I left them by the garden-wall,
 Paced the road, then bade put the horses to,
 Came back, and there she sat Close to her
 knee,

A black-eyed child still held the bowl of milk,
 Wondered to see how little she could drink,
 And in her arms the woman's infant lay 1311
 She smiled at me, "How much good this has
 done!

This is a whole night's rest and how much
 more!

I can proceed now, though I wish to stay.
 How do you call that tree with the thick top
 That holds in all its leafy green and gold 1316
 The sun now like an immense egg of fire?"

(It was a million-leaved mimosa) "Take
The babe away from me and let me go!"
And in the carriage, "Still a day, my friend!
And perhaps half a night, the woman fears
I pray it finish, since it cannot last 1322
There may be more misfortune at the close,
And where will you be? God suffice me
then!"

And presently — for there was a roadside-
shrine — 1325

"When I was taken first to my own church,
Lorenzo in Lucina, being a girl,
And bid confess my faults, I interposed,
'But teach me what fault to confess and
know!'

So, the priest said — 'You should bethink yourself, 1330
Each human being needs must have done
wrong!'

Now, be you candid and no priest but friend —
Were I surprised and killed here on the spot,
A runaway from husband and his home,
Do you account it were in sin I died? 1335
My husband used to seem to harm me, not —
Not on pretense he punished sin of mine,
Nor for sin's sake and lust of cruelty,
But as I heard him bid a farming-man
At the villa take a lamb once to the wood 1340
And there ill-treat it, meaning that the wolf Should hear its cries, and so come, quick be caught,

Enticed to the trap He practiced thus with
me

That so, whatever were his gain thereby, 1344
Others than I might become prey and spoil
Had it been only between our two selves —
His pleasure and my pain — why, pleasure
him

By dying, nor such need to make a coil!
But this was worth an effort, that my pain
Should not become a snare, prove pain threefold 1350

To other people — strangers — or unborn — How should I know? I sought release from
that —

I think, or else from — dare I say, some cause
Such as is put into a tree, which turns
Away from the north wind with what nest it holds — 1355

The woman said that trees so turn. Now,
friend,

Tell me — because I cannot trust myself!
You are a man — what have I done amiss?"
You must conceive my answer — I forget — Taken up wholly with the thought, perhaps,

This time she might have said — might, did not say — 1361

1327 Lorenzo in Lucina, the Church of San Lorenzo-in-Lucina, in Rome 1348 coil, fuss, confusion

"You are a priest" She said "my friend"
Day wore,
We passed the places, somehow the calm went,
Again the restless eyes began to rove
In new fear of the foe mine could not see 1365
She wandered in her mind — addressed me
once

"Gaetano!" — that is not my name, whose
name?

I grew alarmed, my head seemed turning too
I quickened pace with promise now, now threat;

Bade drive and drive, nor any stopping more
"Too deep!" the thick of the struggle, struggle
through! 1371

Then drench her in repose though death's self pour

The plenitude of quiet — help us, God,
Whom the winds carry!"

Suddenly I saw

The old tower, and the little white-walled clump 1375

Of buildings and the cypress-tree or two —
"Already Castelnovo — Rome!" I cried,
"As good as Rome — Rome is the next stage,
think!

This is where travelers' hearts are wont to beat

Say you are saved, sweet lady!" Up she woke 1380

The sky was fierce with color from the sun Setting She screamed out, "No, I must not
die!

Take me no farther, I should die, stay here!
I have more life to save than mine!"

She swooned

We seemed safe; what was it foreboded so?

Out of the coach into the inn I bore 1386
The motionless and breathless pure and pale
Pompilia — bore her through a pitying group
And laid her on a couch, still calm and cured
By deep sleep of all woes at once The host
Was urgent, "Let her stay an hour or two! 1391
Leave her to us, all will be right by morn!"
Oh, my foreboding! But I could not choose
I paced the passage, kept watch all night long,
I listened — not one movement, not one sigh
"Fear not; she sleeps so sound!" they said

But I 1396

Feared, all the same, kept fearing more and
more,

Found myself throb with fear from head to
foot,

Filled with a sense of such impending woe
That, at first pause of night, pretense of gray,

1367 Gaetano. This was the name of Pompilia's son, he was named after St Gaetan (1486-1547), founder of the Order of Theatins (See Pompilia, 99 ff., page 324) 1377
Castelnovo, a village about fifteen miles from Rome

I made my mind up it was morn. — "Reach
Rome, 1401
Lest hell reach her! A dozen miles to make,
Another long breath, and we emerge!" I stood
I' the courtyard, roused the sleepy grooms.
"Have out
Carriage and horse, give haste, take gold!"
said I. 1405
While they made ready in the doubtful
morn —
'Twas the last minute — needs must I ascend
And break her sleep, I turned to go.
And there
Faced me Count Guido, there posed the mean
man
As master — took the field, encamped his rights, 1410
Challenged the world; there leered new triumph, there
Scowled the old malice in the visage bad
And black o' the scamp. Soon triumph sup-pled the tongue
A little, malice glued to his dry throat,
And he part howled, part hissed . . . oh, how he kept 1415
Well out o' the way, at arm's length and to spare! —
"My salutation to your priesthood! What?
Matutinal, busy with book so soon
Of an April day that's damp as tears that
now
Deluge Arezzo at its darling's flight? — 1420
'Tis unfair, wrongs feminity at large,
To let a single dame monopolize
A heart the whole sex claims, should share
alike.
Therefore I overtake you, Canon! Come! 1424
The lady — could you leave her side so soon?
You have not yet experienced at her hands
My treatment, you lay down undrugged, I
see!
Hence this alertness — hence no death-in-life
Like what held arms fast when she stole from
mine.
To be sure, you took the solace and repose 1430
That first night at Foligno! — news abound
O' the road by this time — men regaled me
much,
As past them I came halting after you,
Vulcan pursuing Mars, as poets sing —
Still at the last here pant I, but arrive, 1435
Vulcan — and not without my Cyclops too,
The Commissary and the unpoisoned arm
O' the Civil Force, should Mars turn mutineer
Enough of fooling, capture the culprits, friend!

1418 Matutinal, early 1434 Vulcan . . . Mars
Vulcan was the blacksmith of the gods and the consort of Venus, goddess of love. He objected to the love of Venus for Mars, god of war. The story is told in the Odyssey.
1436 Cyclops, a race of giants said to have assisted in the workshop of Vulcan under Mt. Etna.

Here is the lover in the smart disguise 1440
With the sword — he is a priest, so mine lies
still.
There upstairs hides my wife the runaway,
His leman; the two plotted, poisoned first,
Plundered me after, and eloped thus far
Where now you find them. Do your duty
quick! 1445
Arrest and hold him! That's done; now catch
her!"
During this speech of that man — well, I
stood
Away, as he managed; still, I stood as near
The throat of him — with these two hands,
my own —
As now I stand near yours, Sir — one quick
spring, 1450
One great good satisfying gripe, and lo!
There had he lain abolished with his lie,
Creation purged o' the miscreate, man redeemed,
A spittle wiped off from the face of God!
I, in some measure, seek a poor excuse 1455
For what I left undone, in just this fact
That my first feeling at the speech I quote
Was — not of what a blasphemy was dared,
Not what a bag of venomous purulence 1459
Was split and noisome — but how splendidly
Mirthful, how ludicrous a lie was launched!
Would Molière's self wish more than hear such man
Call, claim such woman for his own, his wife,
Even though, in due amazement at the boast,
He had stammered, she moreover was divine?
She to be his — were hardly less absurd 1466
Than that he took her name into his mouth,
Licked, and then let it go again, the beast,
Signed with his slaver. Oh, she poisoned him, Plundered him, and the rest! Well, what I wished 1470
Was, that he would but go on, say once more
So to the world, and get his meed of men,
The fist's reply to the filth. And while I mused,
The minute, oh, the misery, was gone!
On either idle hand of me there stood 1475
Really an officer, nor laughed i' the least;
Nay, rendered justice to his reason, laid Logic to heart, as 'twere submitted them
"Twice two makes four."
"And now, catch her!" he cried.
That sobered me. "Let myself lead the way —
Ere you arrest me, who am somebody, 1481
Being, as you hear, a priest and privileged —
To the lady's chamber! I presume you —
men

1459. purulence, pus, matter. 1462. Molière, the great French dramatist of the 17th century. Lines 1462-64 refer to his play Don Juan, in which the libertine husband claims Donna Elvire, the nun, as his wife.

Expert, instructed how to find out truth,
Familiar with the guise of guilt. Detect 1485 Guilt on her face when it meets mine, then judge

Between us and the mad dog howling there!"
Up we all went together; in they broke O' the chamber late my chapel There she
lay,

Composed as when I laid her, that last eve,
O' the couch, still breathless, motionless,
sleep's self, 1491

Wax-white, seraphic, saturate with the sun
O' the morning that now flooded from the front

And filled the window with a light like blood
"Behold the poisoner, the adulteress — 1495
And feigning sleep too! Seize, bind!" Guido hissed

She started up, stood erect, face to face
With the husband, back he fell, was buttressed there

By the window all aflame with morning-red,
He the black figure, the opprobrious blur 1500
Against all peace and joy and light and life.
"Away from between me and hell!" she cried,
"Hell for me, no embracing any more!

I am God's, I love God, God — whose knees
I clasp,

Whose utterly most just award I take, 1505
But bear no more love-making devils, hence!"
I may have made an effort to reach her side
From where I stood i' the doorway — anyhow

I found the arms, I wanted, pinioned fast,
Was powerless in the clutch to left and right
O' the rabble pouring in, rascality 1511
Enlisted, rampant on the side of hearth,
Home and the husband — pay in prospect
too!

They heaped themselves upon me. "Ha! — and him 1514

Also you outrage? Him, too, my sole friend, Guardian, and savior? That I balk you of,
Since — see how God can help at last and worst!"

She sprang at the sword that hung beside him,
seized,

Drew, brandished it (the sunrise burned for
joy

O' the blade), "Die," cried she, "devil, in God's name!" 1520

Ah, but they all closed round her, twelve to
one —

The unmanly men, no woman-mother made, Spawned somehow! Dead-white and disarmed she lay

No matter for the sword, her word sufficed
To spike the coward through and through; he shook, 1525

Could only spit between the teeth — "You
see?

You hear? Bear witness, then! Write down
. . . but no —

Carry these criminals to the prison-house,
For first thing! I begin my search meanwhile
After the stolen effects, gold, jewels, plate, 1530 Money and clothes, they robbed me of and fled,

With no few amorous pieces, verse and prose,
I have much reason to expect to find "

When I saw that — no more than the first mad speech,

Made out the speaker mad and a laughingstock, 1535

So neither did this next device explode
One listener's indignation — that a scribe
Did sit down, set himself to write indeed,
While sundry knaves began to peer and pry
In corner and hole — that Guido, wiping
brow 1540

And getting him a countenance, was fast
Losing his fear, beginning to strut free
O' the stage of his exploit, snuff here, sniff
there —

Then I took truth in, guessed sufficiently
The service for the moment. "What I say,
Slight at your peril! We are aliens here, 1546
My adversary and I, called noble both,
I am the nobler, and a name men know
I could refer our cause to our own court
In our own country, but prefer appeal 1550
To the nearer jurisdiction Being a priest,
Though in a secular garb — for reasons good
I shall adduce in due time to my peers —
I demand that the Church I serve, decide
Between us, right the slandered lady there 1555
A Tuscan noble, I might claim the Duke,
A priest, I rather choose the Church — bid

Cover the wronged with her inviolate shield."

There was no refusing this, they bore me off,
They bore her off, to separate cells o' the same Ignoble prison, and, separate, thence to
Rome. 1561

Pomplia's face, then and thus, looked on me
The last time in this life — not one sight since,
Never another sight to be! And yet
I thought I had saved her. I appealed to
Rome; 1565

It seems I simply sent her to her death.
You tell me she is dying now, or dead;
I cannot bring myself to quite believe
This is a place you torture people in.
What if this your intelligence were just 1570
A subtlety, an honest wile to work
On a man at unawares? 'Twere worthy you.
No, Sirs, I cannot have the lady dead!

That erect form, flashing brow, fulgorant eye,
That voice immortal (oh, that voice of hers!),
That vision in the blood-red daybreak — that Leap to life of the pale electric sword 1577
Angels go armed with — that was not the last O' the lady! Come, I see through it, you
find —

Know the maneuver! Also herself said 1580
I had saved her, do you dare say she spoke
false?

Let me see for myself if it be so!
Though she were dying, a priest might be of
use,

The more when he's a friend too — she called
me

Far beyond "friend." Come, let me see her — indeed

It is my duty, being a priest; I hope 1586
I stand confessed, established, proved a priest?
My punishment had motive that, a priest
I, in a laic garb, a mundane mode,
Did what were harmlessly done otherwise.

I never touched her with my finger-tip 1591
Except to carry her to the couch, that eve, Against my heart, beneath my head, bowed
low,

As we priests carry the paten; that is why
— To get leave and go see her of your grace —
I have told you this whole story over again. 1596

Do I deserve grace? For I might lock lips,
Laugh at your jurisdiction; what have you
To do with me in the matter? I suppose
You hardly think I donned a bravo's dress

To have a hand in the new crime; on the old,
Judgment's delivered, penalty imposed, 1602
I was chained fast at Civita hand and foot —

She had only you to trust to, you and Rome,
Rome and the Church, and no pert meddling
priest 1605

Two days ago, when Guido, with the right, Hacked her to pieces. One might well be
wroth;

I have been patient, done my best to help
I come from Civita and punishment

As friend of the court — and for pure friend-ship's sake 1610

Have told my tale to the end — nay, not the
end —

For, wait — I'll end — not leave you that excuse!

When we were parted — shall I go on there?
I was presently brought to Rome — yes, here
I stood

Opposite yonder very crucifix — 1615
And there sat you and you, Sirs, quite the
same

I heard charge, and bore question, and told tale

Noted down in the book there — turn and see
If, by one jot or tittle, I vary now!

I' the color the tale takes, there's change perhaps; 1620

'Tis natural, since the sky is different,
Eclipse in the air now, still, the outline stays.
I showed you how it came to be my part

To save the lady. Then your clerk produced
Papers, a pack of stupid and impure 1625

Banalities called letters about love —
Love, indeed — I could teach who styled them so,

Better, I think, though priest and loveless
both!

" — How was it that a wife, young, innocent,
And stranger to your person, wrote this
page?" — 1630

" — She wrote it when the Holy Father wrote
The bestiality that posts through Rome, Put in his mouth by Pasquin " "Nor perhaps

Did you return these answers, verse and prose, Signed, sealed and sent the lady? There's your hand!" 1635

" — This precious piece of verse, I really
judge,

Is meant to copy my own character,
A clumsy mimic; and thus other prose,
Not so much even; both rank forgery
Verse, quotha? Bembo's verse! When Saint
John wrote 1640

The tract 'De Tribus,' I wrote this to match "

" — How came it, then, the documents were
found

At the inn on your departure?" — "I opine,
Because there were no documents to find

In my presence — you must hide before you
find. 1645

Who forged them hardly practiced in my
view;

Who found them waited till I turned my
back "

" — And what of the clandestine visits paid,
Nocturnal passage in and out the house

With its lord absent? 'Tis alleged you
climbed" . . . 1650

" — Flew on a broomstick to the man i' the moon!

Who witnessed or will testify this trash?"

1633 Pasquin, the Roman Pasquino, an imaginary person to whom anonymous lampoons were ascribed. The name was popularly given to a statue discovered in 1501 near the shop of a man named Pasquino. Satires and lampoons were frequently fastened to the statue, which had been set up in Rome 1637 character, handwriting 1640 Bembo, Cardinal Pietro Bembo (1470-1547), of Venice. He was a great scholar and an elegant writer of both prose and verse. The reference is ironical. 1641 De Tribus, the title of a blasphemous and legendary pamphlet entitled De Tribus Impostoribus (The Three Impostors). It referred to Moses, Christ, and Mahomet.

1574 fulgorant, bright, flashing 1594 paten, the plate on which the sacred bread of the communion service is carried

" — The trusty servant, Margherita's self,
Even she who brought you letters, you confess,

And, you confess, took letters in reply, 1655
Forget not we have knowledge of the facts!"

" — Sirs, who have knowledge of the facts, defray

The expenditure of wit I waste in vain,
Trying to find out just one fact of all!

She who brought letters from who could not
write, 1660

And took back letters to who could not read —

Who was that messenger, of your charity?"

" — Well, so far favors you the circumstance
That this same messenger . . . how shall we
say?

Sub imputazione meretricis 1665

Laborat — which makes accusation null,
We waive this woman's — Naught makes void the next.

Borsi, called Venerino, he who drove,
O' the first night when you fled away, at length

Deposes to your kissings in the coach, 1670 — Frequent, frenetic" . . . "When deposed he so?"

"After some weeks of sharp imprisonment"
. . .

"Granted by friend the Governor, I engage" —

" — For his participation in your fight!

At length his obduracy melting made 1675
The avowal mentioned" . . . "Was dismissed forthwith

To liberty, poor knave, for recompense.

Sirs, give what credit to the lie you can!

For me, no word in my defense I speak,

And God shall argue for the lady!"
So 1680

Did I stand question, and make answer, still

With the same result of smiling disbelief,

Polite impossibility of faith

In such affected virtue in a priest;

But a showing fair play, an indulgence, even,

To one no worse than others after all — 1686

Who had not brought disgrace to the order, played

Discreetly, ruffled gown nor ripped the cloth
In a bungling game at romps; I have told you, Sirs —

If I pretended simply to be pure, 1690

Honest, and Christian in the case — absurd!

As well go boast myself above the needs

O' the human nature, careless how meat smells,

Wine tastes — a saint above the smack! But
once 1694

1665-1666 Sub Laborat, labors under the imputation of unchastity 1671 frenetic, uncontrolled, passionate 1694 above the smack, superior to the sense of taste

Abate my crest, own flaws i' the flesh, agree
To go with the herd, be hog no more nor less,
Why, hogs in common herd have common
rights,

I must not be unduly borne upon, 1698

Who just romanced a little, sowed wild oats,

But 'scaped without a scandal, flagrant fault

My name helped to a mirthful circumstance

"Joseph" would do well to amend his plea,

Undoubtedly — some toying with the wife,

But as for ruffian violence and rape, 1704

Potiphar pressed too much on the other side!

The intrigue, the elopement, the disguise —
well charged!

The letters and verse looked hardly like the
truth.

Your apprehension was — of guilt enough

To be compatible with innocence, 1709

So, punished best a little and not too much

Had I struck Guido Franceschini's face,

You had counseled me withdraw for my own
sake,

Balk him of bravo-hiring Friends came
round,

Congratulated, "Nobody mistakes!

The pettiness o' the forfeiture defines 1715

The peccadillo. Guido gets his share,

His wife is free of husband and hook-nose,

The moldy viands and the mother-in-law

To Civita with you and amuse the time,

Travesty us 'De Raptu Helenæ' 1720

A funny figure must the husband cut

When the wife makes him skip — too ticklish, eh?

Do it in Latin, not the Vulgar, then!

Scazons — we'll copy and send his Eminence

Mind — one iambus in the final foot! 1725

He'll rectify it, be your friend for life!"

Oh, Sirs, depend on me for much new light

Thrown on the justice and religion here

By this proceeding, much fresh food for thought!

And I was just set down to study these 1730

In relegation, two short days ago,

Admiring how you read the rules, when, clap,

A thunder comes into my solitude —

I am caught up in a whirlwind and cast here,

Told of a sudden, in this room where so late

You dealt out law adroitly, that those scales, 1736

1702-1705 Joseph . . . Potiphar The story of Joseph and Potiphar's wife is told in Genesis, 39 As the result of her false report, Joseph was imprisoned 1716 peccadillo, fault 1720 De Raptu Helenæ, Of the Carrying off of Helen (of Troy), the title of a Greek poem by Coluthus (c 500 A.D.) It is a bad imitation of Homer 1723 Vulgar, common Italian. 1724 Scazon, a line of verse consisting of six feet, five are iambic and one (the last) is trochaic Caponsacchi is told to write an imperfect line, with an iambus for the trochee so that the Cardinal may detect it, thus proving his acumen

I meekly bowed to, took my allotment from,
Guido has snatched at, broken in your hands,
Metes to himself the murder of his wife,
Full measure, pressed down, running over
now! 1740

Can I assist to an explanation? — Yes,
I rise in your esteem, sagacious Sirs,
Stand up a renderer of reasons, not
The officious priest would personate Saint George

For a mock Princess in undragoned days. 1745
What, the blood startles you? What, after all The priest who needs must carry sword on thigh

May find imperative use for it? Then, there was

A Princess, was a dragon belching flame,
And should have been a Saint George also?
Then, 1750

There might be worse schemes than to break
the bonds

At Arezzo, lead her by the little hand,
Till she reached Rome, and let her try to live?
But you were law and gospel — would one
please 1754

Stand back, allow your faculty elbow-room?
You blind guides who must needs lead eyes that see!

Fools, alike ignorant of man and God!
What was there here should have perplexed your wit

For a wink of the owl-eyes of you? How miss,
then,

What's now forced on you by this flare of fact — 1760

As if Saint Peter failed to recognize Nero as no apostle, John or James,
Till some one burned a martyr, made a torch
O' the blood and fat to show his features by!
Could you fail read this cartulary anight 1765
On head and front of Franceschini there — Large-lettered like hell's masterpiece of print —

That he, from the beginning pricked at heart
By some lust, letch of hate against his wife,
Plotted to plague her into overt sin 1770

And shame, would slay Pompilia body and
soul,

And save his mean self — miserably caught
I' the quagmire of his own tricks, cheats, and lies?

— That himself wrote those papers — from himself

1740 Full measure . . . running over From Luke,
6 38 — "Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom" 1744-1745 Saint George Princess Saint George, the patron saint of England, according to tradition killed a dragon in Lybia and rescued
the princess Sabra 1762 Nero, a profligate and tyrannical Roman emperor (54-68 A.D.) He persecuted the Christians
1765 cartulary, a register 1769 letch, passion

To himself — which, i' the name of me and
her, 1775

His mistress-messenger gave her and me,
Touching us with such pustules of the soul
That she and I might take the taint, be shown
To the world and shuddered over, speckled
so?

— That the agent put her sense into my
words, 1780

Made substitution of the thing she hoped,
For the thing she had and held, its opposite,
While the husband in the background bit his lips

At each fresh failure of his precious plot?

— That when at the last we did rush each on
each, 1785

By no chance but because God willed it so —
The spark of truth was struck from out our souls —

Made all of me, descried in the first glance,
Seem fair and honest and permissible love
O' the good and true — as the first glance told
me 1790

There was no duty patent in the world
Like daring try be good and true myself,
Leaving the shows of things to the Lord of
Show

And Prince o' the Power of the Air Our very
flight,

Even to its most ambiguous circumstance, 1795
Irrefragably proved how futile, false . . .

Why, men — men and not boys — boys and not babes —

Babes and not beasts — beasts and not stocks and stones! —

Had the liar's lie been true one pin-point
speck,

Were I the accepted suitor, free o' the place,
Disposer of the time, to come at a call 1801

And go at a wink as who should say me nay —
What need of flight, what were the gain therefrom

But just damnation, failure, or success?
Damnation pure and simple to her the wife
And me the priest — who bartered private
bliss 1806

For public reprobation, the safe shade
For the sunshine which men see to pelt me by;
What other advantage — we who led the days
And nights alone i' the house — was flight to
find? 1810

In our whole journey did we stop an hour,
Diverge a foot from straight road till we reached

Or would have reached — but for that fate of
ours —

The father and mother, in the eye of Rome,

1794 Prince . Air, a designation of Satan in Ephesians,
2 2

The eye of yourselves we made aware of us
 At the first fall of misfortune? And indeed
 You did so far give sanction to our flight, 1817
 Confirm its purpose, as lend helping hand,
 Deliver up Pompilia not to him
 She fled, but those the flight was ventured for.
 Why then could you, who stopped short, not go on 1821
 One poor step more, and justify the means,
 Having allowed the end? — not see and say,
 "Here's the exceptional conduct that should claim
 To be exceptionally judged on rules 1825
 Which, understood, make no exception here"
 — Why play instead into the devil's hands
 By dealing so ambiguously as gave
 Guido the power to intervene like me, 1829
 Prove one exception more? I saved his wife Against law, against law he slays her now —
 Deal with him!

I have done with being judged
 I stand here guiltless in thought, word, and
 deed,
 To the point that I apprise you — in contempt
 For all misapprehending ignorance 1835
 O' the human heart, much more the mind of Christ —
 That I assuredly did bow, was blessed
 By the revelation of Pompilia. There!
 Such is the final fact I fling you, Sirs,
 To mouth and mumble and misinterpret,
 there! 1840
 "The priest's in love," have it the vulgar
 way!
 Unpriest me, rend the rags o' the vestment,
 do —
 Degrade deep, disenfranchise all you dare —
 Remove me from the midst, no longer priest
 And fit companion for the like of you — 1845
 Your gay Abati with the well-turned leg
 And rose i' the hat-rim, Canons, cross at neck
 And silk mask in the pocket of the gown,
 Brisk bishops with the world's musk still un-brushed
 From the rochet, I'll no more of these good
 things 1850
 There's a crack somewhere, something that's unsound
 I' the rattle!

For Pompilia — be advised,
 Build churches, go pray! You will find me
 there,
 I know, if you come — and you will come, I
 know.

Why, there's a Judge weeping! Did not I
 say 1855
 You were good and true at bottom? You see the truth —
 I am glad I helped you; she helped me just so.

But for Count Guido — you must counsel
 there!

I bow my head, bend to the very dust,
 Break myself up in shame of faultiness. 1860
 I had him one whole moment, as I said —
 As I remember, as will never out
 O' the thoughts of me — I had him in arm's
 reach

There — as you stand, Sir, now you cease to sit —

I could have killed him ere he killed his wife,
 And did not, he went off alive and well 1866
 And then effected this last feat — through me!
 Me — not through you — dismiss that fear!
 'Twas you

Hindered me staying here to save her — not
 From leaving you and going back to him 1870
 And doing service in Arezzo. Come,
 Instruct me in procedure! I conceive —
 In all due self-abasement might I speak —
 How you will deal with Guido. Oh, not
 death!

Death, if it let her life be; otherwise 1875
 Not death — your lights will teach you clearer! I

Certainly have an instinct of my own
 I' the matter, bear with me and weigh its
 worth!

Let us go away — leave Guido all alone
 Back on the world again that knows him now!
 I think he will be found (indulge so far!) 1881
 Not to die so much as slide out of life,
 Pushed by the general horror and common
 hate

Low, lower — left o' the very ledge of things,
 I seem to see him catch convulsively 1885
 One by one at all honest forms of life,
 At reason, order, decency, and use —
 To cramp him and get foothold by at least,
 And still they disengage them from his clutch
 "What, you are he, then, had Pompilia once
 And so forwent her? Take not up with us!" 1891

And thus I see him slowly and surely edged
 Off all the table-land whence life upsprings
 Aspiring to be immortality,
 As the snake, hatched on hill-top by mis-
 chance, 1895
 Despite his wriggling, slips, slides, slidders
 down

Hillside, lies low and prostrate on the smooth
 Level of the outer place, lapsed in the vale.

1846 Abati, a name applied to any person wearing ecclesiastical garb 1850 rochet See note on line 1243, page 313

1891 forwent her, gave her up.

So I lose Guido in the loneliness,
 Silence, and dusk, till at the dole end, 1900
 At the horizontal line, creation's verge,
 From what just is to absolute nothingness —
 Whom is it, straining onward still, he meets?
 What other man deep further in the fate,
 Who, turning at the prize of a footfall 1905
 To flatter him and promise fellowship,
 Discovers in the act a frightful face —
 Judas, made monstrous by much solitude!
 The two are at one now! Let them love their
 love
 That bites and claws like hate, or hate their
 hate 1910
 That mops and mows and makes as it were
 love!
 There, let them each tear each in devil's-
 fun,
 Or fondle this the other while malice aches —
 Both teach, both learn detestability!
 Kiss him the kiss, Iscariot! Pay that back,
 That smatch o' the slaver blistering on your lip, 1916
 By the better trick, the insult he spared
 Christ —
 Lure him the lure o' the letters, Aretine!
 Lick him o'er slimy-smooth with jelly-filth
 O' the verse-and-prose pollution in love's guise! 1920
 The cockatrice is with the basilisk!
 There let them grapple, denizens o' the dark,
 Foes or friends, but indissolubly bound,
 In their one spot out of the ken of God
 Or care of man, forever and evermore! 1925

Why, Sirs, what's this? Why, this is sorry and strange!

Futility, divagation, this from me
 Bound to be rational, justify an act
 Of sober man! — whereas, being moved so
 much,

I give you cause to doubt the lady's mind:
 A pretty sarcasm for the world! I fear 1931
 You do her wit injustice — all through me!
 Like my fate all through — ineffective help!
 A poor rash advocate I prove myself
 You might be angry with good cause; but sure
 At the advocate — only at the undue zeal 1936
 That spoils the force of his own plea, I think?
 My part was just to tell you how things stand,
 State facts and not be flustered at their fume.
 But then 'tis a priest speaks; as for love —
 no! 1940

If you let buzz a vulgar fly like that
 About your brains, as if I loved, forsooth,

Indeed, Sirs, you do wrong! We had no
 thought

Of such infatuation, she and I.
 There are many points that prove it; do be
 just! 1945

I told you — at one little roadside-place
 I spent a good half-hour, paced to and fro
 The garden, just to leave her free awhile,
 I plucked a handful of spring herb and bloom
 I might have sat beside her on the bench
 Where the children were. I wish the thing had been, 1951

Indeed; the event could not be worse, you
 know —

One more half-hour of her saved! She's dead now, Sirs!

While I was running on at such a rate,
 Friends should have plucked me by the sleeve;
 I went

Too much o' the trivial outside of her face 1956
 And the purity that shone there — plain to
 me,

Not to you — what more natural? Nor am I
 Infatuated — oh, I saw, be sure!

Her brow had not the right line — leaned too
 much, 1960

Painters would say — they like the straight-up Greek;

This seemed bent somewhat with an invisible
 crown

Of martyr and saint, not such as art approves
 And how the dark orbs dwelt deep underneath,

Looked out of such a sad sweet heaven on me!
 The lips, compressed a little, came forward
 too, 1966

Careful for a whole world of sin and pain
 That was the face, her husband makes his plea,

He sought just to disfigure — no offense
 Beyond that! Sirs, let us be rational! 1970

He needs must vindicate his honor — aye,
 Yet shirks, the coward, in a clown's disguise,
 Away from the scene, endeavors to escape.

Now, had he done so, slain and left no trace
 O' the slayer — what were vindicated, pray?
 You had found his wife disfigured or a corpse,
 For what and by whom? It is too palpable!
 Then, here's another point involving law:

I use this argument to show you meant
 No calumny against us by that title 1980

O' the sentence — liars try to twist it so;
 What penalty it bore, I had to pay
 Till further proof should follow of innocence—
Probationis ob defectum — proof?

How could you get proof without trying us?
 You went through the preliminary form, 1986

1917 the better trick, i.e., spitting upon him, a common form of insult 1918 Aretine, man of Arezzo (addressed to Guido) 1921 cockatrice, basilisk These were both fabulous monsters supposed to kill with a look 1927
 divagation, digression

1984 Probationis ob defectum, for want of sufficient proof

Stopped there, contrived this sentence to amuse

The adversary. If the title ran
For more than fault imputed and not proved,
That was a simple penman's error, else 1990
A slip i' the phrase — as when we say of you "Charged with injustice" — which may either
be

Or not be — 'tis a name that sticks meanwhile.

Another relevant matter (fool that I am! 1994
Not what I wish true, yet a point friends urge,
It is not true — yet, since friends think it helps)

She only tried me when some others failed —
Began with Conti, whom I told you of,
And Guillichini, Guido's kinsfolk both, 1999
And when abandoned by them, not before,
Turned to me That's conclusive why she
turned.

Much good they got by the happy cowardice!
Conti is dead, poisoned a month ago;
Does that much strike you as a sin? Not
much,

After the present murder — one mark more
On the Moor's skin — what is black by blackest still? 2006

Conti had come here and told truth And so
With Guillichini; he's condemned of course
To the galleys, as a friend in this affair, Tried and condemned for no one thing i' the
world, 2010

A fortnight since by who but the Governor?

know

He likes best we should break in, steal, bear
off,

Be fit to brand and pillory and flog —
That's the charge goes to the heart of the Governor 2020

If these unpriest me, you and I may yet
Converse, Vincenzo Marzi-Medici!
Oh, Sirs, there are worse men than you, I say!
More easily duped, I mean; this stupid lie,
Its liar never dared propound in Rome, 2025
He gets Arezzo to receive — nay more,

Gets Florence and the Duke to authorize!
This is their Rota's sentence, their Granduke

Who writes the letter — he confessed, he says,
Many a dying person, never one
So sweet and true and pure and beautiful
A good man! Will you make him Pope one
day? 2035

Not that he is not good too, this we have —
But old — else he would have his word to
speak,

His truth to teach the world I thirst for
truth,

But shall not drink it till I reach the source.

Sirs, I am quiet again You see, we are 2040
So very pitiable, she and I,
Who had conceivably been otherwise
Forget distemperature and idle heat!
Apart from truth's sake, what's to move so
much?

Pompilia will be presently with God, 2045
I am, on earth, as good as out of it,
A relegated priest, when exile ends,
I mean to do my duty and live long
She and I are mere strangers now, but priests
Should study passion — how else cure man-

Who come for help in passionate extremes?
I do but play with an imagined life
Of who, unfettered by a vow, unblessed
By the higher call — since you will have it
so —

Leads it companioned by the woman there
To live, and see her learn, and learn by
her, 2056

Out of the low obscure and petty world —
Or only see one purpose and one will Evolve themselves i' the world, change wrong to right;

To have to do with nothing but the true, 2060
The good, the eternal — and these, not alone
In the main current of the general life,
But small experiences of every day,
Concerns of the particular hearth and home,
To learn not only by a comet's rush 2065
But a rose's birth — not by the grandeur,
God —

But the comfort, Christ All this, how far
away!

1988 The adversary. Guido One of Browning's sources states that the judges sent Caponsacchi to prison to give "the Franceschini brothers satisfaction in their pressing solicitations rather than because of the claims of justice" 2006 the Moor's skin, a reference to Othello the Moor, in Shakespeare's Othello, who killed his wife Desdemona on a charge of infidelity that later was shown to be false 2022 Vincenzo Marzi-Medici, the governor of Arezzo, before whom the first trial was held close,

BOOK VII POMPILIA

I am just seventeen years and five months old,
And, if I lived one day more, three full weeks;
'Tis writ so in the church's register,
Lorenzo in Lucina, all my names
At length, so many names for one poor child—
Francesca Camilla Vittoria Angela 6
Pompilia Comparini — laughable!
Also 'tis writ that I was married there
Four years ago; and they will add, I hope,
When they insert my death, a word or two —
Omitting all about the mode of death — 11
This, in its place, this which one cares to
know —

That I had been a mother of a son
Exactly two weeks. It will be through grace
O' the Curate, not through any claim I have,
Because the boy was born at, so baptized 16
Close to, the Villa, in the proper church —
A pretty church, I say no word against,
Yet stranger-like — while this Lorenzo seems
My own particular place, I always say. 20
I used to wonder, when I stood scarce high
As the bed here, what the marble lion meant,
With half his body rushing from the wall,
Eating the figure of a prostrate man
(To the right, it is, of entry by the door) — 25
An ominous sign to one baptized like me,
Married, and to be buried there, I hope.
And they should add, to have my life complete,
He is a boy and Gaetan by name —
Gaetano, for a reason — if the friar 30

2070 Plutarch. Plutarch was a Greek biographer and moralist of the first century. His chief work contains the lives of Greek and Roman heroes.

Pompilia. In this Book Pompilia tells the story of her life as she lies dying in the hospital, where she was taken after being attacked by Guido and left for dead. The date is January 6, 1698.

4 Lorenzo in Lucina, the Church of San Lorenzo-in-Lucina, in Rome. 22-24 marble lion . . . man. A lion preying upon a man symbolized the severity of the church toward impenitents or disbelievers. 30 for a reason. See lines 99-102.

Don Celestine will ask this grace for me
Of Curate Ottoboni. He it was Baptized me, he remembers my whole life
As I do his gray hair.

All these few things
I know are true — will you remember
them? 35
Because time flies. The surgeon cared for me,
To count my wounds — twenty-two daggerwounds,
Five deadly, but I do not suffer much —
Or too much pain — and am to die tonight.

Oh, how good God is that my babe was born —
Better than born, baptized and hid away 41
Before this happend, safe from being hurt!
That had been sin God could not well forgive,
He was too young to smile and save himself.
When they took, two days after he was born,
My babe away from me to be baptized 46
And hidden awhile, for fear his foe should
find —

The country-woman, used to nursing babes,
Said, "Why take on so? where is the great
loss?"

These next three weeks he will but sleep and feed, 50

Only begin to smile at the month's end;
He would not know you, if you kept him here,
Sooner than that; so, spend three merry weeks
Snug in the Villa, getting strong and stout,
And then I bring him back to be your own, 55
And both of you may steal to — we know
where!"

The month — there wants of it two weeks
this day!

Still, I half fancied when I heard the knock
At the Villa in the dusk, it might prove she — Come to say, "Since he smiles before the
time, 60

Why should I cheat you out of one good hour?
Back I have brought him, speak to him and
judge!"

Now I shall never see him, what is worse,
When he grows up and gets to be my age,
He will seem hardly more than a great
boy; 65
And if he asks, "What was my mother like?"
People may answer, "Like girls of seventeen" —

And how can he but think of this and that,
Lucias, Marias, Sofias, who titter or blush
When he regards them as such boys may do?
Therefore I wish someone will please to say 71
I looked already old though I was young;
Do I not — say, if you are by to speak —

31 Don Celestine, the monk who heard Pompilia's confession.

Look nearer twenty? No more like, at least,
Girls who look arch or redden when boys
laugh, 75

Than the poor Virgin that I used to know
At our street-corner in a lonely niche —
The babe, that sat upon her knees, broke
off —

Thin white glazed clay, you pitied her the
more.

She, not the gay ones, always got my rose. 80

How happy those are who know how to write!
Such could write what their son should read
in time,

Had they a whole day to live out like me.
Also my name is not a common name,
"Pompilia," and may help to keep apart 85
A little the thing I am from what girls are.
But then how far away, how hard to find
Will anything about me have become,
Even if the boy bethink himself and ask!

No father that ever knew at all, 90

Nor ever had — no, never had, I say!

That is the truth — nor any mother left,

Out of the little two weeks that she lived,

Fit for such memory as might assist;

As good too as no family, no name, 95

Not even poor old Pietro's name, nor hers,

Poor kind unwise Violante, since it seems

They must not be my parents any more.

That is why something put it in my head

To call the boy "Gaetano" — no old name 100

For sorrow's sake, I looked up to the sky

And took a new saint to begin anew

One who has only been made saint — how

long?

Twenty-five years, so, carefuller, perhaps,

To guard a namesake than those old saints

grew, 105

Tired out by this time — see my own five

saints!

On second thoughts, I hope he will regard

The history of me as what some one dreamed,

And get to disbelieve it at the last;

Since to myself it dwindles fast to that, 110

Sheer dreaming and impossibility —

Just in four days too! All the seventeen years,

Not once did a suspicion visit me

How very different a lot is mine

From any other woman's in the world. 115

The reason must be, 'twas by step and step

It got to grow so terrible and strange

These strange woes stole on tiptoe, as it were,

Into my neighborhood and privacy, 119

Sat down where I sat, laid them where I lay;

And I was found familiarized with fear,

When friends broke in, held up a torch and
cried,

"Why, you Pompilia in the cavern thus,
How comes that arm of yours about a wolf?
And the soft length — lies in and out your feet 125

And laps you round the knee — a snake it is!"
And so on.

Well, and they are right enough,
By the torch they hold up now, for first,
observe,

I never had a father — no, nor yet

A mother; my own boy can say at least, 130

"I had a mother whom I kept two weeks!"

Not I, who little used to doubt . . . I doubt

Good Pietro, kind Violante, gave me birth?

They loved me always as I love my babe 134

(Nearly so, that is — quite so could not be),

Did for me all I meant to do for him,

Till one surprising day, three years ago,

They both declared, at Rome, before some

judge

In some court where the people flocked to hear,

That really I had never been their child, 140

Was a mere castaway, the careless crime

Of an unknown man, the crime and care too

much

Of a woman known too well — little to these,

Therefore, of whom I was the flesh and blood,

What then to Pietro and Violante, both

No more my relatives than you or you? 145

Nothing to them! You know what they declared.

So with my husband — just such a surprise,

Such a mistake, in that relationship! 149

Everyone says that husbands love their wives,

Guard them and guide them, give them

happiness;

'Tis duty, law, pleasure, religion. Well,

You see how much of this comes true in mine!

People indeed would fain have somehow

proved

He was no husband; but he did not hear, 155

Or would not wait, and so has killed us all

Then there is . . . only let me name one more!

There is the friend — men will not ask about,

But tell untruths of, and give nicknames to,

And think my lover, most surprise of all! 160

Do only hear, it is the priest they mean,

Giuseppe Caponsacchi: a priest — love,

And love me! Well, yet people think he did

I am married, he has taken priestly vows, 164

They know that, and yet go on, say, the same,

"Yes, how he loves you!" "That was love"

— they say,

102 a new saint, St. Gaetan (1480-1547), who was canonized by Pope Clement X in 1671 106 my own five saints.
She had five names (see lines 6-7)

155 He. husband Pompilia brought suit for divorce, but it was never given a hearing

When anything is answered that they ask;
Or else "No wonder you love him" — they
say.

Then they shake heads, pity much, scarcely blame —

As if we neither of us lacked excuse, 170
And anyhow are punished to the full,
And downright love atones for everything!
Nay, I heard read out in the public court
Before the judge, in presence of my friends,
Letters 'twas said the priest had sent to me,
And other letters sent him by myself, 176
We being lovers!

Listen what this is like!

When I was a mere child, my mother . . .
that's

Violante, you must let me call her so, 179
Nor waste time, trying to unlearn the word . . .
She brought a neighbor's child of my own age

To play with me of rainy afternoons;
And, since there hung a tapestry on the wall,
We two agreed to find each other out
Among the figures. "Tisbe, that is you, 185
With half-moon on your hair-knot, spear in
hand,

Flying, but no wings, only the great scarf
Blown to a bluish rainbow at your back;
Call off your hound and leave the stag
alone!"

"— And there are you, Pompilia, such green leaves 190

Flourishing out of your five finger-ends,
And all the rest of you so brown and rough;
Why is it you are turned a sort of tree?"
You know the figures never were ourselves,
Though we nicknamed them so. Thus, all
my life — 195

As well what was, as what, like this, was
not —

Looks old, fantastic, and impossible;
I touch a fairy thing that fades and fades.
— Even to my babe! I thought, when he was born,

Something began for once that would not end,
Nor change into a laugh at me, but stay 201
Forevermore, eternally quite mine.
Well, so he is — but yet they bore him off,
The third day, lest my husband should lay traps

And catch him, and by means of him catch
me. 205

Since they have saved him so, it was well
done;

Yet thence comes such confusion of what was

With what will be — that late seems long ago,
And, what years should bring round, already
come,

Till even he withdraws into a dream 210
As the rest do. I fancy him grown great, Strong, stern, a tall young man who tutors
me,

Frowns with the others, "Poor imprudent
child!

Why did you venture out of the safe street?
Why go so far from help to that lone house?
Why open at the whisper and the knock?" 216

Six days ago when it was New Year's day,
We bent above the fire and talked of him,
What he should do when he was grown and great.

Violante, Pietro, each had given the arm 220
I leant on, to walk by, from couch to chair
And fireside — laughed, as I lay safe at last,
"Pompilia's march from bed to board is made,
Pompilia back again and with a babe,
Shall one day lend his arm and help her walk!" 225

Then we all wished each other more New
Years.

Pietro began to scheme — "Our cause is gained;

The law is stronger than a wicked man —
Let him henceforth go his way, leave us ours!
We will avoid the city, tempt no more 230
The greedy ones by feasting and parade —
Live at the other villa, we know where,

Still farther off, and we can watch the babe
Grow fast in the good air, and wood is cheap
And wine sincere outside the city gate 235
I still have two or three old friends will grope
Their way along the mere half-mile of road,
With staff and lantern on a moonless night
When one needs talk; they'll find me, never
fear,

And I'll find them a flask of the old sort
yet!" 240

Violante said, "You chatter like a crow;
Pompilia tires o' the tattle, and shall to bed
Do not too much the first day — somewhat
more

Tomorrow, and, the next, begin the cape 244
And hood and coat! I have spun wool
enough"

Oh, what a happy friendly eve was that!

And, next day, about noon, out Pietro went —
He was so happy and would talk so much, 248
Until Violante pushed and laughed him forth Sight-seeing in the cold — "So much to see I' the churches! Swathe your throat three times!" she cried,

189 Call . . . alone. This refers to a figure of Diana, goddess of the chase 193 you . . . tree, a figure of Daphne, a beautiful nymph pursued by Apollo and changed into a laurel tree.

235 sincere, pure, unadulterated.

"And, above all, beware the slippery ways,
 And bring us all the news by supper-time!"
 He came back late, laid by cloak, staff, and hat,
 Powdered so thick with snow it made us
 laugh; 255
 Rolled a great log upon the ash o' the hearth,
 And bade Violante treat us to a flask,
 Because he had obeyed her faithfully,
 Gone sight-see through the seven, and found no church
 To his mind like San Giovanni — "There's the fold, 260
 And all the sheep together, big as cats!
 And such a shepherd, half the size of life,
 Starts up and hears the angel" — when, at the door,
 A tap. We started up; you know the rest

Pietro at least had done no harm, I know; 265
 Nor even Violante, so much harm as makes Such revenge lawful. Certainly she erred —
 Did wrong, how shall I dare say otherwise? —
 In telling that first falsehood, buying me
 From my poor faulty mother at a price, 270
 To pass off upon Pietro as his child.
 If one should take my babe, give him a name,
 Say he was not Gaetano and my own,
 But that some other woman made his mouth
 And hands and feet — how very false were
 that! 275
 No good could come of that; and all harm
 did

Yet if a stranger were to represent,
 "Needs must you either give your babe to me
 And let me call him mine forevermore,
 Or let your husband get him" — ah, my God,
 That were a trial I refuse to face! 281
 Well, just so here; it proved wrong but seemed right

To poor Violante — for there lay, she said,
 My poor real dying mother in her rags, 284
 Who put me from her with the life and all,
 Poverty, pain, shame, and disease at once,
 To die the easier by what price I fetched —
 Also (I hope) because I should be spared Sorrow and sin — why may not that have helped?

My father — he was no one, anyone — 290
 The worse, the likelier — call him — he who
 came,

Was wicked for his pleasure, went his way,
 And left no trace to track by; there remained Nothing but me, the unnecessary life,
 To catch up or let fall — and yet a thing 295
 She could make happy, be made happy with,
 This poor Violante — who would frown thereat?

Well, God, you see! God plants us where we
 grow

It is not that, because a bud is born
 At a wild brier's end, full i' the wild beast's
 way, 300

We ought to pluck and put it out of reach
 On the oak-tree top — say, "There the bud belongs!"

She thought, moreover, real lies were lies told
 For harm's sake; whereas this had good at
 heart, 304

Good for my mother, good for me, and good
 For Pietro who was meant to love a babe,
 And needed one to make his life of use,
 Receive his house and land when he should
 die.

Wrong, wrong, and always wrong! how plainly
 wrong! 309

For see, this fault kept pricking, as faults do,
 All the same at her heart. This falsehood hatched,

She could not let it go nor keep it fast.
 She told me so — the first time I was found
 Locked in her arms once more after the pain,
 When the nuns let me leave them and go
 home, 315

And both of us cried all the cares away —
 This it was set her on to make amends,
 This brought about the marriage — simply
 this!

Do let me speak for her you blame so much!
 When Paul, my husband's brother, found me
 out, 320

Heard there was wealth for who should marry
 me,

So, came and made a speech to ask my hand
 For Guido — she, instead of piercing straight
 Through the pretense to the ignoble truth,
 Fancied she saw God's very finger point, 325
 Designate just the time for planting me
 (The wild-brier slip she plucked to love and wear)

In soil where I could strike real root, and
 grow,

And get to be the thing I called myself; 329
 For, wife and husband are one flesh, God says,
 And I, whose parents seemed such and were
 none,

Should in a husband have a husband now,
 Find nothing, this time, but was what it seemed —

All truth and no confusion any more.

I know she meant all good to me, all pain 335
 To herself — since how could it be aught but
 pain

To give me up, so, from her very breast,
 The wilding flower-tree-branch that, all those
 years,

She had got used to feel for and find fixed?
 She meant well, has it been so ill i' the main?
 That is but fair to ask; one cannot judge 341
 Of what has been the ill or well of life,
 The day that one is dying — sorrows change
 Into not altogether sorrow-like.
 I do see strangeness but scarce misery, 345
 Now it is over, and no danger more.
 My child is safe; there seems not so much
 pain.
 It comes, most like, that I am just absolved,
 Purged of the past, the foul in me, washed
 fair —
 One cannot both have and not have, you
 know — 350
 Being right now, I am happy and color things.
 Yes, everybody that leaves life sees all
 Softened and bettered; so with other sights.
 To me at least was never evening yet
 But seemed far beautifuller than its day, 355
 For past is past.

There was a fancy came,
 When somewhere, in the journey with my
 friend,
 We stepped into a hovel to get food;
 And there began a yelp here, a bark there —
 Misunderstanding creatures that were wroth
 And vexed themselves and us till we retired
 The hovel is life; no matter what dogs bit
 Or cat scratched in the hovel I break from,
 All outside is lone field, moon and such
 peace —
 Flowing in, filling up as with a sea 365
 Whereon comes Someone, walks fast on the
 white,
 Jesus Christ's self, Don Celestine declares,
 To meet me and calm all things back again.

Beside, up to my marriage, thirteen years 369
 Were, each day, happy as the day was long,
 This may have made the change too terrible.
 I know that when Violante told me first
 The cavalier — she meant to bring next
 morn,
 Whom I must also let take, kiss my hand —
 Would be at San Lorenzo the same eve 375
 And marry me — which over, we should go
 Home both of us without him as before,
 And, till she bade speak, I must hold my
 tongue,
 Such being the correct way with girl-brides,
 From whom one word would make a father blush — 380
 I know, I say, that when she told me this —
 Well, I no more saw sense in what she said
 Than a lamb does in people clipping wool;
 Only lay down and let myself be clipped.
 And when next day the cavalier who came 385

(Tisbe had told me that the slim young man
 With wings at head, and wings at feet, and
 sword
 Threatening a monster, in our tapestry,
 Would eat a girl else — was a cavalier) — 389
 When he proved Guido Franceschini — old
 And nothing like so tall as I myself,
 Hook-nosed and yellow in a bush of beard,
 Much like a thing I saw on a boy's wrist,
 He called an owl and used for catching birds —
 And when he took my hand and made a
 smile — 395
 Why, the uncomfortableness of it all
 Seemed hardly more important in the case
 Than — when one gives you, say, a coin to spend —
 Its newness or its oldness; if the piece 399
 Weigh properly and buy you what you wish,
 No matter whether you get grime or glare!
 Men take the coin, return you grapes and figs.
 Here, marriage was the coin, a dirty piece
 Would purchase me the praise of those I
 loved;
 About what else should I concern myself? 405

So, hardly knowing what a husband meant,
 I supposed this or any man would serve,
 No whit the worse for being so uncouth;
 For I was ill once and a doctor came
 With a great ugly hat, no plume thereto, 410
 Black jerkin and black buckles and black
 sword,
 And white sharp beard over the ruff in front,
 And, oh, so lean, so sour-faced and austere! —
 Who felt my pulse, made me put out my
 tongue,
 Then oped a phial, dripped a drop or two 415
 Of a black bitter something — I was cured!
 What mattered the fierce beard or the grim
 face?
 It was the physic beautified the man,
 Master Malpichi — never met his match 419
 In Rome, they said — so ugly all the same!

However, I was hurried through a storm,
 Next dark eve of December's deadeast day —
 How it rained! — through our street and the Lion's-mouth
 And the bit of Corso — cloaked round, covered close, 424
 I was like something strange or contraband —
 Into blank San Lorenzo, up the aisle,

386-388 young man . . . monster, a reference to Perseus, the hero in Greek mythology who rescued Andromeda, the daughter of the king of Ethiopia, from a sea-monster 419. Master Malpichi, probably Marcello Malpighi (1628-94), a famous physician of Bologna. He became physician to Pope Innocent XII in Rome in 1691. 423 the Lion's-mouth, the name of a street in Rome, Via della Bocca di Leone. 424. Corso, the principal thoroughfare of Rome.

My mother keeping hold of me so tight,
I fancied we were come to see a corpse
Before the altar which she pulled me toward.
There we found waiting an unpleasant priest,
Who proved the brother, not our parish
friend, 431

But one with mischief-making mouth and eye, Paul, whom I know since to my cost. And
then

I heard the heavy church-door lock out help
Behind us, for the customary warmth, 435
Two tapers shivered on the altar. "Quick — Lose no time!" cried the priest. And straightway down

From . . . what's behind the altar where he hid —

Hawk-nose and yellowness and bush and all,
Stepped Guido, caught my hand, and there was I 440

O' the chancel, and the priest had opened
book,

Read here and there, made me say that and
this,

And after, told me I was now a wife,
Honored indeed, since Christ thus weds the Church,

And therefore turned he water into wine, 445
To show I should obey my spouse like Christ
Then the two slipped aside and talked apart,
And I, silent and scared, got down again
And joined my mother, who was weeping now
Nobody seemed to mind us any more, 450
And both of us on tiptoe found our way
To the door which was unlocked by this, and wide.

When we were in the street, the rain had stopped;

All things looked better. At our own house-
door,

Violante whispered, "No one syllable 455
To Pietro! Girl-brides never breathe a word!"
"— Well treated to a wetting, draggie-tails!"

Laughed Pietro as he opened — "Very near
You made me brave the gutter's roaring sea
To carry off from roost old dove and young, Trussed up in church, the cote, by me, the kite! 461

What do these priests mean, praying folk to
death

On stormy afternoons, with Christmas close
To wash our sins off nor require the rain?"
Violante gave my hand a timely squeeze; 465
Madonna saved me from immodest speech
I kissed him and was quiet, being a bride

When I saw nothing more, the next three weeks,

Of Guido — "Nor the Church sees Christ," thought I.

"Nothing is changed, however; wine is wine
And water only water in our house. 471
Nor did I see that ugly doctor since
That cure of the illness; just as I was cured,
I am married — neither scarecrow will return."

Three weeks, I chuckled — "How would Giulia stare, 475

And Tecla smile and Tisbe laugh outright,
Were it not impudent for brides to talk!" —
Until one morning, as I sat and sang
At the broidery-frame alone I' the chamber —
loud

Voices, two, three together, sobbings too, 480
And my name, "Guido," "Paolo," flung like
stones

From each to the other! In I ran to see.
There stood the very Guido and the priest
With sly face — formal but nowise afraid —
While Pietro seemed all red and angry, scarce
Able to stutter out his wrath in words; 486
And thus it was that made my mother sob,
As he reproached her — "You have murdered
us,

Me and yourself and this our child beside!"
Then Guido interposed, "Murdered or not,
Be it enough your child is now my wife! 491

I claim and come to take her" — Paul put in,
"Consider — kinsman, dare I term you so?
What is the good of your sagacity
Except to counsel in a strait like this? 495

I guarantee the parties man and wife
Whether you like or loathe it, bless or ban.
May spilt milk be put back within the
bowl —

The done thing, undone? You, it is, we look
For counsel to, you fittest will advise! 500
Since milk, though spilt and spoilt, does marble good,

Better we down on knees and scrub the floor,
Thansigh, 'the waste would make a syllabub!'
Help us so turn disaster to account,

So predispose the groom, he needs shall grace
The bride with favor from the very first, 506
Not begin marriage an embittered man!"

He smiled — the game so wholly in his hands!
While fast and faster sobbed Violante —
"Aye,

All of us murdered, past averting now! 510
O my sin, O my secret!" and such like.

Then I began to half surmise the truth;
Something had happened, low, mean, under-
hand,

False, and my mother was to blame, and I

445 turned . wine. This took place at the marriage feast in Cana in Galilee, told in John, 2 1-10.

503 syllabub, a dish made by mixing wine with milk.

To pity, whom all spoke of, none addressed.
I was the chattel that had caused a crime.
I stood mute — those who tangled must untie
The embroilment. Pietro cried, "Withdraw,
my child!

She is not helpful to the sacrifice 519
At this stage — do you want the victim by
While you discuss the value of her blood?
For her sake, I consent to hear you talk;
Go, child, and pray God help the innocent!"

I did go and was praying God, when came 524
Volante, with eyes swollen and red enough,
But movement on her mouth for make-believe
Matters were somehow getting right again.
She bade me sit down by her side and
hear.

"You are too young and cannot understand,
Nor did your father understand at first. 530
I wished to benefit all three of us,
And when he failed to take my meaning —
why,

I tried to have my way at unaware —
Obtained him the advantage he refused.
As if I put before him wholesome food 535
Instead of broken victual — he finds change
I' the viands, never cares to reason why,
But falls to blaming me, would fling the plate

From window, scandalize the neighborhood,
Even while he smacks his lips — men's way,
my child! 540

But either you have prayed him unperverse
Or I have talked him back into his wits;
And Paolo was a help in time of need — Guido, not much — my child, the way of
men!

A priest is more a woman than a man, 545
And Paul did wonders to persuade. In short,
Yes, he was wrong, your father sees and says;
My scheme was worth attempting, and bears
fruit —

Gives you a husband and a noble name,
A palace and no end of pleasant things. 550
What do you care about a handsome youth?
They are so volatile, and tease their wives!
This is the kind of man to keep the house
We lose no daughter — gain a son, that's all;
For 'tis arranged we never separate, 555
Nor miss, in our gray time of life, the tints
Of you that color eve to match with morn.
In good or ill, we share and share alike,
And cast our lots into a common lap,
And all three die together as we lived! 560
Only, at Arezzo — that's a Tuscan town,
Not so large as this noisy Rome, no doubt,
But older far and finer much, say folk —
In a great palace where you will be queen,
Know the Archbishop and the Governor, 565
And we see homage done you ere we die.

Therefore, be good and pardon!" — "Pardon
what?

You know things, I am very ignorant;
All is right if you only will not cry!"

And so an end! Because a blank begins 570
From when, at the word, she kissed me hard and hot,

And took me back to where my father leaned
Opposite Guido — who stood eying him,
As eyes the butcher the cast panting ox
That feels his fate is come, nor struggles
more — 575

While Paul looked archly on, pricked brow
at whites
With the pen-point as to punish triumph
there —

And said, "Count Guido, take your lawful wife
Until death part you!"

All since is one blank,
Over and ended; a terrific dream 580
It is the good of dreams — so soon they go!
Wake in a horror of heart-beats, you may — Cry, "The dread thing will never from my thoughts!"

Still, a few daylight doses of plain life,
Cock-crow and sparrow-chirp, or bleat and bell 585
Of goats that trot by, tinkling, to be milked,
And when you rub your eyes awake and wide,
Where is the harm o' the horror? Gone! So
here.

I know I wake — but from what? Blank, I
say! 590

This is the note of evil; for good lasts.
Even when Don Celestine bade, "Search and
find!

For your soul's sake, remember what is past,
The better to forgive it" — all in vain!
What was fast getting indistinct before,
Vanished outright. By special grace perhaps,
Between that first calm and this last, four
years 596

Vanish — one quarter of my life, you know.
I am held up, amid the nothingness,
By one or two truths only — thence I hang,
And there I live — the rest is death or dream,
All but those points of my support. I think
Of what I saw at Rome once in the Square
O' the Spaniards, opposite the Spanish House
There was a foreigner had trained a goat,
A shuddering white woman of a beast, 605
To climb up, stand straight on a pile of sticks
Put close, which gave the creature room
enough;

602-603. the Square O' the Spaniards, Piazza di Spagna, the center of what was the strangers' quarter in Rome 603
the Spanish House, the palace of the Spanish ambassador

When she was settled there, he, one by one,
Took away all the sticks, left just the four Whereon the little hoofs did really rest, 610
There she kept firm; all underneath was air
So, what I hold by, are my prayer to God,
My hope, that came in answer to the prayer,

Some hand would interpose and save me —
hand

Which proved to be my friend's hand, and — blest bliss — 615

That fancy which began so faint at first,
That thrill of dawn's suffusion through my
dark,

Which I perceive was promise of my child,
The light his unborn face sent long before —
God's way of breaking the good news to flesh.
That is all left now of those four bad years
Don Celestine urged, "But remember more!
Other men's faults may help me find your
own

I need the cruelty exposed, explained,
Or how can I advise you to forgive?" 625

He thought I could not properly forgive
Unless I ceased forgetting — which is true;
For, bringing back reluctantly to mind
My husband's treatment of me — by a light
That's later than my lifetime, I review 630
And comprehend much and imagine more,
And have but little to forgive at last.

For now — be fair and say — is it not true
He was ill-used and cheated of his hope 634

To get enriched by marriage? Marriage gave Me and no money, broke the compact so.

He had a right to ask me on those terms,
As Pietro and Violante to declare

They would not give me; so the bargain stood.
They broke it, and he felt himself aggrieved,

Became unkind with me to punish them 641
They said 'twas he began deception first,
Nor, in one point whereto he pledged himself,

Kept promise; what of that, suppose it were?
Echoes die off, scarcely reverberate 645

Forever — why should ill keep echoing ill,
And never let our ears have done with noise?

Then my poor parents took the violent way
To thwart him — he must needs retaliate —
wrong,

Wrong, and all wrong — better say, all blind!
As I myself was, that is sure, who else 651

Had understood the mystery; for his wife
Was bound in some sort to help somehow
there

It seems as if I might have interposed,
Blunted the edge of their resentment so, 655

Since he vexed me because they first vexed
him;

"I will entreat them to desist, submit,
Give him the money and be poor in peace —
Certainly not go tell the world; perhaps 659
He will grow quiet with his gains."

Yes, say
Something to this effect and you do well!

But then you have to see first; I was blind.
That is the fruit of all such wormy ways,

The indirect, the unapproved of God — 664
You cannot find their author's end and aim,
Not even to substitute your good for bad,

Your straight for the irregular; you stand
Stupefied, profitless, as cow or sheep

That miss a man's mind, anger him just twice
By trial at repairing the first fault 670

Thus, when he blamed me, "You are a co-quette,

A lure-owl posturing to attract birds,
You look love-lures at theater and church,

In walk, at window!" — that, I knew, was false

But why he charged me falsely, whither sought 675

To drive me by such charge — how could I
know?

So, unaware, I only made things worse
I tried to soothe him by abjuring walk,

Window, church, theater, for good and all, 679
As if he had been in earnest; that, you know,
Was nothing like the object of his charge

Yes, when I got my maid to supplicate
The priest, whose name she read when she would read

Those feigned false letters I was forced to hear Though I could read no word of — he should cease 685

Writing — nay, if he minded prayer of mine,
Cease from so much as even pass the street

Whereon our house looked — in my ignorance
I was just thwarting Guido's true intent, 689

Which was, to bring about a wicked change
Of sport to earnest, tempt a thoughtless man

To write indeed, and pass the house, and
more,

Till both of us were taken in a crime.
He ought not to have wished me thus act lies,

Simulate folly, but — wrong or right, the wish — 695

I failed to apprehend its drift. How plain
It follows — if I fell into such fault,

He also may have overreached the mark,
Made mistake, by perversity of brain,

I' the whole sad strange plot, the grotesque intrigue 700

To make me and my friend unself ourselves,

630 That's . . . lifetime, that has come to me on my deathbed 642 began deception, i.e., by pretending that his income was larger than it really was 643 one point . . . pledged himself, namely, to maintain Pietro and Violante at Arezzo

Be other man and woman than we were!
Think it out, you who have the time! for
me —

I cannot say less; more I will not say.
Leave it to God to cover and undo! 705
Only, my dullness should not prove too much!
— Not prove that in a certain other point
Wherein my husband blamed me — and you
blame,

If I interpret smiles and shakes of head —
I was dull too Oh, if I dared but speak! 710
Must I speak? I am blamed that I forwent
A way to make my husband's favor come.
That is true; I was firm, withstood, refused . . .

— Women as you are, how can I find the
words?

I felt there was just one thing Guido claimed
I had no right to give nor he to take, 716
We being in estrangement, soul from soul;
Till, when I sought help, the Archbishop
smiled,

Inquiring into privacies of life —
Said I was blamable (he stands for God) —
Nowise entitled to exemption there.
Then I obeyed — as surely had obeyed
Were the injunction "Since your husband
bids,

Swallow the burning coal he proffers you!"
But I did wrong, and he gave wrong advice,
Though he were thrice Archbishop — that, I
know! — 726

Now I have got to die and see things clear.
Remember I was barely twelve years old —
A child at marriage I was let alone
For weeks, I told you, lived my child-life still Even at Arezzo, when I woke and found 731
First . . . but I need not think of that again —
Over and ended! Try and take the sense
Of what I signify, if it must be so.

After the first, my husband, for hate's sake,
Said one eve, when the simpler cruelty 736
Seemed somewhat dull at edge and fit to bear,
"We have been man and wife six months almost;

How long is this your comedy to last?
Go this night to my chamber, not your own!"
At which word, I did rush — most true the charge — 741

And gain the Archbishop's house — he stands
for God —

And fall upon my knees and clasp his feet,
Praying him hinder what my estranged soul
Refused to bear, though patient of the rest
"Place me within a convent," I implored —
"Let me henceforward lead the virgin life
You praise in Her you bid me imitate!"
What did he answer? "Folly of ignorance!
Know, daughter, circumstances make or mar

Virginity — 'tis virtue or 'tis vice. 751
That which was glory in the Mother of God
Had been, for instance, damnable in Eve,
Created to be mother of mankind.
Had Eve, in answer to her Maker's speech —
'Be fruitful, multiply, replenish earth' — 756
Pouted, 'But I choose rather to remain
Single' — why, she had spared herself forth-
with

Further probation by the apple and snake, Been pushed straight out of Paradise! For
see — 760

If motherhood be qualified impure,
I catch you making God command Eve sin!
— A blasphemy so like these Molinists',
I must suspect you dip into their books"
Then he pursued, "'Twas in your covenant!"

No! There my husband never used deceit.
He never did by speech nor act imply,
"Because of our souls' yearning that we meet
And mix in soul through flesh, which yours and mine

Wear and impress, and make their visible
selves, 770
— All which means, for the love of you and
me,

Let us become one flesh, being one soul!"
He only stipulated for the wealth,
Honest so far. But when he spoke as plain —
Dreadfully honest also — "Since our souls 775
Stand each from each, a whole world's width between,

Give me the fleshly vesture I can reach
And rend and leave just fit for hell to burn!" —
Why, in God's name, for Guido's soul's own
sake

Impelled by polluting mine — I say, 780
I did resist; would I had overcome!

My heart died out at the Archbishop's smile;
— It seemed so stale and worn a way o' the
world,

As though 'twere nature frowning — "Here is
spring,

The sun shines as he shone at Adam's fall, 785
The earth requires that warmth reach every-
where;

What, must your patch of snow be saved forsooth

Because you rather fancy snow than flowers?"
Something in this style he began with me

Last he said, savagely for a good man, 790
"This explains why you call your husband
harsh,

Harsh to you, harsh to whom you love. God's Bread!

The poor Count has to manage a mere child

756 Be fruitful, etc. Quoted from Genesis, 1 28. 763.
Molinists'. See Caponsacchi, 151 and note, page 300

Whose parents leave untaught the simplest things

Their duty was and privilege to teach — 795
Goodwives' instruction, gossips' lore, they laugh

And leave the Count the task — or leave it me!"

Then I resolved to tell a frightful thing
"I am not ignorant — know what I say, 799
Declaring this is sought for hate, not love.
Sir, you may hear things like almighty God
I tell you that my housemate, yes — the priest

My husband's brother, Canon Girolamo —
Has taught me what depraved and misnamed love 804

Means, and what outward signs denote the sin,

For he solicits me and says he loves,
The idle young priest with naught else to do.
My husband sees this, knows this, and lets be.
Is it your counsel I bear this beside?"

"— More scandal, and against a priest this time! 810

What, 'tis the Canon now?" — less snap-pishly —

"Rise up, my child, for such a child you are,
The rod were too advanced a punishment!
Let's try the honeyed cake A parable!
'Without a parable spake he not to them' 815
There was a ripe round long black toothsome fruit,

Even a flower-fig, the prime boast of May;
And, to the tree, said . . . either the spirit o' the fig,

Or, if we bring in men, the gardener,
Archbishop of the orchard — had I time 820

To try o' the two which fits in best, indeed
It might be the Creator's self, but then

The tree should bear an apple, I suppose —
Well, anyhow, one with authority said,

'Ripe fig, burst skin, regale the fig-pecker —
The bird whercof thou art a perquisite!' 826

'Nay,' with a founce, replied the restif fig,
'I much prefer to keep my pulp myself;

He may go breakfastless and dinnerless,
Supperless of one crimson seed, for me!' 830

So, back she flopped into her bunch of leaves
He flew off, left her — did the natural lord —

And lo, three hundred thousand bees and wasps 833

Found her out, feasted on her to the shuck
Such gain the fig's that gave its bird no bite!

The moral — fools elude their proper lot,
Tempt other fools, get ruined all alike

Therefore go home, embrace your husband quick!

Which if his Canon brother chance to see,
He will the sooner back to book again." 840

So, home I did go; so, the worst befell;
So, I had proof the Archbishop was just man,
And hardly that, and certainly no more.

For, miserable consequence to me, 844
My husband's hatred waxed nor waned at all,

His brother's boldness grew effrontery soon,
And my last stay and comfort in myself
Was forced from me; henceforth I looked to God

Only, nor cared my desecrated soul
Should have fair walls, gay windows for the world. 850

God's glimmer, that came through the ruin-top,

Was witness why all lights were quenched inside;

Henceforth I asked God counsel, not man-kind.

So, when I made the effort, freed myself,
They said — "No care to save appearance here! 855

How cynic — when, how wanton, were enough!"

— Adding, it all came of my mother's life —
My own real mother, whom I never knew,
Who did wrong (if she needs must have done wrong) 859

Through being all her life, not my four years,
At mercy of the hateful, every beast

O' the field was wont to break that fountain-fence,

Trample the silver into mud so murk
Heaven could not find itself reflected there

Now they cry, "Out on her, who, plashy pool,
Bequeathed turbidity and bitterness 866

To the daughter-stream where Guido dipped and drank!"

Well, since she had to bear this brand — let me!

The rather do I understand her now —
From my experience of what hate calls love —

Much love might be in what their love called hate.

If she sold . . . what they call, sold . . . me, her child —

I shall believe she hoped in her poor heart
That I at least might try be good and pure,

Begin to live untempted, not go doomed 875
And done with ere once found in fault, as she.

O and, my mother, it all came to this?
Why should I trust those that speak ill of you,

When I mistrust who speaks even well of them?

Why, since all bound to do me good, do I harm, 880

796 Goodwives', gossips' A goodwife is the mistress of a house, a gossip is a sponsor at a baptism 815 Without them. Quoted from Matthew, 13 34 827 restif, restif.

May not you, seeming as you harmed me
 most,
 Have meant to do most good — and feed your
 child
 From bramble-bush, whom not one orchard-
 tree
 But drew bough back from, nor let one fruit
 fall?
 This it was for you sacrificed your babe?
 Gained just this, giving your heart's hope
 away
 As I might give mine, loving it as you,
 If . . . but that never could be asked of
 me!

There, enough! I have my support again, 889
 Again the knowledge that my babe was, is,
 Will be mine only. Him, by death, I give Outright to God, without a further care —
 But not to any parent in the world —
 So to be safe; why is it we repine?
 What guardianship were safer could we
 choose? 895
 All human plans and projects come to naught,
 My life, and what I know of other lives, Prove that — no plan nor project! God shall care!

And now you are not tired? How patient
 then 899
 All of you — oh yes, patient this long while Listening, and understanding, I am sure!
 Four days ago, when I was sound and well
 And like to live, no one would understand.
 People were kind, but smiled, "And what of
 him,
 Your friend, whose tonsure the rich dark-brown hides? 905
 There, there! — your lover, do we dream he
 was?

A priest too — never were such naughtiness!
 Still, he thinks many a long think, never fear,
 After the shy pale lady — lay so light
 For a moment in his arms, the lucky one!" 910
 And so on; wherefore should I blame you
 much?

So we are made, such difference in minds,
 Such difference too in eyes that see the minds!
 That man, you misinterpret and misprize —
 The glory of his nature, I had thought, 915
 Shot itself out in white light, blazed the truth
 Through every atom of his act with me
 Yet where I point you, through the crystal
 shrine,

Purity in quintessence, one dew-drop,
 You all decry a spider in the midst 920
 One says, "The head of it is plain to see,"
 And one, "They are the feet by which I
 judge,"
 All say, "Those films were spun by nothing
 else."

Then, I must lay my babe away with God,
 Nor think of him again for gratitude. 925
 Yes, my last breath shall wholly spend itself
 In one attempt more to disperse the stain,
 The mist from other breath fond mouths have
 made,
 About a lustrous and pellucid soul; 929
 So that, when I am gone but sorrow stays,
 And people need assurance in their doubt
 If God yet have a servant, man a friend,
 The weak a savior, and the vile a foe —
 Let him be present, by the name invoked,
 Giuseppe-Maria Caponsacchi!

There, 935
 Strength comes already with the utterance!
 I will remember once more for his sake
 The sorrow; for he lives and is belied.
 Could he be here, how he would speak for me!

I had been miserable three drear years 940
 In that dread palace and lay passive now,
 When I first learned there could be such a
 man.

Thus it fell. I was at a public play,
 In the last days of Carnival last March,
 Brought there I knew not why, but now know well. 945

My husband put me where I sat, in front,
 Then crouched down, breathed cold through me from behind,
 Stationed i' the shadow — none in front could
 see —

I, it was, faced the stranger throng beneath,
 The crowd with upturned faces, eyes one stare, 950

Voices one buzz. I looked but to the stage,
 Whereon two lovers sang and interchanged,
 "True life is only love, love only bliss:
 I love thee — thee I love!" then they embraced. 954

I looked thence to the ceiling and the walls —
 Over the crowd, those voices and those eyes —
 My thoughts went through the roof and out,
 to Rome

On wings of music, waft of measured words —
 Set me down there, a happy child again,
 Sure that tomorrow would be festa-day, 960
 Hearing my parents praise past festas more,
 And seeing they were old if I was young,
 Yet wondering why they still would end discourse

With "We must soon go, you abide your time,
 And — might we haply see the proper friend
 Throw his arm over you and make you safe!"

Sudden I saw him; into my lap there fell
 A foolish twist of comfits, broke my dream
 And brought me from the air and laid me low,
 As ruined as the soaring bee that's reached 970
 (So Pietro told me at the Villa once)

By the dust-handful There the comfits lay,
 I looked to see who flung them, and I faced
 This Caponsacchi, looking up in turn.
 Ere I could reason out why, I felt sure, 975
 Whoever flung them, his was not the hand —
 Up rose the round face and good-natured grin
 Of one who, in effect, had played the prank,
 From covert close beside the earnest face —
 Fat waggish Conti, friend of all the world 980
 He was my husband's cousin, privileged
 To throw the thing; the other, silent, grave,
 Solemn almost, saw me, as I saw him.

There is a psalm Don Celestine recites,
 "Had I a dove's wings, how I fain would flee!" 985
 The psalm runs not "I hope, I pray for
 wings" —
 Not "If wings fall from heaven, I fix them fast" —
 Simply "How good it were to fly and rest,
 Have hope now, and one day expect content!
 How well to do what I shall never do!" 990
 So I said, "Had there been a man like that,
 To lift me with his strength out of all strife
 Into the calm, how I could fly and rest!
 I have a keeper in the garden here 994
 Whose sole employment is to strike me low
 If ever I, for solace, seek the sun.
 Life means with me successful feigning death,
 Lying stone-like, eluding notice so,
 Forgoing here the turf and there the sky
 Suppose that man had been instead of this!"

Presently Conti laughed into my ear — 1001
 Had tripped up to the raised place where I sat —
 "Cousin, I flung them brutishly and hard!
 Because you must be hurt, to look austere
 As Caponsacchi yonder, my tall friend 1005
 A-gazing now Ah, Guido, you so close?
 Keep on your knees, do! Beg her to forgive!
 My cornet battered like a cannon-ball
 Good-by, I'm gone!" — nor waited the reply 1009
 That night at supper, out my husband broke,
 "Why was that throwing, that buffoonery?
 Do you think I am your dupe? What man would dare
 Throw comfits in a stranger lady's lap?
 'Twas knowledge of you bred such insolence
 In Caponsacchi; he dared shoot the bolt, 1015
 Using that Conti for his stalking-horse.
 How could you see him this once and no more,
 When he is always haunting hereabout

981 cousin. The word is loosely used. His brother had married Guido's sister. 985 Had I flee. Cf Psalms, 55 6—"Oh, that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away and be at rest." 1008 cornet, a piece of paper twisted into the shape of a cone

At the street-corner or the palace-side,
 Publishing my shame and your impudence?
 You are a wanton — I a dupe, you think?
 O Christ, what hinders that I kill her quick?"
 Whereat he drew his sword and feigned a thrust.

All this, now — being not so strange to me,
 Used to such misconception day by day 1025
 And broken-in to bear — I bore, this time,
 More quietly than woman should perhaps,
 Repeated the mere truth and held my tongue

Then he said, "Since you play the ignorant,
 I shall instruct you This amour — commenced 1030
 Or finished or midway in act, all's one —
 'Tis the town-talk, so my revenge shall be
 Does he presume because he is a priest? 1033
 I warn him that the sword I wear shall pink
 His lily-scented cassock through and through, Next time I catch him underneath your eaves!" 1036
 But he had threatened with the sword so oft
 And, after all, not kept his promise All
 I said was, "Let God save the innocent!
 Moreover, death is far from a bad fate 1040
 I shall go pray for you and me, not him;
 And then I look to sleep, come death or,
 worse,
 Life." So, I slept.

There may have elapsed a week,
 When Margherita — called my waiting-
 maid,
 Whom it is said my husband found too fair —
 Who stood and heard the charge and the reply, 1046
 Who never once would let the matter rest
 From that night forward, but rang changes
 still
 On this the thrust and that the shame, and
 how
 Good cause for jealousy cures jealous fools,
 And what a paragon was this same priest
 She talked about until I stopped my ears —
 She said, "A week is gone, you comb your
 hair,
 Then go mope in a corner, cheek on palm,
 Till night comes round again — so, waste a
 week 1055
 As if your husband menaced you in sport
 Have not I some acquaintance with his tricks?
 Oh no, he did not stab the serving-man
 Who made and sang the rimes about me once!
 For why? They sent him to the wars next
 day. 1060
 Nor poisoned he the foreigner, my friend,

1034. pink, pierce

Who wagered on the whiteness of my breast —
The swarth skins of our city in dispute;
For, though he paid me proper compliment, 1064

The Count well knew he was besotted with Somebody else, a skin as black as ink
(As all the town knew save my foreigner) —
He found and wedded presently — 'Why need Better revenge?' — the Count asked. But
what's here? 1069

A priest that does not fight, and cannot wed, Yet must be dealt with! If the Count took
fire

For the poor pastime of a minute — me —
What were the conflagration for yourself,
Countess and lady-wife and all the rest? 1074
The priest will perish; you will grieve too late.
So shall the city-ladies' handsomest,
Frankest, and liberalest gentleman
Die for you, to appease a scurvy dog
Hanging's too good for. Is there no escape?
Were it not simple Christian charity 1080
To warn the priest be on his guard — save
him

Assured death, save yourself from causing it?
I meet him in the street Give me a glove,
A ring to show for token! Mum's the
word! 1084

I answered, "If you were, as styled, my maid,
I would command you; as you are, you say,
My husband's intimate — assist his wife,
Who can do nothing but entreat 'Be still!'
Even if you speak truth and a crime is planned,

Leave help to God as I am forced to do! 1090
There is no other help, or we should craze,
Seeing such evil with no human cure.
Reflect that God, who makes the storm desist,

Can make an angry violent heart subside.
Why should we venture teach him governance? 1095
Never address me on this subject more!"

Next night she said, "But I went, all the
same —

Aye, saw your Caponsacchi in his house,
And come back stuffed with news I must out-
pour.

I told him, 'Sir, my mistress is a stone; 1100
Why should you harm her for no good you get?

For you do harm her — prowl about our
place,

With the Count never distant half the street,
Lurking at every corner, would you look! 1104
'Tis certain she has witched you with a spell
Are there not other beauties at your beck?
We all know, Donna This and Monna That Die for a glance of yours, yet here you gaze!

Go make them grateful, leave the stone its
cold!"

And he — oh, he turned first white and then
red, 1110

And then — 'To her behest I bow myself,
Whom I love with my body and my soul;
Only a word i' the bowing! See, I write
One little word, no harm to see or hear!
Then, fear no further!' This is what he wrote. 1115

I know you cannot read — therefore, let me!
'My idol!' " . . .

But I took it from her hand
And tore it into shreds. "Why, join the rest
Who harm me? Have I ever done you
wrong?

People have told me 'tis you wrong myself,
Let it suffice I either feel no wrong 1121
Or else forgive it — yet you turn my foe!
The others hunt me, and you throw a noose!"

She muttered, "Have your willful way!" I slept 1124

Whereupon . . . no, I leave my husband out!
It is not to do him more hurt, I speak.

Let it suffice, when misery was most,
One day, I swooned and got a respite so.
She stooped as I was slowly coming to.
This Margherita, ever on my trace, 1130
And whispered — "Caponsacchi!"

If I drowned,
But woke afloat i' the wave with upturned
eyes,
And found their first sight was a star! I
turned —

For the first time, I let her have her will, Heard passively — "The imposthume at such
head, 1135

One touch, one lancet-puncture would relieve —

And still no glance the good physician's way
Who rids you of the torment in a trice!

Still he writes letters you refuse to hear 1139
He may prevent your husband, kill himself,
So desperate and all fordone is he!

Just hear the pretty verse he made today!
A sonnet from Mirtillo. 'Peerless fair . . .'

All poetry is difficult to read —

The sense of it is, anyhow, he seeks 1145
Leave to contrive you an escape from hell,
And for that purpose asks an interview.

I can write, I can grant it in your name,
Or, what is better, lead you to his house
Your husband dashes you against the stones —

1135 imposthume, abscess 1140 prevent, anticipate 1143 Mirtillo. One of the letters introduced at the trial was signed "Mirtillo." See Caponsacchi, 551 and note, p 305

This man would place each fragment in a shrine, 1151
 You hate him, love your husband!"

I returned,
 "It is not true I love my husband — no,
 Nor hate this man. I listen while you speak —
 Assured that what you say is false, the same,
 Much as when once, to me a little child, 1156
 A rough gaunt man in rags, with eyes on fire,
 A crowd of boys and idlers at his heels,
 Rushed as I crossed the Square, and held my
 head

In his two hands, 'Here's she will let me
 speak! 1160

You little girl, whose eyes do good to mine,
 I am the Pope, am Sextus, now the Sixth,
 And that Twelfth Innocent, proclaimed today,
 Is Lucifer disguised in human flesh!
 The angels, met in conclave, crowned me! —
 thus 1165

He gibbered and I listened; but I knew
 All was delusion, ere folk interposed,
 'Unfasten him, the maniac!' Thus I know
 All your report of Caponsacchi false,
 Folly or dreaming I have seen so much 1170
 By that adventure at the spectacle,
 The face I fronted that one first, last time;
 He would belie it by such words and thoughts
 Therefore while you profess to show him me,
 I ever see his own face Get you gone!" 1175

"— That will I, nor once open mouth again —
 No, by Saint Joseph and the Holy Ghost!
 On your head be the damage, so adieu!"

And so more days, more deeds I must forget,
 Till . . . what a strange thing now is to declare! 1180

Since I say anything, say all if true!
 And how my life seems lengthened as to serve!
 It may be idle or inopportune,
 But, true? — why, what was all I said but
 truth, 1184

Even when I found that such as are untrue
 Could only take the truth in through a lie?
 Now — I am speaking truth to the Truth's
 self,
 God will lend credit to my words this time

It had got half through April I arose 1189
 One vivid daybreak — who had gone to bed
 In the old way my wont those last three
 years,

Careless until, the cup drained, I should die
 The last sound in my ear, the over-night,
 Had been a something let drop on the sly

In prattle by Margherita, "Soon enough 1195
 Gayeties end, now Easter's past; a week,
 And the Archbishop gets him back to Rome —
 Everyone leaves the town for Rome, this
 spring —

Even Caponsacchi, out of heart and hope, 1199
 Resigns himself and follows with the flock."
 I heard this drop and drop like rain outside Fast-falling through the darkness while she spoke,

So had I heard with like indifference,
 "And Michael's pair of wings will arrive first
 At Rome, to introduce the company, 1205
 And bear him from our picture where he fights
 Satan — expect to have that dragon loose
 And never a defender!" — my sole thought Being still, as night came, "Done, another
 day! 1209

How good to sleep and so get nearer death!" —
 When, what, first thing at daybreak, pierced the sleep

With a summons to me? Up I sprang alive,
 Light in me, light without me, everywhere Change! A broad yellow sunbeam was let
 fall

From heaven to earth — a sudden drawbridge
 lay, 1215

Along which marched a myriad merry motes,
 Mocking the flies that crossed them and recrossed

In rival dance, companions new-born too
 On the house-caves, a dripping shag of weed Shook diamonds on each dull gray lattice-
 square, 1220

As first one, then another bird leapt by,
 And light was off, and, lo, was back again,
 Always with one voice — where are two such joys? —

The blessed building-sparrow! I stepped forth,
 Stood on the terrace — o'er the roofs, such
 sky! 1225

My heart sang, "I too am to go away,
 I too have something I must care about,
 Carry away with me to Rome, to Rome!
 The bird brings hither sticks and hairs and wool,

And nowhere else i' the world, what fly breaks rank, 1230

Falls out of the procession that befits,
 From window here to window there, with all The world to choose — so well he knows his course?

I have my purpose and my motive too,
 My march to Rome, like any bird or fly! 1235
 Had I been dead! How right to be alive!
 Last night I almost prayed for leave to die,

1163 that Twelfth Innocent, proclaimed today
 Innocent XII (1613-1700) was proclaimed pope on July 12, 1691. There has never been a Pope Sextus (the Sixth)

1204-1208 And Michael's defender Lines 1204-1208 refer to a fresco in the Church of San Francesco at Arezzo

Wished Guido all his pleasure with the sword
Or the poison — poison, sword, was but a trick, ¹²³⁹

Harmless, may God forgive him the poor jest!
My life is charmed, will last till I reach Rome!
Yesterday, but for the sin — ah, nameless
be

The deed I could have dared against myself!
Now — see if I will touch an unripe fruit, ¹²⁴⁴
And risk the health I want to have and use!
Not to live, now, would be the wickedness —
For life means to make haste and go to Rome
And leave Arezzo, leave all woes at once!"

Now, understand here, by no means mistake!
Long ago had I tried to leave that house ¹²⁵⁰
When it seemed such procedure would stop sin;

And still failed more the more I tried — at
first

The Archbishop, as I told you; next, our lord
The Governor — indeed I found my way;
I went to the great palace where he rules, ¹²⁵⁵
Though I knew well 'twas he who — when I gave

A jewel or two, themselves had given me,
Back to my parents — since they wanted
bread,

They who had never let me want a nosegay
— he

Spoke of the jail for felons, if they kept ¹²⁶⁰
What was first theirs, then mine, so doubly
theirs,

Though all the while my husband's most of
all!

I knew well who had spoke the word wrought
this,

Yet, being in extremity, I fled
To the Governor, as I say — scarce opened lip ¹²⁶⁵

When — the cold cruel snicker close behind —
Guido was on my trace, already there,
Exchanging nod and wink for shrug and smile,
And I — pushed back to him and, for my
pains,

Paid with . . . but why remember what is past? ¹²⁷⁰

I sought out a poor friar the people call
The Roman, and confessed my sin which came
Of their sin — that fact could not be re-
pressed —

The frightfulness of my despair in God;
And feeling, through the grate, his horror shake, ¹²⁷⁵

Implored him, "Write for me who cannot
write,

Apprise my parents, make them rescue me!
You bid me be courageous and trust God.

1263 who had spoke. It was Guido.

Do you in turn dare somewhat, trust and
write,

'Dear friends, who used to be my parents
once, ¹²⁸⁰

And now declare you have no part in me,
This is some riddle I want wit to solve,
Since you must love me with no difference
Even suppose you altered — there's your hate,
To ask for; hate of you two dearest ones ¹²⁸⁵
I shall find liker love than love found here,
If husbands love their wives. Take me away
And hate me as you do the gnats and fleas,
Even the scorpions! How I shall rejoice!
Write that and save me!" And he promised — wrote ¹²⁹⁰

Or did not write; things never changed at all.
He was not like the Augustinian here!

Last, in a desperation, I appealed
To friends, whoever wished me better days,
To Guillichini, that's of kin — "What, I —
Travel to Rome with you? A flying gout ¹²⁹⁶
Bids me deny my heart and mind my leg!"
Then I tried Conti, used to brave — laugh
back

The louring thunder when his cousin scowled
At me protected by his presence: "You —
Who well know what you cannot save me from — ¹³⁰¹

Carry me off! What frightens you, a priest?"
He shook his head, looked grave — "Above my strength!

Guido has claws that scratch, shows feline
teeth,

A formidabler foe than I dare fret — ¹³⁰⁵
Give me a dog to deal with, twice the size!
Of course I am a priest and Canon too,
But . . . by the bye . . . though both, not quite so bold

As he, my fellow-Canon, brother-priest,
The personage in such ill odor here ¹³¹⁰
Because of the reports — pure birth o' the brain!

Our Caponsacchi, he's your true Saint George
To slay the monster, set the Princess free,
And have the whole High-Altar to himself
I always think so when I see that piece ¹³¹⁵
I' the Pieve (that's his church and mine, you
know),

Though you drop eyes at mention of his
name!"

That name had got to take a half-grotesque,
Half-ominous, wholly enigmatic sense,
Like any by-word, broken bit of song ¹³²⁰

1292 He was . . . here. See Caponsacchi, 2031 and note, page 322 1295 That's of kin. He was related to Guido 1312-1313. Saint George . free See note on lines 1744-45, page 319 1315 that piece, a picture of St. George killing the dragon, by George Vasari (an Italian painter of the 16th century) It is at the high altar of the church of S. Maria della Pieve, in Arezzo

Born with a meaning, changed by mouth and
mouth
That mix it in a sneer or smile, as chance
Bids, till it now means naught but ugliness
And perhaps shame

— All this intends to say,
That, over-night, the notion of escape 1325
Had seemed distemper, dreaming; and the
name —

Not the man, but the name of him, thus made
Into a mockery and disgrace — why, she
Who uttered it persistently, had laughed,
“I name his name, and there you start and wince 1330

As criminal from the red tongs’ touch!” —
yet now,
Now, as I stood letting morn bathe me bright, Choosing which butterfly should bear my
news —

The white, the brown one, or that tinier
blue —

The Margherita, I detested so, 1335
In she came — “The fine day, the good spring time!

What, up and out at window? That is best.
No thought of Caponsacchi? — who stood
there

All night on one leg, like the sentry crane,
Under the pelting of your water-spout — 1340
Looked last look at your lattice ere he leave
Our city, bury his dead hope at Rome
Aye, go to looking-glass and make you fine,
While he may die ere touch one least loose
hair 1344

You drag at with the comb in such a rage!”

I turned — “Tell Caponsacchi he may come!”

“Tell him to come? Ah, but, for charity,
A truce to fooling! Come? What — come this eve?

Peter and Paul! But I see through the trick!
Yes, come, and take a flower-pot on his head, Flung from your terrace! No joke, sincere
truth?” 1351

How plainly I perceived hell flash and fade
O’ the face of her — the doubt that first paled
joy,

Then, final reassurance I indeed
Was caught now, never to be free again! 1355
What did I care? — who felt myself of force
To play with silk, and spurn the horsehair-springe.

“But — do you know that I have bade him
come, 1358

1357. horeshair-springe, a trap made of horsehair

And in your own name? I presumed so much,
Knowing the thing you needed in your heart
But somehow — what had I to show in proof?
He would not come: half-promised, that was
all,

And wrote the letters you refused to read
What is the message that shall move him
now?”

“After the Ave Maria, at first dark, 1365
I will be standing on the terrace, say!”

“I would I had a good long lock of hair
Should prove I was not lying! Never mind!”

Off she went — “May he not refuse, that’s
all — 1369
Fearing a trick!”

I answered, “He will come ”
And, all day, I sent prayer like incense up
To God the strong, God the beneficent,
God ever mindful in all strife and strait,
Who, for our own good, makes the need extreme, 1374

Till at the last he puts forth might and saves.
An old rime came into my head and rang
Of how a virgin, for the faith of God,
Hid herself, from the Paynims that pursued,
In a cave’s heart; until a thunderstone, 1379 Wrapped in a flame, revealed the couch and
prey;

And they laughed — “Thanks to lightning, ours at last!”

And she cried, “Wrath of God, assert his
love!

Servant of God, thou fire, befriend his child!”
And lo, the fire she grasped at, fixed its
flash, 1384

Lay in her hand a calm, cold, dreadful sword
She brandished till pursuers strewed the
ground,

So did the souls within them die away,
As o’er the prostrate bodies, sworded, safe,
She walked forth to the solitudes and Christ
So should I grasp the lightning and be saved!

And still, as the day wore, the trouble grew Whereby I guessed there would be born a
star,

Until at an intense throe of the dusk, 1393
I started up, was pushed, I dare to say,
Out on the terrace, leaned and looked at last
Where the deliverer waited me — the same
Silent and solemn face, I first descried
At the spectacle, confronted mine once more

1365 Ave Maria, the evening prayer, which begins with these words, meaning Earl Mary 1378 Paynims, pagans 1379 thunderstone, a stone supposed to be the material part of lightning

So was that minute twice vouchsafed me,
 so
 The manhood, wasted then, was still at watch
 To save me yet a second time: no change 1401
 Here, though all else changed in the changing
 world!

I spoke on the instant, as my duty bade,
 In some such sense as this, whatever the phrase,

"Friend, foolish words were borne from you
 to me, 1405
 Your soul behind them is the pure strong
 wind,
 Not dust and feathers which its breath may
 bear.
 These to the witless seem the wind itself,
 Since proving thus the first of it they feel. 1409
 If by mischance you blew offense my way,
 The straws are dropped, the wind desists no
 whit,
 And how such strays were caught up in the street

And took a motion from you, why inquire?
 I speak to the strong soul, no weak disguise
 If it be truth — why should I doubt it
 truth? — 1415

You serve God specially, as priests are bound,
 And care about me, stranger as I am,
 So far as wish my good, that — miracle
 I take to imitate he wills you serve
 By saving me — what else can he direct? 1420
 Here is the service. Since a long while now,
 I am in course of being put to death;
 While death concerned nothing but me, I bowed

The head and bade, in heart, my husband strike

Now I imperl something more, it seems, 1425
 Something that's trulier me than this myself,
 Something I trust in God and you to save
 You go to Rome, they tell me: take me there,
 Put me back with my people!"

He replied —

The first word I heard ever from his lips, 1430
 All himself in it — an eternity
 Of speech, to match the immeasurable depth
 O' the soul that then broke silence — "I am
 yours"

So did the star rise, soon to lead my step, 1434
 Lead on, nor pause before it should stand still Above the House o' the Babe — my babe to
 be,
 That knew me first and thus made me know
 him,

That had his right of life and claim on mine,
 And would not let me die till he was born, 1439

But pricked me at the heart to save us both, Saying, "Have you the will? Leave God the
 way!"

And the way was Caponsacchi — "mine," thank God!

He was mine, he is mine, he will be mine. 1443

No pause i' the leading and the light! I know, Next night there was a cloud came, and not
 he,

But I prayed through the darkness till it broke

And let him shine. The second night, he
 came.

"The plan is rash; the project desperate.
 In such a flight needs must I risk your life,
 Give food for falsehood, folly or mistake, 1450
 Ground for your husband's rancor and revenge" —

So he began again, with the same face.
 I felt that, the same loyalty — one star
 Turning now red that was so white before —
 One service apprehended newly; just 1455
 A word of mine and there the white was back!

"No, friend, for you will take me! 'Tis your-
 self

Risk all, not I — who let you, for I trust
 In the compensating great God; enough!
 I know you; when is it that you will come?"

"Tomorrow at the day's dawn." Then I
 heard 1461

What I should do: how to prepare for flight
 And where to fly.

That night my husband bade
 "— You, whom I loathe, beware you break
 my sleep

This whole night! Couch beside me like the corpse 1465

I would you were!" The rest you know, I think —

How I found Caponsacchi and escaped.

And this man, men call sinner? Jesus Christ!
 Of whom men said, with mouths Thyself
 mad'st once, 1469

"He hath a devil" — say he was Thy saint,
 My Caponsacchi! Shield and show — un-shroud

In Thine own time the glory of the soul
 If aught obscure — if ink-spot, from vile pens Scribbling a charge against him (I was glad Then, for the first time, that I could not write) — 1475

Flirted his way, have flecked the blaze!

1470 He hath a devil Jesus is so referred to in John,
 7 20 and 8 48 by people who disliked his teachings

For me,
 'Tis otherwise; let men take, sift my thoughts —
 Thoughts I throw like the flax for sun to bleach! 1478
 I did pray, do pray, in the prayer shall die,
 "Oh, to have Caponsacchi for my guide!"
 Ever the face upturned to mine, the hand
 Holding my hand across the world — a sense
 That reads, as only such can read, the mark
 God sets on woman, signifying so 1484
 She should — shall peradventure — be divine;
 Yet 'ware, the while, how weakness mars the
 print
 And makes confusion, leaves the thing men
 see —
 Not this man sees — who from his soul, rewrites
 The obliterated charter — love and strength
 Mending what's marred. "So kneels a votarist, 1490
 Weeds some poor waste traditionary plot
 Where shrine once was, where temple yet
 may be,
 Purging the place but worshipping the while.
 By faith and not by sight, sight clearest so —
 Such way the saints work" — says Don Celestine 1495
 But I, not privileged to see a saint
 Of old when such walked earth with crown and palm,
 If I call "saint" what saints call something
 else —
 The saints must bear with me, impute the fault 1499
 To a soul i' the bud, so starved by ignorance,
 Stinted of warmth, it will not blow this year
 Nor recognize the orb which spring-flowers
 know.
 But if meanwhile some insect with a heart
 Worth floods of lazy music, spendthrift joy —
 Some firefly renounced spring for my dwarfed
 cup, 1505
 Crept close to me, brought luster for the dark, Comfort against the cold — what though excess
 Of comfort should miscall the creature — sun?
 What did the sun to hinder while harsh hands,
 Petal by petal, crude and colorless, 1510 Tore me? This one heart gave me all the spring!
 Is all told? There's the journey; and where's
 time
 To tell you how that heart burst out in shine?
 Yet certain points do press on me too hard Each place must have a name, though I forget 1515

How strange it was — there where the plain begins
 And the small river mitigates its flow —
 When eve was fading fast, and my soul sank,
 And he divined what surge of bitterness,
 In overtaking me, would float me back 1520
 Whence I was carried by the striding day —
 So — "This gray place was famous once,"
 said he —
 And he began that legend of the place
 As if in answer to the unspoken fear, 1524
 And told me all about a brave man dead,
 Which lifted me and let my soul go on!
 How did he know too — at that town's approach
 By the rock-side — that in coming near the signs
 Of life, the house-roofs and the church and
 tower, 1529
 I saw the old boundary and wall o' the world
 Rise plain as ever round me, hard and cold,
 As if the broken circlet joined again,
 Tightened itself about me with no break —
 As if the town would turn Arezzo's self — 1534
 The husband there — the friends my enemies,
 All ranged against me, not an avenue
 To try, but would be blocked and drive me
 back
 On him — this other . . . oh, the heart in
 that!
 Did not he find, bring, put into my arms 1539
 A new-born babe? — and I saw faces beam.
 Of the young mother proud to teach me joy,
 And gossips round expecting my surprise
 At the sudden hole through earth that lets in
 heaven.
 I could believe himself by his strong will 1544
 Had woven around me what I thought the
 world
 We went along in, every circumstance,
 Towns, flowers and faces, all things helped so
 well!
 For, through the journey, was it natural
 Such comfort should arise from first to last?
 As I look back, all is one milky way; 1550
 Still bettered more, the more remembered,
 so
 Do new stars bud while I but search for old,
 And fill all gaps i' the glory, and grow him —
 Him I now see make the shine everywhere
 Even at the last when the bewildered flesh,
 The cloud of weariness about my soul 1556
 Clogging too heavily, sucked down all sense — Still its last voice was, "He will watch and
 care;
 Let the strength go, I am content — he stays" 1559
 I doubt not he did stay and care for all —
 From that sick minute when the head swam
 round,

And the eyes looked their last and died on
 him,
 As in his arms he caught me, and, you say,
 Carried me in, that tragical red eve,
 And laid me where I next returned to life 1565
 In the other red of morning, two red plates
 That crushed together, crushed the time between,
 And are since then a solid fire to me — 1568
 When in, my dreadful husband and the world
 Broke — and I saw him, master, by hell's
 right,
 And saw my angel helplessly held back
 By guards that helped the malice — the lamb prone,
 The serpent towering and triumphant — then Came all the strength back in a sudden swell, 1574
 I did for once see right, do right, give tongue
 The adequate protest; for a worm must turn
 If it would have its wrong observed by God.
 I did spring up, attempt to thrust aside
 That ice-block 'twixt the sun and me, lay low
 The neutralizer of all good and truth. 1580
 If I sinned so — never obey voice more
 O' the Just and Terrible, who bids us —
 "Bear!"
 Not — "Stand by, bear to see my angels
 bear!"
 I am clear it was on impulse to serve God, 1584
 Not save myself — no — nor my child unborn!
 Had I else waited patiently till now? —
 Who saw my old kind parents, silly-sooth
 And too much trustful, for their worst of faults,
 Cheated, browbeaten, stripped and starved,
 cast out 1589
 Into the kennel. I remonstrated,
 Then sank to silence, for — their woes at end,
 Themselves gone — only I was left to plague.
 If only I was threatened and belied,
 What matter? I could bear it and did bear;
 It was a comfort, still one lot for all — 1595
 They were not persecuted for my sake
 And I, estranged, the single happy one.
 But when at last, all by myself I stood
 Obeying the clear voice which bade me rise,
 Not for my own sake but my babe unborn,
 And take the angel's hand was sent to help —
 And found the old adversary athwart the path — 1602
 Not my hand simply struck from the angel's, but
 The very angel's self made foul i' the face
 By the fiend who struck there — that I would not bear, 1605
 That only I resisted! So, my first

And last resistance was invincible.
 Prayers move God; threats, and nothing else,
 move men!
 I must have prayed a man as he were God
 When I implored the Governor to right 1610
 My parents' wrongs; the answer was a smile
 The Archbishop — did I clasp his feet enough,
 Hide my face hotly on them, while I told
 More than I dared make my own mother
 know?
 The profit was — compassion and a jest. 1615
 This time, the foolish prayers were done with,
 right
 Used might, and solemnized the sport at once
 All was against the combat; vantage, mine?
 The runaway avowed, the accomplice-wife,
 In company with the plan-contriving priest?
 Yet, shame thus rank and patent, I struck,
 bare, 1621
 At foe from head to foot in magic mail,
 And off it withered, cobweb-armory
 Against the lightning! 'Twas truth singed
 the lies
 And saved me, not the vain sword nor weak
 speech! 1625
 You see, I will not have the service fail!
 I say, the angel saved me; I am safe!
 Others may want and wish, I wish nor want
 One point o' the circle plainer, where I stand Traced round about with white to front the
 world. 1630
 What of the calumny I came across,
 What o' the way to the end? — the end crowns all.
 The judges judged aright i' the main, gave me
 The uttermost of my heart's desire, a truce
 From torture and Arezzo, balm for hurt, 1635
 With the quiet nuns — God recompense the
 good! —
 Who said and sang away the ugly past.
 And, when my final fortune was revealed,
 What safety, while, amid my parents' arms,
 My babe was given me! Yes, he saved my babe; 1640
 It would not have peeped forth, the bird-like
 thing,
 Through that Arezzo noise and trouble, back
 Had it returned nor ever let me see!
 But the sweet peace cured all, and let me live
 And give my bird the life among the leaves
 God meant him! Weeks and months of quietude, 1646
 I could lie in such peace and learn so much —
 Begin the task, I see how needful now,
 Of understanding somewhat of my past —
 Know life a little, I should leave so soon. 1650
 Therefore, because this man restored my soul,
 All has been right; I have gained my gain, enjoyed

No more now, I withdraw from earth and
man
To my own soul, compose myself for God.

Well, and there is more! Yes, my end of
breath

Shall bear away my soul in being true! 1755
He is still here, not outside with the world,
Here, here, I have him in his rightful place!
'Tis now, when I am most upon the move,
I feel for what I verily find — again
The face, again the eyes, again, through all,
The heart and its immeasurable love 1761
Of my one friend, my only, all my own,
Who put his breast between the spears and
me

Ever with Caponsacchi! Otherwise
Here alone would be failure, loss to me —
How much more loss to him, with life debarred
From giving life, love locked from love's display,

The day-star stopped its task that makes night morn!

O lover of my life, O soldier-saint, 1769
No work begun shall ever pause for death!
Love will be helpful to me more and more
I' the coming course, the new path I must tread —

My weak hand in thy strong hand, strong for
that!

Tell him that if I seem without him now, 1774
That's the world's insight! Oh, he understands!

He is at Civita — do I once doubt
The world again is holding us apart?
He had been here, displayed in my behalf
The broad brow that reverberates the truth,
And flashed the word God gave him, back to
man! 1780

I know where the free soul is flown! My fate

Will have been hard for even him to bear;
Let it confirm him in the trust of God,
Showing how holily he dared the deed!
And, for the rest — say, from the deed, no
touch 1785

Of harm came, but all good, all happiness,
Not one faint fleck of failure! Why explain?
What I see, oh, he sees and how much more!
Tell him — I know not wherefore the true
word 1789

Should fade and fall unuttered at the last —
It was the name of him I sprang to meet
When came the knock, the summons, and the end.

"My great heart, my strong hand are back
again!"

I would have sprung to these, beckoning across

1776 He is at Civita Caponsacchi had been banished to Civita Vecchia, a seaport near Rome

Murder and hell gigantic and distinct 1795
O' the threshold, posted to exclude me heaven;
He is ordained to call and I to come!
Do not the dead wear flowers when dressed
for God?

Say — I am all in flowers from head to foot!
Say — not one flower of all he said and did,
Might seem to flit unnoticed, fade unknown,
But dropped a seed, has grown a balsam-tree
Whereof the blossoming perfumes the place
At this supreme of moments! He is a priest;
He cannot marry therefore, which is right;
I think he would not marry if he could 1806
Marriage on earth seems such a counterfeit,
Mere imitation of the inimitable;

In heaven we have the real and true and sure.
'Tis there they neither marry nor are given
In marriage but are as the angels; right, 1811
Oh, how right that is, how like Jesus Christ
To say that! Marriage-making for the earth,
With gold so much — birth, power, repute so
much,

Or beauty, youth so much, in lack of these!
Be as the angels rather, who, apart, 1816
Know themselves into one, are found at length Married, but marry never, no, nor give
In marriage; they are man and wife at once
When the true time is here we have to wait
—Not so long neither! Could we by a wish 1821
Have what we will and get the future now,
Would we wish aught done undone in the
past?

So, let him wait God's instant men call years,
Meantime hold hard by truth and his great
soul, 1825

Do out the duty! Through such souls alone
God stooping shows sufficient of his light
For us i' the dark to rise by. And I rise.

HERVÉ RIEL

I

On the sea and at the Hogue, sixteen hundred ninety-two,

Did the English fight the French — woe to France!

1810-1811 'Tis there, etc From Matthew, 22 30 — "For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven"

Hervé Riel This poem is based upon an incident of the war between France and England in 1692, over the succession of William of Orange to the English throne The French took the side of James II, who had been deposed, and were fighting for his restoration The united fleets of England and Holland, under Admiral Russell, crushed the French fleet, under Admiral Tourville (line 43), but several of the French ships under Damfreville (line 8) were saved from capture as related in the poem

Browning found the story among the town records of Saint Malo when, in 1867, he visited Le Croisic, the home of Hervé Riel, in Brittany.

1 the Hogue, the name of a fort and of a cape on the northeast coast of France

And, the thirty-first of May, helter-skelter
 through the blue,
 Like a crowd of frightened porpoises a shoal
 of sharks pursue,
 Came crowding ship in ship to Saint Malo
 on the Rance, 5
 With the English fleet in view.

2
 'Twas the squadron that escaped, with the victor in full chase;
 First and foremost of the drove, in his great ship, Damfreville;
 Close on him fled, great and small,
 Twenty-two good ships in all; 10
 And they signalled to the place,
 "Help the winners of a race!
 Get us guidance, give us harbor, take us
 quick — or, quicker still,
 Here's the English can and will!"

3
 Then the pilots of the place put out brisk and leapt on board, 15
 "Why, what hope or chance have ships like these to pass?" laughed they.
 "Rocks to starboard, rocks to port, all the passage scarred and scored,
 Shall the Formidable here, with her twelve and eighty guns,
 Think to make the river-mouth by the single narrow way,
 Trust to enter where 'tis ticklish for a craft of twenty tons, 20
 And with flow at full beside?
 Now, 'tis slackest ebb of tide.
 Reach the mooring? Rather say,
 While rock stands or water runs,
 Not a ship will leave the bay!" 25

4
 Then was called a council straight
 Brief and bitter the debate:
 "Here's the English at our heels, would you have them take in tow
 All that's left us of the fleet, linked together
 stern and bow,
 For a prize to Plymouth Sound? 30
 Better run the ships aground!"
 (Ended Damfreville his speech).
 "Not a minute more to wait!
 Let the Captains all and each Shove ashore, then blow up, burn the vessels on the beach! 35
 France must undergo her fate.

5
 "Give the word!" But no such word
 Was ever spoke or heard,
 For up stood, for out stepped, for in struck amid all these
 — A Captain? A Lieutenant? A Mate — first, second, third? 40
 No such man of mark, and meet
 With his betters to compete!
 But a simple Breton sailor pressed by Tourville for the fleet,
 A poor coasting-pilot he, Hervé Riel the Croi-sickese. 44

6
 And "What mockery or malice have we here?" cries Hervé Riel;
 "Are you mad, you Malouins? Are you cowards, fools, or rogues?
 Talk to me of rocks and shoals, me who took the soundings, tell
 On my fingers every bank, every shallow, every swell
 'Twixt the offing here and Grève, where the river disembogues?
 Are you bought by English gold? Is it love
 the lying's for? 50
 Morn and eve, night and day,
 Have I piloted your bay,
 Entered free and anchored fast at the foot of Solidor
 Burn the fleet and ruin France? That were worse than fifty Hogues!
 Sirs, they know I speak the truth! Sirs, believe me there's a way! 55
 Only let me lead the line,
 Have the biggest ship to steer,
 Get this Formidable clear,
 Make the others follow mine,
 And I lead them, most and least, by a passage I know well, 60
 Right to Solidor past Grève,
 And there lay them safe and sound,
 And if one ship misbehave —
 Keel so much as grate the ground —
 Why, I've nothing but my life — here's my head!" cries Hervé Riel. 65

7
 Not a minute more to wait.
 "Steer us in, then, small and great!
 Take the helm, lead the line, save the squadron!" cried its chief.
 Captains, give the sailor place!
 He is Admiral, in brief. 70

5 Saint Malo, a fortified seaport on an island at the mouth of the Rance River, west of the cape 18 the Formidable, the name of the leading French ship 30 Plymouth Sound Plymouth is a great British naval station on the southern coast of England

44 Croisickese, a native of Croisic, in Brittany 46 Malouins, people of Saint Malo 49 Grève, the sands between St Malo and Mont St Michel, a rocky island off the coast of Normandy disembogues, empties 53 Solidor, a fortified town at the mouth of the Rance, also the name of a fort in the town

Still the north-wind, by God's grace!
 See the noble fellow's face
 As the big ship, with a bound,
 Clears the entry like a hound,
 Keeps the passage as its inch of way were the wide sea's profound! 75
 See, safe through shoal and rock,
 How they follow in a flock,
 Not a ship that misbehaves, not a keel that grates the ground,
 Not a spar that comes to grief!
 The peril, see, is past, 80
 All are harbored to the last,
 And just as Hervé Riel hollas "Anchor!" —
 sure as fate,
 Up the English come — too late!

8

So, the storm subsides to calm;
 They see the green trees wave 85
 On the heights o'erlooking Grève.
 Hearts that bled are stanch'd with balm.
 "Just our rapture to enhance,
 Let the English rake the bay,
 Gnash their teeth and glare askance 90
 As they cannonade away!
 'Neath rampired Solidor pleasant riding on the Rance!"
 How hope succeeds despair on each Captain's countenance!
 Out burst all with one accord,
 "This is Paradise for Hell! 95
 Let France, let France's King
 Thank the man that did the thing!"
 What a shout, and all one word,
 "Hervé Riel!"
 As he stepped in front once more, 100
 Not a symptom of surprise
 In the frank blue Breton eyes,
 Just the same man as before.

9

Then said Damfreville, "My friend,
 I must speak out at the end, 105
 Though I find the speaking hard.
 Praise is deeper than the lips;
 You have saved the King his ships,
 You must name your own reward.
 'Faith, our sun was near eclipse! 110
 Demand whate'er you will,
 France remains your debtor still.
 Ask to heart's content and have! or my name's not Damfreville."

10

Then a beam of fun outbroke
 On the bearded mouth that spoke, 115
 As the honest heart laughed through

Those frank eyes of Breton blue:
 "Since I needs must say my say,
 Since on board the duty's done,
 And from Malo Roads to Croisic Point,
 what is it but a run? — 120
 Since 'tis ask and have, I may —
 Since the others go ashore —
 Come! A good whole holiday!
 Leave to go and see my wife, whom I call the Belle Aurore!"
 That he asked and that he got — nothing
 more. 125

II

Name and deed alike are lost:
 Not a pillar nor a post
 In his Croisic keeps alive the feat as it befell;
 Not a head in white and black
 On a single fishing-smack, 130
 In memory of the man but for whom had gone to wrack
 All that France saved from the fight whence England bore the bell.
 Go to Paris; rank on rank
 Search the heroes flung pell-mell
 On the Louvre, face and flank! 135
 You shall look long enough ere you come to Hervé Riel.
 So, for better and for worse,
 Hervé Riel, accept my verse!
 In my verse, Hervé Riel, do thou once more Save the squadron, honor France, love thy wife, the Belle Aurore! 140

HOUSE

Shall I sonnet-sing you about myself?
 Do I live in a house you would like to see?
 Is it scant of gear, has it store of pelf?
 "Unlock my heart with a sonnet-key?"
 Invite the world, as my betters have done? 5
 "Take notice: this building remains on
 view,
 Its suites of reception every one,
 Its private apartment and bedroom too;
 "For a ticket, apply to the Publisher"
 No, thanking the public, I must decline 10
 A peep through my window, if folk prefer,
 But, please you, no foot over threshold of
 mine!

124 Leave . . . Belle Aurore. The hero asked for a permanent release, but Browning departs from the historic fact to heighten the dramatic value of the story. 129 head, figurehead 135 the Louvre, the great palace and art gallery of Paris.

I have mixed with a crowd and heard free talk
In a foreign land where an earthquake
chanced

And a house stood gaping, naught to balk 15
Man's eye wherever he gazed or glanced

The whole of the frontage shaven sheer,
The inside gaped; exposed to day,
Right and wrong and common and queer,
Bare, as the palm of your hand, it lay 20

The owner? Oh, he had been crushed, no doubt!

"Odd tables and chairs for a man of wealth!
What a parcel of musty old books about!
He smoked — no wonder he lost his health!"

"I doubt if he bathed before he dressed 25
A brasier? — the pagan, he burned perfumes!

You see it is proved, what the neighbors guessed:
His wife and himself had separate rooms."

Friends, the goodman of the house at least Kept house to himself till an earthquake
came; 30

'Tis the fall of its frontage permits you feast
On the inside arrangement you praise or blame.

Outside should suffice for evidence,
And whoso desires to penetrate
Deeper, must dive by the spirit-sense — 35
No optics like yours, at any rate!

"Hoity-toity! A street to explore,
Your house the exception! 'With this same key'

Shakespeare unlocked his heart, once more!"
Did Shakespeare? If so, the less Shakespeare he! (1876)

SHOP

So, friend, your shop was all your house!
Its front, astonishing the street,
Invited view from man and mouse
To what diversity of treat
Behind its glass — the single sheet! 5

What gimcracks, genuine Japanese —
Gape-jaw and goggle-eye, the frog,
Dragons, owls, monkeys, beetles, geese;

38-39 With this . heart Quoted from Wordsworth's Scorn Not the Sonnet, 2-3 Many poets have sung about themselves in sonnets—Dante, Petrarch, Sidney, Spenser, Milton, Keats, Mrs Browning, D G Rossetti
Shop 5 single sheet, single pane of glass

Some crush-nosed human-hearted dog —
Queer names, too, such a catalogue! 10

I thought "And he who owns the wealth
Which blocks the window's vastitude —
Ah, could I peep at him by stealth
Behind his ware, pass shop, intrude
On house itself, what scenes were viewed! 15

"If wide and showy thus the shop,
What must the habitation prove?
The true house with no name a-top —
The mansion, distant one remove,
Once get him off his traffic-groove! 20

"Pictures he likes, or books perhaps,
And as for buying most and best,
Commend me to these city chaps!
Or else he's social, takes his rest
On Sundays, with a Lord for guest 25

"Some suburb-palace, parked about
And gated grandly, built last year —
The four-mile walk to keep off gout,
Or big seat sold by bankrupt peer —
But then he takes the rail, that's clear. 30

"Or, stop! I wager, taste selects
Some out-o'-the-way, some all-unknown
Retreat; the neighborhood suspects
Little that he who rambles lone Makes Rothschild tremble on his throne!"

Nowise! Nor Mayfair residence 36
Fit to receive and entertain —
Nor Hampstead villa's kind defense
From noise and crowd, from dust and drain —
Nor country-box was soul's domain! 40

Nowise! At back of all that spread
Of merchandise, woo's me, I find
A hole i' the wall where, heels by head,
The owner couched, his ware behind —
In cupboard suited to his mind 45

For why? He saw no use of life
But, while he drove a roaring trade,
To chuckle, "Customers are rife!"
To chafe, "So much hard cash outlaid,
Yet zero in my profits made! 50

"This novelty costs pains, but — takes?
Cumbers my counter! Stock no more!
This article, no such great shakes,
Fizzes like wildfire? Underscore
The cheap thing — thousands to the fore!"

30 takes the rail, gets an advantage (a term from horse-racing) 35 Rothschild, the name of a famous Jewish family of bankers, noted for enormous wealth and influence 36, 38 Mayfair, Hampstead, fashionable sections of London

'Twas lodging best to live most nigh 56
 (Cramp, coffinlike as crib might be)
 Receipt of Custom; ear and eye
 Wanted no outworld: "Hear and see
 The bustle in the shop!" quoth he. 60

My fancy of a merchant-prince
 Was different Through his wares we groped
 Our darkling way to — not to mince
 The matter — no black den where moped
 The master if we interloped! 65

Shop was shop only, household-stuff?
 What did he want with comforts there?
 "Walls, ceiling, floor, stay blank and rough,
 So goods on sale show rich and rare!
 'Sell and scud home' be shop's affair!" 70

What might he deal in? Gems, suppose!
 Since somehow business must be done
 At cost of trouble — see, he throws
 You choice of jewels, every one,
 Good, better, best, star, moon, and sun! 75

Which lies within your power of purse?
 This ruby that would tip aright
 Solomon's scepter? Oh, your nurse
 Wants simply coral, the delight
 Of teething baby — stuff to bite! 80

Howe'er your choice fell, straight you took
 Your purchase, prompt your money rang
 On counter — scarce the man forsook
 His study of the Times, just swang
 Till-ward his hand that stopped the clang —

Then off made buyer with a prize, 86
 Then seller to his Times returned;
 And so did day wear, wear, till eyes
 Brightened apace, for rest was earned.
 He locked door long ere candle burned. 90

And whither went he? Ask himself,
 Not me! To change of scene, I think.
 Once sold the ware and pursed the pelf,
 Chaffer was scarce his meat and drink,
 Nor all his music — money-chink 95

Because a man has shop to mind
 In time and place, since flesh must live,
 Needs spint lack all life behind,
 All stray thoughts, fancies fugitive,
 All loves except what trade can give? 100

I want to know a butcher paints,
 A baker rimes for his pursuit,
 Candlestick-maker much acquaints

His soul with song, or, haply mute,
 Blows out his brains upon the flute! 105

But — shop each day and all day long!
 Friend, your good angel slept, your star
 Suffered eclipse, fate did you wrong!
 From where these sorts of treasures are,
 There should our hearts be — Christ, how far! 110

PISGAH-SIGHTS

I

Over the ball of it,
 Peering and prying,
 How I see all of it,
 Life there, outlying!
 Roughness and smoothness, 5
 Shine and defilement,
 Grace and uncouthness:
 One reconciliation.

Orbed as appointed,
 Sister with brother 10
 Joins, ne'er disjointed
 One from the other.
 All's lend-and-borrow;
 Good, see, wants evil,
 Joy demands sorrow, 15
 Angel weds devil!

"Which things must — why be?"
 Vain our endeavor!
 So shall things aye be 20
 As they were ever.
 "Such things should so be!"
 Sage our desistence!
 Rough-smooth let globe be,
 Mixed — man's existence!

Man — wise and foolish, 25
 Lover and scornor,
 Docile and mulish —
 Keep each his corner!
 Honey yet gall of it!
 There's the life lying, 30
 And I see all of it,
 Only, I'm dying!

2

Could I but live again
 Twice my life over,
 Would I once strive again? 35
 Would not I cover

109-110 where . . . hearts be. Cf Matthew, 6 21 — "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also"
Pisgah-Sights. Pisgah is the name of a mountain in Palestine from which Moses saw the Promised Land (Deuteronomy, 34 1-4)

Quietly all of it —
 Greed and ambition —
 So, from the pall of it,
 Pass to fruition?

40

"Soft!" I'd say, "Soul mine!
 Three-score and ten years,
 Let the blind mole mine
 Digging out deniers!
 Let the dazed hawk soar,
 Claim the sun's rights too!
 'Tis thy walk's o'er,
 Foliage thy flight's to."

45

Only a learner,
 Quick one or slow one,
 Just a discernor,
 I would teach no one.
 I am earth's native —
 No rearranging it!
 I be creative,
 Chopping and changing it?

50

55

March, men, my fellows!
 Those who, above me
 (Distance so mellows),
 Fancy you love me;
 Those who, below me
 (Distance makes great so),
 Free to forego me,
 Fancy you hate so!

60

Praising, reviling,
 Worst head and best head,
 Past me defiling,
 Never arrested,
 Wanters, abounders,
 March, in gay mixture,
 Men, my surrounders!
 I am the fixture.

70

So shall I fear thee,
 Mightiness yonder!
 Mock-sun — more near thee,
 What is to wonder?
 So shall I love thee,
 Down in the dark — lest
 Glowworm I prove thee,
 Star that now sparklest!

NATURAL MAGIC

All I can say is — I saw it!
 The room was as bare as your hand
 I locked in the swarth little lady — I swear,
 From the head to the foot of her — well,
 quite as bare!

44 denier, a small copper French coin of little value

"No Nautch shall cheat me," said I, "taking my stand⁵
 At this bolt which I draw!" And this bolt —
 I withdraw it,
 And there laughs the lady, not bare, but em-bowered
 With — who knows what verdure, o'erfruited, o'erflowered?
 Impossible! Only — I saw it!

All I can sing is — I feel it!¹⁰
 This life was as blank as that room;
 I let you pass in here. Precaution, indeed?
 Walls, ceiling, and floor — not a chance for a weed!
 Wide opens the entrance, where's cold now,
 where's gloom?
 No May to sow seed here, no June to reveal it,¹⁵
 Behold you enshrined in these blooms of your bringing,
 These fruits of your bearing — nay, birds of your winging!
 A fairy-tale! Only — I feel it! (1876)

MAGICAL NATURE

Flower — I never fancied; jewel — I profess
 you!
 Bright I see and soft I feel the outside of a flower
 Save but glow inside and — jewel, I should guess you,
 Dim to sight and rough to touch, the glory
 is the dower.
 You, forsooth, a flower? Nay, my love, a jewel —⁵
 Jewel at no mercy of a moment in your
 prime!
 Time may fray the flower-face, kind be time
 or cruel,
 Jewel, from each facet, flash your laugh at
 time! (1876)

APPEARANCES

And so you found that poor room dull,
 Dark, hardly to your taste, my dear?
 Its features seemed unbeautiful;
 But this I know — 'twas there, not here,
 You phighted troth to me, the word⁵
 Which — ask that poor room how it heard

And this rich room obtains your praise
 Unqualified — so bright, so fair,

Natural Magic 5 Nautch, an Indian dancing girl, to whom is ascribed the powers of a magician, as in producing a flowering tree out of nothing

So all whereat perfection stays?

Aye, but remember — here, not there, 10
The other word was spoken! — Ask
This rich room how you dropped the mask!

PROLOGUE to LA SAISIAZ

Good, to forgive,
Best, to forget!
Living, we fret;
Dying, we live.
Fretless and free, 5
Soul, clap thy pinion!
Earth have dominion,
Body, o'er thee!

Wander at will,
Day after day — 10
Wander away,
Wandering still —
Soul that canst soar!
Body may slumber;
Body shall cumber 15
Soul-flight no more.

Waft of soul's wing!
What lies above?
Sunshine and Love,
Skyblue and Spring! 20
Body hides — where?
Ferns of all feather,
Mosses and heather,
Yours be the care! (1878)

PHEIDIPPIDES

Χαίρετε, νικῶμεν

First I salute this soil of the blessed, river and
rock!
Gods of my birthplace, dæmons and heroes,
honor to all!
Then I name thee, claim thee for our patron,
co-equal in praise —
Aye, with Zeus the Defender, with Her of the ægis and spear!

Prologue to La Saisiaz La Saisiaz, meaning The Sun, was the name of the villa near Geneva, Switzerland, where Browning stayed during the autumn of 1877 with his sister and a friend, Miss Ann Egerton-Smith. The sudden death of Miss Egerton-Smith called forth this poem, in which Browning discusses questions of death, God, the soul, and immortality.

Pheidippides Pheidippides, the hero of this poem, was a Greek athlete who had been commissioned by Athens in 493 B.C. to run 140 miles to Sparta to ask for aid against the attacking Persians. The runner has returned and is reporting to the rulers of Athens. The story is from Book 6 of Herodotus, the famous Greek historian of the fourth century B.C.

The Greek legend means Rejoice, we conquer. These were the words spoken by Pheidippides (line 111) when he carried to Athens the report of the victory at Marathon in 490 B.C. 2 dæmons, guardian spirits of Greek families. 4 Zeus, chief of the Greek gods. Her . spear, Athena (Minerva), goddess of wisdom and warfare. The ægis was a shield

Also, ye of the bow and the buskin, praised be your peer, 5
Now, henceforth and forever — O latest to whom I upraise
Hand and heart and voice! For Athens, leave pasture and flock!
Present to help, potent to save, Pan — patron
I call!

Archons of Athens, topped by the tettix, see,
I return!
See, 'tis myself here standing alive, no specter that speaks! 10
Crowned with the myrtle, did you command
me, Athens and you,
"Run, Pheidippides, run and race, reach
Sparta for aid!
Persia has come, we are here, where is She?"
Your command I obeyed, Ran and raced; like stubble, some field which a fire runs through,
Was the space between city and city. Two days, two nights did I burn 15
Over the hills, under the dales, down pits and up peaks.

Into their midst I broke; breath served but for "Persia has come!
Persia bids Athens proffer slaves'-tribute,
water and earth;
Razed to the ground is Eretria — but Athens,
shall Athens sink,
Drop into dust and die — the flower of Hellas utterly die, 20
Die, with the wide world spitting at Sparta, the stupid, the stander-by?
Answer me quick, what help, what hand do you stretch o'er destruction's brink?
How — when? No care for my limbs! — there's lightning in all and some — Fresh and fit your message to bear, once lips give it birth!"

O my Athens — Sparta love thee? Did Sparta respond? 25
Every face of her leered in a furrow of envy,
mistrust,
Malice — each eye of her gave me its glitter
of gratified hate!
Gravely they turned to take counsel, to cast for excuses. I stood

5 ye . . buskin, Artemis (Diana), goddess of the moon and of the chase. The buskin was a shoe laced about the ankle. 8 Pan, the god of all nature. He was thought by the Greeks to be half man and half goat, hence the goat-god (line 77). 9 Archons, rulers. They wore the golden grasshopper (tettix) to signify their right to their territory as descendants of earth-born possessors. The grasshopper was supposed to have sprung from the earth. 11 myrtle, often used in crowning heroes. 18 water and earth. To carry earth and water to an invading enemy was a symbol of submission. 20 Hellas, Greece.

Quivering — the limbs of me fretting as fire
fiets, an inch from dry wood³²
"Persia has come, Athens asks aid, and still they debate?" 30
Thunder, thou Zeus! Athené, are Spartans a quarry beyond
Swing of thy spear? Phoibos and Artemis, clang them 'Ye must!'"
No bolt launched from Olump³³os! Lo, their answer at last!
"Has Persia come — does Athens ask aid — may Sparta befriend?"
Nowise precipitate judgment — too weighty
the issue at stake! 35
Count we no time lost time which lags through respect to the gods!
Ponder that precept of old, 'No warfare, whatever the odds
In your favor, so long as the moon, halforbed, is unable to take Full-circle her state in the sky!' Already she rounds to it fast,
Athens must wait, patient as we — who judgment suspend " 40
Athens — except for that sparkle — thy name,
I had moldered to ash!
That sent a blaze through my blood, off, off and away was I back —
Not one word to waste, one look to lose on the false and the vile!
Yet "O gods of my land!" I cried, as each hillock and plain,
Wood and stream, I knew, I named, rushing past them again, 45
"Have ye kept faith, proved mindful of honors
we paid you erewhile?"
Vain was the filleted victim, the fulsome libation! Too rash
Love in its choice, paid you so largely service
so slack!
"Oak and olive and bay — I bid you cease to enwreath
Brows made bold by your leaf! Fade at the Persian's foot, 50
You that, our patrons were pledged, should never adorn a slave!
Rather I hail thee, Parnes — trust to thy wild waste tract!
Treeless, herbless, lifeless mountain! What matter if slack'd
My speed may hardly be, for homage to crag
and to cave

32 Phoibos, Phœbus Apollo, god of the sun 33. Olump³³os, Olympus, a mountain in Greece, the abode of the gods 47 filleted victim. Animals for sacrifice were bedecked with ribbons 49 Oak and olive and bay These were sacred trees, the leaves and branches of which were often used in wreaths bestowed as prizes for victory or excellence 52 Parnes, a mountain north of Athens

No deity deigns to drape with verdure? At least I can breathe, 55
Fear in thee no fraud from the blind, no lie
from the mute!"
Such my cry as, rapid, I ran over Parnes'
ridge,
Gully and gap I clambered and cleared till,
sudden, a bar
Jutted, a stoppage of stone against me, blocking the way
Right! for I minded the hollow 'to traverse,
the fissure across; 60
"Where I could enter, there I depart by!
Night in the fosse?
Athens to aid? Though the dive were through Erebus, thus I obey —
Out of the day dive, into the day as bravely arise! No bridge Better!" — when — ha! what was it I came on, of wonders that are?
There, in the cool of a cleft, sat he — majes-tical Pan! 65
Ivy drooped wanton, kissed his head, moss
cushioned his hoof;
All the great god was good in the eyes grave-kindly — the curl
Carved on the bearded cheek, amused at a mortal's awe,
As, under the human trunk, the goat-thighs
grand I saw
"Halt, Phœidippides!" — halt I did, my brain of a whirl 70
"Hither to me! Why pale in my presence?"
he gracious began;
"How is it — Athens, only in Hellas, holds me
aloof?
"Athens, she only, rears me no fane, makes me no feast!
Wherefore? Than I what godship to Athens more helpful of old?
Aye, and still, and forever her friend! Test
Pan, trust me! 75
Go, bid Athens take heart, laugh Persia to scorn, have faith
In the temples and tombs! Go, say to Athens,
'The Goat-God saith:
When Persia — so much as strewn not the soil
— is cast in the sea,
Then praise Pan who fought in the ranks with your most and least,
Goat-thigh to greaved-thigh, made one cause
with the free and the bold!' 80

"Say Pan saith: 'Let this, foreshowing the place, be the pledge!'"

61 fosse, ditch 62 Erebus, the dark space between earth and Hades

(Gay, the liberal hand held out this herbage I
bear
— Fennel — I grasped it a-tremble with dew
— whatever it bode)
“While, as for thee” . . . But enough! He was gone. If I ran hitherto — Be sure that, the rest of my journey, I ran no longer, but flew ⁸⁵
Parnes to Athens — earth no more, the air
was my road,
Here am I back. Praise Pan, we stand no more on the razor’s edge!
Pan for Athens, Pan for me! I too have a guerdon rare!

Then spoke Miltiades “And thee, best runner of Greece,
Whose limbs did duty indeed — what gift is promised thyself? ⁹⁰
Tell it us straightway — Athens the mother demands of her son!”
Rosily blushed the youth; he paused, but,
lifting at length
His eyes from the ground, it seemed as he gathered the rest of his strength Into the utterance — “Pan spoke thus. ‘For what thou hast done Count on a worthy reward! Henceforth be allowed thee release ⁹⁵
From the racer’s toil, no vulgar reward in praise or in pelf!’

“I am bold to believe, Pan means reward the most to my mind!
Fight I shall, with our foremost, wherever this fennel may grow —
Pound — Pan helping us — Persia to dust,
and, under the deep,
Whelm her away forever; and then — no
Athens to save — ¹⁰⁰
Marry a certain maid, I know keeps faith to the brave —
Hie to my house and home; and, when my children shall creep
Close to my knees — recount how the god
was awful yet kind,
Promised their sire reward to the full — rewarding him — so!”

Unforeseeing one! Yes, he fought on the Marathon day; ¹⁰⁵
So, when Persia was dust, all cried, “To Akropolis!

83 Fennel, a prophecy that Pan would aid the Athenians at Marathon, which means fennel 89 Miltiades, the Greek general who won the victory over the Persians at Marathon in 490 B.C. 106 Akropolis, the citadel of Athens

Run, Pheidippides, one race more! the meed is thy due!
‘Athens is saved, thank Pan,’ go shout!” He flung down his shield,
Ran like fire once more, and the space ’twixt
the Fennel-field
And Athens was stubble again, a field which a fire runs through, ¹¹⁰
Till in he broke: “Rejoice, we conquer!”
Like wine through clay,
Joy in his blood bursting his heart, he died —
the bliss!

So, to this day, when friend meets friend, the word of salute
Is still “Rejoice!” — his word which brought rejoicing indeed.
So is Pheidippides happy forever — the noble strong man ¹¹⁵
Who could race like a god, bear the face of a god, whom a god loved so well,
He saw the land saved he had helped to save,
and was suffered to tell
Such tidings, yet never decline, but, gloriously
as he began,
So to end gloriously — once to shout, thereafter be mute.
“Athens is saved!” — Pheidippides dies in the shout for his meed. ¹²⁰

EPILOGUE TO DRAMATIC IDYLS

“Touch him ne’er so lightly, into song he broke,
Soil so quick-receptive — not one feather-
seed,
Not one flower-dust fell but straight its fall awoke
Vitalizing virtue, song would song succeed
Sudden as spontaneous — prove a poet-soul!”
Indeed? ⁵
Rock’s the song-soil rather, surface hard and
bare,
Sun and dew their mildness, storm and frost their rage
Vainly both expend — few flowers awaken
there,
Quiet in its cleft broods — what the after-age ⁹
Knows and names a pine, a nation’s heritage.

Thus I wrote in London, musing on my betters,
Poets dead and gone; and lo, the critics cried,

Epilogue to Dramatic Idyls The first ten lines of this poem were published as an epilogue to the second series of Dramatic Idyls in 1880, the remaining lines were added in an album of a young American girl in Venice later in the same year

“Out on such a boast!” as if I dreamed that fetters
 Binding Dante bind up — me! as if true pride
 Were not also humble!

So I smiled and sighed 15
 As I oped your book in Venice this bright
 morning,
 Sweet new friend of mine! and felt the clay
 or sand,
 Whatsoe'er my soil be, break — for praise or scorning —
 Out in grateful fancies — weeds; but weeds expand 19
 Almost into flowers, held by such a kindly
 hand. (1880)

WANTING IS —WHAT?

Wanting is — what?
Summer redundant,
Blueness abundant,
—Where is the blot?

Beamy the world, yet a blank all the same, 5
— Framework which waits for a picture to frame.

What of the leafage, what of the flower?
Roses embowering with naught they embower!

Come then, complete incompleteness, O comers,
Pant through the blueness, perfect the summer!

Breathe but one breath
Rose-beauty above,
And all that was death
Grows life, grows love,
Grows love! (1883)

ADAM, LILITH, AND EVE

One day, it thundered and lightened
Two women, fairly frightened,
Sank to their knees, transformed, transfixed,
At the feet of the man who sat betwixt;
And "Mercy!" cried each — "if I tell the
truth 5
Of a passage in my youth!"

Said This "Do you mind the morning
I met your love with scorning?
As the worst of the venom left my lips,
I thought, 'If, despite this lie, he strips 10
The mask from my soul with a kiss — I crawl
His slave — soul, body, and all!'"

Wanting Is—What? This poem stands as an introduction to a group of poems published in 1883 under the title of Jaco-seria. The two following poems are from the same volume. Each poem in the collection shows the lack of something necessary to make human action or experience more nearly perfect. In this poem the spirit of love is invoked.

Adam, Lilith, and Eve Lilith was the traditional first wife of Adam, she is reputed to have been the mother of demons

Said That. "We stood to be married,
The priest, or someone, tarried;
'If Paradise-door prove locked?' smiled you
I thought, as I nodded, smiling too, 16
'Did one, that's away, arrive — nor late Nor soon should unlock Hell's gate!'"

It ceased to lighten and thunder
Up started both in wonder, 20
Looked round and saw that the sky was clear,
Then laughed, "Confess you believed us,
 Dear!"

"I saw through the joke!" the man replied.
They re-seated themselves beside (1883)

NEVER THE TIME AND THE PLACE

Never the time and the place
And the loved one all together!

This path — how soft to pace!
This May — what magic weather!
Where is the loved one's face? 5

In a dream that loved one's face meets mine,
But the house is narrow, the place is bleak

Where, outside, rain and wind combine
With a furtive car, if I strive to speak,

With a hostile eye at my flushing cheek, 10
With a malice that marks each word, each sign!

O enemy sly and serpentine,
Uncoil thee from the waking man!

Do I hold the Past
Thus firm and fast

Yet doubt if the Future hold I can?
This path so soft to pace shall lead
Through the magic of May to herself indeed!

Or narrow if needs the house must be,
Outside are the storms and strangers, we —
Oh, close, safe, warm sleep I and she — 21
I and she! (1883)

WHY I AM A LIBERAL

“Why?” Because all I haply can and do,
All that I am now, all I hope to be — Whence comes it save from fortune setting
free

Body and soul the purpose to pursue,
God traced for both? If fetters not a few, 5
Of prejudice, convention, fall from me,
These shall I bid men — each in his degree
Also God-guided — bear, and gayly, too?

But little do or can the best of us;
That little is achieved through Liberty 10
Who, then, dares hold, emancipated thus,

Why I Am a Liberal Compare The Lost Leader, page 204

His fellow shall continue bound? Not I,
Who live, love, labor freely, nor discuss
A brother's right to freedom. That is "Why"

PROLOGUE TO ASOLANDO

"The Poet's age is sad, for why?
 In youth, the natural world could show
 No common object but his eye
 At once involved with alien glow —
 His own soul's ins-bow. 5

"And now a flower is just a flower;
 Man, bird, beast are but beast, man —
 Simply themselves, uninct by dower
 Of dyes which, when life's day began,
 Round each in glory ran." 10

Friend, did you need an optic glass,
 Which were your choice? A lens to drape
 In ruby, emerald, chrysopras,
 Each object — or reveal its shape
 Clear outlined, past escape, 15

The naked very thing? — so clear
 That, when you had the chance to gaze,
 You found its inmost self appear
 Through outer seeming — truth ablaze,
 Not falsehood's fancy-haze? 20

How many a year, my Asolo,
 Since — one step just from sea to land —
 I found you, loved yet feared you so —
 For natural objects seemed to stand
 Palpably fire-clothed! No — 25

No mastery of mine o'er these!
 Terror with beauty, like the Bush
 Burning but unconsumed. Bend knees,
 Drop eyes to earthward! Language? Tush!
 Silence 'tis awe decrees. 30

And now? The lambent flame is — where?
 Lost from the naked world; earth, sky,
 Hill, vale, tree, flower — Italia's rare
 O'er-running beauty crowds the eye —
 But flame? The Bush is bare. 35

Hill, vale, tree, flower — they stand distinct,
 Nature to know and name. What then?

Prologue to Asolando The remaining poems of Browning in this volume were published in 1889 in a book entitled Asolando Fancies and Facts. Browning had been living in Asolo, not far from Venice. He derives the title from asolare, meaning to disport in the open air, to amuse oneself at random. The book appeared on the day of Browning's death. 5 Iris-bow, rainbow (so called from Iris, goddess of the rainbow). 13 chrysopras, a kind of apple-green onyx. 27-28 the Bush unconsumed, a reference to an experience of Moses related in Exodus, 3 2 — "And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush, and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed."

A Voice spoke thence which straight unlinked
 Fancy from fact, see, all's in ken;
 Has once my eyelid winked? 40

No, for the purged ear apprehends
 Earth's import, not the eye late dazed
 The Voice said, "Call my works thy friends!
 At Nature dost thou shrink amazed?
 God is it who transcends " 45

DUBIETY

I will be happy if but for once;
 Only help me, Autumn weather,
 Me and my cares to screen, ensconce
 In luxury's sofa-lap of leather!

Sleep? Nay, comfort — with just a cloud 5
 Suffusing day too clear and bright;
 Eve's essence, the single drop allowed
 To sully, like milk, Noon's water-white.

Let gauziness shade, not shroud — adjust,
 Dim, and not deaden — somehow sheathe 10
 Aught sharp in the rough world's busy thrust,
 If it reach me through dreaming's vapor-wreath.

Be life so, all things ever the same!
 For, what has disarmed the world? Out-
 side,
 Quiet and peace; inside, nor blame 15
 Nor want, nor wish whate'er betide.

What is it like that has happened before?
 A dream? No dream, more real by much.
 A vision? But fanciful days of yore Brought many, mere musing seems not such. 20

Perhaps but a memory, after all!
 — Of what came once when a woman leant
 To feel for my brow where her kiss might fall.
 Truth ever, truth only the excellent!
 (1889)

NOW

Out of your whole life give but a moment!
 All of your life that has gone before,
 All to come after it — so you ignore,
 So you make perfect the present — condense,
 In a rapture of rage, for perfection's endowment, 5
 Thought and feeling and soul and sense —
 Merged in a moment which gives me at last
 You around me for once, you beneath me, above me —

Me — sure that despite of time future, time
past —
This tick of our lifetime's one moment you love me!¹⁰
How long such suspension may linger? Ah,
Sweet —
The moment eternal — just that and no
more —
When ecstasy's utmost we clutch at the core While cheeks burn, arms open, eyes shut, and lips meet! (1889)

HUMILITY

What girl but, having gathered flowers,
Stripped the beds and spoilt the bowers,
From the lapful light she carries
Drops a careless bud? — nor taries
To regain the waif and stray:⁵
"Store enough for home" — she'll say

So say I too, give your lover
Heaps of loving — under, over,
Whelm him — make the one the wealthy!¹⁰
Am I all so poor who — stealthy
Work it was! — picked up what fell
Not the worst bud — who can tell?[~] (1889)

POETICS

"So say the foolish!" Say the foolish so,
Love?
"Flower she is, my rose" — or else, "My very swan is she" —
Or perhaps, "Yon maid-moon, blessing earth
below, Love,
That art thou!" — to them, belike, no such vain words from me

"Hush, rose, blush! no balm like breath," I chide it;⁵
"Bend thy neck its best, swan — hers the whiter curve!"
Be the moon the moon, my Love I place beside it
What is she? Her human self — no lower word will serve (1889)

SUMMUM BONUM

All the breath and the bloom of the year in the bag of one bee,
All the wonder and wealth of the mine in the heart of one gem,

Summum Bonum The title means The Highest Good

In the core of one pearl all the shade and the shine of the sea;
Breath and bloom, shade and shine — wonder, wealth, and — how far above
them —
Truth, that's brighter than gem,⁵
Trust, that's purer than peail —
Brightest truth, purest trust in the universe
— all were for me
In the kiss of one girl. (1889)

A PEARL, A GIRL

A simple ring with a single stone,
To the vulgar eye no stone of price,
Whisper the right word, that alone —
Forth starts a sprite, like fire from ice,
And lo, you are lord (says an Eastern scroll)⁵
Of heaven and earth, lord whole and sole
Through the power in a pearl

A woman ('tis I this time that say)
With little the world counts worthy praise,
Utter the true word — out and away¹⁰
Escapes her soul I am wrapped in blaze,
Creation's lord, of heaven and earth
Lord whole and sole — by a minute's birth —
Through the love in a girl!⁽¹⁸⁸⁹⁾

SPECULATIVE

Others may need new life in Heaven —
Man, Nature, Art — made new, assume!
Man with new mind old sense to leaven,
Nature — new light to clear old gloom,
Art that breaks bounds, gets soaring-room⁵

I shall pray: "Fugitive as precious —
Minutes which passed — return, remain!
Let earth's old life once more enmesh us,
You with old pleasure, me — old pain,
So we but meet nor part again!"¹⁰
(1889)

BAD DREAMS

Last night I saw you in my sleep,
And how your charm of face was changed!
I asked, "Some love, some faith you keep?"
You answered, "Faith gone, love estranged."

Whereat I woke — a twofold bliss⁵
Waking was one, but next there came
This other — "Though I felt, for this,
My heart break, I loved on the same"
(1889)

MUCKLE-MOUTH MEG

Frowned the Laird on the Lord. "So, red-handed I catch thee?

Death-doomed by our Law of the Border!
We've a gallows outside and a chiel to dispatch thee.

Who trespasses — hangs; all's in order."

He met frown with smile, did the young English gallant.

Then the Laird's dame "Nay, Husband, I beg!

He's comely, be merciful! Grace for the callant —

If he marries our Muckle-mouth Meg!"

"No mile-wide-mouthed monster of yours do I marry;

Grant rather the gallows!" laughed he 10

"Foul fare kith and kin of you — why do you tarry?"

"To tame your fierce temper!" quoth she

"Shove him quick in the Hole, shut him fast for a week

Cold, darkness, and hunger work wonders,
Who lion-like roars now, mouse-fashion will squeak, 15

And 'it rains' soon succeed to 'it thunders' "

A week did he bide in the cold and the dark — Not hunger, for duly at morning

In fitted a lass, and a voice like a lark
Chirped, "Muckle-mouth Meg still ye're scorning? 20

"Go hang, but here's parritch to hearten ye first!"

"Did Meg's muckle-mouth boast within some

Such music as yours, mine should match it or burst,

No frog-jaws! So tell folk, my Winsome!"

Soon week came to end, and, from Hole's door set wide, 25

Out he marched, and there waited the lassie.

"Yon gallows, or Muckle-mouth Meg for a bride!

Consider! Sky's blue and turf's grassy,

"Life's sweet, shall I say ye wed Muckle-mouth Meg?"

"Not I," quoth the stout heart; "too erie 30

Shall I let it munch mine? Never, Dearie!"

"Not Muckle-mouth Meg? Wow, the obstinate man!

Perhaps he would rather wed me!"

"Aye, would he — with just for a dowry your can!" 35

"I'm Muckle-mouth Meg," chirruped she.

"Then so — so — so — so — " as he kissed her apace —

"Will I widen thee out till thou turnest
From Margaret Minnikin-mou', by God's grace,

To Muckle-mouth Meg in good earnest!" 40

DEVELOPMENT

My father was a scholar and knew Greek
When I was five years old, I asked him once,
"What do you read about?"

"The siege of Troy."
"What is a siege, and what is Troy?"

Whereat
He piled up chairs and tables for a town, 5

Set me a-top for Priam, called our cat —
Helen, enticed away from home (he said)

By wicked Paris, who couched somewhere close

Under the footstool, being cowardly,
But whom — since she was worth the pains,

poor puss — 10
Towzer and Tray — our dogs, the Atreidai —

sought
By taking Troy to get possession of

— Always when great Achilles ceased to sulk
(My pony in the stable) — forth would prance

And put to flight Hector — our page-boy's self. 15

This taught me who was who and what was what.

So far I rightly understood the case
At five years old, a huge delight it proved

31 bubblyjock's, turkey's 39 Minnikin-mou', small-mouthed

Development This poem is autobiographical, it tells how Browning was taught by his father, a man of exceptional powers—a poet and a scholar, whose mind was "a storehouse of literary and philosophical antiquities."

3 The siege of Troy, the theme of Homer's Iliad. Priam was king of Troy; Paris and Hector were his sons. Helen was the most beautiful woman in Greece and the wife of Menelaus, king of Sparta. Menelaus and Agamemnon, the general of the Greek army, were the Atreidai—sons of Atreus. Paris carried off Helen and thus precipitated the war. Achilles (line 13), the hero of the poem, was a Greek. Becoming angry when he was deprived of Briseis, a beautiful captive maiden, by Agamemnon, he sulked in his tent and withdrew from the war. Later he returned to avenge the death of his friend Patroclus (line 82) at the hands of Hector. Achilles, who killed Hector and dragged his body around the walls of Troy, was finally killed by Paris

And still proves — thanks to that instructor
 sage, 19
 My father, who knew better than turn straight
 Learning's full flare on weak-eyed ignorance,
 Or, worse yet, leave weak eyes to grow sand-
 blind,
 Content with darkness and vacuity

It happened, two or three years afterward,
 That — I and playmates playing at Troy's
 Siege — 25

My father came upon our make-believe
 "How would you like to read yourself the tale
 Properly told, of which I gave you first
 Merely such notion as a boy could bear?
 Pope, now, would give you the precise account
 Of what, some day, by dint of scholarship, 31
 You'll hear — who knows? — from Homer's very mouth

Learn Greek by all means, read the 'Blind
 Old Man,

Sweetest of Singers' — tuphlos which means
 'blind,'

Iledistos which means 'sweetest' Time
 enough! 35

Try, anyhow, to master him some day,
 Until when, take what serves for substitute,
 Read Pope, by all means!"

So I ran through Pope,
 Enjoyed the tale — what history so true?
 Also attacked my Primer, duly drudged, 40
 Grew fitter thus for what was promised next —
 The very thing itself, the actual words,
 When I could turn — say, Buttmann to account

Time passed, I ripened somewhat, one fine
 day,

"Quite ready for the Iliad, nothing less? 45
 There's Heine, where the big books block the shelf,

Don't skip a word, thumb well the Lexicon!"

I thumbed well and skipped nowise till I learned

Who was who, what was what, from Homer's
 tongue, 49

And there an end of learning Had you asked
 The all-accomplished scholar, twelve years
 old,

"Who was it wrote the Iliad?" — what a
 laugh!

"Why, Homer, all the world knows Of his
 life

22 sand-blind, weak-sighted 30 Pope Alexander Pope (1688-1744) published an English translation of the Iliad in 1720 and of the Odyssey in 1725 40 Primer, the first book in Greek 43 Buttmann, Philipp Karl Buttmann (1764-1829), a German scholar, famous for his studies in Greek grammar 46 Heine, Christian Gottlob Heyne (1729-1812), a German philologist who edited the Iliad.

Doubtless some facts exist; it's everywhere. 54
 We have not settled, though, his place of birth,
 He begged, for certain, and was blind beside,
 Seven cities claimed him — Scio, with best
 right,

Thinks Byron What he wrote? Those Hymns we have.

Then there's the 'Battle of the Frogs and Mice,'

That's all — unless they dig 'Margites' up 60 (I'd like that), nothing more remains to
 know."

Thus did youth spend a comfortable time,
 Until — "What's this the Germans say in fact That Wolf found out first? It's unpleasant
 work

Their chop and change, unsettling one's belief; 65

All the same, where we live, we learn, that's sure"

So, I bent brow o'er Prolegomena.

And after Wolf, a dozen of his like Proved there was never any Troy at all,

Neither Besiegers nor Besieged — nay, worse —
 No actual Homer, no authentic text, 71

No warrant for the fiction I, as fact,
 Had treasured in my heart and soul so long —

Aye, mark you! and as fact held still, still
 hold,

Spite of new knowledge, in my heart of hearts 75

And soul of souls, fact's essence freed and
 fixed

From accidental fancy's guardian sheath
 Assuredly thenceforward — thank my stars! —

However it got there, deprive who could —
 Wring from the shrine my precious tenantry,

Helen, Ulysses, Hector and his Spouse, 81 Achilles and his Friend? — though Wolf — ah, Wolf!

Why must he needs come doubting, spoil a
 dream?

But then, "No dream's worth waking" —
 Browning says,

And here's the reason why I tell thus much
 I, now mature man, you anticipate, 86

May blame my father justifiably

57 Seven cities. The seven cities were Chios (Scio), Colophon, Smyrna, Rhodes, Athens, Argos, and Salamis. These are all located in the region of Greece and Asia Minor. 58 Hymns. These were hymns to the gods, called Homeric Hymns but actually composed by various authors after the death of Homer. 59 Battle . . . Mice. This is a mock epic poem attributed to Homer. 60 Margites, a humorous poem no longer ascribed to Homer. 64 Wolf, Friedrich August Wolf (1759-1842), a German scholar who advanced the theory in his Prolegomena in Homerum (1795), that the Iliad and the Odyssey were not the work of one man but the compilation of various writers' songs handed down through a long period of oral tradition. 81 Ulysses, one of the Greek heroes in the Trojan War. his Spouse. The wife of Hector was Andromache.

For letting me dream out my nonage thus,
And only by such slow and sure degrees
Permitting me to sift the grain from chaff, 90
Get truth and falsehood known and named as such.

Why did he ever let me dream at all,
Not bid me taste the story in its strength?
Suppose my childhood was scarce qualified
To rightly understand mythology; 95
Silence at least was in his power to keep
I might have—somehow—correspondingly—
Well, who knows by what method, gained my gains,

Been taught, by forthrights not meanderings,
My aim should be to loathe, like Peleus' son,
A lie as Hell's Gate, love my wedded wife, 101
Like Hector, and so on with all the rest.
Could not I have excogitated this Without believing such man really were?
That is—he might have put into my

The "Ethics"? In translation, if you please,
Exact, no pretty lying that improves,
To suit the modern taste: no more, no less—
The "Ethics" 'Tis a treatise I find hard
To read aright now that my hair is gray, 110
And I can manage the original.

At five years old—how ill had fared its leaves!

Now, growing double o'er the Stagirite,
At least I soil no page with bread and milk,
Nor crumple, dogs-ear and deface—boys' 115

EPILOGUE TO ASOLANDO

At the midnight in the silence of the sleep-
time,

When you set your fancies free,
Will they pass to where—by death, fools think, imprisoned—

Low he lies who once so loved you, whom you loved so,
—Pity me? 5

Oh, to love so, be so loved, yet so mistaken!

What had I on earth to do
With the slothful, with the mawkish, the unmanly?

100 Peleus' son, Achilles, who considered the action of Agamemnon regarding Briseis as a breach of faith (See note on line 3) 101-102 wedded . . . Hector. See Hector's famous farewell to his wife, Andromache, in Book 6 of the Iliad, 486 ff 103 excogitated, thought out 106 The "Ethics," the Nicomachean Ethics, the great work of Aristotle (384-322 B.C.), the famous Greek philosopher 113 the Stagirite, Aristotle, so called because he was born at Stagira, an ancient city of Chalcidice, a peninsula of northeastern Greece

Epilogue to Asolando This is Browning's last poem It should be compared with Tennyson's Crossing the Bar, page 166

Like the aimless, helpless, hopeless, did I drivel—

Being—who? 10

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,

Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake. 15

No! At noonday, in the bustle of man's work-
time,

Greet the unseen with a cheer!
Bid him forward, breast and back as either
should be,
"Strive and thrive!" cry, "Speed—fight on,
fare ever
There as here!" (1889)

ELIZA ETH ARRETT BROWNING (1806-1861)

CONSOLATION

All are not taken; there are left behind
Living Belovéd, tender looks to bring
And make the daylight still a happy thing,
And tender voices, to make soft the wind.
But if it were not so—if I could find 5
No love in all the world for comforting,
Nor any path but hollowly did ring
Where "dust to dust" the love from life disjoined,

And if, before those sepulchres unmoving
I stood alone (as some forsaken lamb 10
Goes bleating up the moors in weary dearth), Crying, "Where are ye, O my loved and loving?"—

I know a Voice would sound, "Daughter, I AM.

Can I suffice for HEAVEN and not for earth?" (1838)

COWPER'S GRAVE

It is a place where poets crowned may feel
the heart's decaying,

It is a place where happy saints may weep
amid their praying.

Cowper's Grave William Cowper (1731-1800) is buried in Dereham Church, Norfolk, England Throughout his life he suffered from attacks of melancholy which at times led to actual insanity He often saw himself as one forsaken by God His poetry includes a number of hymns and passages that show a sympathetic interest in nature, in man, and in animals and birds He was especially fond of hares (see line 25), and kept some as pets.

Yet let the grief and humbleness, as low as silence, languish,
Earth surely now may give her calm to whom she gave her anguish.

O poets, from a maniac's tongue was poured the deathless singing! 5
O Christians, at your cross of hope, a hopeless hand was clinging!
O men, this man in brotherhood your weary paths beguiling,
Groaned only while he taught you peace, and died while ye were smiling!

And now, what time ye all may read through dimming tears his story,
How discord on the music fell and darkness
on the glory, 10
And how when, one by one, sweet sounds and wandering lights departed,
He wore no less a loving face because so broken-hearted,

He shall be strong to sanctify the poet's high vocation,
And bow the meekest Christian down in meeker adoration,
Nor ever shall he be, in praise, by wise or good forsaken, 15
Named softly as the household name of one whom God hath taken.

With quiet sadness and no gloom I learn to think upon him,
With meekness that is gratefulness to God
whose heaven hath won him,
Who suffered once the madness-cloud to his own love to blind him,
But gently led the blind along where breath and bird could find him, 20

And wrought within his shattered brain such quick poetic senses
As hills have language for, and stars, harmonious influences.
The pulse of dew upon the grass kept his within its number,
And silent shadows from the trees refreshed
him like a slumber

Wild timid hares were drawn from woods to share his home-caresses, 25
Uplooking to his human eyes with sylvan tendernesses;
The very world, by God's constraint, from falsehood's ways removing,
Its women and its men became, beside him,
true and loving.

And though, in blindness, he remained unconscious of that guiding,
And things provided came without the sweet sense of providing, 30
He testified this solemn truth, while frenzy desolated —
Nor man nor nature satisfies whom only God created.

Like a sick child that knoweth not his mother
while she blesses
And drops upon his burning brow the coolness of her kisses —
That turns his fevered eyes around — "My mother! where's my mother?" — 35
As if such tender words and deeds could come from any other! —

The fever gone, with leaps of heart he sees her bending o'er him,
Her face all pale from watchful love, the unweary love she bore him!
Thus woke the poet from the dream his life's long fever gave him, Beneath those deep pathetic Eyes which closed in death to save him 40

Thus? Oh, not thus! No type of earth can image that awaking, Wherein he scarcely heard the chant of seraphs, round him breaking,
Or felt the new immortal throb of soul from body parted,
But felt those eyes alone, and knew — "My Savior! not deserted!"

Deserted! Who hath dreamt that when the cross in darkness rested, 45
Upon the Victim's hidden face no love was manifested?
What frantic hands outstretched have e'er
the atoning drops averted?
What tears have washed them from the soul,
that one should be deserted?

Deserted! God could separate from his own essence rather,
And Adam's sins have swept between the righteous Son and Father 50
Yea, once, Immanuel's orphaned cry his universe hath shaken —
It went up single, echoless, "My God, I am forsaken!"

It went up from the Holy's lips amid his lost creation,

That, of the lost, no son should use those words of desolation!
That Earth's worst frenzies, marring hope,
should mar not hope's fruition, 55
And I, on Cowper's grave, should see his rapture in a vision. (1838)

THE CRY OF THE HUMAN

"There is no God," the foolish saith,
But none "There is no sorrow";
And nature oft the cry of faith
In bitter need will borrow.
Eyes, which the preacher could not school, 5
By wayside graves are raised,
And lips say, "God be pitiful,"
Who ne'er said, "God be praised." 10
Be pitiful, O God!

The tempest stretches from the steep 10
The shadow of its coming,
The beasts grow tame and near us creep,
As help were in the human,
Yet, while the cloud-wheels roll and grind,
We spirits tremble under — 15
The hills have echoes, but we find
No answer for the thunder.
Be pitiful, O God!

The battle hurtles on the plains,
Earth feels new scythes upon her; 20
We reap our brothers for the wains,
And call the harvest — honor:
Draw face to face, front line to line,
One image all inherit —
Then kill, curse on, by that same sign, 25
Clay — clay, and spirit — spirit.
Be pitiful, O God!

The plague runs festering through the town,
And never a bell is tolling,
And corpses, jostled 'neath the moon, 30
Nod to the dead-cart's rolling;
The young child calleth for the cup,
The strong man brings it weeping,
The mother from her babe looks up,
And shrieks away its sleeping 35
Be pitiful, O God!

The plague of gold strikes far and near,
And deep and strong it enters;
This purple chimar which we wear 40
Makes madder than the centaur's.

The Cry of the Human 1 "There is no God" From Psalms, 14 1 — "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" 21 wains, wagons 39 chimar, robe 40 centaur's Because Nessus the centaur made love to Hercules's wife, Dejanira, Hercules shot him with a poisoned arrow. In obedience to the dying advice of Nessus, Dejanira steeped her husband's shirt in the blood of the centaur as a love charm, but it poisoned Hercules, who, after venting his anger upon the messenger who brought the garment, gave himself up to die

Our thoughts grow blank, our words grow
strange,
We cheer the pale gold-diggers,
Each soul is worth so much on 'Change,
And marked, like sheep, with figures
Be pitiful, O God!

The curse of gold upon the land 46
The lack of bread enforces;
The rail-cars snort from strand to strand,
Like more of Death's White Horses.
The rich preach "rights" and "future days,"
And hear no angel scoffing; 51
The poor die mute, with starving gaze
On corn-ships in the offing.
Be pitiful, O God!

We meet together at the feast, 55
To private mirth betake us;
We stare down in the winecup, lest
Some vacant chair should shake us.
We name delight, and pledge it round —
"It shall be ours tomorrow!" 60
God's seraphs, do your voices sound
As sad, in naming sorrow?
Be pitiful, O God!

We sit together, with the skies,
The steadfast skies, above us, 65
We look into each other's eyes,
"And how long will you love us?"
The eyes grow dim with prophecy,
The voices, low and breathless —
"Till death us part!" — O words, to be 70
Our best, for love the deathless!
Be pitiful, O God!

We tremble by the harmless bed
Of one loved and departed; 75
Our tears drop on the lips that said
Last night, "Be stronger-hearted!"
O God — to clasp those fingers close,
And yet to feel so lonely!
To see a light upon such brows,
Which is the daylight only! 80
Be pitiful, O God!

The happy children come to us
And look up in our faces,

England in 1823, and for more than twenty years they were regarded as very dangerous 49 Death's White Horses In Scandinavian mythology the white horse is regarded as an omen of death. The fourth beast of the Apocalypse (Revelation, 6 8) was "a pale horse, and his name that sat on him of the members of the new capitalistic group, who protested against innovations and reforms, held out for the private exercise of property rights, and regarded the accumulation of wealth for the future as a guarantee of public welfare 53 corn-ships, wheat-ships Much suffering was occasioned among the lower classes because of the Corn Laws, which prohibited or greatly restricted the importation of grain. The laws were repealed in 1846

They ask us, "Was it thus, and thus,"
 When we were in their places?" 85
 We cannot speak — we see anew
 The hills we used to live in,
 And feel our mother's smile press through
 The kisses she is giving
 Be pitiful, O God!

We pray together at the kirk 91
 For mercy, mercy solely,
 Hands weary with the evil work,
 We lift them to the Holy
 The corpse is calm below our knee, 95
 Its spirit, bright before Thee,
 Between them, worse than either, we —
 Without the rest or glory
 Be pitiful, O God!

We leave the communing of men, 100
 The murmur of the passions,
 And live alone, to live again
 With endless generations,
 Are we so brave? The sea and sky
 In silence lift their mirrors, 105
 And, glassed therein, our spirits high
 Recoil from their own terrors
 Be pitiful, O God!

We sit on hills our childhood wist,
 Woods, hamlets, streams, beholding 110
 The sun strikes through the farthest mist
 The city's spire to golden;
 The city's golden spire it was,
 When hope and health were strongest,
 But now it is the churchyard grass 115
 We look upon the longest
 Be pitiful, O God!

And soon all vision waxeth dull,
 Men whisper, "He is dying",
 We cry no more, "Be pitiful!" 120
 We have no strength for crying —
 No strength, no need. Then, soul of mine,
 Look up and triumph rather!
 Lo, in the depth of God's Divine,
 The Son adjures the Father, 125
 BE PITIFUL, O GOD!

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN

Do ye hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
 Ere the sorrow comes with years?

109 wist, knew
The Cry of the Children. This poem was suggested by an official report on the employment of children in mines and factories. The poem is a product of the humanitarian movement of the period. In reply to a complaint against the rhythm of the poem, Mrs. Browning said, "The first stanza came into my head in a hurricane, and I was obliged to make the other stanzas like it."

They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
 And that cannot stop their tears
 The young lambs are bleating in the meadows,
 The young birds are chirping in the nest, 6
 The young fawns are playing with the shadows,
 The young flowers are blowing toward the
 west —
 But the young, young children, O my brothers,
 They are weeping bitterly! 10
 They are weeping in the playtime of the others,
 In the country of the free

Do you question the young children in the sorrow
 Why their tears are falling so?
 The old man may weep for his tomorrow 15
 Which is lost in Long Ago;
 The old tree is leafless in the forest,
 The old year is ending in the frost,
 The old wound, if stricken, is the sorest,
 The old hope is hardest to be lost. 20
 But the young, young children, O my brothers,
 Do you ask them why they stand Weeping sore before the bosoms of their mothers,
 In our happy Fatherland?

They look up with their pale and sunken faces, 25
 And their looks are sad to see,
 For the man's hoary anguish draws and presses
 Down the cheeks of infancy,
 "Your old earth," they say, "is very dreary,
 Our young feet," they say, "are very weak,
 Few paces have we taken, yet are weary — 31
 Our grave-rest is very far to seek Ask the aged why they weep, and not the children,
 For the outside earth is cold,
 And we young ones stand without, in our bewildering, 35
 And the graves are for the old.

"True," say the children, "it may happen
 That we die before our time.
 Little Alice died last year, her grave is shapen
 Like a snowball, in the rime. 40
 We looked into the pit prepared to take her;
 Was no room for any work in the close
 clay!
 From the sleep wherein she lieth none will wake her,
 Crying, 'Get up, little Alice! it is day' 44
 If you listen by that grave, in sun and shower,
 With your ear down, little Alice never cries,

Could we see her face, be sure we should not know her,
For the smile has time for growing in her
eyes;

And merry go her moments, lulled and stilled
in

The shroud by the kirk-chime. 50
It is good when it happens," say the children,
"That we die before our time."

Alas, alas, the children! they are seeking Death in life, as best to have;
They are binding up their hearts away from breaking, 55

With a cerement from the grave.
Go out, children, from the mine and from the city,

Sing out, children, as the little thrushes do,
Pluck your handfuls of the meadow-cowslips
pretty.

Laugh aloud, to feel your fingers let them
through! 60

But they answer, "Are your cowslips of the meadows

Like our weeds anear the mine?
Leave us quiet in the dark of the coal-
shadows,

From your pleasures fair and fine!

"For, oh," say the children, "we are weary,
And we cannot run or leap; 66

If we cared for any meadows, it were merely

To drop down in them and sleep.
Our knees tremble sorely in the stooping,

We fall upon our faces, trying to go; 70
And, underneath our heavy eyelids drooping
The reddest flower would look as pale as snow.

For, all day, we drag our burden tiring
Through the coal-dark, underground;

Or, all day, we drive the wheels of iron 75
In the factories, round and round.

"For all day the wheels are droning, turning;
Their wind comes in our faces,

Till our hearts turn, our heads with pulses burning,

And the walls turn in their places 80
Turns the sky in the high window, blank and reeling,

Turns the long light that drops adown the
wall,

Turn the black flies that crawl along the ceiling;

All are turning, all the day — and we with
all.

And all day the iron wheels are droning, 85
And sometimes we could pray,

'O ye wheels' (breaking out in a mad moaning),
'Stop! be silent for today!'"

Aye, be silent! Let them hear each other breathing

For a moment, mouth to mouth! 90
Let them touch each other's hands, in a fresh wreathing

Of their tender human youth!
Let them feel that this cold metallic motion
Is not all the life God fashions or reveals,
Let them prove their living souls against the notion 95

That they live in you, or under you, O wheels!

Still, all day, the iron wheels go onward,
Grinding life down from its mark;

And the children's souls, which God is calling sunward,

Spin on blindly in the dark 100

Now tell the poor young children, O my
brothers,

To look up to Him and pray;
So the blessed One who blesseth all the others,
Will bless them another day.

They answer, "Who is God that He should hear us, 105

While the rushing of the iron wheels is stirred?

When we sob aloud, the human creatures near us

Pass by, hearing not, or answer not a word.
And we hear not (for the wheels in their resounding)

Strangers speaking at the door; 110
Is it likely God, with angels singing round
Him,

Hears our weeping any more?

"Two words, indeed, of praying we remember,
And at midnight's hour of harm,

'Our Father,' looking upward in the chamber,
We say softly for a charm. 116

We know no other words except 'Our Father,'
And we think that, in some pause of angels'
song,

God may pluck them with the silence sweet to gather,

And hold both within his right hand, which is strong. 120

'Our Father!' If He heard us, He would surely

(For they call Him good and mild) Answer, smiling down the steep world very purely,

'Come and rest with me, my child.'

"But, no!" say the children, weeping faster,
"He is speechless as a stone, 126

And they tell us, of His image is the master
 Who commands us to work on
 Go to!" say the children — "up in Heaven, Dark, wheel-like, turning clouds are all we
 find. 130
 Do not mock us; grief has made us unbelieving.
 We look up for God, but tears have made us blind"
 Do you hear the children weeping and dis-proving,
 O my brothers, what ye preach?
 For God's possible is taught by his world's loving, 135
 And the children doubt of each

And well may the children weep before you!
 They are weary ere they run,
 They have never seen the sunshine, nor the glory
 Which is brighter than the sun 140
 They know the grief of man, without its wisdom;
 They sink in man's despair, without its
 calm —
 Are slaves, without the liberty in Christdom,
 Are martyrs, by the pang without the palm,
 Are worn as if with age, yet unretrievingly 145
 The harvest of its memories cannot reap —
 Are orphans of the earthly love and heavenly
 Let them weep! let them weep!

They look up with their pale and sunken
 faces,
 And their look is dread to see, 150
 For they mind you of their angels in high places,
 With eyes turned on Deity
 "How long," they say, "how long, O cruel
 nation,
 Will you stand, to move the world, on a child's heart —
 Stifle down with a mailed heel its palpitation,
 And tread onward to your throne amid the mart? 156
 Our blood splashes upward, O gold-heaper,
 And your purple shows your path!
 But the child's sob in the silence curses deeper Than the strong man in his wrath" 160
 (1843)

GRIEF

I tell you, hopeless grief is passionless,
 That only men incredulous of despair,
 Half-taught in anguish, through the midnight
 air

Beat upward to God's throne in loud access
 Of shrieking and reproach. Full desertness,
 In souls as countries, leith silent-bare 6
 Under the blanching, vertical eye-glare
 Of the absolute Heavens. Deep-hearted man, express
 Grief for thy Dead in silence like to death —
 Most like a monumental statue set 10
 In everlasting watch and moveless woe
 Till itself crumble to the dust beneath.
 Touch it, the marble eyelids are not wet
 If it could weep, it could arise and go (1844)

CHEERFULNESS TAUGHT BY REASON

I think we are too ready with complaint
 In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope
 Indeed beyond the zenith and the slope
 Of yon gray blank of sky, we might grow faint
 To muse upon eternity's constraint 5
 Round our aspirant souls, but since the scope
 Must widen early, is it well to droop,
 For a few days consumed in loss and taint?
 O pusillanimous Heart, be comforted
 And, like a cheerful traveler, take the road, 10
 Singing beside the hedge What if the bread
 Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
 To meet the flints? At least it may be said
 "Because the way is short, I thank thee,
 God" (1844)

THE DEAD PAN

Gods of Hellas, gods of Hellas,
 Can ye listen in your silence?
 Can your mystic voices tell us
 Where ye hide? In floating islands,
 With a wind that evermore 5
 Keeps you out of sight of shore?
 Pan, Pan is dead.

In what revels are ye sunken
 In old Æthiopia?
 Have the Pygmies made you drunken, 10
 Bathing in mandragora
 Your divine pale lips that shiver
 Like the lotus in the river?
 Pan, Pan is dead

The Dead Pan Pan was the Greek god of pastures, flocks, and forests. He was part man and part goat. He was fond of music and invented the shepherd's flute (See A Musical Instrument, page 376) Mrs Browning states that this poem was "excited by Schiller's Götter Griechenlands and partly founded on a well-known tradition mentioned in a treatise of Plutarch (De Oraculorum Defectu), according to which, at the hour of the Savior's agony, a cry of 'Great Pan is dead!' swept across the waves in the hearing of certain mariners — and the oracles ceased" Compare Milton's Lycidas

1 Hellas, ancient Greece 9. Æthiopia, a country in northern Africa 10 Pygmies, according to Greek legend, a race of dwarfs that lived on the banks of the Upper Nile 11 mandragora, a narcotic herb, the subject of many superstitions 13 lotus, the Egyptian water lily.

Do ye sit there still in slumber, In gigantic Alpine rows? The black poppies out of number Nodding, dripping from your brows To the red lees of your wine, And so kept alive and fine? Pan, Pan is dead.	15	And your silver clash of wings! Very pale ye seem to rise, Ghosts of Grecian deities, Now Pan is dead!	60
Or lie crushed your stagnant courses Where the silver spheres roll on, Stung to life by centric forces Thrown like rays out from the sun? — While the smoke of your old altars Is the shroud that round you welters? Great Pan is dead	20	Jove, that right hand is unloaded Whence the thunder did prevail, While in idiocy of godhead Thou art scaring the stars pale! And thine eagle, blind and old, Roughs his feathers in the cold. Pan, Pan is dead.	65
"Gods of Hellas, gods of Hellas," Said the old Hellenic tongue — Said the hero-oaths, as well as Poets' songs the sweetest sung — Have ye grown deaf in a day? Can ye speak not yea or nay, Since Pan is dead?	25	Where, O Juno, is the glory Of thy regal look and tread? Will they lay, for evermore, thee On thy dim, strait, golden bed? Will thy queendom all be hid Meekly under either lid? Pan, Pan is dead	70
Do ye leave your rivers flowing All alone, O Naiades, While your drenchéd locks dry slow in This cold feeble sun and breeze? Not a word the Naiads say, Though the rivers run for aye; For Pan is dead	30	Ha, Apollo! floats his golden Hair all mist-like where he stands, While the Muses hang enfolding Knee and foot with faint wild hands? 'Neath the clanging of thy bow, Niobe looked lost as thou! Pan, Pan is dead	75
From the gloaming of the oak-wood, O ye Dryads, could ye flee? At the rushing thunderstroke, would No sob tremble through the tree? Not a word the Dryads say, Though the forests wave for aye; For Pan is dead	35	Shall the casque with its brown iron Pallas' broad blue eyes eclipse, And no hero take inspiring From the god-Greek of her lips? 'Neath her olive dost thou sit, Mars the mighty, cursing it? Pan, Pan is dead.	80
Have ye left the mountain places, Oreads wild, for other tryst? Shall we see no sudden faces Strike a glory through the mist? Not a sound the silence thrills Of the everlasting hills; Pan, Pan is dead.	40	Bacchus, Bacchus! on the panther He swoons, bound with his own vines, And his Mænads slowly saunter, Head aside, among the pines, While they murmur dreamingly, "Evohe! — ah — evohel — Ah, Pan is dead!"	85
O twelve gods of Plato's vision, Crowned to starry wanderings, With your chariots in procession	45	Neptune lies beside the trident, Dull and senseless as a stone, And old Pluto deaf and silent Is cast out into the sun;	90

22 *corse*s, bodies 23 silver spheres. According to the Ptolemaic system of astrology, nine spheres, containing the sun, the moon, and the stars, revolved around the earth, which was stationary. As they revolved, the spheres produced music. 24. centric, central 37 Naiades, water nymphs 44. Dryads, wood nymphs. 51 Oreads, mountain nymphs 57 Plato's vision, etc. a reference to Plato's Phædrus, Sec. 247 (Jowett's translation). "Zeus, the mighty lord, holding the reins of a winged chariot, leads the way in heaven, ordering all and caring for all, and there follows him the heavenly array of gods and demi-gods, divided into eleven bands, for only Hestia is left at home in the house of heaven, but the rest of the twelve greater deities march in their appointed order."

64 Jove, Zeus, the chief god of the Greeks. The eagle was his attendant bird 71 Juno, queen of the gods 78 Apollo, the god of youth and beauty, of poetry and music. His attributes were the bow and the lyre. 80 Muses, the nine daughters of Jove, goddesses of poetry, art, music, etc. 83 Niobe. See note on line 102, page 226 86 Pallas, Athene, or Minerva, goddess of wisdom and war. The olive tree was sacred to her 90 Mars, god of war 92 Bacchus, god of wine. His forehead was crowned with vine-leaves or ivy. He frequently rode upon a panther or a tiger and was attended by the Mænads (l. 94), women who, as they danced and sang, waved a staff entwined with ivy and surmounted by a pine cone 97 Evohe, the cry of the devotees of Bacchus, usually a shout of joy 99 Neptune, god of the sea. He carried a trident, a three-pronged spear 101 Pluto, god of the lower world

Ceres smileth stern thereat, "We all now are desolate — Now Pan is dead " 105	Not a grave, to show thereby 145 Here these gray old gods do lie Pan, Pan is dead.
Aphrodite! dead and driven As thy native foam thou art; With the cestus long done heaving On the white calm of thine heart! Al Adonis! at that shriek 110 Not a tear runs down her cheek — Pan, Pan is dead.	Even that Greece who took your wages Calls the obolus outworn; And the hoarse, deep-throated ages 150 Laugh your godships unto scorn; And the poets do disclaim you, Or grow colder if they name you — And Pan is dead.
And the Loves, we used to know from One another, huddled lie, Frore as taken in a snow-storm, 115 Close beside her tenderly; As if each had weakly tried Once to kiss her as he died. Pan, Pan is dead.	Gods bereavéd, gods belated, 155 With your purples rent asunder! Gods discrowned and desecrated, Disinherited of thunder! Now, the goats may climb and crop The soft grass on Ida's top — 160 Now Pan is dead.
What, and Hermes? Time enthralleth 120 All thy cunning, Hermes, thus, And the ivy blindly crawleth Round thy brave caduceus? Hast thou no new message for us, Full of thunder and Jove-glories? 125 Nay, Pan is dead	Calm, of old, the bark went onward, When a cry more loud than wind Rose up, deepened, and swept sunward From the piléd Dark behind; 165 And the sun shrank and grew pale, Breathed against by the great wail — "Pan, Pan is dead "
Crownéd Cybele's great turret Rocks and crumbles on her head; Roar the lions of her chariot Toward the wilderness, unfed; 130 Scornful children are not mute — "Mother, mother, walk afoot, Since Pan is dead!"	And the rowers from the benches Fell, each shuddering on his face, 170 While departing Influences Struck a cold back through the place, And the shadow of the ship Reeled along the passive deep — "Pan, Pan is dead " 175
In the fiery-hearted center Of the solemn universe, 135 Ancient Vesta — who could enter To consume thee with this curse? Drop thy gray chin on thy knee, O thou palsied Mystery! For Pan is dead 140	And that dismal cry rose slowly And sank slowly through the air, Full of spirit's melancholy And cternity's despair! And they heard the words it said — 180 PAN IS DEAD — GREAT PAN IS DEAD — PAN, PAN IS DEAD.
Gods, we vainly do adjure you — Ye return nor voice nor sign! Not a votary could secure you Even a grave for your Divine;	'Twas the hour when One in Sion Hung for love's sake on a cross, When his brow was chill with dying 185 And his soul was faint with loss; When his priestly blood dropped downward, And his kingly eyes looked throneward — Then, Pan was dead.

103. Ceres, goddess of the harvest 106 Aphrodite, Venus, goddess of love and beauty She was worshiped also as goddess of the sea, according to one tradition she was born of the foam of the sea Her girdle, or cestus (l 108), had the power of exciting the wearer to love. 110. Al Adonis, a cry of woe—alas, Adonis Adonis was the beautiful youth loved by Venus 115 frore, frozen 120 Hermes, Mercury, the messenger of the gods He carried a wand, the caduceus (l 123), entwined with ivy. 127. Cybele, Rhea, the mother of the gods She wore a turreted crown and rode in a chariot drawn by lions 136 Vesta, the goddess of the hearth She was the eldest sister of Jupiter and mysteriously elected to remain single In the center of her temple at Rome a fire was kept burning by her six virgin priestesses

By the love, He stood alone in, 190
His sole Godhead rose complete,
And the false gods fell down moaning

149 obolus, a small Greek coin 160 Ida's top, Mt. Ida, in Crete, the birthplace of Zeus 162-181 Calm . . . dead. These lines refer to Plutarch's story (see introductory note) 165 piléd Dark, the piled up, or heavy, darkness at the time of the Crucifixion

Each from off his golden seat;
All the false gods with a cry
Rendered up their deity — 195
Pan, Pan was dead.

Wailing wide across the islands,
They rent, vest-like, their Divine;
And a darkness and a silence
Quenched the light of every shrine; 200
And Dodona's oak swang lonely
Henceforth, to the tempest only;
Pan, Pan was dead.

Pythia staggered, feeling o'er her
Her lost god's forsaking look; 205
Straight her eyeballs filmed with horror,
And her crispy fillets shook,
And her lips gasped, through their foam,
For a word that did not come
Pan, Pan was dead. 210

O ye vain false gods of Hellas,
Ye are silent evermore!
And I dash down this old chalice
Whence libations ran of yore.
See, the wine crawls in the dust 215
Wormlike — as your glories must,
Since Pan is dead.

Get to dust, as common mortals,
By a common doom and track!
Let no Schiller from the portals
Of that Hades call you back, 220
Or instruct us to weep all
At your antique funeral
Pan, Pan is dead.

By your beauty, which confesses 225
Some chief Beauty conquering you —
By our grand heroic guesses
Through your falsehood at the True —
We will weep not! earth shall roll
Heir to each god's aureole — 230
And Pan is dead.

Earth outgrows the mythic fancies
Sung beside her in her youth,
And those debonair romances
Sound but dull beside the truth. 235
Phœbus' chariot-course is run;
Look up, poets, to the sun!
Pan, Pan is dead

201 Dodona, the seat of the oracle of Zeus in Epirus. The responses were given by the rustling of the leaves of the sacred oak tree. 204 Pythia, the priestess of the oracle of Apollo at Delphi. 207 crispy fillets, curly hair. 220 Schiller. In his poem The Gods of Greece Schiller suggests that with the death of the gods poetry and art and beauty perished. Mrs. Browning says, "It is in all veneration to the memory of the deathless Schiller that I oppose a doctrine still more dishonoring to poetry than to Christianity." 230 aureole, a kind of luminous halo. 236. Phœbus' chariot-course. Phœbus Apollo, the god of the sun, drove westerly all day in a flaming chariot.

Christ hath sent us down the angels;
And the whole earth and the skies 240
Are illumed by altar-candles
Lit for blessed mysteries;
And a Priest's hand through creation
Waveth calm and consecration.
And Pan is dead. 245

Truth is fair; should we forgo it?
Can we sigh right for a wrong?
God Himself is the best Poet,
And the Real is his song.
Sing his truth out fair and full, 250
And secure his beautiful!
Let Pan be dead!

Truth is large; our aspiration
Scarce embraces half we be. 255
Shame, to stand in his creation
And doubt truth's sufficiency! —
To think God's song unexcelling
The poor tales of our own telling —
When Pan is dead!

What is true and just and honest, 260
What is lovely, what is pure,
All of praise that hath admonisht,
All of virtue — shall endure;
These are themes for poets' uses,
Stirring nobler than the Muses, 265
Ere Pan was dead.

O brave poets, keep back nothing,
Nor mix falsehood with the whole!
Look up Godward; speak the truth in Worthy song from earnest soul; 270
Hold, in high poetic duty,
Truest Truth the fairest Beauty!
Pan, Pan is dead

SONNETS FROM THE PORTUGUESE

I

I thought once how Theocritus had sung
Of the sweet years, the dear and wished-for
years,
Who each one in a gracious hand appears
To bear a gift for mortals, old or young;
And, as I mused it in his antique tongue, 5

260-263 What is true... virtue Based on Philippians, 4:8—"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." 272 Truth... Beauty. Cf. Keats's Ode on a Grecian Urn, 49 "Beauty is truth, truth beauty."

Sonnets from the Portuguese. See Critical Notes.
Sonnet I. 1 Theocritus, a famous Greek pastoral poet of the third century B.C. See Idylls, 15, 1044 ff.

I saw, in gradual vision through my tears,
The sweet, sad years, the melancholy years,
Those of my own life, who by turns had flung
A shadow across me. Straightway I was
'ware,

So weeping, how a mystic Shape did move 10 Behind me, and drew me backward by the
hair;

And a voice said in mastery, while I strove —
"Guess now who holds thee?" — "Death,"
I said. But, there,
The silver answer rang — "Not Death, but Love."

2

But only three in all God's universe
Have heard this word thou hast said —
Himself, beside

Thee speaking, and me listening! and replied
One of us . . . that was God . . . and laid the curse

So darkly on my eyelids, as to amerce 5
My sight from seeing thee — that if I had
died,

The deathweights, placed there, would have signified

Less absolute exclusion "Nay" is worse
From God than from all others, O my friend!
Men could not part us with their worldly jars, 10

Nor the seas change us, nor the tempests
bend;

Our hands would touch for all the mountain-bars

And, heaven being rolled between us at the
end,

We should but vow the faster for the stars.

3

Unlike are we, unlike, O princely Heart!
Unlike our uses and our destinies.
Our ministering two angels look surprise
On one another, as they strike athwart
Their wings in passing. Thou, bethink thee, 5
art

A guest for queens to social pageantries,
With gages from a hundred brighter eyes
Than tears even can make mine, to play thy
part

Of chief musician What hast thou to do
With looking from the lattice-lights at me, 10
A poor, tired, wandering singer, singing
through

The dark, and leaning up a cypress tree?

Sonnet 1 13 Death. Miss Barrett had been an invalid for years

Sonnet 2 5 amerce, deprive of, as by way of punishment
7 deathweights, small weights placed upon the eyelids of a dead person to hold them shut

Sonnet 3. 7 gages, pledges 12 cypress tree, a symbol of death (See note on Sonnet 1, line 13)

The chrism is on thine head — on mine, the dew —

And Death must dig the level where these agree

4

Thou hast thy calling to some palace-floor,
Most gracious singer of high poems! where
The dancers will break footing, from the care
Of watching up thy pregnant lips for more
And dost thou lift this house's latch too poor
For hand of thine? and canst thou think and
bear 6

To let thy music drop here unaware
In folds of golden fullness at my door?
Look up and see the casement broken in,
The bats and owlets builders in the roof! 10
My cricket chirps against thy mandolin.
Hush, call no echo up in further proof
Of desolation! there's a voice within
That weeps . . . as thou must sing . . . alone, aloof

5

I lift my heavy heart up solemnly,
As once Electra her sepulchral urn,
And, looking in thine eyes, I overturn
The ashes at thy feet. Behold and see
What a great heap of grief lay hid in me, 5
And how the red wild sparkles dimly burn
Through the ashen grayness. If thy foot in scorn

Could tread them out to darkness utterly,
It might be well perhaps But if instead
Thou wait beside me for the wind to blow 10
The gray dust up . . . those laurels on thine
head,

O my Belovéd, will not shield thee so,
That none of all the fires shall scorch and shred

The hair beneath. Stand farther off then! go

6

Go from me Yet I feel that I shall stand
Henceforward in thy shadow. Nevermore
Alone upon the threshold of my door
Of individual life, I shall command
The uses of my soul, nor lift my hand 5
Serenely in the sunshine as before,
Without the sense of that which I forbore —
Thy touch upon the palm The widest land Doom takes to part us, leaves thy heart in
mine

Sonnet 3 13 chrism, consecrated oil, used in various anointing ceremonies

Sonnet 5 2 Electra, daughter of Agamemnon, king of Mycenæ With her brother Orestes, she avenged the murder of her father As a part of the plan Orestes feigned death, and Electra was given possession of an urn supposed to contain his ashes When she saw him alive, she expressed a sudden revulsion of feeling 11. laurels, crowns of laurel, signifying poetic fame

With pulses that beat double. What I do 10
And what I dream include thee, as the wine
Must taste of its own grapes And when I sue
God for myself, He hears that name of thine,
And sees within my eyes the tears of two.

7

The face of all the world is changed, I think,
Since first I heard the footsteps of thy soul
Move still, oh, still, beside me, as they stole Betwixt me and the dreadful outer brink
Of obvious death, where I, who thought to sink, 5
Was caught up into love, and taught the
whole
Of life in a new rhythm. The cup of dole
God gave for baptism, I am faint to drink,
And praise its sweetness, Sweet, with thee
anear.
The names of country, heaven, are changed
away 10
For where thou art or shalt be, there or here;
And this . . . this lute and song . . . loved yesterday
(The singing angels know), are only dear Because thy name moves right in what they say.

8

What can I give thee back, O liberal
And princely giver, who hast brought the
gold
And purple of thine heart, unstained, untold,
And laid them on the outside of the wall
For such as I to take or leave withal, 5
In unexpected largesse? Am I cold,
Ungrateful, that for these most manifold
High gifts, I render nothing back at all?
Not so; not cold — but very poor instead.
Ask God, who knows. For frequent tears have run 10
The colors from my life, and left so dead
And pale a stuff, it were not fitly done
To give the same as pillow to thy head.
Go farther! let it serve to trample on.

9

Can it be right to give what I can give?
To let thee sit beneath the fall of tears
As salt as mine, and hear the sighing years
Re-sighing on my lips renunciative
Through those infrequent smiles which fail to live 5
For all thy adjurations? O my fears,
That this can scarce be right! We are not
peers,
So to be lovers; and I own, and grieve,
That givers of such gifts as mine are, must
Be counted with the ungenerous. Out, alas!
I will not soil thy purple with my dust, 11

Nor breathe my poison on thy Venice-glass,
Nor give thee any love — which were unjust.
Belovéd, I only love thee! let it pass.

10

Yet, love, mere love, is beautiful indeed
And worthy of acceptance Fire is bright,
Let temple burn, or flax; an equal light
Leaps in the flame from cedar-plank or weed
And love is fire. And when I say at need, 5
I love thee . . . mark! . . . I love thee — in thy sight
I stand transfigured, glorified aright,
With conscience of the new rays that proceed
Out of my face toward thine. There's nothing
low
In love, when love the lowest; meanest creatures 10
Who love God, God accepts while loving so
And what I feel, across the inferior features
Of what I am, doth flash itself, and show
How that great work of Love enhances Nature's.

11

And therefore if to love can be desert,
I am not all unworthy. Cheeks as pale
As these you see, and trembling knees that fail
To bear the burden of a heavy heart —
This weary minstrel-life that once was girt 5
To climb Aornus, and can scarce avail
To pipe now 'gainst the valley nightingale
A melancholy music — why advert
To these things? O Belovéd, it is plain
I am not of thy worth nor for thy place! 10
And yet, because I love thee, I obtain
From that same love this vindicating grace,
To live on still in love, and yet in vain —
To bless thee, yet renounce thee to thy face.

12

Indeed this very love which is my boast,
And which, when rising up from breast to
brow,
Doth crown me with a ruby large enow
To draw men's eyes and prove the inner cost —
This love even, all my worth, to the utter-
most, 5
I should not love withal, unless that thou
Hadst set me an example, shown me how,
When first thine earnest eyes with mine were
crossed,
And love called love. And thus, I cannot
speak
Of love even, as a good thing of my own. 10

Sonnet 9 12 Venice-glass There was a tradition that poison would break this especially thin and delicate ware.

Sonnet 11. 6. Aornus, a mountain in India.

Thy soul hath snatched up mine all faint and
weak,
And placed it by thee on a golden throne —
And that I love (O soul, we must be meek!)
Is by thee only, whom I love alone

13

And wilt thou have me fashion into speech
The love I bear thee, finding words enough,
And hold the torch out, while the winds are rough,

Between our faces, to cast light on each? —
I drop it at thy feet. I cannot teach 5
My hand to hold my spirit so far off
From myself — me — that I should bring thee proof

In words, of love hid in me out of reach
Nay, let the silence of my womanhood
Commend my woman-love to thy belief — 10
Seeing that I stand unwon, however wooed,
And rend the garment of my life, in brief,
By a most dauntless, voiceless fortitude,
Lest one touch of this heart convey its grief

14

If thou must love me, let it be for naught
Except for love's sake only Do not say
"I love her for her smile — her look — her
way

Of speaking gently — for a trick of thought
That falls in well with mine, and certes
brought 5

A sense of pleasant ease on such a day" —
For these things in themselves, Belovéd, may Be changed, or change for thee — and love,
so wrought,

May be unwrought so Neither love me for Thine own dear pity's wiping my cheeks
dry — 10

A creature might forget to weep, who bore
Thy comfort long, and lose thy love thereby!
But love me for love's sake, that evermore
Thou mayst love on, through love's eternity.

15

Accuse me not, beseech thee, that I wear
Too calm and sad a face in front of thine,
For we two look two ways, and cannot shine
With the same sunlight on our brow and hair
On me thou lookest with no doubting care, 5
As on a bee shut in a crystalline;
Since sorrow hath shut me safe in love's
divine,

And to spread wing and fly in the outer air
Were most impossible failure, if I strove
To fail so. But I look on thee — on thee —
Beholding, besides love, the end of love, 11
Hearing oblivion beyond memory,
As one who sits and gazes from above,
Over the rivers to the bitter sea.

16

And yet, because thou overcomest so,
Because thou art more noble and like a king,
Thou canst prevail against my fears and fling
Thy purple round me, till my heart shall
grow

Too close against thine heart henceforth to
know 5

How it shook when alone Why, conquer-
ing

May prove as lordly and complete a thing
In lifting upward, as in crushing low!

And as a vanquished soldier yields his sword
To one who lifts him from the bloody earth,
Even so, Belovéd, I at last record, 11

Here ends my strife. If thou invite me forth,
I rise above abasement at the word
Make thy love larger to enlarge my worth

17

My poet, thou canst touch on all the notes
God set between his After and Before,
And strike up and strike off the general roar
Of the rushing worlds a melody that floats

In the serene air purely. Antidotes 5

Of medicated music, answering for Mankind's forlornest uses, thou canst pour From thence into their ears. God's will devotes

Thine to such ends, and mine to wait on
thine

How, Dearest, wilt thou have me for most
use? 10

A hope, to sing by gladly? or a fine
Sad memory, with thy songs to interfuse?
A shade, in which to sing — of palm or pine?
A grave, on which to rest from singing?

18

I never gave a lock of hair away
To a man, Dearest, except this to thee,
Which now upon my fingers thoughtfully,
I ring out to the full brown length and say
"Take it" My day of youth went yester-
day,

My hair no longer bounds to my foot's glee, 6
Nor plant I it from rose or myrtle-tree,
As girls do, any more It only may Now shade on two pale cheeks the mark of
tears,

Taught drooping from the head that hangs aside 10

Through sorrow's trick. I thought the funeral-shears

Would take this first, but Love is justified —
Take it thou, finding pure, from all those
years,

The kiss my mother left here when she died.

19

The soul's Rialto hath its merchandise;
 I barter curl for curl upon that mart,
 And from my poet's forehead to my heart
 Receive this lock which outweighs argosies —
 As purple black, as erst to Pindar's eyes 5
 The dim purpureal tresses gloomed athwart
 The nine white Muse-brows For this counter-terpart, . . .

The bay-crown's shade, Belovéd, I surmise,
 Still lingers on thy curl, it is so black!
 Thus, with a fillet of smooth-kissing breath,
 I tie the shadows safe from gliding back, 11
 And lay the gift where nothing hindereth;
 Here on my heart, as on thy brow, to lack
 No natural heat till mine grows cold in death.

20

Belovéd, my Belovéd, when I think
 That thou wast in the world a year ago,
 What time I sat alone here in the snow
 And saw no footprint, heard the silence sink
 No moment at thy voice, but, link by link, 5
 Went counting all my chains as if that so
 They never could fall off at any blow Struck by thy possible hand — why, thus I drink

Of life's great cup of wonder! Wonderful,
 Never to feel thee thrill the day or night 10
 With personal act or speech — nor ever cull
 Some prescience of thee with the blossoms
 white

Thou sawest growing! Atheists are as dull,
 Who cannot guess God's presence out of sight

21

Say over again, and yet once over again,
 That thou dost love me. Though the word repeated
 Should seem "a cuckoo-song," as thou dost treat it,

Remember, never to the hill or plain,
 Valley and wood, without her cuckoo-strain
 Comes the fresh Spring in all her green completed 6

Belovéd, I, amid the darkness greeted
 By a doubtful spirit-voice, in that doubt's
 pain

Cry, "Speak once more — thou lovest!" Who can fear

Too many stars, though each in heaven shall roll, 10

Too many flowers, though each shall crown the year?

Sonnet 19 1 Rialto, a bridge over the Grand Canal in Venice It is lined with shops 5 Pindar, a famous Greek lyric poet (518-446?, B.C.) 7 nine . . . Muse-brows, the brows of the nine Muses They were daughters of Jove and goddesses of poetry, art, music, etc 8 bay-crown, a wreath of laurel bestowed upon a poet. 10 fillet, a white and red band worn in ancient times upon the forehead as a sign of religious consecration and of inviolability.

Say thou dost love me, love me, love me — toll

The silver iterance! — only minding, Dear,
 To love me also in silence with thy soul

22

When our two souls stand up erect and strong,
 Face to face, silent, drawing nigh and nigher,
 Until the lengthening wings break into fire
 At either curv'd point — what bitter wrong
 Can the earth do to us, that we should not
 long 5

Be here contented? Think. In mounting higher,

The angels would press on us and aspire
 To drop some golden orb of perfect song
 Into our deep, dear silence. Let us stay
 Rather on earth, Belovéd — where the unfit
 Contrarious moods of men recoil away 11
 And isolate pure spirits, and permit
 A place to stand and love in for a day,
 With darkness and the death-hour rounding it.

23

Is it indeed so? If I lay here dead,
 Wouldst thou miss any life in losing mine?
 And would the sun for thee more coldly shine Because of grave-damps falling round my
 head?

I marveled, my Belovéd, when I read 5
 Thy thought so in the letter I am thine —
 But . . . so much to thee? Can I pour thy
 wine

While my hands tremble? Then my soul, instead

Of dreams of death, resumes life's lower range

Then, love me, Love! look on me — breathe on me! 10

As brighter ladies do not count it strange,
 For love, to give up acres and degree,
 I yield the grave for thy sake, and exchange
 My near sweet view of Heaven, for earth with thee!

24

Let the world's sharpness, like a clasp-
 ing knife,

Shut in upon itself and do no harm

In this close hand of Love, now soft and
 warm,

And let us hear no sound of human strife
 After the click of the shutting. Life to life —

I lean upon thee, Dear, without alarm, 6
 And feel as safe as guarded by a charm

Against the stab of worldlings, who if rife
 Are weak to injure. Very whitely still

The lilies of our lives may reassure 10
 Their blossoms from their roots, accessible

Alone to heavenly dews that drop not fewer,
Growing straight, out of man's reach, on the hill.

God only, who made us rich, can make us
poor.

25

A heavy heart, Belovéd, have I borne
From year to year until I saw thy face,
And sorrow after sorrow took the place
Of all those natural joys as lightly worn
As the stringed pearls, each lifted in its turn
By a beating heart at dance-time. Hopes apace

Were changed to long despairs, till God's own
grace

Could scarcely lift above the world forlorn
My heavy heart Then thou didst bid me
bring

And let it drop adown thy calmly great 10
Deep being! Fast it sinketh, as a thing
Which its own nature doth precipitate,
While thine doth close above it, mediating Betwixt the stars and the unaccomplished fate.

26

I lived with visions for my company
Instead of men and women, years ago,
And found them gentle mates, nor thought to know

A sweeter music than they played to me
But soon their trailing purple was not free 5
Of this world's dust, their lutes did silent
grow,

And I myself grew faint and blind below
Their vanishing eyes Then thou didst come
— to be,

Belovéd, what they seemed Their shining fronts,

Their songs, their splendors (better, yet the
same, 10

As river-water hallowed into fountains),
Met in thee, and from out thee overcame
My soul with satisfaction of all wants.
Because God's gifts put man's best dreams to shame

27

My own Belovéd, who hast lifted me
From this drear flat of earth where I was thrown,

And, in betwixt the languid ringlets, blown
A life-breath, till the forehead hopefully Shines out again, as all the angels see, 5
Before thy saving kiss! My own, my own,
Who camest to me when the world was gone,
And I who looked for only God, found
thee!

I find thee, I am safe, and strong, and glad

As one who stands in dewless asphodel 10
Looks backward on the tedious time he had
In the upper life — so I, with bosom-swell, Make witness, here, between the good and bad,
That Love, as strong as Death, retrieves as
well.

28

My letters! all dead paper, mute and white!
And yet they seem alive and quivering Against my tremulous hands which loose the string

And let them drop down on my knee tonight
This said — he wished to have me in his sight 5

Once, as a friend, this fixed a day in spring
To come and touch my hand . . . a simple
thing,

Yet I wept for it! — this, . . . the paper's
light . . .

Said, Dear, I love thee; and I sank and quailed
As if God's future thundered on my past 10
This said, I am thine — and so its ink has paled

With lying at my heart that beat too fast
And this . . . O Love, thy words have ill availed

If, what this said, I dared repeat at last!

29

I think of thee! — my thoughts do twine and bud

About thee, as wild vines, about a tree,
Put out broad leaves, and soon there's naught to see

Except the straggling green which hides the
wood

Yet, O my palm-tree, be it understood 5
I will not have my thoughts instead of thee
Who art dearer, better! Rather, instantly

Renew thy presence, as a strong tree should,
Rustle thy boughs and set thy trunk all bare,
And let these bands of greenery which in-sphere thee 10

Drop heavily down — burst, shattered, everywhere!

Because, in this deep joy to see and hear thee
And breathe within thy shadow a new air,
I do not think of thee — I am too near thee

30

I see thine image through my tears tonight,
And yet today I saw thee smiling How Refer the cause? — Belovéd, is it thou
Or I, who makes me sad? The acolyte
Amid the chanted joy and thankful rite 5

Sonnet 27 10 asphodel, a lily-like flower supposed by the Greeks to grow in Hades

Sonnet 30 4 acolyte. See note on line 53, page 168

May so fall flat, with pale insensate brow,
On the altar-stair I hear thy voice and vow, Perplexed, uncertain, since thou art out of
sight,

As he, in his swooning ears, the choir's Amen
Belovéd, dost thou love? or did I see all 10
The glory as I dreamed, and fainted when Too vehement light dilated my ideal,
For my soul's eyes? Will that light come
again,
As now these tears come — falling hot and real?

31

Thou comest! all is said without a word.
I sit beneath thy looks, as children do
In the noon-sun, with souls that tremble
through

Their happy eyelids from an unaverred
Yet prodigal inward joy Behold, I erred 5
In that last doubt! and yet I cannot rue
The sin most, but the occasion — that we two
Should for a moment stand unministered
By a mutual presence Ah, keep near and
close,

Thou dovelike help! and, when my fears would rise, 10

With thy broad heart serenely interpose;
Brood down with thy divine sufficiencies
These thoughts which tremble when bereft of those,
Like callow birds left desert to the skies.

32

The first time that the sun rose on thine oath
To love me, I looked forward to the moon
To slacken all those bonds which seemed too
soon

And quickly tied to make a lasting troth
Quick-loving hearts, I thought, may quickly
loathe, 5

And, looking on myself, I seemed not one
For such man's love! — more like an out-of-
tune

Worn viol, a good singer would be wroth
To spoil his song with, and which, snatched in haste,

Is laid down at the first ill-sounding note 10
I did not wrong myself so, but I placed
A wrong on thee For perfect strains may float
'Neath master-hands, from instruments defaced —

And great souls, at one stroke, may do and doat.

33

Yes, call me by my pet-name! let me hear
The name I used to run at, when a child,

Sonnet 33 1 pet-name, "Ba," pronounced as if spelled Ba

From innocent play, and leave the cowslips piled,
To glance up in some face that proved me
dear

With the look of its eyes I miss the clear 5
Fond voices which, being drawn and reconciled

Into the music of Heaven's undefiled,
Call me no longer Silence on the bier,
While I call God — call God! — So let thy
mouth

Be heir to those who are now exanimate 10
Gather the north flowers to complete the south,

And catch the early love up in the late.
Yes, call me by that name — and I, in truth,
With the same heart, will answer and not wait.

34

With the same heart, I said, I'll answer thee
As those, when thou shalt call me by my
name —

Lo, the vain promise! is the same, the same,
Perplexed and ruffled by life's strategy?
When called before, I told how hastily 5
I dropped my flowers or brake off from a game,

To run and answer with the smile that came
At play last moment, and went on with me
Through my obedience. When I answer now,
I drop a grave thought, break from solitude,

Yet still my heart goes to thee — ponder
how — 11

Not as to a single good, but all my good!
Lay thy hand on it, best one, and allow
That no child's foot could run fast as this blood.

35

If I leave all for thee, wilt thou exchange
And be all to me? Shall I never miss
Home-talk and blessing and the common kiss
That comes to each in turn, nor count it
strange,

When I look up, to drop on a new range 5
Of walls and floors, another home than this?
Nay, wilt thou fill that place by me which is Filled by dead eyes too tender to know
change?

That's hardest If to conquer love, has tried,
To conquer grief, tries more, as all things prove, 10

For grief indeed is love and grief beside Alas, I have grieved so I am hard to love

Sonnet 33 10 exanimate, lifeless

Sonnet 35 1 leave all. Because of the attitude of the father of Miss Barrett, her marriage involved the severance of all home ties

Yet love me — wilt thou? Open thine heart
wide,
And fold within the wet wings of thy dove

36

When we met first and loved, I did not build Upon the event with marble. Could it mean
To last, a love set pendulous between Sorrow and sorrow? Nay, I rather thrilled,
Distrusting every light that seemed to gild
The onward path, and feared to overlean
A finger even. And, though I have grown serene

And strong since then, I think that God has willed

A still renewable fear . . . O love, O troth . .
Lest these enclasped hands should never hold,

10

This mutual kiss drop down between us both
As an unowned thing, once the lips being cold
And Love, be false! if he, to keep one oath,
Must lose one joy, by his life's star foretold

37

Pardon, oh, pardon, that my soul should
make,

Of all that strong divineness which I know
For thine and thee, an image only so Formed of the sand, and fit to shift and break

It is that distant years which did not take Thy sovranly, recoiling with a blow,
Have forced my swimming brain to undergo
Their doubt and dread, and blindly to forsake
Thy purity of likeness and distort
Thy worthiest love to a worthless counterfeit.
As if a shipwrecked Pagan, safe in port,
His guardian sea-god to commemorate,
Should set a sculptured porpoise, gills a-snort
And vibrant tail, within the temple-gate.

38

First time he kissed me, he but only kissed
The fingers of this hand wherewith I write;
And ever since, it grew more clean and white,
Slow to world-greetings, quick with its "Oh,
list,"

When the angels speak. A ring of amethyst
I could not wear here, plainer to my sight,
Than that first kiss. The second passed in
height

The first, and sought the forehead, and half missed,

Half falling on the hair. O beyond meed!
That was the chrism of love, which love's own crown,

10

With sanctifying sweetness, did precede.
The third upon my lips was folded down
In perfect, purple state; since when, indeed,
I have been proud and said, "My love, my own"

39

Because thou hast the power and own'st the
grace

To look through and behind this mask of me (Against which years have beat thus blanch-ingly

With their rains), and behold my soul's true
face,

The dim and weary witness of life's race —
Because thou hast the faith and love to see,
Through that same soul's distracting lethargy,
The patient angel waiting for a place

In the new Heavens — because nor sin nor
woe,

Nor God's infliction, nor death's neighborhood,

10

Nor all which others viewing, turn to go,
Nor all which makes me tired of all, self-viewed —

Nothing repels thee . . . Dearest, teach me so
To pour out gratitude, as thou dost, good!

40

Oh, yes! they love through all this world of
ours!

I will not gainsay love, called love forsooth
I have heard love talked in my early youth,
And since, not so long back but that the flowers

Then gathered, smell still. Mussulmans and Giaours

5

Throw kerchiefs at a smile, and have no ruth
For any weeping. Polypheme's white tooth
Slips on the nut if, after frequent showers,
The shell is over-smooth — and not so much
Will turn the thing called love, aside to hate
Or else to oblivion But thou art not such
A lover, my Belovéd! Thou canst wait Through sorrow and sickness, to bring souls to touch,

And think it soon when others cry, "Too late."

41

I thank all who have loved me in their hearts,
With thanks and love from mine. Deep thanks to all

Who paused a little near the prison-wall
To hear my music in its louder parts
Ere they went onward, each one to the mart's
Or temple's occupation, beyond call.

6

But thou, who, in my voice's sink and fall
When the sob took it, thy divinest Art's
Own instrument didst drop down at thy foot

Sonnet 39 10 God's infliction, her illness, which delayed her acceptance of Browning's proposal of marriage

Sonnet 40 5 Mussulmans, Mohammedans Giaours, the name applied by Mohammedans to disbelievers in their religion, especially Christians 7 Polypheme, Polyphemus, the one-eyed monster who imprisoned Odysseus and his companions and devoured two of them daily until Odysseus got the monster drunk, put out his eye, and escaped

To hearken what I said between my tears . . .
 Instruct me how to thank thee! Oh, to shoot 11
 My soul's full meaning into future years,
 That they should lend it utterance, and salute
 Love that endures, from Life that disappears!

42

"My future will not copy fair my past" —
 "I wrote that once, and thinking at my side
 My ministering life-angel justified
 The word by his appealing look upcast
 To the white throne of God, I turned at last,
 And there, instead, saw thee, not unallied
 To angels in thy soul! Then I, long tried
 By natural ills, received the comfort fast,
 While budding, at thy sight, my pilgrim's staff
 Gave out green leaves with morning dews
 impearled. 10
 I seek no copy now of life's first half;
 Leave here the pages with long musing curled,
 And write me new my future's epigraph,
 New angel mine, unhopèd for in the world!"

4.3

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways
I love thee to the depth and breadth and
height
My soul can reach, when feeling out of sight
For the ends of Being and ideal Grace
I love thee to the level of everyday's
Most quiet need, by sun and candle-light
I love thee freely, as men strive for Right;
I love thee purely, as they turn from Praise.
I love thee with the passion put to use
In my old griefs, and with my childhood's faith
I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
With my lost saints — I love thee with the
breath,
Smiles, tears, of all my life! — and, if God
choose,
I shall but love thee better after death.

44

Belovéd, thou hast brought me many flowers
Plucked in the garden, all the summer through
And winter, and it seemed as if they grew
In this close room, nor missed the sun and showers.
So, in the like name of that love of ours, 5
Take back these thoughts which here unfolded too.

And which on warm and cold days I withdrew
From my heart's ground. Indeed, those beds and bowers

Be overgrown with bitter weeds and rue,
And wait thy weeding; yet here's eglantine, 10
Here's ivy!—take them, as I used to do Thy flowers, and keep them where they shall not pine.

Instruct thine eyes to keep their colors true,
And tell thy soul their roots are left in mine.

LIFE AND LOVE

Fast this Life of mine was dying,
Blind already and calm as death,
Snowflakes on her bosom lying Scarcely heaving with her breath.

Love came by, and having known her 5
In a dream of fabled lands,
Gently stooped, and laid upon her
Mystic chrism of holy hands;

Drew his smile across her folded
 Eyelids, as the swallow dips;
 Breathed as finely as the cold did
 Through the locking of her lips.

So, when Life looked upward, being Warmed and breathed on from above,
 What sight could she have for seeing, 15
 Evermore . . . but only LOVE? (1850)

From CASA GUIDI WINDOWS

From PART II

A cry is up in England, which doth ring
The hollow world through, that for ends of trade
And virtue and God's better worshipping, 375
We henceforth should exalt the name of Peace
And leave those rusty wars that eat the soul —
Besides their clippings at our golden fleece
I, too, have loved peace, and from bole to bole
Of immemorial undeciduous trees 380
Would write, as lovers use upon a scroll,
The holy name of Peace and set it high
Where none could pluck it down. On trees,
I say —

Casa Guidi Windows The house in which the Brownings lived in Florence was called Casa Guidi. Casa Guidi Windows is a long poem in which Mrs. Browning voices the cause of Italian liberty. It contains descriptions of Florence, of noted personages of Italian history, etc. See Browning's The Italian in England, page 209. See also the Critical Notes.

Not upon gibbets! — With the greenery
Of dewy branches and the flowery May, 385
Sweet mediation betwixt earth and sky
Providing, for the shepherd's holiday.

Not upon gibbets! though the vulture leaves
The bones to quiet, which he first picked bare
Not upon dungeons! though the wretch who grieves 390

And groans within less stirs the outer air
Than any little field-mouse stirs the sheaves.

Not upon chain-bolts! though the slave's
despair

Has dulled his helpless miserable brain
And left him blank beneath the freeman's whip 395

To sing and laugh out idiocies of pain
Nor yet on starving homes! where many a lip
Has sobbed itself asleep through curses
vain

I love no peace which is not fellowship
And which includes not mercy. I would have 400

Rather the raking of the guns across
The world, and shrieks against Heaven's architrave,

Rather the struggle in the slippery fosse
Of dying men and horses, and the wave Blood-bubbling. . . Enough said! — by Christ's own cross, 405

And by this faint heart of my womanhood,
Such things are better than a Peace that sits
Beside a hearth in self-commended mood,
And takes no thought how wind and rain by fits

Are howling out of doors against the good
Of the poor wanderer What! your peace admits 411

Of outside anguish while it keeps at home?
I loathe to take its name upon my tongue.

'Tis nowise peace, 'tis treason, stiff with doom —

'Tis gagged despair and inarticulate wrong —
Annihilated Poland, stifled Rome, 416
Dazed Naples, Hungary fainting 'neath the thong,

And Austria wearing a smooth olive-leaf
On her brute forehead, while her hoofs out-press

The life from these Italian souls, in brief
O Lord of Peace, who art Lord of Righteousness, 421

416 Poland Poland, once a powerful and important nation, had been dismembered in 1772, 1793, and 1795 and annexed by Russia, Prussia, and Austria. An uprising in 1830-32 was put down with great cruelty. When this poem was written, Hungary and Italy were both under the despotic control of Austria. Mrs. Browning was in Florence in 1847-49 when attempts were made by both Hungary and Italy to throw off the hated rule of Austria.

Constrain the anguished worlds from sin and grief,
Pierce them with conscience, purge them with redress,
And give us peace which is no counterfeit!

A CURSE FOR A NATION

PROLOGUE

I heard an angel speak last night,
And he said, "Write!
Write a Nation's curse for me,
And send it over the Western Sea "

I faltered, taking up the word 5
"Not so, my lord!

If curses must be, choose another
To send thy curse against my brother

"For I am bound by gratitude,
By love and blood, 10
To brothers of mine across the sea,
Who stretch out kindly hands to me "

"Therefore," the voice said, "shalt thou write
My curse tonight
From the summits of love a curse is driven,
As lightning is from the tops of heaven " 16

"Not so," I answered "Evermore
My heart is sore
For my own land's sins, for little feet
Of children bleeding along the street; 20

"For parked-up honors that gainsay
The right of way,
For almsgiving through a door that is
Not open enough for two friends to kiss,

"For love of freedom which abates 25
Beyond the Straits,
For patriot virtue starved to vice on Self-praise, self-interest, and suspicion;

"For an oligarchic parliament,
And bribes well-meant. 30

A Curse for a Nation This poem is directed at the United States in its practice of slavery. When it appeared it was wrongly interpreted as an attack upon England. It was written in Italy.

2 Write, a command like that given by the angel to St John, as told in Revelation, 21:5. 20 children bleeding, etc. See The Cry of the Children, page 360. 21 parked-up honors, probably the great estates in England closed to the people. 26 the Straits, the Straits of Dover, which separate England from the continent. The reference is to Hungary, Italy, and Poland. See note on Casa Guidi: Windows, 416, preceding column.

What curse to another land assign,
When heavy-souled for the sins of mine?"

"Therefore," the voice said, "shalt thou write
My curse tonight,
Because thou hast strength to see and hate as
A foul thing done within thy gate."

"Not so," I answered once again.
"To curse, choose men.
For I, a woman, have only known
How the heart melts and the tears run
down " 40

"Therefore," the voice said, "shalt thou write
My curse tonight.
Some women weep and curse, I say
(And no one marvels), night and day.

"And thou shalt take their part tonight, 45
Weep and write
A curse from the depths of womanhood
Is very salt, and bitter, and good."

So thus I wrote, and mourned indeed,
What all may read 50
And thus, as was enjoined on me,
I send it over the Western Sea.

THE CURSE

I

Because ye have broken your own chain
With the strain
Of brave men climbing a Nation's height,
Yet thence bear down with brand and thong
On souls of others — for this wrong 5
This is the curse. Write

Because yourselves are standing straight
In the state
Of Freedom's foremost acolyte,
Yet keep calm footing all the time 10
On writhing bond slaves — for this crime
This is the curse. Write.

Because ye prosper in God's name,
With a claim
To honor in the old world's sight, 15
Yet do the fiend's work perfectly
In strangling martyrs — for this lie
This is the curse. Write.

2

Ye shall watch while kings conspire
Round the people's smoldering fire, 20

The Curse 1 chain, the chain that tied the American colonies to England 9 acolyte, an assistant at the altar in the Mass

And, warm for your part,
Shall never dare — O shame! —
To utter the thought into flame
Which burns at your heart.
This is the curse. Write. 25

Ye shall watch while nations strive
With the bloodhounds, die or survive,
Drop faint from their jaws,
Or throttle them backward to death;
And only under your breath 30
Shall favor the cause.
This is the curse. Write.

Ye shall watch while strong men draw
The nets of feudal law
To strangle the weak; 35
And, counting the sin for a sin,
Your soul shall be sadder within
Than the word ye shall speak.
This is the curse. Write.

When good men are praying erect
That Christ may avenge his elect
And deliver the earth, 40
The prayer in your ears, said low,
Shall sound like the tramp of a foe
That's driving you forth. 45
This is the curse. Write.

When wise men give you their praise,
They shall pause in the heat of the phrase,
As if carried too far.
When ye boast your own charters kept
true,
Ye shall blush; for the thing which ye do 51
Derides what ye are.
This is the curse. Write.

When fools cast taunts at your gate,
Your scorn ye shall somewhat abate 55
As ye look o'er the wall;
For your conscience, tradition, and name
Explode with a deadlier blame
Than the worst of them all.
This is the curse. Write. 60

Go, wherever ill deeds shall be done,
Go, plant your flag in the sun
Beside the ill-doers!
And recoil from clenching the curse
Of God's witnessing Universe 65
With a curse of yours.
This is the curse. Write.

26 nations, especially Italy and Hungary, then under control of Austria

THE FORCED RECRUIT

In the ranks of the Austrian you found him,
He died with his face to you all;
Yet bury him here where around him
You honor your bravest that fall.

Venetian, fair-featured and slender, 5
He lies shot to death in his youth,
With a smile on his lips over-tender
For any mere soldier's dead mouth.

No stranger, and yet not a traitor, 10
Though alien the cloth on his breast,
Underneath it how seldom a greater
Young heart has a shot sent to rest!

By your enemy tortured and goaded
To march with them, stand in their file, 15
His musket (see) never was loaded,
He facing your guns with that smile!

As orphans yearn on to their mothers,
He yearned to your patriot bands —
"Let me die for our Italy, brothers,
If not in your ranks, by your hands! 20

"Aim straightly, fire steadily! spare me
A ball in the body which may Deliver my heart here, and tear me
This badge of the Austrian away!"

So thought he, so died he this morning 25
What then? — many others have died
Aye, but easy for men to die scornful
The death-stroke, who fought side by side—

One tricolor floating above them,
Struck down 'mid triumphant acclaims 30
Of an Italy rescued to love them
And blazon the brass with their names

But he — without witness or honor,
Mixed, shamed in his country's regard,
With the tyrants who march in upon her —
Died faithful and passive, 'twas hard. 36

'Twas sublime. In a cruel restriction
Cut off from the guerdon of sons,
With most filial obedience, conviction,
His soul kissed the lips of her guns. 40

That moves you? Nay, grudge not to show
it,
While digging a grave for him here;

The Forced Recruit This poem is based upon an actual incident of an Italian soldier being forced to serve in the Austrian army.

The others who died, says your poet,
Have glory — let him have a tear.
(1859; 1860)

A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

What was he doing, the great god Pan,
Down in the reeds by the river?
Spreading ruin and scattering ban,
Splashing and paddling with hoofs of a goat,
And breaking the golden lilies afloat 5
With the dragon-fly on the river.

He tore out a reed, the great god Pan,
From the deep cool bed of the river;
The limpid water turbidly ran,
And the broken lilies a-dying lay, 10
And the dragon-fly had fled away,
Ere he brought it out of the river

High on the shore sat the great god Pan
While turbidly flowed the river;
And hacked and hewed as a great god can, 15
With his hard bleak steel at the patient reed,
Till there was not a sign of the leaf indeed
To prove it fresh from the river.

He cut it short, did the great god Pan
(How tall it stood in the river!), 20
Then drew the pith, like the heart of a man,
Steadily from the outside ring,
And notched the poor dry empty thing
In holes, as he sat by the river

"This is the way," laughed the great god Pan (Laughed while he sat by the river), 26
"The only way, since gods began
To make sweet music, they could succeed "
Then, dropping his mouth to a hole in the reed,
He blew in power by the river. 30

Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan!
Piercing sweet by the river!
Blinding sweet, O great god Pan!
The sun on the hill forgot to die,
And the lilies revived, and the dragon-fly 35
Came back to dream on the river.

Yet half a beast is the great god Pan,
To laugh as he sits by the river,
Making a poet out of a man;
The true gods sigh for the cost and pain — 40
For the reed which grows nevermore again
As a reed with the reeds in the river

EMILY RONTÉ (1818-1848)

REMEMBRANCE

Cold in the earth — and the deep snow piled above thee,
Far, far removed, cold in the dreary grave!
Have I forgot, my only Love, to love thee,
Severed at last by Time's all-severing wave?

Now, when alone, do my thoughts no longer
hover⁵
Over the mountains, on that northern shore,
Resting their wings where heath and fern-leaves cover
Thy noble heart for ever, ever more?

Cold in the earth — and fifteen wild Decem-
bers,
From those brown hills, have melted into spring;¹⁰
Faithful, indeed, is the spirit that remembers
After such years of change and suffering!

Sweet Love of youth, forgive, if I forget thee,
While the world's tide is bearing me along,
Other desires and other hopes beset me,¹⁵
Hopes which obscure, but cannot do thee
wrong!

No later light has lightened up my heaven,
No second morn has ever shone for me;
All my life's bliss from thy dear life was given,
All my life's bliss is in the grave with thee²⁰

But, when the days of golden dreams had perished,
And ev'n Despair was powerless to destroy;
Then did I learn how existence could be cherished,
Strengthened, and fed without the aid of joy

Then did I check the tears of useless passion —²⁵
Weaned my young soul from yearning after
thine;
Sternly denied its burning wish to hasten
Down to that tomb already more than mine

And, even yet, I dare not let it languish,²⁹
Dare not indulge in memory's rapturous pain;
Once drinking deep of that divinest anguish,
How could I seek the empty world again?
(1845; 1846)

Remembrance The persons referred to in Miss Brontë's poems are imaginary

SONG

The linnet in the rocky dells,
The moor-lark in the air,
The bee among the heather bells
That hide my lady fair:

The wild deer browse above her breast;⁵
The wild birds raise their brood;
And they, her smiles of love caressed,
Have left her solitude.

I ween that, when the grave's dark wall
Did first her form retain,¹⁰
They thought their hearts could ne'er recall
The light of joy again.

They thought the tide of grief would flow
Unchecked through future years;
But where is all their anguish now,¹⁵
And where are all their tears?

Well, let them fight for honor's breath,
Or pleasure's shade pursue —
The dweller in the land of death
Is changed and careless too.²⁰

And, if their eyes should watch and weep
Till sorrow's source were dry,
She would not, in her tranquil sleep,
Return a single sigh.

Blow, west-wind, by the lonely mound,²⁵
And murmur, summer streams!
There is no need of other sound
To soothe my lady's dreams (1846)

THE OLD STOIC

Riches I hold in light esteem,
And Love I laugh to scorn;
And lust of fame was but a dream
That vanished with the morn;

And if I pray, the only prayer⁵
That moves my lips for me
Is, "Leave the heart that now I bear,
And give me liberty!"

Yes, as my swift days near their goal,
'Tis all that I implore:¹⁰
In life and death a channless soul,
With courage to endure. (1846)

WARNING AND REPLY

In the earth — the earth — thou shalt be laid,
A gray stone standing over thee,
Black mold beneath thee spread,
And black mold to cover thee.

The Old Stoic The Stoics were a school of Greek philosophers (2d century B.C.) who held that virtue was the highest good and that all feelings should be rigidly subdued

"Well — there is rest there,
So fast come thy prophecy,
The time when my sunny hair
Shall with grass roots entwined be "

But cold — cold is that resting-place,
Shut out from joy and liberty,
And all who loved thy living face
Will shrink from it shudderingly

"Not so Here the world is chill,
And sworn friends fall from me,
But there — they will own me still,
And prize my memory "

Farewell, then, all that love,
All that deep sympathy
Sleep on, Heaven laughs above,
Earth never misses thee

Turf-sod and tombstone drear
Part human company,
One heart breaks only — here,
But that heart was worthy thee! (1850)

OFTEN REBUKED, YET ALWAYS BACK RETURNING

Often rebuked, yet always back returning
To those first feelings that were born with
me,
And leaving busy chase of wealth and learning
For idle dreams of things which cannot be

Today, I will seek not the shadowy region,
Its unsustaining vastness waxes drear,
And visions rising, legion after legion,
Bring the unical world too strangely near

I'll walk, but not in old heroic traces,
And not in paths of high morality,
And not among the half-distinguished faces,
The clouded forms of long-past history

I'll walk where my own nature would be leading —
It vexes me to choose another guide —
Where the gray flocks in ferny glens are feeding,
Where the wild wind blows on the mountain-side.

What have those lonely mountains worth revealing?

More glory and more grief than I can tell
The earth that wakes one human heart to feeling

Can center both the worlds of Heaven and Hell. (1850)

Often Rebuked 17 those lonely mountains, the moors

NO COWARD SOUL IS MINE

No coward soul is mine,
No trembler in the world's storm-troubled
sphere,

I see Heaven's glories shine,
And faith shines equal, arming me from fear.

O God within my breast,
Almighty, ever-present Deity!

Life — that in me has rest,
As I — undying Life — have power in Thee!

Vain are the thousand creeds
That move men's hearts — unutterably vain,
Worthless as withered weeds,
Or idlest froth amid the boundless main,

To waken doubt in one
Holding so fast by Thine infinity,
So surely anchored on
The steadfast rock of immortality

With wide-embracing love
Thy spirit animates eternal years,
Pervades and broods above,
Changes, sustains, dissolves, creates, and rears

Though earth and man were gone,
And suns and universes ceased to be,
And Thou were left alone,
Every existence would exist in Thee

There is not room for Death,
Nor atom that his might could render void,
Thou — Thou art Being and Breath,
And what Thou art may never be destroyed

SIR FRANCIS HASTINGS DOYLE (1810-1888)

THE PRIVATE OF THE BUFFS

Last night, among his fellow roughs,
He jested, quaffed, and swore —
A drunken private of the Buffs,
Who never looked before
Today, beneath the foeman's frown,
He stands in Elgin's place —

No Coward Soul Is Mine Charlotte Brontë states that these are "the last lines my sister Emily ever wrote."
The Private of the Buffs. The Buffs were the East Kent Regiment of the British Army, so called from the buff-colored facings of their coats. The poem is based upon a newspaper report of an incident that took place during the war with China in 1860. An English soldier and some native soldiers of the British-Indian Army were captured by the Chinese. When they were commanded to prostrate themselves before their captors, the Indians obeyed, but the Englishman refused, he "was immediately knocked upon the head, and his body thrown on a dunghill." (Doyle's note)
6 Elgin, James Bruce, eighth Earl of Elgin (1811-63)
He was the British ambassador to China at the time of the incident

Ambassador from Britain's crown,
And type of all her race.

Poor, reckless, rude, low-born, untaught,
Bewildered, and alone, 10
A heart, with English instinct fraught,
He yet can call his own
Aye, tear his body limb from limb,
Bring cord, or ax, or flame;
He only knows, that not through him 15
Shall England come to shame.

Far Kentish hop-fields round him seemed,
Like dreams, to come and go;
Bright leagues of cherry-blossom gleamed,
One sheet of living snow; 20
The smoke, above his father's door,
In gray soft eddyings hung:
Must he then watch it rise no more,
Doomed by himself, so young?

Yes, honor calls! — with strength like steel 25
He put the vision by.
Let dusky Indians whine and kneel,
An English lad must die.
And thus, with eyes that would not shrink,
With knee to man unbent, 30
Unflinching on its dreadful brink,
To his red grave he went

Vain, mightiest fleets of iron framed,
Vain, those all-shattering guns;
Unless proud England keep, untamed, 35
The strong heart of her sons
So, let his name through Europe ring—
A man of mean estate,
Who died, as firm as Sparta's king,
Because his soul was great. (1840)

THE RED THREAD OF HONOR

Eleven men of England
A breastwork charged in vain,
Eleven men of England
Lie stripped and gashed and slain — 5
Slain, but of foes that guarded
Their rock-built fortress well,
Some twenty had been mastered
When the last soldier fell

Whilst Napier piloted his wondrous way
Across the sand-waves of the desert sea, 10
Then flashed at once, on each fierce clan, dismay,

39 firm . . . king Leonidas, king of Sparta, with his small band of Greeks, was killed at Thermopylae in 480 B.C. while resisting Xerxes and his great Persian army. When Xerxes demanded that the Greeks surrender their arms, Leonidas replied, "Come and take them."

The Red Thread of Honor This poem is based upon an incident related to Doyle by the English general Sir Charles James Napier (1782-1853), who commanded the British forces during the Indian campaign of 1841-46.

Lord of their wild Truckee.
These missed the glen to which their steps were bent,
Mistook a mandate, from afar half heard,
And in that glorious error, calmly went 15
To death — without a word

The robber-chief mused deeply
Above those daring dead;
"Bring here," at length he shouted,
"Bring quick, the battle thread. 20
Let Eblis blast forever
Their souls, if Allah will;
But we must keep unbroken
The old rules of the Hill.

"Before the Ghiznee tiger 25
Leapt forth to burn and slay;
Before the holy prophet
Taught our grim tribes to pray,
Before Secunder's lances
Pierced through each Indian glen — 30
The mountain laws of honor
Were framed for fearless men

"Still, when a chief dies bravely,
We bind with green one wrist —
Green for the brave, for heroes 35
One crimson thread we twist.
Say ye, O gallant Hillmen,
For these, who life has fled,
Which is the fitting color,
The green one, or the red?" 40

"Our brethren, laid in honored graves, may
wear
Their green reward," each noble savage said,
"To these, whom hawks and hungry wolves shall tear,
Who dares deny the red?"

Thus conquering hate, and steadfast to the
right, 45
Fresh from the heart that haughty verdict
came;
Beneath a waning moon, each spectral height
Rolled back its loud acclaim.

Once more the chief gazed keenly
Down on those daring dead; 50
From his good sword their heart's blood
Crept to that crimson thread
Once more he cried, "The judgment,
Good friends, is wise and true,

He was a destructive conqueror of India. 29 Secunder's lances, lances from Secunderabad, a British military station in India.

But though the red be given, 55
Have we not more to do?

"These were not stirred by anger,
Nor yet by lust made bold;
Renown they thought above them,
Nor did they look for gold 60
To them their leader's signal
Was as the voice of God:
Unmoved, and uncomplaining,
The path it showed they trod

"As, without sound or struggle, 65
The stars unhurrying march,
Where Allah's finger guides them,
Through yonder purple arch,
These Franks, sublimely silent,
Without a quickened breath, 70
Went, in the strength of duty,
Straight to their goal of death.

"If I were now to ask you,
To name our bravest man,
Ye all at once would answer, 75
"They called him Mehrab Khan"
He sleeps among his fathers,
Dear to our native land,
With the bright mark he bled for Firm round his faithful hand. 80

"The songs they sing of Roostum
Fill all the past with light;
If truth be in their music,
He was a noble knight.
But were those heroes living, 85
And strong for battle still,
Would Mehrab Khan or Roostum
Have climbed, like these, the Hill?"

And they replied, "Though Mehrab Khan was brave,
As chief, he chose himself what risks to run,
Prince Roostum lied, his forfeit life to save, 91
Which these had never done."

"Enough!" he shouted fiercely,
"Doomed though they be to hell,
Bind fast the crimson trophy 95
Round BOTH wrists — bind it well.
Who knows but that great Allah
May grudge such matchless men,
With none so decked in heaven,
To the fiends' flaming den?" 100

Then all those gallant robbers
Shouted a stern amen;
They raised the slaughtered sergeant,
They raised his mangled ten
And when we found their bodies 105
Left bleaching in the wind,
Around both wrists, in glory
That crimson thread was twined.

Then Napier's knightly heart, touched to the core,
Rang, like an echo, to that knightly deed, 110
He bade its memory live for evermore,
That those who run may read (1840)

SIR SAMUEL FERGUSON (1810-1886) THE FORGING OF THE ANCHOR

Come, see the Dolphin's anchor forged!
'tis at a white heat now—
The bellows ceased, the flames decreased, though on the forge's brow
The little flames still fitfully play through the sable mound,
And fitfully you still may see the grim smiths
ranking round,
All clad in leathern panoply, their broad hands only bare, 5
Some rest upon their sledges here, some work
the windlass there

The windlass strains the tackle chains, the black mound heaves below;
And red and deep a hundred veins burst out at every throe.

It rises, roars, rends all outright — O Vulcan, what a glow!

'Tis blinding white, 'tis blasting bright — the high sun shines not so! 10

The high sun sees not, on the earth, such fiery fearful show!

The roof-ribs swarth, the candent hearth, the ruddy lurid row

Of smiths that stand, an ardent band, like men before the foe!

As, quivering through his fleece of flame, the sauling monster, slow

Sinks on the anvil: — all about the faces fiery
grow; 15

"Hurrah!" they shout, "leap out — leap out",
bang, bang the sledges go;

Hurrah! the jetted lightnings are hissing high and low —

A hailing fount of fire is struck at every squashing blow;
The leathern mail rebounds the hail, the rattling cinders strow
The ground around; at every bound the sweltering fountains flow, 20
And thick and loud the swinking crowd at every stroke pant "ho!"

Leap out, leap out, my masters, leap out and lay on load!
Let's forge a goodly anchor — a bower thick and broad;
For a heart of oak is hanging on every blow,
I bode.
I see the good ship riding all in a perilous
road — 25
The low reef roaring on her lee — the roll of ocean poured
From stem to stern, sea after sea, the mainmast by the board,
The bulwarks down, the rudder gone, the boats stove at the chains!
But courage still, brave mariners — the bower
yet remains,
And not an inch to flinch he deigns, save when ye pitch sky high, 30
Then moves his head, as though he said,
"Fear nothing — here am I."

Swing in your strokes in order, let foot and hand keep time;
Your blows make music sweeter far than any
steeple's chime;
But, while you sling your sledges, sing — and let the burthen be,
The anchor is the anvil-king, and royal craftsmen we! 35
Strike in, strike in — the sparks begin to dull their rustling red;
Our hammers ring with sharper din, our work will soon be sped
Our anchor soon must change his bed of fiery rich array,
For a hammock at the roaring bows, or an
oozy couch of clay;
Our anchor soon must change the lay of merry craftsmen here, 40
For the yeo-heave-o, and the heave-away, and the sighing seamen's cheer,
When, weighing slow, at eve they go — far,
far from love and home;
And sobbing sweethearts, in a row, wail o'er the ocean foam

In livid and obdurate gloom he darkens down at last;

O trusted and trustworthy guard, if thou
hadst life like me,
What pleasures would thy toils reward, be-

O deep Sea-diver, who might then behold such sights as thou?
The hoary monster's palaces! methinks what joy 'twere now
To go plumb-plunging down amid the assembly of the whales, 50
And feel the churned sea round me boil
beneath their scourging tails!
Then deep in tangle-woods to fight the fierce sea-unicorn,
And send him foiled and bellowing back, for all his ivory horn;
To leave the subtle sworder-fish of bony blade
forlorn;
And for the ghastly-grinning shark to laugh
his jaws to scorn; 55
To leap down on the kraken's back, where
'mid Norwegian isles,
He lies, a lubber anchorage for sudden shal-
lowed miles—
Till snorting, like an under-sea volcano, off
he rolls;
Meanwhile to swing, a-buffeting the far-astonished shoals
Of his back-browsing ocean-calves, or, haply, in a cove, 60
Shell-strewn, and consecrate of old to some Undin's love,
To find the long-haired mermaids; or, hard
by icy lands,
To wrestle with the Sea-serpent, upon ceru-lean sands.

O broad-armed Fisher of the deep, whose sports can equal thine?
The Dolphin weighs a thousand tons, that tugs thy cable line! 65
And night by night, 'tis thy delight, thy glory
day by day,
Through sable sea and breaker white, the giant game to play —
But shamer of our little sports! forgive the name I gave —
A fisher's joy is to destroy — thine office is to save

 thou'dst leap within the sea! 75
 Give honor to their memories who left the pleasant strand,
 To shed their blood so freely for the love of Fatherland —
 Who left their chance of quiet age and grassy churchyard grave,
 So freely, for a restless bed amid the tossing
 wave —
 Oh, though our anchor may not be all I have fondly sung, 80
 Honor him for their memory whose bones he goes among! (1831; 1832)

THE FAIRY THORN

AN ULSTER BALLAD

"Get up, our Anna dear, from the weary spinning wheel;
 For your father's on the hill, and your mother is asleep,
 Come up above the crags, and we'll dance a highland reel
 Around the fairy thorn on the steep "

At Anna Grace's door 'twas thus the maidens
 cried, 5
 Three merry maidens fair in kirtles of the
 green,
 And Anna laid the rock and the weary wheel
 aside,
 The fairest of the four, I ween

They're glancing through the glimmer of the quiet eve,
 Away in milky wavings of neck and ankle
 bare; 10
 The heavy-sliding stream in its sleepy song
 they leave,
 And the crags in the ghostly air.

And linking hand in hand, and singing as they go,
 The maids along the hillside have ta'en
 their fearless way,
 Till they come to where the rowan trees in lonely beauty grow 15
 Beside the Fairy Hawthorn gray

The Fairy Thorn Ulster is the northernmost province of Ireland. Fairies and witches are closely associated with the hawthorn in folklore Cf. Yeats's The Stolen Child, page 861
 6 kirtles, short skirts 7 rock, distaff 8 ween, think 15 rowan, the mountain ash

The Hawthorn stands between the ashes tall and slim,
 Like matron with her twin granddaughters
 at her knee,
 The rowan berries cluster o'er her low head
 gray and dim
 In ruddy kisses sweet to see 20

The merry maidens four have ranged them
 in a row,
 Between each lovely couple a stately rowan
 stem,
 And away in mazes wavy like skimming
 birds they go —
 Oh, never caroled bird like them

But solemn is the silence of the silvery haze 25
 That drinks away their voices in echoless
 repose,
 And dreamily the evening has stilled the haunted braes,
 And dreamier the gloaming grows

And sinking one by one, like lark-notes from the sky
 When the falcon's shadow saileth across the open shaw, 30
 Are hushed the maidens' voices, as cowering down they lie
 In the flutter of their sudden awe

For, from the air above and the grassy ground beneath,
 And from the mountain-ashes and the old white thorn between,
 A power of faint enchantment doth through their beings breathe, 35
 And they sink down together on the green

They sink together silent, and, stealing side to side,
 They fling their lovely arms o'er their drooping necks so fair,
 Then vainly strive again their naked arms
 to hide,
 For their shrinking necks again are bare 40

Thus clasped and prostrate all, with their heads together bowed,
 Soft o'er their bosoms' beating—the only human sound —
 They hear the silky footsteps of the silent
 fairy crowd,
 Like a river in the air, gliding round.

No scream can any raise, nor prayer can any
 say, 45

27 braes, hills 30 shaw, thicket

But wild, wild, the terror of the speechless
three —
For they feel fair Anna Grace drawn silently
away,
By whom they dare not look to see.

They feel their tresses twine with her parting locks of gold,
And the curls elastic falling, as her head
withdraws, 50
They feel her sliding arms from their tranced
arms unfold,
But they may not look to see the cause.

For heavy on their senses the faint enchantment lies
Through all that night of anguish and perilous amaze;
And neither fear nor wonder can ope their quivering eyes, 55
Or their limbs from the cold ground raise,

Till out of night the earth has rolled her
dewy side,
With every haunted mountain and streamy
vale below,
When, as the mist dissolves in the yellow morning-tide,
The maidens' trance dissolveth so. 60

Then fly the ghastly three as swiftly as they may,
And tell their tale of sorrow to anxious friends in vain,
They pined away and died within the year
and day,
And ne'er was Anna Grace seen again.

THE WELSHMEN OF TIRAWLEY

Scorna Boy, the Barretts' bailiff, lewd and lame,
To lift the Lynotts' taxes when he came,
Rudely drew a young maid to him;
Then the Lynotts rose and slew him,
And in Tubber-na-Scorney threw him — 5
Small your blame,
Sons of Lynott!
Sing the vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley.

The Welshmen of Tirawley Tirawley is a barony in the maritime county of Mayo, in the province of Connaught, Ireland. The Barretts and the Lynotts were two Welsh families that had settled in the west of Ireland during one of the invasions of the country. The places mentioned in the poem are all in the vicinity of Tirawley.
2 lift, collect. 5 Tubber-na-Scorney, Scragg's Well, in the townland of Carns, Tirawley

Then the Barretts to the Lynotts proposed a
choice,
Saying, "Hear, ye murderous brood, men and boys, 10
For this deed today ye lose
Sight or manhood say and choose
Which ye keep and which refuse;
And rejoice
That our mercy 15
Leaves you living for a warning to Tiraw-ley."

Then the little boys of the Lynotts, weeping,
said,
"Only leave us our eyesight in our head"
But the bearded Lynotts then Made answer back again, 20
"Take our eyes, but leave us men,
Alive or dead,
Sons of Waddin!"
Sing the vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley.

So the Barretts, with sewing-needles sharp and smooth, 25
Let the light out of the eyes of every youth,
And of every bearded man,
Of the broken Lynott clan;
Then their darkened faces wan
Turning south 30
To the river —
Sing the vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley.

O'er the slippery stepping-stones of Clochanna n'all
They drove them, laughing loud at every fall,
As their wandering footsteps dark 35
Failed to reach the slippery mark,
And the swift stream swallowed stark,
One and all
As they stumbled —
From the vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley. 40
Of all the blinded Lynotts one alone
Walked erect from stepping-stone to stone,
So back again they brought you,
And a second time they wrought you
With their needles; but never got you 45
Once to groan,
Emon Lynott,
For the vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley.

23 Waddin, the leader of the Barretts (see line 239).
33 Clochan-na-n'all. The phrase means the blind men's stepping-stones. The stones are still pointed out on the Duvowen River, about four miles north of Crossmolina, in the townland of Garranard. (Ferguson's note)

But with prompt-projected footstep sure as
 ever,
 Emon Lynott again crossed the river, 50
 Though Duvowen was rising fast,
 And the shaking stones o'er cast
 By cold floods boiling past;
 Yet you never,
 Emon Lynott, 55
 Faltered once before your foemen of Tiraw-
 ley.

But, turning on Ballintubber bank, you stood,
 And the Barretts thus bespoke o'er the flood —
 "Oh, ye foolish sons of Wattin,
 Small amends are these you've gotten, 60
 For, while Scorna Boy lies rotten,
 I am good
 For vengeance!"

Sing the vengeance of the Welshmen of
 Tirawley

"For 'tis neither in eye nor eyesight that a
 man 65
 Bears the fortunes of himself and his clan,
 But in the manly mind,
 And loins with vengeance lined,
 That your needles could never find
 Though they ran 70
 Through my heart-strings!"

Sing the vengeance of the Welshmen of
 Tirawley

"But, little your women's needles do I reckon;
 For the night from heaven never fell so black,
 But Tirawley, and abroad 75
 From the Moy to Cuan-an-fod,
 I could walk it every sod,
 Path and track,
 Ford and togher,
 Seeking vengeance on you, Barretts of
 Tirawley! 80

"The night when Dathy O'Dowda broke your
 camp,
 What Barrett among you was it held the lamp —
 Showed the way to those two feet,
 When through wintry wind and sleet,
 I guided your blind retreat 85
 In the swamp
 Of Beál-an-asa?

O ye vengeance-destined ingrates of Tiraw-
 ley!"

So leaving loud-shriek-echoing Garranard,
 The Lynott like a red dog hunted hard, 90

With his wife and children seven,
 'Mong the beasts and fowls of heaven
 In the hollows of Glen Nephin,
 Light-debarred,
 Made his dwelling, 95
 Planning vengeance on the Barretts of
 Tirawley.

And ere the bright-orbed year its course had run,
 On his brown round-knotted knee he nursed
 a son,
 A child of light, with eyes
 As clear as are the skies 100
 In summer, when sunrise
 Has begun,
 So the Lynott
 Nursed his vengeance on the Barretts of
 Tirawley.

And, as ever the bright boy grew in strength and size, 105
 Made him perfect in each manly exercise,
 The salmon in the flood,
 The dun deer in the wood,
 The eagle in the cloud
 To surprise 110
 On Ben Nephin,
 Far above the foggy fields of Tirawley

With the yellow-knotted spear-shaft, with the bow,
 With the steel, prompt to deal shot and blow,
 He taught him from year to year 115
 And trained him, without a peer,
 For a perfect cavalier,
 Hoping so —
 Far his forethought —
 For vengeance on the Barretts of Tirawley. 120

And, when mounted on his proud-bounding steed,
 Emon Oge sat a cavalier indeed;
 Like the car upon the wheat
 When winds in autumn beat
 On the bending stems, his seat, 125
 And the speed
 Of his courser
 Was the wind from Barna-na-gee o'er
 Tirawley!

Now when fifteen sunny summers thus were spent
 (He perfected in all accomplishment) — 130
 The Lynott said, "My child,
 We are over long exiled
 From mankind in this wild —

So, out over mountain-moors, and mosses

And green steam-gathering vales, they journeyed down;
Till, shining like a star,
Through the dusky gleams afar, 140
The bailey of Castlebar,
And the town
Of MacWilliam
Rose bright before the wanderers of Tirawley.
“Look southward, my boy, and tell me as we go, 145
What see’st thou by the loch-head below.”
“Oh, a stone-house strong and great,
And a horse-host at the gate,
And a captain in armor of plate —

“And a beautiful Woman-chief by his side,
Yellow gold on all her gown-sleeves wide;
And in her hand a pearl 155
Of a young, little, fair-haired girl ” —
Said the Lynott, “It is the Earl!
Let us ride
To his presence ”
And before him came the exiles of Tirawley.
“God save thee, MacWilliam,” the Lynott
thus began; 161
“God save all here besides of this clan,

Are all in company —
For in these four bones ye see 165
A kindly man
Of the Britons —
Emon Lynott of Garranard of Tirawley
“And hither, as kindly gossip-law allows,
I come to claim a scion of thy house 170
To foster, for thy race,

Have ever been wont to place,
With some spouse

A MacWilliam Oge, to foster in Tirawley
“And to show thee in what sort our youth

I have hither to thy home of valor brought
This one son of my age,
For a sample and a pledge 180
For the equal tutelage,
In right thought,
Word, and action,
Of whatever son ye give into Tirawley.”
When MacWilliam beheld the brave boy ride and run, 185
Saw the spear-shaft from his white shoulder spun —
With a sigh, and with a smile,
He said — “I would give the spoil
Of a county, that Tibbot Moyle,
My own son, 190
Were accomplished
Like this branch of the kindly Britons of
Tirawley.”
When the Lady MacWilliam she heard him
speak,
And saw the ruddy roses on his cheek,
She said, “I would give a purse 195
Of red gold to the nurse
That would rear my Tibbot no worse;
But I seek
Hitherto vainly —
Heaven grant that I now have found her in
Tirawley!” 200
So they said to the Lynott, “Here, take our bird!
And as pledge for the keeping of thy word,
Let this scion here remain
Till thou comest back again;
Meanwhile the fitting train 205
Of a lord
Shall attend thee
With the lordly heir of Connaught into
Tirawley.”
So back to strong-throng-gathering Gar-ranard,
Like a lord of the country with his guard, 210
Came the Lynott, before them all,
Once again over Clochan-na-n’all
Steady-striding, erect, and tall,
And his ward
On his shoulders — 215
To the wonder of the Welshmen of Tirawley.

Then a diligent foster-father you would deem
The Lynott, teaching Tibbot, by mead and
stream,
To cast the spear, to ride,
To stem the rushing tide, 220
With what feats of body beside,

141 bailey, a court of justice. Castlebar, the capital of the County of Mayo. 143 MacWilliam, the name of the earl. 146 loch-head, head of the lake or bay. 163 gossips, comrades. 166 kindly, kindred. 172. William Conquer, William the Conqueror, king of England (from 1066 to 1087).

189. Tibbot, Theobald.

Might besecm
A MacWilliam,
Fostered free among the Welshmen of
Tirawley

But the lesson of hell he taught him in heart and mind; 225

For to what desire soever he inclined,
Of anger, lust, or pride,
He had it gratified,
Till he ranged the circle wide
Of a blind 230
Self-indulgence,
Ere he came to youthful manhood in Tirawley.

Then, even as when a hunter slips a hound,
Lynott loosed him — God's leashes all un-
bound —

In the pride of power and station, 235
And the strength of youthful passion,
On the daughters of thy nation,

All around,
Wattin Barrett!
Oh! the vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley! 240

Bitter grief and burning anger, rage and shame,
Filled the houses of the Barretts where'er he
came,

Till the young men of the Bac,
Drew by night upon his track,
And slew him at Cornassack — 245
Small your blame,
Sons of Wattin!

Sing the Vengeance of the Welshmen of
Tirawley

Said the Lynott, "The day of my vengeance is drawing near,
The day for which, through many a long dark
year, 250

I have toiled through grief and sin —
Call ye now the Brehons in,
And let the plea begin
Over the bier
Of MacWilliam, 255
For an eric upon the Barretts of Tirawley!"

Then the Brehons to MacWilliam Burke decreed

An eric upon Clan Barrett for the deed;
And the Lynott's share of the fine,
As foster-father, was nine 260
Plowlands and nine score kine;

But no need
Had the Lynott,
Neither care, for land or cattle in Tirawley.

But rising, while all sat silent on the spot, 265
He said, "The law says — doth it not? —
If the foster-sire elect
His portion to reject,
He may then the right exact

To applot 270
The short eric "
" 'Tis the law," replied the Brehons of
Tirawley.

Said the Lynott, "I once before had a choice
Proposed me, wherein law had little voice;
But now I choose, and say, 275
As lawfully I may,
I applot the mulct today;
So rejoice
In your plowlands
And your cattle, which I renounce throughout
Tirawley. 280

"And thus I applot the mulct: I divide
The land throughout Clan Barrett on every side

Equally, that no place
May be without the face
Of a foe of Wattin's race — 285
That the pride
Of the Barretts

May be humbled hence forever throughout
Tirawley.

"I adjudge a seat in every Barrett's hall
To MacWilliam; in every stable I give a stall
To MacWilliam, and, beside, 291
Whenever a Burke shall ride
Through Tirawley, I provide
At his call
Needful grooming, 295
Without charge from any hosteler of Tirawley.

"Thus lawfully I avenge me for the throes
Ye lawlessly caused me and caused those Unhappy shamefaced ones
Who, their mothers expected once, 300
Would have been the sires of sons —
O'er whose woes
Often weeping,
I have groaned in my exile from Tirawley.

"I demand not of you your manhood; but I
take — 305
For the Burkes will take it — your Freedom!
for the sake
Of which all manhood's given
And all good under heaven,
And, without which, better even Ye should make 310
Yourselves barren,
Than see your children slaves throughout
Tirawley!

252 Brehons, an ancient class of Irish lawyers or judges 256 eric, a fine paid in Ireland to the family of a murdered person by the murderer

"Neither take I your eyesight from you, as you took
Mine and ours. I would have you daily look
On one another's eyes 315
When the strangers tyrannize
By your hearths, and blushes arise,
That ye brook,
Without vengeance,
The insults of troops of Tibbots throughout
Tirawley! 320

"The vengeance I designed, now is done,
And the days of me and mine nearly run —
For, for this, I have broken faith,
Teaching him who lies beneath
This pall, to merit death; 325
And my son
To his father
Stands pledged for other teaching in Tirawley "

Said MacWilliam — "Father and son, hang them high!"
And the Lynott they hanged speedily; 330
But across the salt sea water,
To Scotland, with the daughter
Of MacWilliam — well you got her! —
Did you fly,
Edmund Lindsay, 335
The gentlest of all the Welshmen of Tirawley!

'Tis thus the ancient Ollaves of Erin tell
How, through lewdness and revenge, it befell
That the sons of William Conquer
Came over the sons of Wattin, 340
Throughout all the bounds and borders
Of the lands of Auley MacFiachra;
Till the Saxon Oliver Cromwell,
And his valiant, Bible-guided,
Free heretics of Clan London, 345
Coming in, in their succession,
Rooted out both Burke and Barrett,
And in their empty places
New stems of freedom planted,
With many a goodly sapling 350
Of manliness and virtue;
Which while their children cherish,
Kindly Irish of the Irish,
Neither Saxons nor Italians,
May the mighty God of Freedom 355
Speed them well,
Never taking
Further vengeance on his people of Tirawley.

An Irish rebellion was put down by Cromwell and his forces in 1649, but it took two years to subjugate the country. The Celtic owners were deprived of their land in Leinster, Munster, and Ulster, and were given holdings in Connaught, the county in which the incidents of this poem took place. The land of the Celts was given to the generals and soldiers and to those who furnished money for Cromwell's army.

THE BROKEN PITCHER

It was a Moorish maiden was sitting by a
well,
And what the maiden thought of, I cannot,
cannot tell,
When by there rode a valiant knight from the town of Oviedo,
Alphonzo Guzman was he hight, the Count of Toledo.

"Oh, maiden, Moorish maiden! why sitt'st thou by the spring? 5
Say, dost thou seek a lover, or any other
thing?
Why dost thou look upon me, with eyes so dark and wide,
And wherefore doth the pitcher lie broken by thy side?"

"I do not seek a lover, thou Christian knight
so gay,
Because an article like that hath never come my way; 10
And why I gaze upon you, I cannot, cannot tell,
Except that in your iron hose you look uncommon swell.

"My pitcher it is broken, and this the reason is —
A shepherd came behind me, and tried to snatch a kiss;
I would not stand his nonsense, so ne'er a word I spoke, 15
But scored him on the costard, and so the jug was broke.

"My uncle, the Alcaydè, he waits for me at
home,
And will not take his tumbler until Zorayda
come;
I cannot bring him water — the pitcher is in pieces —
And so I'm sure to catch it, 'cos he wallops
all his nieces." 20

"Oh maiden, Moorish maiden! wilt thou be ruled by me?
Then wipe thine eyes and rosy lips, and give me kisses three,
And I'll give thee my helmet, thou kind and courteous lady,

The Broken Pitcher The scene of this poem is located in Spain, conquered by the Moors from North Africa in 711. The Moors established a Mohammedan power in Spain that lasted more than seven hundred years.
3 Oviedo, a city in northwestern Spain. 4 hight, called. Toledo, Toledo, a city and province in central Spain. 16 costard, head. 17 Alcaydè, a commander of a castle or fortress.

To carry home the water to thy uncle, the Alcaydè."

He lighted down from off his steed — he tied him to a tree — 25

He bent him to the maiden, and he took his kisses three;

"To wrong thee, sweet Zorayda, I swear would be a sin!"

And he knelt him at the fountain, and he dipped his helmet in.

Up rose the Moorish maiden — behind the knight she steals,

And caught Alphonzo Guzman in a twinkling
by the heels; 30

She tipped him in, and held him down beneath the bubbling water —

"Now take thou that for venturing to kiss
Al Hamet's daughter!"

A Christian maid is weeping in the town of Oviedo;

She waits the coming of her love, the Count of Tololoedo.

I pray you all in charity that you will never tell 35

lonely well (1841)

THE OLD SCOTTISH CAVALIER

Come listen to another song,
Should make your heart beat high,

Bring crimson to your forehead,
And the luster to your eye;

It is a song of olden time, 5
Of days long since gone by,

And of a baron stout and bold

As e'er wore sword on thigh!

Like a brave old Scottish cavalier, 10
All of the olden time!

He kept his castle in the north,

Hard by the thundering Spey;

And a thousand vassals dwelt around,
All of his kindred they.

And not a man of all that clan 15
Had ever ceased to pray

For the royal race they loved so well,
Though exiled far away

From the steadfast Scottish cavaliers,
All of the olden time! 20

His father drew the righteous sword

For Scotland and her claims,

Among the loyal gentlemen

And chiefs of ancient names

Who swore to fight or fall beneath 25

The standard of King James,

And died at Killecrankie Pass

With the glory of the Graemes;

Like a true old Scottish cavalier

All of the olden time! 30

He never owned the foreign rule,

No master he obeyed,

But kept his clan in peace at home,

From foray and from raid;

And when they asked him for his oath, 35

He touched his glittering blade,

And pointed to his bonnet blue,

That bore the white cockade;

Like a leal old Scottish cavalier,

All of the olden time! 40

At length the news ran through the land —

The PRINCE had come again!

That night the fiery cross was sped

O'er mountain and through glen;

And our old baron rose in might, 45

Like a lion from his den,

And rode away across the hills

To Charlie and his men,

With the valiant Scottish cavaliers,

All of the olden time! 50

He was the first that bent the knee

When the standard waved abroad,

He was the first that charged the foe

On Preston's bloody sod;

And ever, in the van of fight, 55

The foremost still he trod,

Until on bleak Culloden's heath,

He gave his soul to God,

Like a good old Scottish cavalier,

All of the olden time! 60

Oh! never shall we know again

A heart so stout and true —

The olden times have passed away,

And weary are the new;

The fair White Rose has faded 65

The Old Scottish Cavalier The hero of this poem was Alexander Forbes, Lord Pittsligo (1677-1762), an ardent supporter of the Stuarts and the leader of a force that supported Prince Charles Edward Stuart (1720-88), the Young Pretender, when he landed in Scotland in 1745 in an effort to gain the English throne. The royal race of Stuarts (line 17) had been forced to live in exile since the accession of William III, Prince of Orange, in 1688. The Jacobite clans in Scotland refused to swear allegiance to this foreign prince (line 31) and continued loyal to the Stuarts. The Jacobite forces defeated the royalists at Preston Pans, Inverness, in 1745, but suffered a crushing and final defeat at Culloden in 1746. Cf. Macaulay's Epitaph on a Jacobite, page 10, and Swinburne's A Jacobite's Farewell, page 714.

12 Spey, a river in northern Scotland

26 King James, James II, king of England (1685-88), he was James VII of Scotland. 27 Killecrankie Pass, a pass in Perthshire, Scotland, the scene of a victory of the Jacobite Highlanders over the forces of William III in 1689. The Highland clans were led by John Graham ("the glory of the Graemes," line 28) of Claverhouse, who was killed in the battle. 38 white cockade, the badge of the House of Stuart and of its adherents. 39 leal, loyal. 43 fiery cross, a stake with one end burned and the other dipped in blood as an emblem of fire and sword. It was carried among the Highlanders of Scotland to summon the clans to a rendezvous. 65. White Rose, the white cockade (See note on line 38).

From the garden where it grew,
And no fond tears, save those of heaven,
The glorious bed bedew
Of the last old Scottish cavalier,
All of the olden time!

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY
(1811-1863)

THE CANE-BOTTOMED CHAIR

In tattered old slippers that toast at the bars,
And a ragged old jacket perfumed with cigars,
Away from the world and its toils and its
cares,
I've a snug little kingdom up four pair of stairs.

To mount to this realm is a toil, to be sure,
But the fire there is bright and the air rather
pure,
And the view I behold on a sunshiny day
Is grand, through the chimney-pots over the
way.

This snug little chamber is crammed in all nooks
With worthless old knickknacks and silly old
books,
And foolish old odds and foolish old ends,
Cracked bargains from brokers, cheap keepsakes from friends.

Old armor, prints, pictures, pipes, china (all cracked),
Old rickety tables, and chairs broken-backed,
A twopenny treasury, wondrous to see;
What matter? 'tis pleasant to you, friend,
and me

No better divan need the Sultan require,
Than the creaking old sofa that basks by the
fire,
And 'tis wonderful, surely, what music you
get
From the rickety, ramshackle, wheezy spinet

That praying-rug came from a Turcoman's
camp,
By Tiber once twinkled that brazen old lamp,
A Mameluke fierce yonder dagger has drawn —

'Tis a murderous knife to toast muffins upon

The Cane-Bottomed Chair 8 chimney-pots, pipes of earthenware, brick, or sheet-metal placed on top of chimneys to prevent smoking. 21 Turcoman, an Asiatic Turk. 22 Tiber, the chief river of Italy. 23 Mameluke, an Egyptian soldier recruited from slaves converted to Mohammedanism.

Long, long through the hours, and the night,
and the chimes,
Here we talk of old books, and old friends,
and old times;
As we sit in a fog made of rich Latakia,
This chamber is pleasant to you, friend, and
me.

But of all the cheap treasures that garnish
my nest,
There's one that I love and I cherish the
best,
For the finest of couches that's padded with
hair
I would never change thee, my cane-bottomed
chair.

'Tis a bandy-legged, high-shouldered, worm-eaten seat,
With a creaking old back, and twisted old
feet;
But since the fair morning when Fanny sat
there,
I bless thee and love thee, old cane-bottomed
chair.

If chairs have but feeling, in holding such charms,
A thrill must have passed through your withered old arms!
I looked, and I longed, and I wished in
despair;
I wished myself turned to a cane-bottomed
chair.

It was but a moment she sat in this place,
She'd a scarf on her neck, and a smile on her
face!
A smile on her face, and a rose in her hair,
And she sat there and bloomed in my cane-bottomed chair.

And so I have valued my chair ever since
Like the shrine of a saint, or the throne of a prince
Saint Fanny, my patroness sweet I declare,
The queen of my heart and my cane-bottomed
chair

When the candles burn low, and the company's gone,
In the silence of night as I sit here alone —
I sit here alone, but we yet are a pair —
My Fanny I see in my cane-bottomed chair.

She comes from the past and revisits my room,
She looks as she then did, all beauty and bloom,

27 Latakia, a superior kind of Turkish smoking tobacco

So smiling and tender, so fresh and so fair, 55
And yonder she sits in my cane-bottomed
chair.

LITTLE BILLEE

AIR — "Il y avait un petit navire."

There were three sailors of Bristol city
Who took a boat and went to sea
But first with beef and captain's biscuits
And pickled pork they loaded she.

There was gorging Jack and guzzling Jimmy,
And the youngest he was little Billee. 6
Now when they got as far as the Equator
They'd nothing left but one split pea.

Says gorging Jack to guzzling Jimmy,
"I am extremely hungaree" 10
To gorging Jack says guzzling Jimmy,
"We've nothing left, us must eat we"

Says gorging Jack to guzzling Jimmy,
"With one another we shouldn't agree!
There's little Bill, he's young and tender; 15
We're old and tough, so let's eat he

"Oh! Billy, we're going to kill and eat you,
So undo the button of your chemie"
When Bill received this information
He used his pocket handkerchie. 20

"First let me say my catechism,
Which my poor mammy taught to me."
"Make haste, make haste," says guzzling
Jimmy,
While Jack pulled out his snickersnee

So Billy went up to the main-top gallant mast, 25
And down he fell on his bended knee
He scarce had come to the twelfth commandment

When up he jumps. "There's land I see"

"Jerusalem and Madagascar,
And North and South Amerikee, 30
There's the British flag a-riding at anchor,
With Admiral Napier, K. C. B."

So when they got aboard of the Admiral's,
He hanged fat Jack and flogged Jimmee;
But as for little Bill he made him 35

Little Billee This poem is meant as a satire on certain conventional sea tales. AIR—"There was a little ship", this is the title of a popular ballad

24 snickersnee, knife 32 Napier, Sir Charles Napier (1786-1860), an English admiral, Knight Commander of the Bath 36 Seventy-three, an old-time ship of war carrying seventy-three guns—that is, a large man-of-war

THE BALLAD OF BOUILLABAISSE

A street there is in Paris famous,
For which no rime our language yields,
Rue Neuve des Petits Champs its name is —
The New Street of the Little Fields
And here's an inn, not rich and splendid, 5
But still in comfortable case;
The which in youth I oft attended,
To eat a bowl of Bouillabaisse.

This Bouillabaisse a noble dish is —
A sort of soup or broth, or brew, 10
Or hotchpotch of all sorts of fishes,
That Greenwich never could outdo,
Green herbs, red peppers, mussels, saffron,
Soles, onions, garlic, roach, and dace.
All these you eat at Terré's tavern, 15
In that one dish of Bouillabaisse.

Indeed, a rich and savory stew 'tis;
And true philosophers, methinks,
Who love all sorts of natural beauties,
Should love good victuals and good drinks.
And Cordeher or Benedictine 21
Might gladly, sure, his lot embrace,
Nor find a fast-day too afflicting,
Which served him up a Bouillabaisse.

I wonder if the house still there is? 25
Yes, here the lamp is, as before,
The smiling red-cheeked écaillère is Still opening oysters at the door
Is Terré still alive and able?
I recollect his droll grimace; 30
He'd come and smile before your table,
And hope you liked your Bouillabaisse

We enter — nothing's changed or older
"How's Monsieur Terré, waiter, pray?"
The waiter stares and shrugs his shoulder —
"Monsieur is dead this many a day" 36
"It is the lot of saint and sinner.
So honest Terré's run his race!"
"What will Monsieur require for dinner?"
"Say, do you still cook Bouillabaisse?" 40

"Oh, oui, Monsieur," 's the waiter's answer,
"Quel vin Monsieur désire-t-il?"
"Tell me a good one" — "That I can, Sir.
The Chambertin with yellow seal"
"So Terré's gone," I say, and sink in 45
My old accustomed corner-place,
"He's done with feasting and with drinking,
With Burgundy and Bouillabaisse"

The Ballad of Bouillabaisse 12 Greenwich, a borough of London, once famous for the annual fish dinner held there by members of the British Cabinet 14 roach and dace, kinds of fish 21 Cordeher, a Franciscan monk, so called from his girdle of knotted cord 21 Benedictine, a monk of the order of St. Benedict 27 écaillère, oyster-woman 42 Quel vin, etc., what wine do you wish, sir? 44 Chambertin, a kind of Burgundy wine

My old accustomed corner here is —
 The table still is in the nook; 50
 Ah! vanished many a busy year is
 This well-known chair since last I took.
 When first I saw ye, cari luoghi,
 I'd scarce a beard upon my face,
 And now a grizzled, grim old foggy, 55
 I sit and wait for Bouillabaisse.

Where are you, old companions trusty
 Of early days here met to dine?
 Come, waiter! quick, a flagon crusty —
 I'll pledge them in the good old wine. 60
 The kind old voices and old faces
 My memory can quick retrace;
 Around the board they take their places,
 And share the wine and Bouillabaisse.

There's Jack has made a wondrous marriage;
 There's laughing Tom is laughing yet; 66
 There's brave Augustus drives his carriage,
 There's poor old Fred in the Gazette;
 On James's head the grass is growing.
 Good Lord! the world has wagged apace 70
 Since here we set the Claret flowing,
 And drank, and ate the Bouillabaisse

Ah me! how quick the days are flitting!
 I mind me of a time that's gone,
 When here I'd sit, as now I'm sitting, 75
 In this same place — but not alone.
 A fair young form was nestled near me,
 A dear, dear face looked fondly up,
 And sweetly spoke and smiled to cheer me
 — There's no one now to share my cup 80

I drink it as the Fates ordain it
 Come, fill it, and have done with rimes;
 Fill up the lonely glass, and drain it
 In memory of dear old times.
 Welcome the wine, whate'er the seal is; 85
 And sit you down and say your grace
 With thankful heart, whate'er the meal is.
 — Here comes the smoking Bouillabaisse!

LOVE AT TWO SCORE

 This is the way that boys begin —
 Wait till you come to forty year. 5

 poem, from Chapter 4, is sung by Wamba, the Jester

Curly gold locks cover foolish brains,
 Billing and cooing is all your cheer;
 Sighing and singing of midnight strains
 Under Bonnybell's window-panes —
 Wait till you come to forty year! 10

Forty times over let Michaelmas pass,
 Grizzling hair the brain doth clear,
 Then you know a boy is an ass,
 Then you know the worth of a lass,
 Once you have come to forty year. 15

Pledge me round; I bid ye declare,
 All good fellows whose beards are gray,
 Did not the fairest of the fair
 Common grow and wearisome, ere
 Ever a month was passed away? 20

The reddest lips that ever have kissed,
 The brightest eyes that ever have shone,
 May pray and whisper and we not list,
 Or look away and never be missed,
 Ere yet ever a month is gone 25

SORROWS OF WERTHER

Werther had a love for Charlotte
 Such as words could never utter,
 Would you know how first he met her?
 She was cutting bread and butter.

Charlotte was a married lady, 5
 And a moral man was Werther,
 And, for all the wealth of Indies,
 Would do nothing for to hurt her

So he sighed and pined and ogled,
 And his passion boiled and bubbled, 10
 Till he blew his silly brains out,
 And no more was by it troubled.

Charlotte, having seen his body
 Borne before her on a shutter,
 Like a well-conducted person, 15
 Went on cutting bread and butter. (1855)

AUBREY THOMAS DE VERE
(1814-1902)

EPITAPH

He roamed half-round the world of woe,
Where toil and labor never cease,
Then dropped one little span below
In search of peace.

And now to him mild beams and showers, 5
All that he needs to grace his tomb,
From loneliest regions at all hours,
Unsought-for, come. (1842)

THE SUN-GOD

I saw the Master of the Sun. He stood High in his luminous car, himself more bright —
An Archer of immeasurable might.
On his left shoulder hung his quivered load,
Spurned by his steeds the eastern mountains
glowed; 5
Forward his eagle eye and bow of Light
He bent, and while both hands that arch
embowed,
Shaft after shaft pursued the flying night
No wings profaned that godlike form; around
His neck high-held an ever-moving crowd 10
Of locks hung glistening, while such perfect
sound
Fell from his bowstring that th' ethereal dome
Thrilled as a dew-drop, and each passing cloud
Expanded, whitening like the ocean foam.

From MAY CAROLS

MATER CHRISTI

He willed to lack; He willed to bear;
He willed by suffering to be schooled;
He willed the chains of flesh to wear:
Yet from her arms the worlds He ruled.

As tapers 'mid the noontide glow 5
With merged yet separate radiance burn,
With human taste and touch, even so,
The things He knew He willed to learn.

He sat beside the lowly door;
His homeless eyes appeared to trace 10
In evening skies remembered lore,
And shadows of His Father's face.

One only knew Him She alone
Who nightly to His cradle crept,

TURRIS EBURNEA

This scheme of worlds, which vast we call,
Is only vast compared with man;
Compared with God, the One yet All,
Its greatness dwindles to a span.

A Lily with its isles of buds 5
Asleep on some unmeasured sea —
O God, the starry multitudes,
What are they more than this to Thee?

Yet girt by Nature's petty pale
Each tenant holds the place assigned 10
To each in Being's awful scale —
The last of creatures leaves behind

The abyss of nothingness, the first
Into the abyss of Godhead peers,
Waiting that vision which shall burst 15
In glory on the eternal years.

Tower of our Hope! through thee we climb
Finite creation's topmost stair,
Through thee from Zion's height sublime
Toward God we gaze through purer air. 20

Infinite distance still divides
Created from Creative Power;
But all which intercepts and hides
Lies dwarfed by that surpassing Tower! (1857)

FEST. PURITATIS

Cloud-piercing mountains! Chance and Change
More high than you their thrones advance
Self-vanquished Nature's rockiest range
Gives way before them like the trance

Of one that wakes From morn to eve 5
Through fissured clefts her mists make way,
At Night's cold touch they freeze, and cleave
Her crags, and, with a Titan's sway,

Flake off and peel the rotting rocks,
And heap the glacier tide below 10
With isles of sand and floating blocks,
As leaves on streams when tempests blow

Lo, thus the great decree all-just,
O Earth, thy mountains hear; and learn

Turris Eburnea The title means The Ivory Tower This is an imaginary structure conceived of as an ideal of beauty and symmetry Cf Song of Solomon, 7 4—"Thy neck is as a tower of ivory"

19 Zion's height, the heavenly Jerusalem
Fest Puritatis The title means Festival of the Purification
This is a feast in commemoration of the ceremonial purification of the Virgin Mary, celebrated on February 2. See Leviticus, 12, and Luke, 2 22.

From fire and frost its import — "Dust 15
Thou art, and shalt to dust return."

He only is Who ever was—
The All-measuring Mind, the Will Supreme,
Rocks, mountains, worlds, like bubbles pass;
God is; the things not God but seem 20

SONG

Seek not the tree of silkiest bark
And balmiest bud
To carve her name, while yet 'tis dark,
Upon the wood!
The world is full of noble tasks, 5
And wreaths hard won;
Each work demands strong hearts, strong
hands,
Till day is done.

Sing not that violet-veined skin,
That cheek's pale roses; 10
The lily of that form wherein
Her soul reposes!
Forth to the fight, true man! true knight!
The clash of arms
Shall more prevail than whispered tale 15
To win her charms.

The warrior for the True, the Right,
Fights in Love's name;
The love that lures thee from the fight
Lures thee to shame; 20
That love which lifts the heart, yet leaves
The spirit free—
That love, or none, is fit for one Man-shaped like thee.

WILLIAM BARNES (1801-1886)

EASTER ZUNDAY

Last Easter Jim put on his blue
Frock cwoat, the vu'st time — vier new;
Wi' yollow buttons all o' brass,
That glittered in the zun lik' glass;
An' poked 'ithin the button-hole 5
A tutty he'd a-begged or stole.
A span-new wes'cot, too, he wore,
Wi' yollow stripes all down avore;
An' tied his breeches' lags below
The knee, wi' ribbon in a bow; 10
An' drowed his kitty-boots azide,
An' put his laggens on, an' tied

15-16 Dust . . . return From Ecclesiastes, 3 20 — "All go unto one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust
again"

Easter Zunday Many of Barnes's poems are written in the Dorset dialect

2 vu'st, first vier new, fire new, brand new 6 tut- ty, flower 11 drowed, threw kitty-boots, a kind of laced boots reaching up only over the ankles

His shoes wi' strings two vingers wide,
Because 'twer Easter Zunday

An' after mornén church wer out 15
He come back hwoome, an' strolled about
All down the vields, an' drough the leane,
Wi' sister Kit an' cousin Jeane,
A-turnén proudly to their view
His yollow breast an' back o' blue. 20
The lambs did play, the grounds wer green,
The trees did bud, the zun did sheen;
The lark did zing below the sky,
An' roads wer all a-blown so dry,
As if the zummer wer begun; 25
An' he had sich a bit o' fun!
He meade the maidens squeal an' run,
Because 'twer Easter Zunday. (1844)

EASTER MONDAY

An' zoo o' Monday we got drough
Our work betimes, an axed a vew
Young vo'k vrom Stowe an' Coom, an' zome
Vrom uncle's down at Grange, to come.
An' they so spry, wi' merry smiles, 5
Did beat the path an leap the stiles,
Wi' two or dree young chaps bezide,
To meet an' keep up Easter tide;
Vor we'd a-zaid avore, we'd git
Zome friends to come, an' have a bit 10
O' fun wi' me, an' Jeane, an' Kit,
Because 'twer Easter Monday.

An' there we played away at quaits,
An' weighed ourzelves wi' sceales an' waights,
An' jumped to zee who jumped the spryest,
An' sprung the vurdest an' the highest; 16
An' rung the bells vor vull an hour,
An' played at vives agean the tower.
An' then we went an' had a tait,
An' cousin Sammy, wi' his waight, 20
Broke off the bar, he wer so fat!
An' toppled off, an' vell down flat
Upon his head, an' squot his hat,
Because 'twer Easter Monday. (1844)

THE GIRT WOAK TREE THAT'S IN THE DELL

The girt woak tree that's in the dell!
There's noo tree I do love so well,
Vor times an' times when I wer young,
I there've a-climbed, an' there've a-zwung, 5
An' picked the eacorns green, a-shed
In wrestlén storms vrom his broad head
An' down below's the cloty brook
Where I did vish with line an' hook,

17 drough the leane, through the lane
Easter Monday 1 zoo, so 3 zome, some 18 vives, a game like handball 19 taut, a game of see-saw
The Girt Woak Tree That's in the Dell Girt woak, great
oak
6 wrestlén, wrestling 7 cloty, covered with water-lilies.

An' beat, in play'some dips and zwims,
The foamy stream, wi' white-skinned hm's. 10
An' there my mother numbly shot
Her knüttén-needles, as she zot
At evenén down below the wide
Woak's head, wi' father at her zide
An' I've a-played wi' many a bwoy, 15
That's now a man an' gone away,
Zoo I do like noo tree so well
'S the girt woak tree that's in the dell.

An' there, in leater years, I roved
Wi' thik poor maïd I fondly loved — 20
The maïd too feär to die so soon —
When evenén twilight, or the moon,
Cast light enough 'ithin the pleace
To show the smiles upon her feace,
Wi' eyes so clear's the glassy pool, 25
An' lips an' cheeks so soft as wool
There han' in han', wi' bosoms warm,
Wi' love that burned but thought noo harm,
Below the wide-boughed tree we past
The happy hours that went too vast; 30
An' though she'll never be my wife,
She's still my leaden star o' life.
She's gone, an' she've a-left to me
Her mem'ry in the girt woak tree;
Zoo I do love noo tree so well 35
'S the girt woak tree that's in the dell.

An' oh! mid never ax nor hook
Be brought to spweil his steately look;
Nor ever roun' his ribby zides
Mid cattle rub ther heäry hides; 40
Nor pigs rout up his turf, but keep
His lwonesome sheade vor harmless sheep;
An' let en grow, an' let en spread,
An' let en live when I be dead.
But oh! if men should come an' vell 45
The girt woak tree that's in the dell,
An' buïd his planks 'ithin the zide
O' some girt ship to plow the tide,
Then, life or death! I'd goo to sea,
A sailén wi' the girt woak tree; 50
An' I upon his planks would stand,
An' die a-fightén vor the land —
The land so dear — the land so free —
The land that bore the girt woak tree;
Vor I do love noo tree so well 55
'S the girt woak tree that's in the dell

JEANE'S WEDDEN DAY IN MORNEN

At last Jeäne come down stairs, a-drest
Wi' weddén knots upon her breast,
A-blushén, while a tear did lie
Upon her burnén cheäk half dry;
An' then her Robert, drawén nigh 5

Wi' tothers, took her han' wi' pride,
To meake her at the church his bride,
Her weddén day in mornén

Wi' litty voot an' beatén heart
She stepped up in the new light cart, 10
An' took her bridemaïd up to ride
Along wi' Robert at her zide;
An' uncle's meare looked roun' wi' pride
To zee that, if the cart wer vull,
'Twer Jenny that he had to pull, 15
Her weddén day in mornén.

An' aunt an' uncle stood stock-still,
An' watched em trottén down the hill;
An' when they turned off out o' groun'
Down into leane, two tears run down 20
Aunt's feace; an' uncle, turnén roun',
Sighed woonce, an' stumped off wi' his stick,
Because did touch en to the quick
To peart wi' Jeäne thik mornén.

"Now Jeäne's agone," Tom muttered, "we 25
Shall mwope lik' owls 'ithin a tree;
Vor she did zet us all agog
Vor fun, avore the burnén log."
An' as he zot an' talked, the dog
Put up his nose athirt his thighs, 30
But couldn meake en turn his eyes,
Jeane's weddén day in mornén.

An' then the naighbors round us, all
By woones an' twos begun to call,
To meet the young vo'k, when the meäre 35
Mid bring em back a married peäir;
An' all o'm zaid, to Robert's sheare,
There had a-vell the fearest feace,
An' kindest heart in all the pleace,
Jeäne's weddén day in mornén. (1844)

THE WOODLANDS

O spread agen your leaves an' flow'rs,
Luonesome woodlands! zunny woodlands!
Here underneath the dewy show'rs
O' warm-aired spring-time, zunny woodlands!
As when, in drong or oben groun', 5
Wi' happy buoyish heart I voun'
The twitt'ren birds a-buïlden roun'
Your high-boughed hedges, zunny woodlands!

Ya gie'd me life, ya gie'd me jay,
Luonesome woodlands! zunny woodlands!
Ya gie'd me health, as in my play 11

The Woodlands. 5 drong or oben groun', lane or open

I rambled droo ye, zunny woodlands!
 Ya gie'd me freedom var to rove
 In airy mead or sheady grove;
 Ya gie'd me smilen Fanny's love, 15
 The best ov all o't, zunny woodlands!

My vust shill skylark whivered high,
 Luonesome woodlands! zunny woodlands!
 To zing below your deep-blue sky
 An' white spring-clouds, O zunny woodlands! 20
 An' boughs o' trees that oonce stood here,
 Wer glossy green the happy year
 That gie'd me oon I loved so dear,
 An' now ha' lost, O zunny woodlands!

O let me rove agen unspied, 25
 Luonesome woodlands! zunny woodlands!
 Along your green-boughed hedges' zide,
 As then I rambled, zunny woodlands!
 An' where the missén trees oonce stood,
 Or tongues oonce rung among the wood, 30
 My memory shall mlike em good,
 Though you've a-lost em, zunny wood-

BLACKMWORE MAIDENS

The primrwose in the sheade do blow,
 The cowslip in the zun,
 The thyme upon the down do grow,
 The clote where streams do run;
 An' where do pretty maidens grow 5
 An' blow, but where the tow'r
 Do rise among the bricken tuns,
 In Blackmwore by the Stour.

If you could zee their comely gaît,
 An' pretty feaces' smiles, 10
 A-trippén on so light o' waight,
 An' steppén off the stiles;
 A-gwain to church, as bells do swing
 An' ring 'ithin the tow'r,
 You'd own the pretty maidens' pleace 15
 Is Blackmwore by the Stour.

If you vrom Wimborne took your road,
 To Stower or Paladore,
 An' all the farmers' housen showed
 Their daeters at the door, 20
 You'd cry to bachelors at hwome —

12 droo, through. 17 vust shill, first shrill whivered, hovered 29 missén, missing
Blackmwore Maidens Blackmoor is a hamlet in East
 Somerset, it is on the Stour River, which flows through Somerset and Dorset.

4 clote, water lily. 7, bricken tuns, chimneys made of bricks 17, Wimborne, a town in Dorset, on the Stour River 18 Stower, Paladore. East Stower and West
 Stower are villages about twenty miles northwest of Wimborne, Paladore is an old name for Shaftesbury, in North Dorset.

"Here, come, 'ithin an hour
 You'll vind ten maidens to your mind,
 In Blackmwore by the Stour"
 An' if you looked 'ithin their door, 25
 To zee 'em in their pleace,
 A-doén housework up avore
 Their smilen mother's feace,
 You'd cry — "Why, if a man would wive
 An' thrive, 'ithout a dow'r, 30
 Then let en look en out a wife
 In Blackmwore by the Stour."

As I upon my road did pass
 A school-house back in Maÿ,
 There out upon the beaten grass 35
 Wer maidens at their play;
 An' as the pretty souls did twile
 An' smile, I cried, "The flow'r
 O' beauty, then, is still in bud
 In Blackmwore by the Stour."

(1859)

THE SURPRISE

As there I left the road in May,
 And took my way along a ground,
 I found a glade with girls at play,
 By leafy boughs close-hemmed around,
 And there, with stores of harmless joys, 5
 They plied their tongues, in merry noise;
 Though little did they seem to fear
 So queer a stranger might be near,
Teeh-heel! Look herel! Hah! hal! Look there!
 And oh! so playsome, oh! so fair. 10

And one would dance as one would spring,
 Or bob or bow with leering smiles,
 And one would swing, or sit and sing,
 Or sew a stitch or two at whiles,
 And one skipped on with downcast face, 15
 All heedless, to my very place,
 And there, in fright, with one foot out,
 Made one dead step and turned about.
Heeh, hee, oh! oh! ooh! oo! — Look there!
 And oh! so playsome, oh! so fair. 20

Away they scampered all, full speed,
 By boughs that swung along their track,
 As rabbits out of wood at feed,
 At sight of men all scamper back,
 And one pulled on behind her heel, 25
 A thread of cotton, off her reel,
 And oh! to follow that white clue,
 I felt I fain could scamper too.
Teeh, hee, run here. Eehl eel! Look there!
 And oh! so playsome, oh! so fair. (1869)

37 twile, move about.

THE MOTHER'S DREAM

I'd a dream tonight
As I fell asleep —
Oh! the touching sight
Makes me still to weep —
Of my little lad, 5
Gone to leave me sad,
Aye, the child I had,
But was not to keep

As in heaven high,
I my child did seek, 10
There, in train, came by Children fair and meek,
Each in lily white,
With a lamp alight;
Each was clear to sight, 15
But they did not speak.

Then, a little sad,
Came my child in turn,
But the lamp he had,
Oh! it did not burn; 20
He, to clear my doubt,
Said, half turned about,
"Your tears put it out;
Mother, never mourn." (1869)

THE BROKEN JUG

JENNY AND TOM

(Tom idly swings about Jenny's jug, and breaks it against a stone.)

J. As if you could not leave the jug alone!
Now you have smacked my jug,
Now you have whacked my jug;
Now you have cracked my jug,
Against the stone. 5

T. The jug was cracked before, unknown to
you;
So don't belie the stone.
It scarce went nigh the stone;
It just went by the stone,
And broke in two. 10

J. Oh! cracked before! no! that was sound
enough,
From back to lip was sound,
To stand or tip was sound,
To hold or dip, was sound.
Don't talk such stuff. 15

T. How high then must I take its price to reach?
I'd buy some more as good;
I'd buy a score as good;
I'd buy a store as good;
For twopence each. 20

J. Indeed, when stonen jugs are sold so
dear!
No, there's a tap for lies;
And there's a slap for lies;
And there's a rap for lies,
About your ear. 25

T. Oh! there are pretty hands! a little dear!

AIRLY BEACON

Oh, the pleasant sight to see
Shires and towns from Airly Beacon,
While my love climbed up to me!

Airly Beacon, Airly Beacon; 5
Oh, the happy hours we lay
Deep in fern on Airly Beacon,
Courting through the summer's day!

Oh, the weary haunt for me, 10
All alone on Airly Beacon,
With his baby on my knee! (1847)

From THE SAINT'S TRAGEDY

WHEN I WAS A GREENHORN AND YOUNG

When I was a greenhorn and young,
And wanted to be and to do,
I puzzled my brains about choosing my line,
Till I found out the way that things go

The same piece of clay makes a tile, 5
A pitcher, a taw, or a brick.
Dan Horace knew life; you may cut out a
saint,
Or a bench, from the selfsame stick

The urchin who squalls in a gaol,
By circumstance turns out a rogue; 10
While the castle-born brat is a senator born,
Or a saint, if religion's in vogue

We fall on our legs in this world,
Blind kittens, tossed in neck and heels,

Airly Beacon This poem may refer to a hill in the parish of Airly, Forfarshire, Scotland, formerly used as a signal station

The Saint's Tragedy. This is a drama of the life of St Elizabeth of Hungary. The song given here is sung by the Fool to offset a song sung by one of the Saint's ladies who had learned it from a nun, formerly a shepherdess

6 taw, a marble used as a shooter 7 Horace, a famous Latin poet (65-8 B.C.), whose Satires give a complete and vivid picture of the life of his period. The title Dan is from Latin Dominus, meaning master.

'Tis Dame Circumstance licks Nature's cubs into shape — 15
She's the mill-head, if we are the wheels.

Then why puzzle and fret, plot and dream?
He that's wise will just follow his nose;
Contentedly fish, while he swims with the
stream,
'Tis no business of his where it goes 20
(1848; 1848)

From ALTON LOCKE

THE SANDS OF DEE

"O Mary, go and call the cattle home,
And call the cattle home,
And call the cattle home
Across the sands of Dec!"
The western wind was wild and dank with foam, 5
And all alone went she.

The western tide crept up along the sand,
And o'er and o'er the sand,
And round and round the sand,
As far as eye could see 10
The rolling must came down and hid the
land —
And never home came she

"Oh! is it weed, or fish, or floating hair —
A tress of golden hair,
A drowned maiden's hair 15
Above the nets at sea?
Was never salmon yet that shone so fair
Among the stakes on Dee "

They rowed her in across the rolling foam,
The cruel crawling foam, 20
The cruel hungry foam,
To her grave beside the sea;
But still the boatmen hear her call the cattle
home
Across the sands of Dee. (1849; 1850)

THE THREE FISHERS

Three fishers went sailing away to the West,
Away to the West as the sun went down,
Each thought on the woman who loved him
the best,

Alton Locke This is a novel presenting a study of industrial conditions in England. Because of its picture of Alton Locke and his radical Chartist friends, it won for Kingsley the title of "The Chartist Clergyman." See Meredith's The Old Chartist, page 592.

The Sands of Dee The Dee is a river in England and North Wales. This song, from Chapter 26, was composed by Alton Locke (the purported author of the novel) after he had heard a song about a drowned girl.

20-21 cruel foam See Ruskin's comment on these lines in Critical Notes.

And the children stood watching them out of the town;
For men must work, and women must weep,
And there's little to earn, and many to keep,
Though the harbor bar be moaning.

Three wives sat up in the lighthouse tower,
And they trimmed the lamps as the sun went
down;
They looked at the squall, and they looked at the shower, 10
And the night-rack came rolling up ragged and brown

But men must work, and women must weep,
Though storms be sudden, and waters deep,
And the harbor bar be moaning.

Three corpses lay out on the shining sands 15
In the morning gleam as the tide went
down,
And the women are weeping and wringing their hands
For those who will never come home to the town;

For men must work, and women must weep,
And the sooner it's over, the sooner to
sleep; 20
And good-by to the bar and its moaning (1851)

DOLCINO TO MARGARET

The world goes up and the world goes down,
And the sunshine follows the rain;
And yesterday's sneer and yesterday's frown
Can never come over again,
Sweet wife; 5
No never come over again

For woman is warm though man be cold,
And the night will hallow the day;
Till the heart which at even was weary and old
Can rise in the morning gay, 10
Sweet wife,
To its work in the morning gay. (1851)

THE OUBIT

It was an hairy oubit, sae proud he crept
along,
A feckless hairy oubit, and merrily he sang —
"My Minnie bade me bide at hame until I won my wings;
I shew her soon my soul's aboon the warks o'
creeping things "

Dolcino to Margaret Dolcino is a man's name. Compare the poem with Browning's Parling at Morning, page 205.

The Oubit The oubit is a woobut, a hairy caterpillar.
2 feckless, worthless.

This feckless hairy oubit cam' hirpling by the linn, ⁵
 A swirl o' wind cam' doun the glen, and blew that oubit in;
 O when he took the water, the saumon fry they rose,
 And tigg'd him a' to pieces sma', by head and tail and toes.

Tak' warning then, young poets a', by this poor oubit's shame,
 Though Pegasus may nicher loud, keep Pegasus at hame ¹⁰
 O haud your hands frae inkhorns, though a'
 the Muses woo;
 For critics lie, like saumon fry, to mak' their meals o' you

(1851)

A FAREWELL

TO C. E. G.

My fairest child, I have no song to give you;
 No lark could pipe in skies so dull and gray,
 Yet, if you will, one quiet hint I'll leave you,
 For every day.

I'll tell you how to sing a clearer carol ⁵
 Than lark who hails the dawn or breezy
 down;
 To earn yourself a purer poet's laurel
 Than Shakespeare's crown.

Be good, sweet maid, and let who can be clever,
 Do lovely things, not dream them, all day long; ¹⁰
 And so make Life, and Death, and that For Ever,
 One grand sweet song.

(1856)

THE LAST BUCCANEER

Oh, England is a pleasant place for them
 that's rich and high;
 But England is a cruel place for such poor folks as I;
 And such a port for mariners I ne'er shall see
 again,
 As the pleasant Isle of Avès, beside the Spanish main.

⁵ hirpling by the linn, crawling by the pool. ⁸ tigg'd, pulled, tore. ¹⁰ Pegasus, a fabled winged horse whose hoof caused the fountain of the Muses to spring forth from Mt. Helicon, in Greece. He is associated with poetic inspiration. nicher, neigh. The Last Buccaneer. Cf. Macaulay's The Last Buccaneer, page 2.

⁴ Isle of Avès, the Bird Islands, in the Venezuelan group of the West Indies. Spanish main, the southern portion of the Caribbean Sea. The phrase was applied also to the mainland of Spanish America from Panama to the Amazon River.

There were forty craft in Avès that were both swift and stout, ⁵
 All furnished well with small arms and cannons round about,
 And a thousand men in Avès made laws so fair and free
 To choose their valiant captains and obey them loyally.

Thence we sailed against the Spaniard with his hoards of plate and gold,
 Which he wrung by cruel tortures from Indian folk of old, ¹⁰
 Likewise the merchant captains, with hearts
 as hard as stone,
 Who flog men and keel-haul them, and starve
 them to the bone.

Oh, the palms grew high in Avès and fruits that shone like gold,
 And the colibris and parrots they were goi-
 geous to behold;
 And the negro maids to Avès from bondage fast did flee, ¹⁵
 To welcome gallant sailors a-sweeping in from
 sea

Oh, sweet it was in Avès to hear the landward
 breeze,
 A-swing with good tobacco in a net between the trees,
 With a negro lass to fan you while you listened to the roar
 Of the breakers on the reef outside, that never touched the shore. ²⁰

But Scripture saith, an ending to all fine things must be;
 So the King's ships sailed on Avès and quite put down were we.
 All day we fought like bulldogs, but they burst the booms at night;
 And I fled in a piragua, sore wounded, from the fight.

Nine days I floated starving, and a negro lass beside, ²⁵
 Till for all I tried to cheer her, the poor young thing she died;
 But as I lay a-gasping, a Bristol sail came by,
 And brought me home to England here, to beg until I die.

And now I'm old and going—I'm sure I can't tell where;
 One comfort is, this world's so hard, I can't be worse off there. ³⁰

¹² keel-haul, haul by ropes under the keel of a ship. This was a method of torture used by pirates. It was also a method of punishment once used in the Dutch and English navies. ¹⁴ colibris, humming-birds. ²¹ ending. . . be Cf. 1 Peter, 4. 7—"But the end of all things is at hand." ²⁴ piragua, a two-masted, flat-bottomed boat.

If I might but be a sea-dove, I'd fly across the main,
To the pleasant Isle of Avès, to look at it once again. (1856)

THE TIDE RIVER

Clear and cool, clear and cool,
By laughing shallow, and dreaming pool;
Cool and clear, cool and clear,
By shining shingle, and foaming weir,
Under the crag where the ouzel sings, 5
And the ivied wall where the church-bell
rings,
Undeified, for the undeified;
Play by me, bathe in me, mother and child.

Dank and foul, dank and foul,
By the smoky town in its murky cowl; 10
Foul and dank, foul and dank,
By wharf and sewer and slimy bank;
Darker and darker the further I go,
Baser and baser the richer I grow;
Who dare sport with the sin-defiled? 15
Shrink from me, turn from me, mother and
child.

Strong and free, strong and free,
The floodgates are open, away to the sea;
Free and strong, free and strong,
Cleansing my streams as I hurry along 20
To the golden sands and the leaping bar,
And the taintless tide that awaits me afar,
As I lose myself in the infinite main,
Like a soul that has sinned and is pardoned
again.

Undeified, for the undeified; 25
Play by me, bathe in me, mother and child

YOUNG AND OLD

When all the world is young, lad,
And all the trees are green;
And every goose a swan, lad,
And every lass a queen;
Then hey for boot and horse, lad, 5
And round the world away;
Young blood must have its course, lad,
And every dog his day

When all the world is old, lad,
And all the trees are brown, 10
And all the sport is stale, lad,
And all the wheels run down;

Creep home, and take your place there,
The spent and maimed among.
God grant you find one face there 15
You loved when all was young.
(1862; 1862)

LORRAINE, LORRAINE, LORRÈE

"Are you ready for your Steeple-chase, Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorrée?
Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum,
Barum, Barum, Baree
You're booked to ride your capping race
today at Coulterlee,
You're booked to ride Vindictive, for all the world to see,
To keep him straight, and keep him first, and win the run for me
Barum, Barum," etc.

She clasped her new-born baby, poor Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorrée.
"I cannot ride Vindictive, as any man might
see,
And I will not ride Vindictive, with this baby
on my knee,
He's killed a boy, he's killed a man, and why must he kill me?" 10

"Unless you ride Vindictive, Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorrée,
Unless you ride Vindictive today at Coulterlee,
And land him safe across the brook, and win
the blank for me,
It's you may keep your baby, for you'll get no keep from me."

"That husbands could be cruel," said Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorrée, 15
"That husbands could be cruel, I have known for seasons three;
But oh! to ride Vindictive while a baby cries
for me,
And be killed across a fence at last for all the world to see!"

She mastered young Vindictive — oh! the gallant lass was she!
And kept him straight and won the race as near as near could be, 20
But he killed her at the brook against a pollard willow tree;
Oh! he killed her at the brook, the brute, for all the world to see,
And no one but the baby cried for poor

IN A LECTURE-ROOM

Away, haunt thou not me,
Thou vain Philosophy!
Little hast thou bestead,
Save to perplex the head,
And leave the spirit dead. 5
Unto thy broken cisterns wherefore go,
While from the secret treasure-depths below,
Fed by the skyey shower,
And clouds that sink and rest on hilltops high,
Wisdom at once, and Power, 10
Are welling, bubbling forth, unseen, incessantly?
Why labor at the dull mechanic oar,
When the fresh breeze is blowing,
And the strong current flowing,
Right onward to the Eternal Shore? 15
(1840; 1849)

Τὸ καλόν

I have seen higher, holier things than these,
And therefore must to these refuse my heart,
Yet am I panting for a little ease;
I'll take, and so depart.

Ah, hold! the heart is prone to fall away, 5
Her high and cherished visions to forget,
And if thou takest, how wilt thou repay
So vast, so dread a debt?

How will the heart, which now thou trustest,
then
Corrupt, yet in corruption mindful yet, 10
Turn with sharp stings upon itself! Again,
Bethink thee of the debt!

— Hast thou seen higher, holier things than
these,
And therefore must to these thy heart
refuse?
With the true best, alack, how ill agrees 15
That best that thou would'st choose!

The Summum Pulchrum rests in heaven above;
Do thou, as best thou may'st, thy duty do

In a Lecture-Room. The first three lines of this poem are an echo of the opening lines of Milton's Il Penseroso—

"Hence, vain deluding Joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred!
How little you bested,
Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys"

Τὸ καλόν. The title means Moral Virtue

17 Summum Pulchrum, the highest beauty

Amid the things allowed thee, live and love;
Some day thou shalt it view. (1841; 1849)

QUA CURSUM VENTUS

As ships, becalmed at eve, that lay
With canvas drooping, side by side,
Two towers of sail at dawn of day
And scarce long leagues apart descried,

When fell the night, upsprung the breeze, 5
And all the darkling hours they plied,
Nor dreamt but each the self-same seas
By each was cleaving, side by side:

E'en so, but why the tale reveal
Of those, whom year by year unchanged, 10
Brief absence joined anew to feel,
Astounded, soul from soul estranged?

At dead of night their sails were filled,
And onward each rejoicing steered —
Ah, neither blame, for neither willed, 15
Or wist, what first with dawn appeared!

To veer, how vain! On, onward strain,
Brave barks! In light, in darkness too,
Through winds and tides one compass
guides—
To that, and your own selves, be true 20

But O blithe breeze; and O great seas,
Though ne'er, that earliest parting past,
On your wide plain they join again,
Together lead them home at last.

One port, methought, alike they sought, 25
One purpose hold where'er they fare —
O bounding breeze, O rushing seas!
At last, at last, unite them there! (1849)

"WEN GOTT BETRÜGT, IST WOHL BETROGEN"

Is it true, ye gods, who treat us
As the gambling fool is treated;
O ye, who ever cheat us,
And let us feel we're cheated!
Is it true that poetical power, 5
The gift of heaven, the dower
Of Apollo and the Nine,

Qua Cursum Ventus The title means As the Wind Blows, So the Vessel Takes Its Course The words are taken from Virgil's Aeneid, 3, 269 The poem suggests the break between Clough and W G Ward (1812-82), a religious thinker who became a Roman Catholic in 1845

"Wen Gott Betrügt, Ist Wohl Betrogen" The title means He Whom God Deludes Is Well Deluded. This is an old German proverb found in a collection published by Johannes Agricola (1520-48) See Dipsychus, 94-97, page 408

7 Apollo and the Nine. Apollo was the god of poetry and music For the Nine Muses see note on In the Depths 2, page 404.

The inborn sense, "the vision and the faculty
divine,"
All we glorify and bless
In our rapturous exaltation, 10
All invention, and creation,
Exuberance of fancy, and sublime imagination,
All a poet's fame is built on,
The fame of Shakespeare, Milton,
Of Wordsworth, Byron, Shelley, 15
Is in reason's grave precision,
Nothing more, nothing less,
Than a peculiar conformation,
Constitution, and condition
Of the brain and of the belly? 20
Is it true, ye gods who cheat us?
And that's the way ye treat us?

Oh, say it, all who think it,
Look straight, and never blink it!
If it is so, let it be so, 25
And we will all agree so;
But the plot has counterplot,
It may be, and yet be not. (1849)

THE NEW SINAI

Lo, here is God, and there is God!
Believe it not, O Man;
In such vain sort to this and that
The ancient heathen ran:
Though Old Religion shake her head, 5
And say in bitter grief,
The day behold, at first foretold,
Of atheist unbelief:
Take better part, with manly heart,
Thine adult spirit can; 10
Receive it not, believe it not,
Believe it not, O Man!

As men at dead of night awaked
With cries, "The king is here,"
Rush forth and greet whome'er they meet, 15
Whoe'er shall first appear,
And still repeat, to all the street,
" 'Tis he — the king is here",
The long procession moveth on,
Each nobler form they see, 20
With changeful suit they still salute
And cry, " 'Tis he, 'tis he"

So, even so, when men were young,
And earth and heaven were new,
And His immediate presence He 25

From human hearts withdrew,
The soul perplexed and daily vexed
With sensuous False and True,
Amazed, bereaved, no less believed,
And fain would see Him too. 30
"He is!" the prophet-tongues proclaimed;
In joy and hasty fear,
"He is!" aloud replied the crowd,
"Is here, and here, and here."

"He is! They are!" in distance seen 35
On yon Olympus high,
In those Avernian woods abide
And walk this azure sky;
"They are! They are!" — to every show
Its eyes the baby turned, 40
And blazes sacrificial, tall,
On thousand altars burned;
"They are! They are!" — On Sinai's top
Far seen the lightnings shone,
The thunder broke, a trumpet spoke, 45
And God said, "I am One."

God spake it out, "I, God, am One";
The unheeding ages ran.
And baby-thoughts again, again,
Have dogged the growing man; 50
And as of old from Sinai's top
God said that God is One,
By Science strict so speaks He now
To tell us, There is None!
Earth goes by chemic forces, Heaven's 55
A Mécanique Céleste!
And heart and mind of human kind
A watch-work as the rest!

Is this a Voice, as was the Voice,
Whose speaking told abroad, 60
When thunder pealed, and mountain reeled,
The ancient truth of God?
Ah, not the Voice, 'tis but the cloud,
The outer-darkness dense,
Where image none, nor e'er was seen 65
Similitude of sense.
'Tis but the cloudy darkness dense
That wrapped the Mount around;
While in amaze the people stays,
To hear the Coming Sound. 70

Is there no prophet-soul the while
To dare, sublimely meek,
Within the shroud of blackest cloud
The Deity to seek?

8 the vision . . . divine. From Wordsworth's Excursion, 1, 79

The New Sinai Sinai was the mountain upon which God appeared to Moses and gave him the Ten Commandments See Exodus, 19, 20, and 34 Clough's poem bears upon the conflict that raged in his day between science and religion

36 Olympus, Mt. Olympus, in Greece, the fabled home of the Greek gods 37 Avernian woods, on the shore of Lake Avernus, nine miles west of Naples, Italy The lake is supposed to fill the crater of an extinct volcano regarded as the entrance to the infernal regions 43-46 On Sinai's top, etc From Exodus, 19 16 — "There were thunders, and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud, so that all the people trembled" 56 Mécanique Céleste, a celestial mechanism

'Midst atheistic systems dark,
 And darker hearts' despair,
 That soul has heard perchance His word,
 And on the dusky air
 His skirts, as passed He by, to see
 Hath strained on their behalf,
 Who on the plain, with dance amain,
 Adore the Golden Calf.

'Tis but the cloudy darkness dense;
 Though blank the tale it tells,
 No God, no Truth! yet He, in sooth,
 Is there — within it dwells;
 Within the skeptic darkness deep
 He dwells that none may see,
 Till idol forms and idle thoughts
 Have passed and ceased to be No God, no Truth! ah, though, in sooth
 So stand the doctrine's half;
 On Egypt's track return not back,
 Nor own the Golden Calf.

Take better part, with manlier heart,
 Thine adult spirit can;
 No God, no Truth, receive it ne'er —
 Believe it ne'er — O Man!
 But turn not then to seek again
 What first the ill began;
 No God, it saith; ah, wait in faith
 God's self-completing plan;
 Receive it not, leave it not,
 And wait it out, O Man!

"The Man that went the cloud within
 Is gone and vanished quite;
 He cometh not," the people cries,
 "Nor bringeth God to sight.
 Lo, these thy gods, that safety give,
 Adore and keep the feast!"
 Deluding and deluded, cries
 The Prophet's brother-Priest;
 And Israel all bows down to fall
 Before the gilded beast.

Devout, indeed! that priestly creed,
 O Man, reject as sin;
 The clouded hill attend thou still,
 And him that went within
 He yet shall bring some worthy thing
 For waiting souls to see;
 Some sacred word that he hath heard
 Their light and life shall be;
 Some lofty part, than which the heart
 Adopt no nobler can,
 Thou shalt receive, thou shalt believe
 And thou shalt do, O Man! (1845; 1862)

THE QUESTIONING SPIRIT

The human spirits saw I on a day,
 Sitting and looking each a different way;
 And hardly tasking, subtly questioning,
 Another spirit went around the ring
 To each and each And as he ceased his say,
 Each after each, I heard them singly sing, 6
 Some querulously high, some softly, sadly
 low,
 We know not — what avails to know?
 We know not — wherefore need we know?
 This answer gave they still unto his suing, 10
 We know not, let us do as we are doing.
 Dost thou not know that these things only
 seem? —
 I know not, let me dream my dream.
 Are dust and ashes fit to make a treasure? —

I know not, let me take my pleasure. 15
 What shall avail the knowledge thou hast
 sought? —
 I know not, let me think my thought.
 What is the end of strife? —
 I know not, let me live my life.
 How many days or e'er thou mean'st to
 move? — 20

I know not, let me love my love.
 Were not things old once new? —
 I know not, let me do as others do
 And when the rest were over past,
 I know not, I will do my duty, said the last

Thy duty do? rejoined the voice, 26
 Ah, do it, do it, and rejoice,
 But shalt thou then, when all is done,
 Enjoy a love, embrace a beauty
 Like these, that may be seen and won 30
 In life, whose course will then be run;
 Or wilt thou be where there is none?
 I know not, I will do my duty.

And taking up the word around, above, below,
 Some querulously high, some softly, sadly low,
 We know not, sang they all, nor ever need
 we know. 36
 We know not, sang they, what avails to know?
 Whereat the questioning spirit, some short space,
 Though unabashed, stood quiet in his place
 But as the echoing chorus died away 40
 And to their dreams the rest returned apace,
 By the one spirit I saw him kneeling low,
 And in a silvery whisper heard him say:
 Truly, thou know'st not, and thou need'st
 not know;
 Hope only, hope thou, and believe alway, 45
 I also know not, and I need not know,
 Only with questionings pass I to and fro,
 Perplexing these that sleep, and in their folly
 Imbreeding doubt and skeptic melancholy,

82 Golden Calf, an image made by Aaron and worshipped by the Israelites (Exodus, 32 1-4). 105 Man, Moses 112 brother-Priest, Aaron.

Till that, their dreams deserting, they with
me 50
Come all to this true ignorance and thee.
(r847; r862)

BETHESDA

A SEQUEL

I saw again the spirits on a day,
Where on the earth in mournful case they
lay,
Five porches were there, and a pool, and
round,
Huddling in blankets, strewn upon the ground,
Tied-up and bandaged, weary, sore, and
spent, 5
The maimed and halt, diseased and impotent.

For a great angel came, 'twas said, and stirred
The pool at certain seasons, and the word
Was, with this people of the sick, that they Who in the waters here their limbs should
lay 10
Before the motion on the surface ceased
Should of their torment straightway be released.
So with shrunk bodies and with heads down-
dropped,
Stretched on the steps, and at the pillars
propped,
Watching by day and listening through the
night, 15
They filled the place, a miserable sight.

And I beheld that on the stony floor
He too, that spoke of duty once before,
No otherwise than others here today,
Foredone and sick and sadly muttering lay 20
"I know not, I will do — what is it I would
say;

What was that word which once sufficed alone
for all,
Which now I seek in vain, and never can recall?"

And then, as weary of in vain renewing
His question, thus his mournful thought pursuing, 25
"I know not, I must do as other men are doing."

But what the waters of that pool might be,
Of Lethe were they, or Philosophy;
And whether he, long waiting, did attain
Deliverance from the burden of his pain 30
There with the rest; or whether, yet before,

Bethesda Bethesda is the name of a pool near Jerusalem, said to have curative powers (See John, 5 1-9) This poem is a sequel to The Questioning Spirit

28 Lethe, the river of forgetfulness, in Hades

Some more diviner stranger passed the door
With his small company into that sad place,
And breathing hope into the sick man's face,
Bade him take up his bed, and rise and go, 35
What the end were, and whether it were so,
Further than this I saw not, neither know.
(r849; r862)

PESCHIERA

What voice did on my spirit fall,
Peschiera, when thy bridge I crost?
" 'Tis better to have fought and lost,
Than never to have fought at all "

The tricolor — a trampled rag — 5
Lies, dirt and dust; the lines I track
By sentry boxes yellow-black,
Lead up to no Italian flag.

I see the Croat soldier stand
Upon the grass of your redoubts; 10
The eagle with his black wings flouts
The breadth and beauty of your land.

Yet not in vain, although in vain,
O men of Brescia, on the day
Of loss past hope, I heard you say 15
Your welcome to the noble pain

You say, "Since so it is — good-by,
Sweet life, high hope; but whatsoe'er
May be, or must, no tongue shall dare
To tell, 'The Lombard feared to die!' " 20

You said (there shall be answer fit),
"And if our children must obey,
They must; but thinking on this day
'Twill less debase them to submit "

You said (oh, not in vain you said), 25
"Haste, brothers, haste, while yet we may,
The hours ebb fast of this one day
When blood may yet be nobly shed."

Ah! not for idle hatred, not
For honor, fame, nor self-applause, 30
But for the glory of the cause,
You did what will not be forgot.

35 take up . . . go, the command of Jesus to the sick man by the pool (John, 5 5-9)

Peschiera Peschiera is a fortified town in the province of Verona, Italy The poem refers to a defeat of the Italians in their struggle for freedom from Austria

3-4 'Tis better, etc Cf Tennyson's In Memoriam, 27, lines 15-16, page 64 5. The tricolor, the flag of Italy—red, white, and green 9 Croat, a native of Croatia, a part of Jugo-Slavia Croatia was formerly a province of Hungary 11 eagle, on the standard of the Croats 14
Brescia, an ancient city in Italy, at the foot of the Alps
20 Lombard, a native of Lombardy, in northern Italy

And though the stranger stand, 'tis true,
By force and fortune's right he stands;
By fortune, which is in God's hands, 35
And strength, which yet shall spring in you

This voice did on my spirit fall,
Peschiera, when thy bridge I crost,
" 'Tis better to have fought and lost,
Than never to have fought at all " 40
(1849; 1862)

ALTERAM PARTEM

Or shall I say, Vain word, false thought,
Since Prudence hath her martyrs too,
And Wisdom dictates not to do,
Till doing shall be not for naught?

Not ours to give or lose is life; 5
Will Nature, when her brave ones fall,
Remake her work? or songs recall
Death's victim slain in useless strife?

That rivers flow into the sea
Is loss and waste, the foolish say, 10
Nor know that back they find their way,
Unseen, to where they went to be.

Showers fall upon the hills, springs flow,
The river runneth still at hand,
Brave men are born into the land, 15
And whence the foolish do not know.

No! no vain voice did on me fall,
Peschiera, when thy bridge I crost,
" 'Tis better to have fought and lost,
Than never to have fought at all " 20
(1849, 1862)

IN THE DEPTHS

It is not sweet content, be sure,
That moves the nobler Muse to song,
Yet when could truth come whole and pure
From hearts that inly writhe with wrong?

'Tis not the calm and peaceful breast 5
That sees or reads the problem true;
They only know, on whom 't has prest
Too hard to hope to solve it too.

Alteram Partem The title means On the Other Side
18 Peschiera. See note on previous poem
In the Depths 2 nobler Muse, Melpomene, the muse of epic poetry, Clio, history, Euterpe, lyric poetry, Terpsichore, choral dance and song, Erato, love poetry; Polyhymnia, sacred poetry, Urania, astronomy, and Thalia, comedy

Our ills are worse than at their ease
These blameless happy souls suspect; 10
They only study the disease,
Alas, who live not to detect. (1849; 1862)

EASTER DAY

NAPLES, 1849

Through the great sinful streets of Naples as I passed,
With fiercer heat than flamed above my
head
My heart was hot within me; till at last
My brain was lightened when my tongue had said —
Christ is not risen! 5
Christ is not risen, no —
He lies and molders low;
Christ is not risen!

What though the stone were rolled away, and though
The grave found empty there? — 10
If not there, then elsewhere;
If not where Joseph laid Him first, why then
Where other men
Translaid Him after, in some humbler clay
Long ere today 15
Corruption that sad perfect work hath done,
Which here she scarcely, lightly had begun,
The foul engendered worm
Feeds on the flesh of the life-giving form
Of our most Holy and Anointed One. 20
He is not risen, no —
He lies and molders low;
Christ is not risen!

What if the women, ere the dawn was gray,
Saw one or more great angels, as they say 25
(Angels, or Him himself)? Yet neither there, nor then,
Nor afterwards, nor elsewhere, nor at all,
Hath He appeared to Peter or the Ten;
Nor save in thunderous terror, to blind Saul,
Save in an after Gospel and late Creed, 30
He is not risen, indeed —
Christ is not risen!

Easter Day Clough was in Naples on Easter Day, 1849
12 where . . . laid Him first, in Joseph's tomb (Matthew, 27 57-60) 24-25. women . . . angels. See Matthew, 28, Mark, 16 5, Luke, 24 4, John, 20 22. 28 Peter . . . Ten
After the Resurrection, as reported in John 21, Christ appeared to Peter and the other disciples on the shore of the Sea of Galilee (See Luke, 24 34-43; John, 20 19-25) 29
Saul While Saul was on the road to Damascus, "suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him,
'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?'" (Acts, 9 3-4) 30 late Creed. The Resurrection of Christ was affirmed in the creed adopted by a church council held at Nicea, an ancient city of Asia Minor, in 325 A.D. It is also a part of the so-called Apostles' Creed, of unknown origin, dating possibly from the second century.

Or, what if e'en, as runs a tale, the Ten
Saw, heard, and touched, again and yet again?
What if at Emmaüs' inn, and by Capernaum's Lake, 35

Came One, the bread that brake —
Came One that spake as never mortal spake,
And with them ate, and drank, and stood,
and walked about?

Ah? "some" did well to "doubt"!
Ah! the true Christ, while these things came to pass, 40

Nor heard, nor spake, nor walked, nor lived alas!

He was not risen, no —
He lay and moldered low,
Christ was not risen!

As circulates in some great city crowd 45
A rumor, changeful, vague, importunate, and
loud,

From no determined center or of fact
Or authorship exact,
Which no man can deny
Nor verify; 50

So spread the wondrous fame,
He all the same
Lay senseless, moldering, low:
He was not risen, no —
Christ was not risen! 55

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust;
As of the unjust, also of the just —
Yea, of that Just One, too!
This is the one sad Gospel that is true —
Christ is not risen! 60

Is He not risen, and shall we not rise?
Oh, we unwise!
What did we dream, what wake we to discover?

Ye hills, fall on us, and ye mountains, cover!
In darkness and great gloom 65
Come ere we thought it is our day of doom,
From the cursed world, which is one tomb,
Christ is not risen!

Eat, drink, and play, and think that this is
bliss:

There is no heaven but this; 70
There is no hell,
Save earth, which serves the purpose doubly
well,

33-34 Ten saw, etc., as in the account recorded in Luke, 24 36-48 35 Emmaus, a village near Jerusalem After the Resurrection Christ appeared to two of his disciples on the road to Emmaus, walked with them to the village, and tarried with them during part of the night (Luke, 24 13-31, John, 21 1-24) Capernaum's Lake, the Sea of Galilee, bordering the city of Capernaum 39 "some" . . . "doubt" "And when they saw him, they worshiped him, but some doubted" (Matthew, 28 17) 56 Ashes . . . dust, words of the burial service

Seeing it visits still
With equallest apportionment of ill
Both good and bad alike, and brings to one same dust 75

The unjust and the just
With Christ, who is not risen.

Eat, drink, and die, for we are souls bereaved;
Of all the creatures under heaven's wide cope
We are most hopeless, who had once most
hope, 80

And most beliefless, that had most believed
Ashes to ashes, dust to dust;
As of the unjust, also of the just —
Yea, of that Just One too!
It is the one sad Gospel that is true — 85
Christ is not risen!

Weep not beside the tomb,
Ye women, unto whom
He was great solace while ye tendered him,
Ye who with napkin o'er the head 90
And folds of linen round each wounded limb
Laid out the Sacred Dead;
And thou that bar'st Him in thy wondering womb;
Yea, Daughters of Jerusalem, depart,
Bind up as best ye may your own sad bleeding
heart. 95

Go to your homes, your living children tend,
Your earthly spouses love;
Set your affections not on things above,
Which moth and rust corrupt, which quick-
liest come to end;
Or pray, if pray ye must, and pray, if pray
ye can, 100
For death; since dead is He whom ye deemed more than man,
Who is not risen: no —
But lies and molders low —
Who is not risen!

Ye men of Galilee! 105
Why stand ye looking up to heaven, where
Him ye ne'er may see,
Neither ascending hence, nor returning hither
again?

Ye ignorant and idle fishermen!
Hence to your huts, and boats, and inland native shore,
And catch not men, but fish; 110
Whate'er things ye might wish,
Him neither here nor there ye e'er shall meet with more

98-99 Set . . . corrupt From Matthew, 6 20 — "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt" 110 catch not men Jesus found Simon and Andrew casting a net into the sea, "for they were fishers And Jesus said unto them, 'Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men'" (Mark, 1 16-17).

Ye poor deluded youths, go home,
Mend the old nets ye left to roam,
Tie the split oar, patch the torn sail; 115
It was indeed an "idle tale" —
He was not risen!

And, oh, good men of ages yet to be,
Who shall believe because ye did not see —
Oh, be ye warned, be wise! 120
Nor more with pleading eyes,
And sobs of strong desire,
Unto the empty vacant void aspire,
Seeking another and impossible birth
That is not of your own, and only mother
earth. 125

But if there is no other life for you,
Sit down and be content, since this must even do;

He is not risen!
One look, and then depart,
Ye humble and ye holy men of heart; 130
And ye! ye ministers and stewards of a Word
Which ye would preach, because another
heard —

Ye worshipers of that ye do not know,
Take these things hence and go —
He is not risen! 135

Here, on our Easter Day
We rise, we come, and lo! we find Him not,
Gardener nor other, on the sacred spot.
Where they have laid Him there is none to
say;

No sound, nor in, nor out — no word 140
Of where to seek the dead or meet the living
Lord

There is no glistening of an angel's wings,
There is no voice of heavenly clear behest.
Let us go hence, and think upon these things
In silence, which is best. 145

Is He not risen? No —
But lies and molders low?
Christ is not risen? (1849; 1869)

EASTER DAY

II

So in the sinful streets, abstracted and alone,
I with my secret self held communing of mine own

So in the southern city spake the tongue
Of one that somewhat overwildly sung,
But in a later hour I sat and heard 5
Another voice that spake — another graver
word.

Weep not, it bade, whatever hath been said,
Though He be dead, He is not dead

In the true creed
He is yet risen indeed; 10
Christ is yet risen.

Weep not beside His Tomb,
Ye women unto whom
He was great comfort and yet greater grief,
Nor ye, ye faithful few that wont with Him
to roam, 15

Seek sadly what for Him ye left, go hopeless to your home;

Nor ye despair, ye sharers yet to be of their
belief;

Though He be dead, He is not dead,
Nor gone, though fled,
Not lost, though vanished; 20

Though He return not, though
He lies and molders low;
In the true creed
He is yet risen indeed;
Christ is yet risen. 25

Sit if ye will, sit down upon the ground,
Yet not to weep and wail, but calmly look around

Whate'er befell,
Earth is not hell;

Now, too, as when it first began, 30
Life is yet life, and man is man.

For all that breathe beneath the heaven's high cope,

Joy with grief mixes, with despondence hope.
Hope conquers cowardice, joy grief,
Or at least, faith unbelief. 35

Though dead, not dead;
Not gone, though fled;
Not lost, though vanished.

In the great gospel and true creed,
He is yet risen indeed; 40
Christ is yet risen.

From DIPSYCHUS

From PART I, SCENE II

"There is no God," the wicked saith,
"And truly it's a blessing,
For what He might have done with us
It's better only guessing"

"There is no God," a youngster thinks, 5
"Or really, if there may be,
He surely did not mean a man
Always to be a baby."

"There is no God, or if there is,"
The tradesman thinks, "'twere funny 10

Dipsychus This poem consists of a series of conversations between Dipsychus and a Mephistophelian Spirit. They go together about Venice, apparently to see the sights, and whenever they come to a well-known place they stop and converse.
See Critical Notes

1 "There is no God." See note on line 1, The Cry of the Human, page 359. This poem is spoken by the Spirit to Dipsychus, who had been troubled all night by a dream in which a bell kept tolling out the words, "There is no God!"

If He should take it ill in me
To make a little money "

"Whether there be," the rich man says,
"It matters very little,
For I and mine, thank somebody,
Are not in want of victual."

Some others, also, to themselves,
Who scarce so much as doubt it,
Think there is none, when they are well
And do not think about it

But country folks who live beneath
The shadow of the steeple;
The parson and the parson's wife,
And mostly married people;

Youths green and happy in first love,
So thankful for illusion;
And men caught out in what the world
Calls guilt, in first confusion;

And almost everyone when age,
Disease, or sorrows strike him,
Inclines to think there is a God,
Or something very like Him. (1849; 1862)

From PART II

SCENE II — In a Gondola

Sp. Per ora To the Grand Canal
Afterwards e'en as fancy shall.

Di. Afloat; we move. Delicious! Ah,
What else is like the gondola?
This level floor of liquid glass
Begins beneath us swift to pass.
It goes as though it went alone
By some impulsion of its own.
How light it moves, how softly! Ah,
Were all things like the gondola!

How light it moves, how softly! Ah,
Could life, as does our gondola,
Unvexed with quarrels, aims, and cares,
And moral duties and affairs,
Unswaying, noiseless, swift and strong,
Forever thus — thus glide along!
(How light we move, how softly! Ah,
Were life but as the gondola!)

With no more motion than should bear
A freshness to the languid air,
With no more effort than exprest
The need and naturalness of rest,

Part II, Scene II. In a Gondola 1 Per ora, now, for the time being

Which we beneath a grateful shade
Should take on peaceful pillows laid!
(How light we move, how softly! Ah,
Were life but as the gondola!)

15 In one unbroken passage borne
To closing night from opening morn,
Uplift at whiles slow eyes to mark
Some palace front, some passing bark;
Through windows catch the varying shore,
And hear the soft turns of the oar!
20 (How light we move, how softly! Ah,
Were life but as the gondola!)

So live, nor need to call to mind 35
Our slaving brother here behind!

Sp. Pooh! Nature meant him for no better
Than our most humble menial debtor:
Who thanks us for his day's employment
As we our purse for our enjoyment. 40

Di. To make one's fellow-man an instrument —

Sp. Is just the thing that makes him most content.

Di. Our gayeties, our luxuries,
Our pleasures and our glee,
Mere insolence and wantonness, 45
Alas! they feel to me.

Life—it is beautiful truly, my brothers, I grant it you duly;
But for perfection attaining is one method
only, abstaining;
5 Let us abstain, for we should so, if only we thought that we could so.

Sp. Bravo, bravissimo! this time though 50
You rather were run short for rime though,
Not that on that account your verse
Could be much better or much worse.

This world is very odd, we see;
We do not comprehend it; 55
But in one fact we all agree —
God won't, and we can't, mend it.

Being common-sense, it can't be sin
To take it as I find it,
The pleasure to take pleasure in, 60
The pain, try not to mind it

Di. O let me love my love unto myself
alone,
And know my knowledge to the world unknown;
No witness to the vision call,

Beholding, unbeheld of all; 65
 And worship thee, with thee withdrawn,
 apart,
 Whoe'er, whate'er thou art,
 Within the closest veil of mine own inmost
 heart.

Better it were, thou sayest, to consent,
 Feast while we may, and live ere life be spent,
 Close up clear eyes, and call the unstable
 sure, 71

The unlovely lovely, and the filthy pure,
 In self-belyings, self-deceivings roll,
 And lose in Action, Passion, Talk, the soul.

Nay, better far to mark off thus much air, 75
 And call it heaven; place bliss and glory
 there,

Fix perfect homes in the unsubstantial sky,
 And say, what is not, will be by-and-by,
 What here exists not must exist elsewhere.
 But play no tricks upon thy soul, O man; 80
 Let fact be fact, and life the thing it can

Sp. To these remarks so sage and clerkly,
 Worthy of Malebranche or Berkeley,
 I trust it won't be deemed a sin
 If I too answer "with a grin" 85

These juicy meats, this flashing wine,
 May be an unreal mere appearance;
 Only — for my inside, in fine,
 They have a singular coherence

Oh, yes, my pensive youth, abstain, 90
 And any empty sick sensation,
 Remember, anything like pain
 Is only your imagination.

Trust me, I've read your German sage
 To far more purpose e'er than you did; 95
 You find it in his wisest page,
 Whom God deludes is well deluded

Di. Where are the great, whom thou would'st wish to praise thee?
 Where are the pure, whom thou would'st
 choose to love thee?
 Where are the brave, to stand supreme above
 thee, 100
 Whose high commands would cheer, whose chiding raise thee?
 Seek, seeker, in thyself; submit to find
 In the stones, bread, and life in the blank
 mind.

82 clerkly, wise, learned 83 Malebranche, a famous French philosopher (1638-1715) Berkeley, George Berkeley (1685-1753), a noted English philosopher, political economist, and bishop 97 Whom . . . deluded. Cf. "Wen Gott Betrug," page 400.

(Written in London, standing in the Park,
 One evening in July, just before dark.) 105

Sp. As I sat at the café, I said to myself,
 They may talk as they please about what
 they call pelf,
 They may sneer as they like about eating
 and drinking,
 But help it I cannot, I cannot help thinking,
 How pleasant it is to have money, heigh-ho!
 How pleasant it is to have money. 111

I sit at my table en grand seigneur,
 And when I have done, throw a crust to the
 poor;
 Not only the pleasure, one's self, of good living, 114
 But also the pleasure of now and then giving
 So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
 So pleasant it is to have money.

It was but last winter I came up to town,
 But already I'm getting a little renown, 119
 I make new acquaintance where'er I appear,
 I am not too shy, and have nothing to fear.
 So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
 So pleasant it is to have money.

I drive through the streets, and I care not a d—n;
 The people they stare, and they ask who I
 am, 125
 And if I should chance to run over a cad,
 I can pay for the damage if ever so bad
 So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
 So pleasant it is to have money.

We stroll to our box and look down on the pit, 130
 And if it weren't low should be tempted to spit;
 We loll and we talk until people look up,
 And when it's half over we go out to sup.
 So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
 So pleasant it is to have money 135

The best of the tables and the best of the fare —
 And as for the others, the devil may care;
 It isn't our fault if they dare not afford
 To sup like a prince and be drunk as a lord.
 So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
 So pleasant it is to have money. 141

We sit at our tables and tippie champagne;
 Ere one bottle goes, comes another again;
 The waiters they skip and they scuttle about,
 And the landlord attends us so civilly out 145

So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
So pleasant it is to have money.

It was but last winter I came up to town,
But already I'm getting a little renown;
I get to good houses without much ado, 150
Am beginning to see the nobility too
So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
So pleasant it is to have money.

O dear! what a pity they ever should lose it!
For they are the gentry that know how to use it; 155
So grand and so graceful, such manners, such dinner,
But yet, after all, it is we are the winners.
So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
So pleasant it is to have money.

Thus I sat at my table en grand seigneur, 160
And when I had done threw a crust to the
poor,
Not only the pleasure, one's self, of good eating,
But also the pleasure of now and then treating
So pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
So pleasant it is to have money. 165

They may talk as they please about what
they call pelf,
And how one ought never to think of one's
self,
And how pleasures of thought surpass eating
and drinking—
My pleasure of thought is the pleasure of thinking
How pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
How pleasant it is to have money. 171

(Written in Venice, but for all parts true,
'Twas not a crust I gave him, but a sou)

A gondola here, and a gondola there,
'Tis the pleasantest fashion of taking the air
To right and to left, stop, turn, and go
yonder, 176
And let us repeat, o'er the tide as we wander,
How pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
How pleasant it is to have money.

Come, leave your Gothic, worn-out story,
San Giorgio and the Redentore; 181
I from no building, gay or solemn,

Can spare the shapely Grecian column
'Tis not, these centuries four, for naught
Our European world of thought 185
Hath made familiar to its home
The classic mind of Greece and Rome,
In all new work that would look forth
To more than antiquarian worth,
Palladio's pediments and bases, 190
Or something such, will find their places:
Maturer optics don't delight
In childish dim religious light,
In evanescent vague effects
That shirk, not face, one's intellects; 195
They love not fancies just betrayed,
And artful tricks of light and shade,
But pure form nakedly displayed,
And all things absolutely made
The Doge's palace though, from hence,
In spite of doctrinaire pretense, 201
The tide now level with the quay,
Is certainly a thing to see.
We'll turn to the Rialto soon;
One's told to see it by the moon. 205

A gondola here, and a gondola there,
'Tis the pleasantest fashion of taking the air
To right and to left, stop, turn, and go
yonder,
And let us reflect, o'er the flood as we wander,
How pleasant it is to have money, heigh ho!
How pleasant it is to have money. 211

Di How light we go, how soft we skim,
And all in moonlight seem to swim!
The south side rises o'er our bark,
A wall impenetrably dark; 215
The north is seen profusely bright;
The water, is it shade or light?
Say, gentle moon, which conquers now
The flood, those massy hulls, or thou?
(How light we go, how softly! Ah, 220
Were life but as the gondola!)

How light we go, how soft we skim,
And all in moonlight seem to swim!
In moonlight is it now, or shade?
In planes of sure division made, 225
By angles sharp of palace walls
The clear light and the shadow falls;
O sight of glory, sight of wonder!
Seen, a pictorial portent, under,
O great Rialto, the vast round 230
Of thy thrice-solid arch profound!

(How light we go, how softly! Ah,
Life should be as the gondola!)

How light we go, how softly —

Sp. Nay;
'Fore heaven, enough of that today. 235
I'm deadly weary of your tune,
And half-ennuyé with the moon;
The shadows lie, the glories fall,
And are but moonshine, after all.
It goes against my conscience really 240
To let myself feel so ideally.
Come, for the Piazzetta steer;
'Tis nine o'clock or very near.
These airy blisses, skyey joys
Of vague romantic girls and boys, 245
Which melt the heart and the brain soften,
When not affected, as too often
They are, remind me, I protest,
Of nothing better at the best
Than Timon's feast to his ancient lovers, 250
Warm water under silver covers,
"Lap, dogs!" I think I hear him say,
And lap who will, so I'm away.

Di. How light we go, how soft we skim,
And all in moonlight seem to swim! 255
Against bright clouds projected dark,
The white dome now, reclined I mark,
And, by o'er-brilliant lamps displayed,
The Doge's columns and arcade;
Over still waters mildly come 260
The distant waters and the hum
(How light we go, how softly! Ah,
Life should be as the gondola!)

How light we go, how soft we skim,
And all in open moonlight swim! 265
Ah, gondolier, slow, slow, more slow!
We go, but wherefore thus should go?
Ah, let not muscle all too strong
Beguile, betray thee to our wrong!
On to the landing, onward. Nay, 270
Sweet dream, a little longer stay!
On to the landing, here And, ah!
Life is not as the gondola.

Sp. Tre ore. So. The Parthenone
Is it? you haunt for your limone. 275

Timon was a famous misanthrope who lived during the fifth century B.C. For a time he was rich and generous and was surrounded by numerous parasites. When his wealth failed, his friends deserted him, and he invited the parasites (lovers) to a pretended banquet. With the dishes containing only warm water before them, Timon shouted, "Uncover, dogs, and lap", then he threw the water and dishes at the guests and drove them out 274 Tre ore, three hours later Parthenone, the name of a café 275 limone, lemonade

SCENE VII. — At Torcello Dipsychus alone

Di. I had a vision; was it in my sleep?
And if it were, what then? But sleep or wake,
I saw a great light open o'er my head;
And sleep or wake, uplifted to that light,
Out of that light proceeding heard a voice 5
Uttering high words, which, whether sleep or
wake,
In me were fixed, and in me must abide.

When the enemy is near thee,
Call on us!
In our hands we will upbear thee, 10
He shall neither scathe nor scare thee,
He shall fly thee, and shall fear thee.
Call on us!
Call when all good friends have left thee,
Of all good sights and sounds bereft thee; 15
Call when hope and heart are sinking,
And the brain is sick with thinking,
Help, O help!
Call, and following close behind thee
There shall haste, and there shall find thee,
Help, sure help. 21

When the panic comes upon thee,
When necessity seems on thee,
Hope and choice have all forgone thee,
Fate and force are closing o'er thee, 25
And but one way stands before thee —
Call on us!
Oh, and if thou dost not call,
Be but faithful, that is all.
Go right on, and close behind thee 30
There shall follow still and find thee,
Help, sure help. (1849; 1862)

SAY NOT THE STRUGGLE NAUGHT
AVAILETH

Say not the struggle naught availeth,
The labor and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been they remain.

If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars; 5
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fliers,
And, but for you, possess the field.

277 gramolate persiche, a kind of ice pudding
Scene VII. Torcello, on the island of Burano, below Venice. In the sections omitted Dipsychus longs for action and bids farewell to the "sweet simplicities of life", but he is admonished by the spirit to submit to the "stern necessity of things" as they are

For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain, 10
Far back, through creeks and inlets making,
Comes silent, flooding in, the main.

And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light,
In front, the sun climbs slow, how slowly, 15
But westward, look, the land is bright (1849; 1862)

IN STRATIS VIARUM

Blessed are those who have not seen,
And who have yet believed
The witness, here that has not been,
From heaven they have received.

Blessed are those who have not known 5
The things that stand before them,
And for a vision of their own
Can piously ignore them.

So let me think whate'er befall,
That in the city duly 10
Some men there are who love at all,
Some women who love truly;

And that upon two millions odd
Transgressors in sad plenty,
Mercy will of a gracious God 15
Be shown — because of twenty. (1862)

"WHAT WENT YE OUT FOR TO SEE?"

Across the sea, along the shore,
In numbers more and ever more,
From lonely hut and busy town,
The valley through, the mountain down,
What was it ye went out to see, 5
Ye silly folk of Galilee?
The reed that in the wind doth shake?
The weed that washes in the lake?
The reeds that waver, the weeds that float? —
A young man preaching in a boat. 10

What was it ye went out to hear
By sea and land, from far and near?
A teacher? Rather seek the feet
Of those who sit in Moses' seat.
Go humbly seek, and bow to them, 15

In Stratis Viarum The title means In Narrow Streets

1 Blessed . . . seen From John, 20 29 — "Jesus said unto him, 'Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed' blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." 16 twenty The Lord promised Abraham that the wicked city of Sodom would be saved if twenty righteous persons could be found in it (Genesis, 18 17-33)
"What Went Ye Out for to See?" The title is taken from Matthew, 11 7 — "What went ye out in the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind?"

Far off in great Jerusalem.
From them that in her courts ye saw,
Her perfect doctors of the law,
What is it ye came here to note? —
A young man preaching in a boat. 20

Declare or cease to rave;
Whence is it he hath learned to speak?

And not as do the Scribes. (1851; 1862)

IN THE GREAT METROPOLIS

Each for himself is still the rule;
We learn it when we go to school —
The devil take the hindmost, O!

And when the schoolboys grow to men,
In life they learn it o'er again — 5
The devil take the hindmost, O!

For in the church, and at the bar,
On 'Change, at court, wher'er they are,
The devil takes the hindmost, O!

Husband for husband, wife for wife, 10
Are careful that in married life
The devil takes the hindmost, O!

From youth to age, whate'er the game,
The unvarying practice is the same —
The devil takes the hindmost, O! 15

And after death, we do not know,
But scarce can doubt, wher'er we go,
The devil takes the hindmost, O!

Ti rol de rol, ti rol de ro,
The devil takes the hindmost, O! 20

QUI LABORAT, ORAT

O only Source of all our light and life,
Whom as our truth, our strength, we see
and feel,
But whom the hours of mortal moral strife
Alone aright reveal!

Mine inmost soul, before Thee inly brought,
Thy presence owns ineffable, divine; 6
Chastised each rebel self-encentered thought,
My will adareth Thine.

With eye down-dropped, if then this earthly
mind
Speechless remain, or speechless e'en de-
part, 10

Nor seek to see — for what of earthly kind
Can see Thee as Thou art? —

If well-assured 'tis but profanely bold
In thought's abstractest forms to seem to
see,

It dare not dare the dread communion hold 15
In ways unworthy Thee,

O not unowned, thou shalt unnamed forgive,
In worldly walks the prayerless heart prepare;

And if in work its life it seem to live,
Shalt make that work be prayer. 20

Nor times shall lack, when while the work it
plies,

Unsummoned powers the blinding film
shall part,
And scarce by happy tears made dim, the
eyes
In recognition start.

But, as thou wilt, give or e'en forbear 25
The beatific supersensual sight,

So, with Thy blessing blessed, that humbler
prayer
Approach Thee morn and night (1862)

Ἕμνος ἀνυμνος

O Thou whose image in the shrine
Of human spirits dwells divine;
Which from that precinct once conveyed,
To be to outer day displayed,
Doth vanish, part, and leave behind 5
Mere blank and void of empty mind,
Which willful fancy seeks in vain
With casual shapes to fill again!

O Thou that in our bosom's shrine
Dost dwell, unknown because divine! 10
I thought to speak, I thought to say,
"The light is here," "behold the way,"
"The voice was thus," and "thus the word,"
And "thus I saw," and "that I heard" —
But from the lips that half essayed 15
The imperfect utterance fell unmade

Ἕμνος ἀνυμνος. The title means The Unsung Hymn.

O Thou, in that mysterious shrine
Enthroned, as I must say, divine!
I will not frame one thought of what
Thou mayest either be or not. 20
I will not prate of "thus" and "so,"
And be profane with "yes" and "no";
Enough that in our soul and heart
Thou, whatsoe'er Thou may'st be, art.

Unseen, secure in that high shrine 25
Acknowledged present and divine,
I will not ask some upper air,
Some future day to place Thee there;
Nor say, nor yet deny, such men
And women saw Thee thus and then; 30
Thy name was such, and there or here
To him or her Thou didst appear.

Do only Thou in that dim shrine,
Unknown or known, remain, divine;
There, or if not, at least in eyes 35
That scan the fact that round them lies,
The hand to sway, the judgment guide,
In sight and sense Thyself divide;
Be Thou but there — in soul and heart,
I will not ask to feel Thou art. 40

AH! YET CONSIDER IT AGAIN!

"Old things need not be therefore true."
O brother men, nor yet the new;
Ah! still awhile the old thought retain,
And yet consider it again!

The souls of now two thousand years 5
Have laid up here their toils and fears,
And all the earnings of their pain —
Ah, yet consider it again!

We! what do we see? each a space
Of some few yards before his face; 10
Does that the whole wide plan explain?
Ah, yet consider it again!

Alas! the great world goes its way,
And takes its truth from each new day;
They do not quit, nor can retain, 15
Far less consider it again. (1851; 1862)

NOLI ÆMULARI

In controversial foul impureness
The peace that is thy light to thee
Quench not; in faith and inner sureness
Possess thy soul and let it be

Noli Æmulari. The title means Do not Try to Emulate.

No violence — perverse — persistent — 5
 What cannot be can bring to be;
 No zeal what is make more existent,
 And strife but blinds the eyes that see.
 What though in blood their souls embruving,
 The great, the good and wise they curse, 10
 Still sinning, what they know not doing;
 Stand still, forbear, nor make it worse.
 By curses, by denunciation,
 The coming fate they cannot stay;
 Nor thou, by fiery indignation, 15
 Though just, accelerate the day (1862)

From SONGS IN ABSENCE

YE FLAGS OF PICCADILLY

Ye flags of Piccadilly,
 Where I posted up and down,
 And wished myself so often
 Well away from you and town —
 Are the people walking quietly 5
 And steady on their feet,
 Cabs and omnibuses plying
 Just as usual in the street?
 Do the houses look as upright
 As of old they used to be, 10
 And does nothing seem affected
 By the pitching of the sea?
 Through the Green Park iron railings
 Do the quick pedestrians pass?
 Are the little children playing 15
 Round the plane-tree in the grass?
 This squally wild north-wester
 With which our vessel fights,
 Does it merely serve with you to Carry up some paper kites? 20
 Ye flags of Piccadilly,
 Which I hated so, I vow
 I could wish with all my heart
 You were underneath me now!

O SHIP, SHIP, SHIP

O ship, ship, ship,
 That travellest over the sea,
 What are the tidings, I pray thee,
 Thou bearest hither to me?
 Are they tidings of comfort and joy, 5
 That shall make me seem to see

Songs in Absence This title covers a group of lyrics written by Clough on a journey to the United States in 1852. Most of the lyrics are addressed to the lady who became his wife.

1 Flags of Piccadilly, flagstones of Piccadilly, a famous street in London

The sweet lips softly moving
 And whispering love to me?
 Or are they of trouble and grief,
 Estrangement, sorrow, and doubt, 10
 To turn into torture my hopes,
 And drive me from Paradise out?
 O ship, ship, ship,
 That comest over the sea,
 Whatever it be thou bringest, 15
 Come quickly with it to me.
 (1852; 1862)

HOPE EVERMORE AND BELIEVE!

Hope evermore and believe, O man, for e'en
 as thy thought
 So are the things that thou see'st, e'en as thy hope and belief.
 Cowardly art thou and timid? they rise to provoke thee against them;
 Hast thou courage? enough, see them exulting to yield
 Yea, the rough rock, the dull earth, the wild sea's fuming waters 5 (Violent say'st thou and hard, mighty thou think'st to destroy),
 All with ineffable longing are waiting their Invader,
 All with one varying voice, call to him.
 Come and subdue;
 Still for their Conqueror call, and, but for the joy of being conquered (Rapture they will not forego), dare to resist and rebel; 10
 Still, when resisting and raging, in soft under-voice say unto him,
 Fear not, retire not, O man; hope evermore and believe.
 Go from the east to the west, as the sun and the stars direct thee,
 Go with the girdle of man, go and encompass the earth.
 Not for the gain of the gold; for the getting,
 the hoarding, the having, 15
 But for the joy of the deed; but for the Duty to do
 Go with the spiritual life, the higher volition and action,
 With the great girdle of God, go and encom-
 pass the earth.
 Go, say not in thy heart, And what then were
 it accomplished,
 Were the wild impulse allayed, what were the use or the good! 20

Go, when the instinct is stilled, and when the deed is accomplished,
 What thou hast done and shalt do, shall be declared to thee then Go with the sun and the stars, and yet evermore in thy spirit
 Say to thyself: It is good; yet is there better than it
 This that I see is not all, and this that I do is but little;
 Nevertheless it is good, though there is better than it.

THE LATEST DECALOGUE

Thou shalt have one God only, who Would be at the expense of two?
 No graven images may be
 Worshiped, except the currency.
 Swear not at all, for, for thy curse
 Thine enemy is none the worse.
 At church on Sunday to attend
 Will serve to keep the world thy friend.
 Honor thy parents; that is, all
 From whom advancement may befall.
 Thou shalt not kill; but need'st not strive Officially to keep alive
 Do not adultery commit;
 Advantage rarely comes of it.
 Thou shalt not steal; an empty feat,
 When it's so lucrative to cheat.
 Bear not false witness; let the lie
 Have time on its own wings to fly
 Thou shalt not covet, but tradition
 Approves all forms of competition.

"WITH WHOM IS NO VARIABLENESS, NEITHER SHADOW OF TURNING"

It fortifies my soul to know
 That, though I perish, Truth is so;
 That, howsoe'er I stray and range,
 Whate'er I do, Thou dost not change.
 I steadier step when I recall
 That, if I slip, Thou dost not fall.

THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY

What we, when face to face we see
 The Father of our souls, shall be,

Hope Evermore and Believe! 24 good . better than it
 Cf. Browning's Soul, 295, page 219
Through a Glass Darkly The title is taken from 1 Corin- thians, 13 12—"For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face"

John tells us, doth not yet appear;
 Ah! did he tell what we are here!

A mind for thoughts to pass into, 5
 A heart for loves to travel through,
 Five senses to detect things near —
 Is this the whole that we are here?

Rules baffle instincts — instincts rules, 10
 Wise men are bad — and good are fools,
 Facts evil — wishes vain appear;
 We cannot go, why are we here?

Oh, may we for assurance' sake,
 Some arbitrary judgment take,
 And willfully pronounce it clear, 15
 For this or that 'tis we are here?

Or is it right, and will it do,
 To pace the sad confusion through,
 And say' it doth not yet appear, 20
 What we shall be, what we are here?

Ah, yet, when all is thought and said,
 The heart still overrules the head;
 Still what we hope we must believe,
 And what is given us receive;

Must still believe, for still we hope 25
 That in a world of larger scope,
 What here is faithfully begun
 Will be completed, not undone.

My child, we still must think, when we 30
 That ampler life together see,
 Some true result will yet appear
 Of what we are, together, here.

ITE DOMUM SATURÆ, VENIT
HESPERUS

The skies have sunk, and hid the upper snow
 (Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
 Palie),
 The rainy clouds are filing fast below,
 And wet will be the path, and wet shall we.
 Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
 Palie. 5

3 John tells us, in 1 John, 3 2—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is"

Ite Domum Saturæ, Venit Hesperus The title means Go Home Satisfied, Hesperus (the evening star) Comes It is taken from a line in the tenth Elogue of Virgil, in which a goatherd is addressing his herd "Go home full-fed, Hesperus comes" Clough makes the speaker a peasant girl who is driving home her cows, named Rose, Provence, and La
 Palie

Ah dear, and where is he, a year ago,
Who stepped beside and cheered us on and
on?

My sweetheart wanders far away from me,
In foreign land or on a foreign sea.
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie. 10

The lightning zigzags shoot across the sky
(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie),

And through the vale the rains go sweeping
by;

Ah me, and when in shelter shall we be?
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie. 15

Cold, dreary cold, the stormy winds feel they O'er foreign lands and foreign seas that stray
(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie).

And doth he e'er, I wonder, bring to mind
The pleasant huts and herds he left behind?
And doth he sometimes in his slumbering
see 21

The feeding kine, and doth he think of me,
My sweetheart wandering wheresoe'er it be?
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie.

The thunder bellows far from snow to snow
(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie), 26

And loud and louder roars the flood below.
Heigho! but soon in shelter shall we be;
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie.

Or shall he find before his term be sped, 30
Some comelier maid that he shall wish to
wed?

(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie),

For weary is work, and weary day by day
To have your comfort miles on miles away.
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie 35

Or may it be that I shall find my mate,
And he returning see himself too late?
For work we must, and what we see, we see,
And God, He knows, and what must be,
must be,

When sweethearts wander far away from me
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie. 41

The sky behind is brightening up anew
(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie),

The rain is ending, and our journey too;
Heigho! aha! for here at home are we — 45
In, Rose, and in, Provence and La Palie

PERCHE PENSA? PENSANDO S'INVECCHIA

To spend uncounted years of pain,
Again, again, and yet again,
In working out in heart and brain
The problem of our being here;
To gather facts from far and near, 5
Upon the mind to hold them clear,
And, knowing more may yet appear,
Unto one's latest breath to fear,
The premature result to draw —
Is this the object, end and law, 10
And purpose of our being here?
(1869)

LIFE IS STRUGGLE

To wear out heart, and nerves, and brain,
And give oneself a world of pain;
Be eager, angry, fierce, and hot,
Imperious, supple — God knows what,
For what's all one to have or not; 5
O false, unwise, absurd, and vain!
For 'tis not joy, it is not gain,
It is not in itself a bliss,
Only it is precisely this
That keeps us all alive. 10

To say we truly feel the pain,
And quite are sinking with the strain, —
Entirely, simply, undeceived,
Believe, and say we ne'er believed
The object, e'en were it achieved, 15
A thing we e'er had cared to keep;
With heart and soul to hold it cheap,
And then to go and try it again;
O false, unwise, absurd, and vain!
Oh, 'tis not joy, and 'tis not bliss, 20
Only it is precisely this
That keeps us still alive. (1869)

IN A LONDON SQUARE

Put forth thy leaf, thou lofty plane —
East wind and frost are safely gone;
With zephyr mild and balmy rain
The summer comes serenely on;
Earth, air, and sun and skies combine 5
To promise all that's kind and fair.

Perche Pensa? Pensando S'Invecchia The title means Why Think? By Thinking You Grow Old.

But thou, O human heart of mine,
Be still, contain thyself, and bear.

December days were brief and chill,
The winds of March were wild and drear,
And, nearing and receding still, ¹¹
Spring never would, we thought, be here
The leaves that burst, the suns that shine,
Had, not the less, their certain date —
And thou, O human heart of mine, ¹⁵
Be still, refrain thyself, and wait. (1869)

ALL IS WELL

Whate'er you dream, with doubt possessed,
Keep, keep it snug within your breast,
And lay you down and take your rest,
Forget in sleep the doubt and pain,
And when you wake, to work again. ⁵
The wind it blows, the vessel goes,
And where and whither, no one knows.

'Twill all be well — no need of care;
Though how it will, and when, and where, ¹⁰
We cannot see, and can't declare.
In spite of dreams, in spite of thought,
'Tis not in vain, and not for naught,
The wind it blows, the ship it goes,
Though where and whither, no one knows (1869)

EDWARD FITZGERALD (1809-1883)

THE RUBÁIYÁT OF OMAR KHAYYÁM

I

Wake! For the Sun, who scattered into flight
The Stars before him from the Field of Night, Drives Night along with them from Heav'n and strikes
The Sultán's Turret with a Shaft of Light

2

Before the phantom of False morning died, ⁵
Methought a Voice within the Tavern cried,
"When all the Temple is prepared within,
Why nods the drowsy Worshiper outside?"

3

And, as the Cock crew, those who stood before
The Tavern shouted — "Open, then, the Door!" ¹⁰

The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám Omar Khayyám (Omar the Tent-Maker) was a Persian poet and astronomer of the 11th century. Rubáiyát is the plural form of rubáiy, meaning quatrain. See Critical Notes.

⁵ False morning, a transient light on the horizon about an hour before the true dawn—a common phenomenon in the East (FitzGerald's note)

You know how little while we have to stay,
And, once departed, may return no more."

4

Now the New Year reviving old Desires,
The thoughtful Soul to Solitude retires,
Where the WHITE HAND OF MOSES on the Bough ¹⁵
Puts out, and Jesus from the Ground suspires.

5

Iram indeed is gone with all his Rose,
And Jamshyd's Sev'n-ringed Cup where no
one knows;
But still a Ruby kindles in the Vine,
And many a Garden by the Water blows. ²⁰

6

And David's lips are locked; but in divine
High-piping Pehleví, with "Wine! Wine!
Wine!
Red Wine!" — the Nightingale cries to the Rose
That sallow cheek of hers to incarnadine.

7

Come, fill the Cup, and in the fire of Spring ²⁵
Your Winter-garment of Repentance fling;
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter — and the Bird is on the Wing.

8

Whether at Naishápúr or Babylon,
Whether the Cup with sweet or bitter run, ³⁰
The Wine of Life keeps oozing drop by drop,
The Leaves of Life keep falling one by one 9

Each Morn a thousand Roses brings, you
say;
Yes, but where leaves the Rose of Yester-
day?
And this first Summer month that brings the Rose ³⁵
Shall take Jamshyd and Kaikobád away

¹³ New Year The Persian new year begins with the vernal equinox ¹⁵ White Hand . . . Bough At the command of the Lord, Moses put his hand into his bosom and "when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow" (Exodus, 4:6) The metaphor is applied to the blooming of the flowers ¹⁶ Jesus . . . suspires The Persians believed that the healing power of Jesus resided in his breath ¹⁷ Iram, an ancient Persian garden, now obliterated ¹⁸ Jamshyd, a legendary king of Persia His seven-ringed cup was symbolical of the seven heavens, the seven planets, the seven seas, etc. ²¹⁻²² David . . . Pehleví David's tongue is forgotten, but the nightingale still cries in Pehleví, the ancient literary language of Persia ²⁹ Naishápúr, a village in Persia, Omar's native place ³⁶ Kaikobád, the founder of the most celebrated of the dynasties of ancient Persia.

10

Well, let it take them! What have we to do
With Kaikobád the Great, or Kaikhosrú?

Let Zál and Rustum bluster as they will,
Or Hátim call to Supper — heed not you. 40

11

With me along the strip of Herbage strown
That just divides the desert from the sown,

Where name of Slave and Sultán is forgot —
And Peace to Mahmúd on his golden Throne!

12

A Book of Verses underneath the Bough, 45
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread — and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness —
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

13

Some for the Glories of This World; and some Sigh for the Prophet's Paradise to come, 50
Ah, take the Cash, and let the Credit go,
Nor heed the rumble of a distant Drum!

14

Look to the blowing Rose about us — "Lo,
Laughing," she says, "into the world I blow,
At once the silken tassel of my Purse 55
Tear, and its Treasure on the Garden throw."

15

And those who husbanded the Golden Grain,
And those who flung it to the winds like Rain,
Alike to no such aureate Earth are turned
As, buried once, Men want dug up again 60

16

The Worldly Hope men set their Hearts upon
Turns Ashes — or it prospers; and anon,
Like Snow upon the Desert's dusty Face,
Lighting a little hour or two — is gone

17

Think, in this battered Caravanseraí 65
Whose Portals are alternate Night and Day,
How Sultán after Sultán with his Pomp
Abode his destined Hour, and went his way.

38 Kaikhosrú, a famous Persian hero, identified with Cyrus the Great (6th century B.C.), the founder of the Persian Empire. 39 Zál and Rustum, famous Persian heroes, Zál was the father of Rustum (See Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum and introductory note, page 459). 40 Hátim, a type of Oriental Generosity (FitzGerald's note). 44 Mahmúd, the Sultan Mahmúd the Great (c. 970-1030) was the famous Mohammedan conqueror of India. He was sultan of Ghazni, the city of his birth in Afghanistan. 50 the Prophet, Mohammed. 57 Golden grain, wealth. 65 Caravanseraí, a kind of Oriental inn, where caravans rest at night.

18

They say the Lion and the Lizard keep
The Courts where Jamshyd gloried and drank
deep; 70

And Bahrám, that great Hunter — the Wild Ass
Stamps o'er his Head, but cannot break his Sleep.

19

I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Cæsar bled,
That every Hyacinth the Garden wears 75
Dropped in her Lap from some once lovely
Head.

20

And this reviving Herb whose tender Green
Fledges the River-Lip on which we lean —
Ah, lean upon it lightly! for who knows
From what once lovely Lip it springs unseen!

21

Ah, my Belovéd, fill the Cup that clears 81
To-day of past Regrets and future Fears.
Tomorrow! — Why, Tomorrow I may be Myself with Yesterday's Sev'n thousand
Years.

22

For some we loved, the loveliest and the
best 85
That from his Vintage rolling Time hath prest,
Have drunk their Cup a Round or two before,
And one by one crept silently to rest.

23

And we, that now make merry in the Room
They left, and Summer dresses in new bloom, Ourselves must we beneath the Couch of
Earth 91
Descend — ourselves to make a Couch — for whom?

24

Ah, make the most of what we yet may spend,
Before we too into the Dust descend,
Dust into Dust, and under Dust, to lie, 95 Sans Wine, sans Song, sans Singer, and — sans End!

70 Courts, Jamshyd's capital was Persepolis. 71 Bahrám, a Persian ruler who lost his life in a swamp while hunting a wild ass. 75 Hyacinth, a flower named after Hyacinthus, a youth accidentally killed by his friend, Apollo, god of the sun. The flower sprang up where the blood of Hyacinthus flowed upon the ground. 84 Sev'n thousand Years, a thousand years to each planet. 96 Sans, without.

25

Alike for those who for TODAY prepare,
And those that after some TOMORROW stare,
A Muezzin from the Tower of Darkness
cries,
"Fools, your Reward is neither Here nor
There." 100

26

Why, all the Saints and Sages who discussed
Of the Two Worlds so wisely — they are thrust
Like foolish Prophets forth; their Words to Scorn
Are scattered, and their Mouths are stopped with Dust.

27

Myself when young did eagerly frequent 105
Doctor and Saint, and heard great argument
About it and about, but evermore
Came out by the same door where in I went.

28

With them the seed of Wisdom did I sow,
And with mine own hand wrought to make it
grow, 110
And this was all the Harvest that I
reaped —
"I came like Water, and like Wind I go "

29

Into this Universe, and Why not knowing
Nor Whence, like Water willy-nilly flowing,
And out of it, as Wind along the Waste, 115
I know not Whither, willy-nilly blowing.

30

What, without asking, hither hurried Whence?
And, without asking, Whither hurried hence!
Oh, many a Cup of this forbidden Wine
Must drown the memory of that insolence!

31

Up from the Earth's Center through the Seventh Gate 121
I rose, and on the Throne of Saturn sate,
And many a Knot unraveled by the Road,
But not the Master-knot of Human Fate.

32

There was the Door to which I found no Key;
There was the Veil through which I might not see, 126

99 Muezzin, the officer who summons the faithful to prayer in Mohammedan countries 119 forbidden Wine.
Orthodox Mohammedanism regards the use of wine as one of twelve capital sins. 122 Saturn, the lord of the seventh heaven, one of the concentric spheres into which, according to the ancients, the space around the earth was divided

Some little talk awhile of ME and THEE
There was — and then no more of THEE and
ME.

33

Earth could not answer; nor the Seas that mourn
In flowing Purple, of their Lord forlorn, 130
Nor rolling Heaven, with all his Signs revealed
And hidden by the sleeve of Night and Morn.

34

Then of the THEE IN ME who works behind
The Veil, I lifted up my hands to find 134
A lamp amid the Darkness; and I heard,
As from Without — "THE ME WITHIN THEE BLIND!"

35

Then to the Lip of this poor earthen Urn
I leaned, the Secret of my Life to learn,
And Lip to Lip it murmured — "While you
live,
Drink! — for, once dead, you never shall return." 140

36

I think the Vessel, that with fugitive
Articulation answered, once did live,
And drunk; and Ah! the passive Lip I
kissed,
How many Kisses might it take — and give!

37

For I remember stopping by the way 145
To watch a Potter thumping his wet Clay,
And with its all-obiterated Tongue
It murmured — "Gently, Brother, gently, pray!"

38

And has not such a Story from of Old
Down Man's successive generations rolled 150
Of such a clod of saturated Earth
Cast by the Maker into Human mold?

39

And not a drop that from our Cups we throw
For Earth to drink of, but may steal below
To quench the fire of Anguish in some
Eye
There hidden — far beneath, and long ago. 156

131 Signs, the signs of the zodiac. 153-154 drop .
Earth. It was an old custom to throw a little wine on the ground before drinking, it refreshed some wine-drinker who had gone before

40

As then the Tulip, for her morning sup
Of Heav'nly Vintage, from the soil looks up,
Do you devoutly do the like, till Heav'n
To Earth invert you — like an empty Cup. 160

41

Perplexed no more with Human or Divine,
Tomorrow's tangle to the winds resign,
And lose your fingers in the tresses of
The Cypress-slender Minister of Wine.

42

And if the Wine you drink, the Lip you press,
End in what All begins and ends in — Yes, 166
Think that you are TODAY what YESTER-
DAY
You were — TOMORROW you shall not be less.

43

So when that Angel of the darker Drink
At last shall find you by the river-brink, 170
And offering his Cup, invite your Soul Forth to your Lips to quaff — you shall not shrink.

44

Why, if the Soul can fling the Dust aside,
And naked on the Air of Heaven ride,
Were't not a Shame — were't not a Shame for him 175
In this clay carcass crippled to abide?

45

'Tis but a Tent where takes his one day's rest
A Sultán to the realm of Death address,
The Sultán rises, and the dark Ferrásh
Strikes, and prepares it for another Guest. 180

46

And fear not lest Existence closing your Account, and mine, should know the like no
more,
The Eternal Sáki from that Bowl has poured
Millions of Bubbles like us, and will pour.

47

When You and I behind the Veil are past, 185
Oh, but the long, long while the World shall
last,
Which of our Coming and Departure heeds
As the Sea's self should heed a pebble-cast.

164 Cypress-slender . . . Wine, the maiden who passes the wine, she is as slender as a cypress Stanza 42 stresses the joy of wine mingled with the joy of love 179 Ferrásh, a servant, a camp-follower 183 Sáki, wine-bearer

48

A Moment's Halt — a momentary taste 189
Of BEING from the Well amid the Waste —
And Lo! — the phantom Caravan has reached The NOTHING it set out from — Oh, make haste!

49

Would you that spangle of Existence spend
About THE SECRET — quick about it, Friend!
A Hair perhaps divides the False and
True — 195
And upon what, prithee, does life depend?

50

A Hair perhaps divides the False and True —
Yes, and a single Alif were the clue —
Could you but find it — to the Treasure-
house,
And peradventure to THE MASTER too; 200

51

Whose secret Presence, through Creation's veins
Running Quicksilver-like, eludes your pains, Taking all shapes from Máh to Máhi; and They change and perish all — but He remains,

52

A moment guessed — then back behind the Fold 205
Immersed of Darkness round the Drama
rolled
Which, for the Pastime of Eternity,
He doth Himself contrive, enact, behold.

53

But if in vain, down on the stubborn floor
Of Earth, and up to Heav'n's unopening Door,
You gaze TODAY, while You are You — how then 211
TOMORROW, when You shall be You no more?

54

Waste not your Hour, nor in the vain pursuit
Of This and That endeavor and dispute,
Better be jocund with the fruitful Grape
Than sadden after none, or bitter, Fruit. 216

55

You know, my Friends, with what a brave
Carouse
I made a Second Marriage in my house;
Divorced old barren Reason from my Bed,
And took the Daughter of the Vine to Spouse

198 Alif, the first letter of certain ancient alphabets
203 from Máh to Máhi, from fish to moon

56

For "Is" and "Is-not" though with Rule and Line, 221
And "UP-AND-DOWN" by Logic, I define,
Of all that one should care to fathom, I
Was never deep in anything but — Wine.

57

Ah, but my Computations, People say, 225
Reduced the Year to better reckoning? —
Nay,
'Twas only striking from the Calendar
Unborn Tomorrow, and dead Yesterday.

58

And lately, by the Tavern Door agape,
Came shining through the Dusk an Angel
Shape 230
Bearing a Vessel on his Shoulder; and
He bid me taste of it, and 'twas — the Grape!

59

The Grape that can with Logic absolute
The Two-and-Seventy jarring Sects confute,
The sovereign Alchemist that in a trice 235
Life's leaden metal into Gold transmute;

60

The mighty Mahmūd, Allah-breathing Lord,
That all the misbelieving and black Horde
Of fears and Sorrows that infest the Soul
Scatters before him with his whirlwind Sword.

61

Why, be this Juice the growth of God, who dare 241
BlaspHEME the twisted tendril as a Snare?
A Blessing, we should use it, should we not?
And if a Curse — why, then, Who set it there?

62

I must abjure the Balm of Life, I must, 245
Scared by some After-reckoning ta'en on trust
Or lured with Hope of some Diviner Drink,
To fill the Cup — when crumbled into Dust!

63

Oh threats of Hell and Hopes of Paradise!
One thing at least is certain — This Life flies; 250
One thing is certain and the rest is Lies —
The Flower that once has blown forever dies.

64

Strange, is it not? that of the myriads who Before us passed the door of Darkness
through,
Not one returns to tell us of the Road, 255
Which to discover we must travel too.

65

The Revelations of Devout and Learned
Who rose before us, and as Prophets burned,
Are all but Stories, which, awoke from Sleep,
They told their comrades, and to Sleep returned 260

66

I sent my Soul through the Invisible,
Some letter of that After-life to spell;
And by and by my Soul returned to me,
And answered, "I Myself am Heav'n and

67

Heav'n but the Vision of fulfilled Desire, 265
And Hell the Shadow from a Soul on fire
Cast on the Darkness into which Ourselves,
So late emerged from, shall so soon expire.

68

We are no other than a moving row 269
Of Magic Shadow-shapes that come and go Round with the Sun-illuminated Lantern held
In Midnight by the Master of the Show,

69

But helpless Pieces of the Game He plays
Upon this Checker-board of Nights and Days, Hither and thither moves, and checks, and slays, 275
And one by one back in the Closet lays.

70

The Ball no question makes of Ayes and Noes,
But Here or There as strikes the Player goes,
And He that tossed you down into the Field,
He knows about it all — HE knows — HE
knows! 280

The Moving Finger writes, and, having writ,
Moves on; nor all your Piety nor Wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

And that inverted Bowl they call the Sky, 285
Whereunder crawling cooped we live and die,

Lift not your hands to It for help — for It
As impotently moves as you or I.

With Earth's first Clay They did the Last Man
knead, 289
And there of the Last Harvest sowed the Seed,
And the first Morning of Creation wrote
What the Last Dawn of Reckoning shall read.

YESTERDAY This Day's Madness did prepare;
TOMORROW's Silence, Triumph, or Despair.
Drink! for you know not whence you came,
nor why; 295
Drink, for you know not why you go, nor where

75

I tell you this — When, started from the Goal,
Over the flaming shoulders of the Foal
Of Heav'n Parwín and Mushtarí they flung,
In my predestined Plot of Dust and Soul 300

76

The Vine had struck a fiber; which about
If clings my Being — let the Dervish flout;
Of my Base metal may be filed a Key,
That shall unlock the Door he howls without 77

And this I know: whether the one True
Light 305
Kindle to Love, or Wrath—consume me quite,
One Flash of It within the Tavern caught
Better than in the Temple lost outright.

78

What! out of senseless Nothing to provoke
A conscious Something to resent the yoke 310
Of unpermitted Pleasure, under pain
Of Everlasting Penalties, if broke!

79

What! from his helpless Creature be repaid
Pure Gold for what he lent him drossallayed —
Sue for a Debt he never did contract, 315
And cannot answer — Oh, the sorry trade!

80

O Thou, who didst with pitfall and with gin
Beset the Road I was to wander in,

Thou wilt not with Predestined Evil round
Enmesh, and then impute my Fall to Sin! 320

81

Oh Thou, who Man of Baser Earth didst make,
And ev'n with Paradise devise the Snake,
For all the Sin wherewith the Face of Man
Is blackened — Man's forgiveness give — and take!

82

As under cover of departing Day 325
Slunk hunger-stricken Ramazán away,
Once more within the Potter's house alone
I stood, surrounded by the Shapes of Clay —

83

Shapes of all Sorts and Sizes, great and small,
That stood along the floor and by the wall, 330
And some loquacious Vessels were; and some Listened perhaps, but never talked at all

84

Said one among them — "Surely not in vain
My substance of the common Earth was ta'en
And to this Figure molded, to be broke, 335
Or trampled back to shapeless Earth again "

85

Then said a Second — "Ne'er a peevish Boy
Would break the Bowl from which he drank
in joy;
And He that with his hand the Vessel made
Will surely not in after Wrath destroy " 340

86

After a momentary silence spake
Some Vessel of a more ungainly Make:
"They sneer at me for leaning all awry,
What! did the Hand, then, of the Potter shake?"

87

Whereat someone of the loquacious Lot — 345
I think a Súfi pipkin — waxing hot —
"All this of Pot and Potter — Tell me then,
Who is the Potter, pray, and who the Pot?"

88

"Why," said another, "Some there are who
tell
Of one who threatens he will toss to Hell 350

298-299. Foal Of Heav'n, an equatorial constellation known as Equuleus (the Little Horse) 299. Parwín and Mushtarí, the Pleiades and Jupiter. 302. Dervish, a Mohammedan devotee. 317. Gin, trap.

326 Ramazán, the fasting month of the Mohammedans, during which no food is eaten between sunrise and sunset. 346 Súfi, a member of a Persian sect of mystics whose purpose was to gain insight into the Divine Being through ecstasy and contemplation.

The luckless Pots he marred in making — Pish!
He's a Good Fellow, and 'twill all be well "

89

"Well," murmured one, "Let whoso make or buy,
My Clay with long Oblivion is gone dry;
But fill me with the old familiar Juice, 355
Methinks I might recover by and by."

90

So while the Vessels one by one were speaking
The little Moon looked in that all were seeking;
And then they jogged each other, "Brother!
Brother!
Now for the Porter's shoulder-knot a-creaking!" 360

91

Ah, with the Grape my fading Life provide,
And wash the Body whence the Life has died,
And lay me, shrouded in the living Leaf,
By some not unfrequented Garden-side—

92

That ev'n my buried Ashes such a snare 365
Of Vintage shall fling up into the Air
As not a True-believer passing by
But shall be overtaken unaware.

93

Indeed the Idols I have loved so long
Have done my credit in this World much
wrong, 370
Have drowned my Glory in a shallow Cup,
And sold my Reputation for a Song.

94

Indeed, indeed, Repentance oft before
I swore — but was I sober when I swore?
And then and then came Spring, and Rose-
in-hand 375
My thread-bare Penitence apieces tore.

95

And much as Wine has played the Infidel,
And robbed me of my Robe of Honor — Well,
I wonder often what the Vintners buy
One-half so precious as the stuff they sell. 380

358. Moon . . . seeking, the new moon, which would mark the end of the fasting period. 360 shoulder-knot -creaking, with the load of wine he was carrying. Theoulder-knot was a strap on which the jars were hung. 59. Idols, wine and wine-poetry.

96

Yet Ah, that Spring should vanish with the Rose!
That Youth's sweet-scented manuscript should close!
The Nightingale that in the branches sang,
Ah whence, and whither flown again, who knows!

97

Would but the Desert of the Fountain yield 385
One glimpse — if dimly, yet indeed, revealed.
To which the fainting Traveler might
spring,
As springs the trampled herbage of the field

98

Would but some wingéd Angel ere too late
Arrest the yet unfolded Roll of Fate, 390
And make the stern Recorder otherwise
Enregister, or quite obliterate!

99

Ah, Love! could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of Things entire,
Would not we shatter it to bits — and then Remold it nearer to the Heart's Desire! 396

100

Yon rising Moon that looks for us again —
How oft hereafter will she wax and wane;
How oft hereafter rising look for us Through this same Garden — and for one in
vain! 400

And when like her, O Sákí, you shall pass
Among the Guests Star-scattered on the Grass,
And in your joyous errand reach the spot
Where I made One — turn down an empty
Glass! (1859, 1868, 1872, 1879)

MATTHEW ARNOLD (1822-1888)

QUIET WORK

One lesson, Nature, let me learn of thee,
One lesson which in every wind is blown,
One lesson of two duties kept at one Though the loud world proclaim their enmity —
Of toil unsevered from tranquillity! 5
Of labor, that in lasting fruit outgrows
Far noisier schemes, accomplished in repose,
Too great for haste, too high for rivalry!

401. Sákí, wine-bearer

Yes, while on earth a thousand discords ring,
 Man's fitful uproar mingling with his toil, 10
 Still do thy sleepless ministers move on,
 Their glorious tasks in silence perfecting;
 Still working, blaming still our vain turmoil, Laborers that shall not fail, when man is gone. (1849)

MYCERINUS

"Not by the justice that my father spurned,
 Not for the thousands whom my father slew,
 Altars unfed and temples overturned,
 Cold hearts and thankless tongues, where thanks are due; 4
 Fell this dread voice from lips that cannot lie,
 Stern sentence of the Powers of Destiny.

"I will unfold my sentence and my crime
 My crime — that, rapt in reverential awe,
 I sate obedient, in the fiery prime
 Of youth, self-governed, at the feet of Law; 10
 Ennobling this dull pomp, the life of kings,
 By contemplation of diviner things.

"My father loved injustice, and lived long;
 Crowned with gray hairs he died, and full of
 sway.
 I loved the good he scorned, and hated
 wrong — 15
 The gods declare my recompense today
 I looked for life more lasting, rule more high;
 And when six years are measured, lo, I die!

"Yet surely, O my people, did I deem 19
 Man's justice from the all-just gods was given;
 A light that from some upper fount did beam,
 Some better archetype, whose seat was
 heaven;
 A light that, shining from the blest abodes,
 Did shadow somewhat of the life of gods

"Mere phantoms of man's self-tormenting
 heart, 25
 Which on the sweets that woo it dares not feed!
 Vain dreams, which quench our pleasures,
 then depart,
 When the duped soul, self-mastered, claims its meed;
 When, on the strenuous just man, Heaven
 bestows,
 Crown of his struggling life, an unjust close!

Mycernus Mycernus, or Mankaura, was king of Egypt about 2800 B.C. His father, Cheops, was noted for his unjust rule and a long happy life. Mycernus was warned by an oracle that he would live only six years, and in the poem he protests against the injustice of his fate. The story is told by the Greek historian Herodotus (4th century B.C.) in Book II, Chapter 129

"Seems it so light a thing, then, austere
 Powers, 31
 To spurn man's common lure, life's pleasant
 things?
 Seems there no joy in dances crowned with
 flowers,
 Love, free to range, and regal banquetings?
 Bend ye on these, indeed, an unmoved eye, 35
 Not gods but ghosts, in frozen apathy?

"Or is it that some Force, too wise, too
 strong,
 Even for yourselves to conquer or beguile,
 Sweeps earth, and heaven, and men, and gods
 along,
 Like the broad volume of the insurgent Nile?
 And the great powers we serve, themselves
 may be 41
 Slaves of a tyrannous necessity?

"Or in mid-heaven, perhaps, your golden cars,
 Where earthly voice climbs never, wing their
 flight,
 And in wild hunt, through mazy tracts of
 stars, 45
 Sweep in the sounding stillness of the night?
 Or in deaf ease, on thrones of dazzling sheen,
 Drinking deep drafts of joy, ye dwell serene?

"Oh, wherefore cheat our youth, if thus it be,
 Of one short joy, one lust, one pleasant
 dream? 50
 Stringing vain words of powers we cannot see,
 Blind divinations of a will supreme;
 Lost labor! when the circumambient gloom
 But hides, if gods, gods careless of our doom?

"The rest I give to joy Even while I speak,
 My sand runs short; and — as yon star-shot ray, 56
 Hemmed by two banks of cloud, peers pale and weak,
 Now, as the barrier closes, dies away —
 Even so do past and future intertwine, Blotting this six years' space, which yet is
 mine. 60

"Six years — six little years — six drops of
 time!
 Yet suns shall rise, and many moons shall wane,
 And old men die, and young men pass their
 prime,
 And languid pleasure fade and flower again,
 And the dull gods behold, ere these are
 flown, 65
 Revels more deep, joy keener than their own.

40 insurgent Nile The Nile is called "insurgent"
 because it overflows its banks each spring

"Into the silence of the groves and woods
I will go forth, though something would I
say —

Something — yet what, I know not; for the gods 69

The doom they pass revoke not, nor delay;
And prayers, and gifts, and tears, are fruitless all,

And the night waxes, and the shadows fall.

"Ye men of Egypt, ye have heard your king!
I go, and I return not. But the will

Of the great gods is plain; and ye must bring
Ill deeds, ill passions, zealous to fulfill 76

Their pleasure, to their feet; and reap their
praise,

The praise of gods, rich boon! and length of days."

— So spake he, half in anger, half in scorn,
And one loud cry of grief and of amaze 80

Broke from his sorrowing people; so he spake,
And turning, left them there, and with brief
pause,

Girt with a throng of revelers, bent his way
To the cool region of the groves he loved

There by the river-banks he wandered on, 85
From palm-grove on to palm-grove, happy
trees,

Their smooth tops shining sunward, and beneath

Burying their unsunned stems in grass and
flowers;

Where in one dream the feverish time of youth
Might fade in slumber, and the feet of joy 90

Might wander all day long and never tire.
Here came the king, holding high feast, at
morn,

Rose-crowned, and ever, when the sun went
down,

A hundred lamps beamed in the tranquil
gloom,

From tree to tree all through the twinkling
grove, 95

Revealing all the tumult of the feast —
Flushed guests, and golden goblets foamed with wine;

While the deep-burnished foliage overhead
Splintered the silver arrows of the moon.

It may be that sometimes his wondering
soul 100

From the loud joyful laughter of his lips
Might shrink half startled, like a guilty man

Who wrestles with his dream, as some pale shape

Gliding half hidden through the dusky stems,
Would thrust a hand before the lifted bowl,

Whispering, "A little space, and thou art
mine!" 106

It may be on that joyless feast his eye

Dwelt with mere outward seeming; he, within,
Took measure of his soul, and knew its
strength,

And by that silent knowledge, day by day, 110
Was calmed, ennobled, comforted, sustained.

It may be, but not less his brow was smooth,
And his clear laugh fled ringing through the
gloom,

And his mirth quailed not at the mild reproof
Sighed out by winter's sad tranquillity; 115

Nor, palled with its own fullness, ebbed and
died

In the rich languor of long summer-days;
Nor withered when the palm-tree plumes,
that roofed

With their mild dark his grassy banquet-
hall,

Bent to the cold winds of the showerless
spring; 120

No, nor grew dark when autumn brought the clouds.

So six long years he reveled, night and day,
And when the mirth waxed loudest, with dull
sound

Sometimes from the grove's center echoes
came,

To tell his wondering people of their king; 125
In the still night, across the steaming flats,
Mixed with the murmur of the moving Nile.

TO A FRIEND

Who prop, thou ask'st, in these bad days, my
mind? —

He much, the old man, who, clearest-souled
of men,

Saw The Wide Prospect, and the Asian Fen,
And Tmolus' Hill, and Smyrna Bay, though
blind.

Much he, whose friendship I not long since won, 5

That halting slave, who in Nicopolis
Taught Arrian, when Vespasian's brutal son

Cleared Rome of what most shamed him
But be his

My special thanks, whose even-balanced soul,

108-112 he, within . . . smooth. These lines sound the Stoic note of Arnold's poetry

To a Friend 2 the old man, Homer, who was said to be blind. 3 The Wide Prospect, Europe (a literal translation of the Greek word Eὐρώπη). 4 Asian Fens, the marshy, low-lying districts along the rivers in Asia Minor. 5 Tmolus'
Hill, a mountain in Lydia, Asia Minor. 6 Smyrna Bay,
Smyrna is the chief seaport of Asia Minor. 7 slave, Epictetus (c. 60- c. 120 A.D.), the Stoic philosopher, who was lame and at one time a slave. He lived at Nicopolis, Greece, after he was banished from Rome by the Emperor Domitian, the brutal son of Vespasian. One of the pupils of Epictetus was Arrian, a famous philosopher and historian. 8 his,
a reference to Sophocles (497-406 B.C.), the Athenian dramatist whose plays are noted for their serenity. He was born at Colonus (line 14), a village near Athens

From first youth tested up to extreme old age,¹⁰
Business could not make dull, nor passion wild;

Who saw life steadily, and saw it whole;
The mellow glory of the Attic stage,
Singer of sweet Colonus, and its child.

THE SICK KING IN BOKHARA

HUSSEIN

O most just Vizier, send away
The cloth-merchants, and let them be,
Them and their dues, this day! The King
Is ill at ease, and calls for thee.

THE VIZIER

O merchants, tarry yet a day
Here in Bokhara! but at noon,
Tomorrow, come, and ye shall pay
Each fortieth web of cloth to me,
As the law is, and go your way.
O Hussein, lead me to the King!
Thou teller of sweet tales, thine own,
Ferdousi's, and the others', lead!
How is it with my lord?

HUSSEIN

Alone,
Ever since prayer-time, he doth wait,
O Vizier! without lying down,
In the great window of the gate,
Looking into the Registân,
Where through the sellers' booths the slaves
Are this way bringing the dead man —
O Vizier, here is the King's door!

THE KING

O Vizier, I may bury him?

THE VIZIER

O King, thou know'st, I have been sick
These many days, and heard no thing
(For Allah shut my ears and mind),
Not even what thou dost, O King!
Wherefore, that I may counsel thee,
Let Hussein, if thou wilt, make haste
To speak in order what hath chanced.

THE KING

O Vizier, be it as thou say'st!

HUSSEIN

Three days since, at the time of prayer 30
A certain Moollah, with his robe
All rent, and dust upon his hair,
Watched my lord's coming forth, and pushed
The golden mace-bearers aside,
And fell at the King's feet, and cried 35

"Justice, O King, and on myself!
On this great sinner, who did break
The law, and by the law must die!
Vengeance, O King!"

But the King spake.

"What fool is this, that hurts our ears 40
With folly? or what drunken slave?
My guards, what, prick him with your spears!
Prick me the fellow from the path!"
As the King said, so it was done,
And to the mosque my lord passed on. 45

But on the morrow, when the King
Went forth again, the holy book
Carried before him, as is right,
And through the square his way he took;
My man comes running, flecked with blood 50
From yesterday, and falling down,
Cries out most earnestly: "O King,
My lord, O King, do right, I pray!

"How canst thou, ere thou hear, discern
If I speak folly? but a king, 55
Whether a thing be great or small,
Like Allah, hears and judges all

"Wherefore hear thou! Thou know'st, how fierce
In these last days the sun hath burned;
That the green water in the tanks 60
Is to a putrid puddle turned;
And the canal, which from the stream
Of Samarcand is brought this way,
Wastes, and runs thinner every day.

"Now I at nightfall had gone forth 65
Alone, and in a darksome place
Under some mulberry-trees I found
A little pool; and in short space,
With all the water that was there
I filled my pitcher, and stole home 70
Unseen; and having drink to spare,
I hid the can behind the door,
And went up on the roof to sleep.

"But in the night, which was with wind
And burning dust, again I creep 75
Down, having fever, for a drink.

The Sick King in Bokhara Bokhara was the ancient capital of a large area in central Asia. It was a famous money market, the chief trade center between China and Western Asia. The Vizier was a minister of state.

12 Ferdousi, the epic poet of Persia (940-1020). His Shah Namah (Book of Kings) contains the legends of his country, including the story of Sohrab and Rustum. 17 the Registân, the market-place. 24 Allah, the name of the Mohammedan God, the word means worthy to be adored.

31 Moollah, a learned teacher of Mohammedan law and dogma. 62-63 stream Of Samarcand, the Zerafshan River, which supplied water to the city of Samarcand, east of Bokhara.

"Now meanwhile had my brethren found
The water-pitcher, where it stood
Behind the door upon the ground,
And called my mother; and they all, 80
As they were thirsty, and the night
Most sultry, drained the pitcher there;
That they sate with it, in my sight,
Their lips still wet, when I came down.

"Now mark! I, being fevered, sick 85
(Most unblest also), at that sight
Brake forth, and cursed them — dost thou
hear? —
One was my mother — Now, do right!"

But my lord mused a space, and said:
"Send him away, Sirs, and make on! 90
It is some madman!" the King said.
As the King bade, so was it done.

The morrow, at the self-same hour,
In the King's path, behold, the man,
Not kneeling, sternly fixed! he stood 95
Right opposite, and thus began,
Frowning grim down: "Thou wicked King,
Most deaf where thou shouldst most give ear!
What, must I howl in the next world,
Because thou wilt not listen here? 100

"What, wilt thou pray, and get thee grace,
And all grace shall to me be grudged?
Nay but, I swear, from this thy path
I will not stir till I be judged!"
Then they who stood about the King 105
Drew close together and conferred;
Till that the King stood forth and said:
"Before the priests thou shalt be heard."

But when the Ulemas were met,
And the thing heard, they doubted not; 110
But sentenced him, as the law is,
To die by stoning on the spot.

Now the King charged us secretly:
"Stoned must he be, the law stands so.
Yet, if he seek to fly, give way; 115
Hinder him not, but let him go."

So saying, the King took a stone,
And cast it softly — but the man,
With a great joy upon his face,
Kneeled down, and cried not, neither ran. 120

So they, whose lot it was, cast stones,
That they flew thick and bruised him sore.
But he praised Allah with loud voice,
And remained kneeling as before.

My lord had covered up his face; 125
But when one told him, "He is dead,"

Turning him quickly to go in,
"Bring thou to me his corpse," he said.

And truly, while I speak, O King,
I hear the bearers on the stair; 130
Wilt thou they straightway bring him in?
— Ho! enter ye who tarry there!

THE VIZIER

O King, in this I praise thee not!
Now must I call thy grief not wise.
Is he thy friend, or of thy blood, 135
To find such favor in thine eyes?

Nay, were he thine own mother's son,
Still, thou art king, and the law stands.
It were not meet the balance swerved,
The sword were broken in thy hands. 140

But being nothing, as he is,
Why for no cause make sad thy face? —
Lo, I am old! three kings, ere thee,
Have I seen reigning in this place.

But who, through all this length of time, 145
Could bear the burden of his years,
If he for strangers pained his heart
Not less than those who merit tears?

Fathers we must have, wife and child,
And grievous is the grief for these; 150
This pain alone, which must be borne,
Makes the head white, and bows the knees.

But other loads than this his own
One man is not well made to bear.
Besides, to each are his own friends, 155
To mourn with him, and show him care.

Look, this is but one single place,
Though it be great; all the earth round,
If a man bear to have it so,
Things which might vex him shall be found.

Upon the Russian frontier, where 161
The watchers of two armies stand
Near one another, many a man,
Seeking a prey unto his hand,

Hath snatched a little fair-haired slave; 165
They snatch also, toward Mervè,
The Shiah dogs, who pasture sheep,
And up from thence to Orgunjè.

And these all, laboring for a lord,
Eat not the fruit of their own hands, 170

166 Mervè, a city south of Bokhara 167. Shiah dogs, the Shutes, one of the two sects of Mohammedans who do not consider the body of traditions regarding Mohammed as a part of the law 168 Orgunjè, a city on the Amu River near the Aral Sea, in central Asia

109 Ulemas, the wise men who interpreted the law.

Which is the heaviest of all plagues,
To that man's mind, who understands.

The kaffirs also (whom God curse!)
Vex one another, night and day;
There are the lepers, and all sick; 175
There are the poor, who faint away.

All these have sorrow, and keep still,
Whilst other men make cheer, and sing.
Wilt thou have pity on all these?
No, nor on this dead dog, O King! 180

THE KING

O Vizier, thou art old, I young!
Clear in these things I cannot see.
My head is burning, and a heat
Is in my skin which angers me.

But hear ye this, ye sons of men! 185
They that bear rule, and are obeyed,
Unto a rule more strong than theirs
Are in their turn obedient made.

In vain therefore, with wistful eyes
Gazing up hither, the poor man,
Who loiters by the high-heaped booths, 190
Below there, in the Registrân,

Says: "Happy he, who lodges there!
With silken raiment, store of rice,
And for this drought, all kinds of fruits, 195
Grape-syrup, squares of colored ice,

"With cherries served in drifts of snow."
In vain hath a king power to build Houses, arcades, enameled mosques;
And to make orchard-closes, filled 200

With curious fruit-trees brought from far,
With cisterns for the winter-rain,
And, in the desert, spacious inns
In divers places — if that pain

Is not more lightened, which he feels, 205
If his will be not satisfied;
And that it be not, from all time
The law is planted, to abide

Thou wast a sinner, thou poor man!
Thou wast athirst; and didst not see, 210
That, though we take what we desire,
We must not snatch it eagerly

And I have meat and drink at will,
And rooms of treasures, not a few.
But I am sick, nor heed I these; 215
And what I would, I cannot do

Even the great honor which I have,
When I am dead, will soon grow still;
So have I neither joy nor fame.
But what I can do, that I will. 220

I have a fretted brick-work tomb
Upon a hill on the right hand,
Hard by a close of apricots,
Upon the road of Samarcand;

Thither, O Vizier, will I bear 225
This man my pity could not save,
And, plucking up the marble flags,
There lay his body in my grave.

Bring water, nard, and linen rolls!
Wash off all blood, set smooth each limb! 230
Then say: "He was not wholly vile,
Because a king shall bury him." (1849)

SHAKESPEARE

Others abide our question. Thou art free.
We ask and ask — thou smilest and art still,
Out-topping knowledge For the loftiest hill,
Who to the stars uncrowns his majesty,
Planting his steadfast footsteps in the sea, 5
Making the heaven of heavens his dwelling-
place,
Spares but the cloudy border of his base
To the foiled searching of mortality;
And thou, who didst the stars and sunbeams
know,
Self-schooled, self-scanned, self-honored, self-
secure, 10
Didst tread on earth unguessed at. — Better
so!
All pains the immortal spirit must endure,
All weakness which impairs, all griefs which
bow,
Find their sole speech in that victorious brow

IN HARMONY WITH NATURE

TO A PREACHER

"In harmony with Nature?" Restless fool,
Who with such heat dost preach what were
to thee,
When true, the last impossibility —
To be like Nature strong, like Nature cool!
Know, man hath all which Nature hath, but
more, 5

In Harmony with Nature This poem is addressed to a preacher who had urged his audience to live in harmony with nature

And in that more lie all his hopes of good Nature is cruel, man is sick of blood,
 Nature is stubborn, man would fain adore,
 Nature is fickle, man hath need of rest;
 Nature forgives no debt, and fears no grave;
 Man would be mild, and with safe conscience
 blest 11
 Man must begin, know this, where Nature ends;
 Nature and man can never be fast friends
 Fool, if thou canst not pass her, rest her slave!

TO A REPUBLICAN FRIEND, 1848

God knows it, I am with you. If to prize
 Those virtues, prized and practiced by too few,
 But prized, but loved, but eminent in you,
 Man's fundamental life; if to despise
 The barren optimistic sophistries 5
 Of comfortable moles, whom what they do
 Teaches the limit of the just and true
 (And for such doing they require not eyes),
 If sadness at the long heart-wasting show
 Whercin earth's great ones are disquieted; 10
 If thoughts, not idle, while before me flow
 The armies of the homeless and unfed —
 If these are yours, if this is what you are,
 Then am I yours, and what you feel, I share (1849)

Yet, when I muse on what life is, I seem Rather to patience prompted, than that proud Prospect of hope which France proclaims so loud —
 France, famed in all great arts, in none supreme;
 Seeing this vale, this earth, whereon we
 dream, 5
 Is on all sides o'ershadowed by the high
 Un'erleaped Mountains of Necessity,
 Sparing us narrower margin than we deem.
 Nor will that day dawn at a human nod,
 When, bursting through the network super-posed 10
 By selfish occupation — plot and plan,
 Lust, avarice, envy — liberated man,
 All difference with his fellow-mortal closed,
 Shall be left standing face to face with God.

 The year 1848 was marked by various revolutions on the Continent, beginning with the overthrow of the monarchy in France.

TO FAUSTA

Joy comes and goes; hope ebbs and flows,
 Like the wave.
 Change doth unknit the tranquil strength of
 men.
 Love lends life a little grace,
 A few sad smiles; and then, 5
 Both are laid in one cold place,
 In the grave.
 Dreams dawn and fly, friends smile and die,
 Like spring flowers
 Our vaunted life is one long funeral. 10
 Men dig graves, with bitter tears,
 For their dead hopes; and all,
 Mazed with doubts, and sick with fears,
 Count the hours.
 We count the hours; these dreams of ours, 15
 False and hollow,
 Shall we go hence and find they are not dead?
 Joys we dimly apprehend,
 Faces that smiled and fled,
 Hopes born here, and born to end, 20
 Shall we follow? (1849)

THE FORSAKEN MERMAN

Come, dear children, let us away;
 Down and away below!
 Now my brothers call from the bay,
 Now the great winds shoreward blow,
 Now the salt tides seaward flow; 5
 Now the wild white horses play,
 Champ and chafe and toss in the spray.
 Children dear, let us away!
 This way, this way!
 Call her once before you go — 10
 Call once yet!
 In a voice that she will know:
 "Margaret! Margaret!"
 Children's voices should be dear
 (Call once more) to a mother's ear; 15
 Children's voices, wild with pain —
 Surely she will come again!
 Call her once and come away;
 This way, this way!
 "Mother dear, we cannot stay!" 20
 The wild white horses foam and fret."
 Margaret! Margaret!

Come, dear children, come away down;
 Call no more!

To Fausta Fausta is thought to be Arnold's sister Jane.
The Forsaken Merman. Folklore has many tales dealing with relations between mortals and mermen or mermaids.
 This story belongs to Danish legend.

¹³ Margaret, a favorite name with Arnold. See Switzerland, page 440.

One last look at the white-walled town, 25
 And the little gray church on the windy shore,
 Then come down!
 She will not come though you call all day;
 Come away, come away!

Children dear, was it yesterday 30
 We heard the sweet bells over the bay?
 In the caverns where we lay,
 Through the surf and through the swell,
 The far-off sound of a silver bell?
 Sand-strewn caverns, cool and deep, 35
 Where the winds are all asleep;
 Where the spent lights quiver and gleam,
 Where the salt weed sways in the stream,
 Where the sea-beasts, ranged all round,
 Feed in the ooze of their pasture-ground; 40
 Where the sea-snakes coil and twine,
 Dry their mail and bask in the brine;
 Where great whales come sailing by,
 Sail and sail, with unshut eye,
 Round the world for ever and aye? 45
 When did music come this way?
 Children, dear, was it yesterday?

Children dear, was it yesterday
 (Call yet once) that she went away?
 Once she sate with you and me, 50
 On a red gold throne in the heart of the sea,
 And the youngest sate on her knee.
 She combed its bright hair, and she tended it
 well,

When down swung the sound of a far-off bell
 She sighed, she looked up through the clear green sea; 55

She said: "I must go, for my kinsfolk pray
 In the little gray church on the shore today
 'Twill be Easter-time in the world — ah me!
 And I lose my poor soul, Merman! here with
 thee"

I said: "Go up, dear heart, through the waves,
 Say thy prayer, and come back to the kind sea-caves!" 61

She smiled, she went up through the surf in the bay
 Children dear, was it yesterday?

Children dear, were we long alone? 64
 "The sea grows stormy, the little ones moan,
 Long prayers," I said, "in the world they say, Come!" I said; and we rose through the surf in the bay.

We went up the beach, by the sandy down
 Where the sea-stocks bloom, to the white-walled town;

Through the narrow paved streets, where all was still, 70

To the little gray church on the windy hill

From the church came a murmur of folk at their prayers,
 But we stood without in the cold blowing airs
 We climbed on the graves, on the stones worn with rains,

And we gazed up the aisle through the small leaded panes 75

She sate by the pillar, we saw her clear:
 "Margaret, hist! come quick, we are here!
 Dear heart," I said, "we are long alone;
 The sea grows stormy, the little ones moan"
 But, ah, she gave me never a look, 80
 For her eyes were sealed to the holy book!
 Loud prays the priest; shut stands the door
 Come away, children, call no more!
 Come away, come down, call no more!

Down, down, down! 85
 Down to the depths of the sea!

She sits at her wheel in the humming town,
 Singing most joyfully.
 Hark what she sings. "O joy, O joy,
 For the humming street, and the child with its toy! 90

For the priest, and the bell, and the holy
 well;

For the wheel where I spun,
 And the blessed light of the sun!"
 And so she sings her fill,
 Singing most joyfully, 95

Till the spindle drops from her hand,
 And the whizzing wheel stands still.
 She steals to the window, and looks at the
 sand,

And over the sand at the sea;
 And her eyes are set in a stare; 100

And anon there breaks a sigh,
 And anon there drops a tear,
 From a sorrow-clouded eye,
 And a heart sorrow-laden,

A long, long sigh; 105

For the cold strange eyes of a little Mermaid
 And the gleam of her golden hair.

Come away, away children;
 Come children, come down!
 The hoarse wind blows coldly; 110
 Lights shine in the town.

She will start from her slumber
 When gusts shake the door;
 She will hear the winds howling,
 Will hear the waves roar. 115

We shall see, while above us
 The waves roar and whirl,
 A ceiling of amber,
 A pavement of pearl
 Singing: "Here came a mortal, 120

82 shut . door According to popular belief, heaven and the benefits of Christianity are denied faeries and certain other supernatural beings

But faithless was she!
And alone dwell forever
The kings of the sea."

But, children, at midnight,
When soft the winds blow, 125
When clear falls the moonlight,
When spring-tides are low;
When sweet airs come seaward
From heaths starred with broom,
And high rocks throw mildly 130
On the blanched sands a gloom;
Up the still, glistening beaches,
Up the creeks we will hie,
Over banks of bright seaweed
The ebb-tide leaves dry. 135
We will gaze, from the sand-hills,
At the white, sleeping town;
At the church on the hillside —
And then come back down,
Singing: "There dwells a loved one, 140
But cruel is she!
She left lonely forever
The kings of the sea." (1849)

IN UTRUMQUE PARATUS

If, in the silent mind of One all-pure,
At first imagined lay
The sacred world, and by procession sure
From those still deeps, in form and color
drest,
Seasons alternating, and night and day, 5
The long-mused thought to north, south, east, and west,
Took then its all-seen way;

O waking on a world which thus-wise springs!
Whether it needs thee count
Betwixt thy waking and the birth of things 10
Ages or hours — O waking on life's stream!
By lonely pureness to the all-pure fount
(Only by this thou canst) the colored dream
Of life remount!

Thin, thin the pleasant human noises grow, 15
And faint the city gleams;
Rare the lone pastoral huts — marvel not thou!
The solemn peaks but to the stars are known,
But to the stars, and the cold lunar beams;
Alone the sun arises, and alone 20
Spring the great streams.

But, if the wild unfathered mass no birth
In divine seats hath known;

In Utrumque Paratus. The title means Prepared for either—that is, for either explanation of the origin of the world as given in the poem

In the blank, echoing solitude if Earth,
Rocking her obscure body to and fro, 25
Ceases not from all time to heave and groan,
Unfruitful oft, and at her happiest throe
Forms, what she forms, alone;

O seeming sole to awake, thy sun-bathed head
Piercing the solemn cloud 30
Round thy still dreaming brother-world out-
spread!
O man, whom Earth, thy long-vexed mother,
bare
Not without joy — so radiant, so endowed (Such happy issue crowned her painful care)—
Be not too proud! 35

Oh, when most self-exalted, most alone,
Chief dreamer, own thy dream!
Thy brother-world stirs at thy feet unknown,
Who hath a monarch's hath no brother's part;
Yet doth thine inmost soul with yearning
teem. 40
— Oh, what a spasm shakes the dreamer's
heart!
"I, too, but seem." (1849)

RESIGNATION

TO FAUSTA

"To die be given us, or attain!
Fierce work it were, to do again."
So pilgrims, bound for Mecca, prayed
At burning noon, so warriors said, Scarfed with the cross, who watched the miles 5
Of dust which wreathed their struggling files
Down Lydian mountains; so, when snows
Round Alpine summits, eddying, rose,
The Goth, bound Rome-wards; so the Hun,
Crouched on his saddle, while the sun 10
Went lurid down o'er flooded plains
Through which the groaning Danube strains
To the drear Euxine; — so pray all,
Whom labors, self-ordained, enthrall;
Because they to themselves propose 15
On this side the all-common close
A goal which, gained, may give repose.
So pray they; and to stand again
Where they stood once, to them were pain;
Pain to thread back and to renew 20
Past straits, and currents long steered through.

But milder natures, and more free —
Whom an unblamed serenity

Hath freed from passions, and the state
 Of struggle these necessitate; 25
 Whom schooling of the stubborn mind
 Hath made, or birth hath found, resigned —
 These mourn not, that their goings pay
 Obedience to the passing day.
 These claim not every laughing Hour 30
 For handmaid to their striding power,
 Each in her turn, with torch upreared,
 To await their march; and when appeared,
 Through the cold gloom, with measured pace,
 To usher for a destined space 35
 (Her own sweet errands all forgone)
 The too imperious traveler on.
 These, Fausta, ask not this, nor thou,
 Time's chafing prisoner, ask it now!

We left, just ten years since, you say, 40
 That wayside inn we left today.
 Our jovial host, as forth we fare,
 Shouts greeting from his easy chair.
 High on a bank our leader stands,
 Reviews and ranks his motley bands, 45
 Makes clear our goal to every eye —
 The valley's western boundary.
 A gate swings to! our tide hath flowed
 Already from the silent road.
 The valley-pastures, one by one, 50
 Are threaded, quiet in the sun;
 And now beyond the rude stone bridge
 Slopes gracious up the western ridge.
 Its woody border, and the last 55
 Of its dark upland farms, is past —
 Cool farms, with open-lying stores,
 Under their burnished sycamores,
 All past! and through the trees we glide,
 Emerging on the green hillside.
 There climbing hangs, a far-seen sign, 60
 Our wavering, many-colored line,
 There winds, upstreaming slowly still
 Over the summit of the hill.
 And now, in front, behold outspread 65
 Those upper regions we must tread!
 Mild hollows, and clear heathy swells,
 The cheerful silence of the fells.
 Some two hours' march with serious air,
 Through the deep noontide heats we fare;
 The red-grouse, springing at our sound, 70
 Skims, now and then, the shining ground;
 No life, save his and ours, intrudes
 Upon these breathless solitudes.
 O joy! again the farms appear
 Cool shade is there, and rustic cheer; 75

There springs the brook will guide us down,
 Bright comrade, to the noisy town.
 Lingering, we follow down; we gain
 The town, the highway, and the plain
 And many a mile of dusty way, 80
 Parched and road-worn, we made that day,
 But, Fausta, I remember well,
 That as the balmy darkness fell
 We bathed our hands with speechless glee,
 That night, in the wide-glimmering sea. 85

Once more we tread this self-same road,
 Fausta, which ten years since we trod;
 Alone we tread it, you and I,
 Ghosts of that boisterous company.
 Here, where the brook shines, near its head,
 In its clear, shallow, turf-fringed bed; 91
 Here, whence the eye first sees, far down,
 Capped with faint smoke, the noisy town;
 Here sit we, and again unroll,
 Though slowly, the familiar whole. 95
 The solemn wastes of heathy hill
 Sleep in the July sunshine still;
 The self-same shadows now, as then,
 Play through this grassy upland glen;
 The loose dark stones on the green way 100
 Lie strewn, it seems, where then they lay, —
 On this mild bank above the stream
 (You crush them!), the blue gentians gleam.
 Still this wild brook, the rushes cool,
 The sailing foam, the shining pool! 105
 These are not changed; and we, you say,
 Are scarce more changed, in truth, than they

The gypsies, whom we met below,
 They, too, have long roamed to and fro;
 They ramble, leaving, where they pass, 110
 Their fragments on the cumbered grass.
 And often to some kindly place
 Chance guides the migratory race,
 Where, though long wanderings intervene,
 They recognize a former scene. 115
 The dingy tents are pitched; the fires
 Give to the wind their wavering spires;
 In dark knots crouch round the wild flame
 Their children, as when first they came;
 They see their shackled beasts again 120
 Move, browsing, up the gray-walled lane
 Signs are not wanting, which might raise
 The ghost in them of former days —
 Signs are not wanting, if they would;
 Suggestions to disquietude. 125
 For them, for all, time's busy touch,
 While it mends little, troubles much.
 Their joints grow stiffer — but the year
 Runs his old round of dubious cheer;
 Chilly they grow — yet winds in March, 130
 Still, sharp as ever, freeze and parch;
 They must live still — and yet, God knows,
 Crowded and keen the country grows;

It seems as if, in their decay,
The law grew stronger every day. 135
So might they reason, so compare,
Fausta, times past with times that are.
But no! — they rubbed through yesterday
In their hereditary way,
And they will rub through, if they can, 140
Tomorrow on the self-same plan,
Till death arrive to supersede,
For them, vicissitude and need.

The poet, to whose mighty heart
Heaven doth a quicker pulse impart, 145
Subdues that energy to scan
Not his own course, but that of man.
Though he move mountains, though his day
Be passed on the proud heights of sway,
Though he hath loosed a thousand chains, 150
Though he hath borne immortal pains,
Action and suffering though he know —
He hath not lived, if he lives so.
He sees, in some great-historied land,
A ruler of the people stand, 155
Sees his strong thought in fiery flood
Roll through the heaving multitude,
Exults — yet for no moment's space
Envies the all-regarded place.
Beautiful eyes meet his — and he 160
Bears to admire uncravingly,
They pass — he, mingled with the crowd,
Is in their far-off triumphs proud
From some high station he looks down,
At sunset, on a populous town, 165
Surveys each happy group, which fleets,
Toil ended, through the shining streets,
Each with some errand of its own —
And does not say, "I am alone"
He sees the gentle stir of birth 170
When morning purifies the earth;
He leans upon a gate and sees
The pastures, and the quiet trees
Low, woody hill, with gracious bound,
Folds the still valley almost round; 175
The cuckoo, loud on some high lawn,
Is answered from the depth of dawn;
In the hedge straggling to the stream,
Pale, dew-drenched, half-shut roses gleam;
But, where the farther side slopes down, 180
He sees the drowsy new-waked clown
In his white quaint-embroidered frock
Make, whistling, tow'rd his mist-wreathed flock —
Slowly, behind his heavy tread,
The wet, flowered grass heaves up its head.
Leaned on his gate, he gazes — tears 186
Are in his eyes, and in his ears
The murmur of a thousand years.
Before him he sees life unroll,

A placid and continuous whole — 190
That general life, which does not cease,
Whose secret is not joy, but peace;
That life, whose dumb wish is not missed
If birth proceeds, if things subsist;
The life of plants, and stones, and rain, 195
The life he craves — if not in vain
Fate gave, what chance shall not control,
His sad lucidity of soul.

You listen — but that wandering smile,
Fausta, betrays you cold the while! 200
Your eyes pursue the bells of foam
Washed, eddying, from this bank, their home.
"Those gypsies," so your thoughts I scan,
"Are less, the poet more, than man
They feel not, though they move and see, 205
Deeper the poet feels; but he Breathes, when he will, immortal air,
Where Orpheus and where Homer are.
In the day's life, whose iron round
Hems us all in, he is not bound, 210
He leaves his kind, o'erleaps their pen,
And flees the common life of men.
He escapes thence, but we abide —
Not deep the poet sees, but wide."

The world in which we live and move 215
Outlasts aversion, outlasts love,
Outlasts each effort, interest, hope,
Remorse, grief, joy — and were the scope
Of these affections wider made,
Man still would see, and see dismayed, 220
Beyond his passion's widest range,
Far regions of eternal change.
Nay, and since death, which wipes out man,
Finds him with many an unsolved plan,
With much unknown, and much untried, 225
Wonder not dead, and thirst not dried,
Still gazing on the ever full
Eternal mundane spectacle —
This world in which we draw our breath,
In some sense, Fausta, outlasts death. 230

Blame thou not, therefore, him who dares
Judge vain beforehand human cares;
Whose natural insight can discern
What through experience others learn;
Who needs not love and power, to know 235
Love transient, power an unreal show;
Who treads at ease life's uncheered ways —
Him blame not, Fausta, rather praise!
Rather thyself for some aim pray
Nobler than this, to fill the day; 240
Rather that heart, which burns in thee,
Ask, not to amuse, but to set free;
Be passionate hopes not ill resigned
For quiet, and a fearless mind.

And though fate grudge to thee and me 245
 The poet's rapt security,
 Yet they, believe me, who await
 No gifts from chance, have conquered fate.
 They, winning room to see and hear,
 And to men's business not too near, 250
 Through clouds of individual strife
 Draw homeward to the general life
 Like leaves by suns not yet uncurled;
 To the wise, foolish; to the world,
 Weak — yet not weak, I might reply, 255
 Not foolish, Fausta, in His eye,
 To whom each moment in its race,
 Crowd as we will its neutral space,
 Is but a quiet watershed
 Whence, equally, the seas of life and death are fed. 260

Enough, we live! — and if a life,
 With large results so little rife,
 Though bearable, seem hardly worth
 This pomp of worlds, this pain of birth;
 Yet, Fausta, the mute turf we tread, 265
 The solemn hills around us spread,
 This stream which falls incessantly,
 The strange-scrawled rocks, the lonely sky,
 If I might lend their life a voice,
 Seem to bear rather than rejoice. 270
 And even could the intemperate prayer
 Man iterates, while these forbear,
 For movement, for an ampler sphere,
 Pierce Fate's impenetrable ear;
 Not milder is the general lot 275
 Because our spirits have forgot,
 In action's dizzying eddy whirled,
 The something that infects the world (1849)

MEMORIAL VERSES

APRIL, 1850

Goethe in Weimar sleeps, and Greece,
 Long since, saw Byron's struggle cease.
 But one such death remained to come;
 The last poetic voice is dumb —
 We stand today by Wordsworth's tomb. 5

When Byron's eyes were shut in death,
 We bowed our head and held our breath.
 He taught us little; but our soul
 Had felt him like the thunder's roll.
 With shivering heart the strife we saw 10
 Of passion with eternal law;
 And yet with reverential awe

246 security, freedom from care, due to his detachment from affairs of the world 278 something . . . world, possibly, doubt and pessimism

Memorial Verses Goethe died in 1832 and was buried in Weimar, Germany. Byron died in 1824 while aiding the Greeks in their fight for independence. Wordsworth died in 1850. Arnold gave high place to all three poets, he was influenced especially by the poetry of Wordsworth.

We watched the fount of fiery life
 Which served for that Titanic strife.

When Goethe's death was told, we said. 15
 Sunk, then, is Europe's sagest head.
 Physician of the iron age,
 Goethe has done his pilgrimage.
 He took the suffering human race,
 He read each wound, each weakness clear; 20
 And struck his finger on the place,
 And said: Thou artest here, and here!
 He looked on Europe's dying hour
 Of fitful dream and feverish power;
 His eye plunged down the weltering strife, 25
 The turmoil of expiring life —
 He said: The end is everywhere,
Art still has truth, take refuge therel
 And he was happy, if to know
 Causes of things, and far below 30
 His feet to see the lurid flow
 Of terror, and insane distress,
 And headlong fate, be happiness.

And Wordsworth! — Ah, pale ghosts, rejoice!
 For never has such soothing voice 35
 Been to your shadowy world conveyed,
 Since erst, at morn, some wandering shade
 Heard the clear song of Orpheus come Through Hades, and the mournful gloom.
 Wordsworth has gone from us — and ye, 40
 Ah, may ye feel his voice as we!
 He too upon a wintry clime
 Had fallen — on this iron time
 Of doubts, disputes, distractions, fears.
 He found us when the age had bound 45
 Our souls in its benumbing round;
 He spoke, and loosed our heart in tears.
 He laid us, as we lay at birth,
 On the cool flowery lap of earth;
 Smiles broke from us and we had ease; 50
 The hills were round us, and the breeze
 Went o'er the sun-lit fields again;
 Our foreheads felt the wind and rain.
 Our youth returned; for there was shed
 On spirits that had long been dead, 55
 Spirits dried up and closely furled,
 The freshness of the early world.

Ah! since dark days still bring to light
 Man's prudence and man's fiery might,

14 Titanic strife Byron was noted for his fiery, passionate nature, and the word Titanic is fittingly applied to him. The Titans were superhuman beings of great size who rebelled against the gods. 17 iron age, so called because of the terrible years of the French Revolution and the period following. To Goethe they seemed to portend the destruction of Europe. 29-33 And he . . . happiness These lines are translated from Virgil's Georgics, 2, 490-492. 38 Orpheus, the famous musician of Greek mythology who descended to the lower world to rescue his wife Eurydice. He was allowed by Pluto, god of the underworld, to lead her to the upper world on condition that he should not look back. He broke the condition, however, and saw Eurydice vanish.

Time may restore us in his course 60
 Goethe's sage mind and Byron's force,
 But where will Europe's latter hour
 Again find Wordsworth's healing power?
 Others will teach us how to dare,
 And against fear our breast to steel; 65
 Others will strengthen us to bear —
 But who, ah! who, will make us feel?
 The cloud of mortal destiny,
 Others will front it fearlessly —
 But who, like him, will put it by? 70

Keep fresh the grass upon his grave,
 O Rotha, with thy living wave!
 Sing him thy best! for few or none
 Hears thy voice right, now he is gone. (1850)

From EMPEDOCLES ON ETNA

A DRAMATIC POEM

PERSONS

EMPEDOCLES

PAUSANIAS, a Physician

CALLICLES, a young Harp-player

The Scene of the Poem is on Mount Etna; at first in the forest region, afterwards on the summit of the mountain.

From ACT I, SCENE II

Noon. A Glen on the highest skirts of the woody region of Etna.

EMPEDOCLES — PAUSANIAS

Pausanias. The noon is hot When we have crossed the stream,
 We shall have left the woody tract and come
 Upon the open shoulder of the hill.
 See how the giant spires of yellow bloom
 Of the sun-loving gentian, in the heat, 5
 Are shining on those naked slopes like flame!
 Let us rest here; and now, Empedocles,
 Pantheia's history!

[A harp-note below is heard.]

Empedocles. Hark! what sound was that 72 Rotha, a small stream near Grasmere, Westmoreland, where Wordsworth is buried.

Empedocles on Etna Empedocles was a poet and a philosopher who lived in Sicily in the fifth century B.C. He was noted as a teacher of rhetoric and as a musician, and was reputed to be able to perform miracles. In the drama he is represented as an exile on Mount Etna, on the east coast of Sicily.

In Scene I Pausanias and Callicles discuss the present condition of their friend Empedocles, who is being carried on a litter up the mountain. It is arranged that Callicles is later to play on his harp, unseen, in an effort to cure the "fierce man-hating mood" of Empedocles. Cf. Browning's Soul, page 213.

8. Pantheia, a woman whom Empedocles is said to have brought to life after "thirty long days in a cold trance of death." Callicles says in Scene I that she "was subject to these trances from a girl."

Rose from below? If it were possible,
 And we were not so far from human haunt,
 I should have said that some one touched a harp 11

Hark! there again!

Pausanias. 'Tis the boy Callicles,
 The sweetest harp-player in Catana.
 He is forever coming on these hills,
 In summer, to all country-festivals, 15
 With a gay reveling band, he breaks from
 them

Sometimes, and wanders far among the glens.
 But heed him not, he will not mount to us;
 I spoke with him this morning Once more,
 therefore,

Instruct me of Pantheia's story, Master, 20
 As I have prayed thee.

Empedocles. That? and to what end?

Pausanias. It is enough that all men speak of it

But I will also say, that when the gods
 Visit us as they do with sign and plague,
 To know those spells of thine which stay their
 hand 25

Were to live free from terror

Empedocles. Spells? Mistrust them!
 Mind is the spell which governs earth and
 heaven.

Man has a mind with which to plan his safety,
 Know that, and help thyself!

Pausanias. But thine own words?—
 "The wit and counsel of man was never clear, Troubles confound the little wit he has" 31
 Mind is a light which the gods mock us with,
 To lead those false who trust it

[The harp sounds again]

Empedocles. Hist! once more!
 Listen, Pausanias! — Aye, 'tis Callicles,
 I know these notes among a thousand. Hark!

Callicles

(Sings unseen, from below).

The track winds down to the clear stream, 36
 To cross the sparkling shallows; there
 The cattle love to gather, on their way
 To the high mountain-pastures, and to stay,
 Till the rough cowherds drive them past, 40
 Knee-deep in the cool ford; for 'tis the last
 Of all the woody, high, well-watered dells
 On Etna, and the beam
 Of noon is broken there by chestnut-boughs
 Down its steep verdant sides; the air 45
 Is freshened by the leaping stream, which throws

Eternal showers of spray on the mossed roots
 Of trees, and veins of turf, and long dark shoots

Of ivy-plants, and fragrant hanging bells

13 Catana, a town at the foot of Mt. Etna

Of hyacinths, and on late anemones, 50
That muffle its wet banks; but glade,
And stream, and sward, and chestnut-trees,
End here; Etna beyond, in the broad glare
Of the hot noon, without a shade,
Slope behind slope, up to the peak, lies
bare, 55
The peak, round which the white clouds play

In such a glen, on such a day,
On Pelion, on the grassy ground,
Chiron, the aged Centaur lay,
The young Achilles standing by. 60
The Centaur taught him to explore
The mountains; where the glens are dry
And the tired Centaurs come to rest,
And where the soaking springs abound
And the straight ashes grow for spears, 65
And where the hill-goats come to feed,
And the sea-eagles build their nest
He showed him Phthia far away,
And said, "O boy, I taught this lore
To Peleus, in long distant years!" 70
He told him of the gods, the stars,
The tides — and then of mortal wars,
And of the life which heroes lead
Before they reach the Elysian place
And rest in the immortal mead; 75
And all the wisdom of his race.

The music below ceases, and EMPEDOCLES speaks, accompanying himself in a solemn manner on his harp.

The outspread world to span
A cord the gods first slung,
And then the soul of man
There, like a mirror, hung, 80
And bade the winds through space impel the gusty toy.

Hither and thither spins
The wind-borne, mirroring soul,
A thousand glimpses wins,
And never sees a whole; 85
Looks once, and drives elsewhere, and leaves its last employ

The gods laugh in their sleeve
To watch man doubt and fear,
Who knows not what to believe
Since he sees nothing clear, 90
And dares stamp nothing false where he finds nothing sure.

58 Pelion, a mountain in Thessaly, the haunt of the Centaurs—fabled monsters, half man and half horse. The most famous of the Centaurs was Chiron, noted for his wisdom. He was the instructor of Achilles, the son of Peleus. Achilles was the famous Greek hero in the Trojan War. He was born at Phthia, in Thessaly. 74 Elysian place, the abode of the blessed after death

Is this, Pausanias, so?
And can our souls not strive,
But with the winds must go,
And hurry where they drive? 95
Is fate indeed so strong, man's strength indeed so poor?

I will not judge. That man,
Howbeit, I judge as lost,
Whose mind allows a plan,
Which would degrade it most; 100
And he treats doubt the best who tries to see least ill.

Be not, then, fear's blind slave!
Thou art my friend; to thee,
All knowledge that I have,
All skill I wield, are free. 105
Ask not the latest news of the last miracle,

Ask not what days and nights
In trance Pantheia lay,
But ask how thou such sights
May'st see without dismay; 110
Ask what most helps when known, thou son of Anchitus!

What? hate, and awe, and shame
Fill thee to see our time;
Thou feelest thy soul's frame
Shaken and out of chime? 115
What? life and chance go hard with thee too,
as with us;

Thy citizens, 'tis said,
Envy thee and oppress,
Thy goodness no men aid,
All strive to make it less; 120
Tyranny, pride, and lust fill Sicily's abodes;

Heaven is with earth at strife,
Signs make thy soul afraid,
The dead return to life,
Rivers are dried, winds stayed, 125
Scarce can one think in calm, so threatening are the gods;

And we feel, day and night,
The burden of ourselves —
Well, then, the wiser wight
In his own bosom delves, 130
And asks what ails him so, and gets what cure he can.

The sophist sneers. Fool, take Thy pleasure, right or wrong!
The pious wail: Forsake
A world these sophists throng!— 135
Be neither saint nor sophist-led, but be a man!

129 wight, person

These hundred doctors try
To preach thee to their school.
We have the truth! they cry;
And yet their oracle, 140
Trumpet it as they will, is but the same as
thine.

Once read thy own breast right,
And thou hast done with fears;
Man gets no other light,
Search he a thousand years. 145
Sink in thyself! there ask what ails thee, at that shrine!

What makes thee struggle and rave?
Why are men ill at ease? —
'Tis that the lot they have
Fails their own will to please; 150
For man would make no murmuring, were his will obeyed.

And why is it, that still
Man with his lot thus fights? —
'Tis that he makes this will
The measure of his rights, 155
And believes Nature outraged if his will's gainsaid.

Couldst thou, Pausanias, learn
How deep a fault is this;
Couldst thou but once discern
Thou hast no right to bliss, 160
No title from the gods to welfare and repose,

Then thou wouldst look less mazed
Whene'er of bliss debarred,
Nor think the gods were crazed
When thy own lot went hard. 165
But we are all the same — the fools of our own woes!

For, from the first faint morn
Of life, the thirst for bliss
Deep in man's heart is born;
And, skeptic as he is, 170
He fails not to judge clear if this be quenched
or no.

Nor is the thirst to blame.
Man errs not that he deem's
His welfare his true aim;
He errs because he dreams 175
The world does but exist that welfare to bestow.

We mortals are no kings
For each of whom to sway
A new-made world up-springs,
Meant merely for his play; 180
No, we are strangers here; the world is from of old.

In vain our pent wills fret,
And would the world subdue.
Limits we did not set
Condition all we do; 185
Born into life we are, and life must be our mold.

Born into life! — man grows
Forth from his parents' stem,
And blends their bloods, as those
Of theirs are blent in them; 190
So each new man strikes root into a far fore-
time.

Born into life! — we bring
A bias with us here,
And, when here, each new thing
Affects us we come near; 195
To tunes we did not call our being must keep chime.

Born into life! — in vain,
Opinions, those or these,
Unaltered to retain
The obstinate mind decrees; 200
Experience, like a sea, soaks all-effacing in.

Born into life! — who lists
May what is false hold dear,
And for himself make mists
Through which to see less clear, 205
The world is what it is, for all our dust and din.

Born into life! — 'tis we,
And not the world, are new;
Our cry for bliss, our plea,
Others have urged it too — 210
Our wants have all been felt, our errors made before.

No eye could be too sound
To observe a world so vast,
No patience too profound
To sort what's here amassed; 215
How man may here best live no care too great
to explore.

But we — as some rude guest
Would change, where'er he roam,
The manners there professed
To those he brings from home — 220
We mark not the world's course, but would have it take ours.

The world's course proves the terms
On which man wins content,
Reason the proof confirms —
We spurn it, and invent 225
A false course for the world, and for ourselves, false powers.

Riches we wish to get,
Yet remain spendthrifts still;
We would have health, and yet
Still use our bodies ill; 230
Bafflers of our own prayers, from youth to life's last scenes

We would have inward peace,
Yet will not look within;
We would have misery cease,
Yet will not cease from sin, 235
We want all pleasant ends, but will use no harsh means;

We do not what we ought,
What we ought not, we do,
And lean upon the thought
That chance will bring us through, 240
But our own acts for good, or ill, are mightier
powers.

Yet, even when man forsakes
All sin — is just, is pure,
Abandons all which makes
His welfare insecure — 245
Other existences there are, that clash with ours.

Like us, the lightning-fires
Love to have scope and play,
The stream, like us, desires
An unimpeded way; 250
Like us, the Libyan wind delights to roam at large.

Streams will not curb their pride
The just man not to entomb,
Nor lightnings go aside
To give his virtues room, 255
Nor is that wind less rough which blows a good man's barge

Nature, with equal mind,
Sees all her sons at play,
Sees man control the wind,
The wind sweep man away; 260
Allows the proudly-riding and the foundering
bark.

And, lastly, though of ours
No weakness spoil our lot,
Though the non-human powers
Of Nature harm us not, 265
The ill deeds of other men make often our life dark

251 Libyan, from Libya, a part of northern Africa
252-256 Streams . . . barge Cf. Matthew, 5 44-46 —
"But I say unto you, Love your enemies . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust"

What were the wise man's plan? —
Through this sharp, toil-set life,
To work as best he can,
And win what's won by strife — 270
But we an easier way to cheat our pains have
found

Scratched by a fall, with moans
As children of weak age
Lend life to the dumb stones
Whereon to vent their rage, 275
And bend their little fists, and rate the senseless ground;

So, loath to suffer mute,
We, peopling the void air,
Make gods to whom to impute
The ills we ought to bear, 280
With God and Fate to rail at, suffering easily

Yet grant — as sense long missed
Things that are now perceived,
And much may still exist
Which is not yet believed — 285
Grant that the world were full of gods we cannot see;

All things the world which fill
Of but one stuff are spun,
That we who rail are still,
With what we rail at, one; 290
One with the o'erlabored Power that through the breadth and length

Of earth, and air, and sea,
In men, and plants, and stones,
Hath toil perpetually,
And travails, pants, and moans, 295
Fain would do all things well, but sometimes fails in strength

And patiently exact
Thus universal God
Alike to any act
Proceeds at any nod, 300
And quietly declaims the cursings of himself

This is not what man hates,
Yet he can curse but this Harsh gods and hostile Fates
Are dreams! this only is — 305
Is everywhere; sustains the wise, the foolish elf

Nor only, in the intent
To attach blame elsewhere,
Do we at will invent
Stern Powers who make their care 310
To embitter human life, malignant Deities,

But, next, we would reverse
The scheme ourselves have spun,
And what we made to curse
We now would lean upon, 315
And feign kind gods who perfect what man vainly tries.

Look, the world tempts our eye,
And we would know it all!
We map the starry sky,
We mine this earthen ball, 320
We measure the sea-tides, we number the sea-sands;

We scrutinize the dates
Of long-past human things,
The bounds of effaced states,
The lines of deceased kings, 325
We search out dead men's words, and works of dead men's hands;

We shut our eyes, and muse
How our own minds are made,
What springs of thought they use,
How rightened, how betrayed — 330
And spend our wit to name what most employ unnamed.

But still, as we proceed
The mass swells more and more
Of volumes yet to read,
Of secrets yet to explore. 335
Our hair grows gray, our eyes are dimmed,
our heat is tamed;

We rest our faculties,
And thus address the gods:
"True science if there is,
It stays in your abodes! 340
Man's measures cannot mete the immeasurable All

"You only can take in
The world's immense design.
Our desperate search was sin,
Which henceforth we resign, 345
Sure only that your mind sees all things which befall."

Fools! That in man's brief term
He cannot all things view,
Affords no ground to affirm
That there are gods who do; 350
Nor does being weary prove that he has where
to rest.

Again. — Our youthful blood
Claims rapture as its right;
The world, a rolling flood
Of newness and delight, 355
Draws in the enamored gazer to its shining
breast;

Pleasure, to our hot grasp,
Gives flowers, after flowers;
With passionate warmth we clasp
Hand after hand in ours; 360
Now do we soon perceive how fast our youth is spent.

At once our eyes grow clear!
We see, in blank dismay,
Year posting after year,
Sense after sense decay; 365
Our shivering heart is mined by secret dis-
content;

Yet still, in spite of truth,
In spite of hopes entombed,
That longing of our youth
Burns ever unconsumed, 370
Still hungrier for delight as delights grow more rare.

We pause, we hush our heart,
And thus address the gods
"The world hath failed to impart
The joy our youth forebodes, 375
Failed to fill up the void which in our breasts
we bear

"Changeful till now, we still Looked on to something new;
Let us, with changeless will,
Henceforth look on to you, 380
To find with you the joy we in vain here require!"

Fools! That so often here
Happiness mocked our prayer,
I think, might make us fear
A like event elsewhere; 385
Make us, not fly to dreams, but moderate desire.

And yet, for those who know
Themselves, who wisely take
Their way through life, and bow
To what they cannot break, 390
Why should I say that life need yield but moderate bliss?

Shall we, with temper spoiled,
Health sapped by living ill,
And judgment all embroiled
By sadness and self-will, 395
Shall we judge what for man is not true bliss or is?

Is it so small a thing
To have enjoyed the sun,
To have lived light in the spring,
To have loved, to have thought, to have
done; 400

To have advanced true friends, and beat down baffling foes —

That we must feign a bliss
Of doubtful future date,
And, while we dream on this,
Lose all our present state, 405
And relegate to worlds yet distant our repose?

Not much, I know, you prize
What pleasures may be had,
Who look on life with eyes
Estranged, like mine, and sad; 410
And yet the village-churl feels the truth more than you,

Who's loath to leave this life
Which to him little yields —
His hard-tasked sunburnt wife,
His often-labored fields, 415
The boors with whom he talked, the country-spots he knew.

But thou, because thou hear'st
Men scoff at heaven and fate,
Because the gods thou fear'st
Fail to make blest thy state, 420
Tremblest, and wilt not dare to trust the joys there are!

I say. Fear not! Life still Leaves human effort scope.
But, since life teems with ill,
Nurse no extravagant hope; 425
Because thou must not dream, thou need'st not then despair!

*A long pause At the end of it the notes of a harp below are again heard, and CALLICLES
sings:*

Far, far from here,
The Adriatic breaks in a warm bay
Among the green Illyrian hills; and there
The sunshine in the happy glens is fair, 430
And by the sea, and in the brakes.
The grass is cool, the seaside air
Buoyant and fresh, the mountain flowers
More virginal and sweet than ours.
And there, they say, two bright and agéd
snakes, 435
Who once were Cadmus and Harmonia,

429 Illyrian hills, mountains in ancient Illyria, a region north of Greece. 436 Cadmus and Harmonia. Cadmus was the legendary founder of Thebes, in Greece. He married Harmonia, the daughter of Mars and Venus, but because Cadmus had previously slain a crested snake sacred to Mars, a fatal vengeance hung over the family. The children of Cadmus perished by violence, and Cadmus and Harmonia left Thebes for Illyria. Their misfortunes weighed so heavily upon their minds that the gods granted their wish to be changed into serpents.

Bask in the glens or on the warm sea-shore,
In breathless quiet, after all their ills;
Nor do they see their country, nor the place
Where the Sphinx lived among the frowning
hills, 440
Nor the unhappy palace of their race,
Nor Thebes, nor the Ismenus, any more.

There those two live, far in the Illyrian brakes!
They had stayed long enough to see,
In Thebes, the billow of calamity 445
Over their own dear children rolled,
Curse upon curse, pang upon pang,
For years, they sitting helpless in their home,
A gray old man and woman, yet of old
The gods had to their marriage come, 450
And at the banquet all the Muses sang.

Therefore they did not end their days
In sight of blood, but were rapt, far away,
To where the west-wind plays,
And murmurs of the Adriatic come 455
To those untrodden mountain-lawns, and
there
Placed safely in changed forms, the pair
Wholly forget their first sad life, and home,
And all that Theban woe, and stray
Forever through the glens, placid and dumb

Empedocles. That was my harp-player again! — where is he? 461
Down by the stream?

Pausanias. Yes, Master, in the wood.

Empedocles. He ever loved the Theban story well!

But the day wears. Go now, Pausanias,
For I must be alone. Leave me one mule, 465
Take down with thee the rest to Catana
And for young Callicles, thank him from me;
Tell him, I never failed to love his lyre —
But he must follow me no more tonight.

Pausanias. Thou wilt return tomorrow to the city? 470

Empedocles. Either tomorrow or some other day,

In the sure revolutions of the world,
Good friend, I shall revisit Catana
I have seen many cities in my time,
Till mine eyes ache with the long spectacle,
And I shall doubtless see them all again; 476
Thou know'st me for a wanderer from of old
Meanwhile, stay me not now. Farewell, Pausanias!

[He departs on his way up the mountain]

440 Sphinx, the monster—half woman and half lion—sent to Thebes by Juno, mother of Mars, to punish the family of Cadmus. The monster propounded a riddle to all passers-by and killed those who could not solve it. 442 Ismenus, a small river near Thebes.

Pausanias (alone). I dare not urge him
further — he must go;
But he is strangely wrought! — I will speed
back 480
And bring Peisianax to him from the city;
His counsel could once soothe him. But,
Apollo!
How his brow lightened as the music rose!
Calicles must wait here, and play to him;
I saw him through the chestnuts far below,
Just since, down at the stream. — Ho! Cal-icles! 486
[He descends, calling.]

From ACT II

Calicles (from below)

Through the black, rushing smoke-bursts,
Thick breaks the red flame,
All Etna heaves fiercely
Her forest-clothed frame.

Not here, O Apollo! 5
Are haunts meet for thee.
But, where Helicon breaks down
In cliff to the sea,

Where the moon-silvered inlets
Send far their light voice 10
Up the still vale of Thisbe,
O speed, and rejoice!

On the sward at the cliff-top
Lie strewn the white flocks,
On the cliff-side the pigeons 15
Roost deep in the rocks.

In the moonlight the shepherds,
Soft lulled by the rills,
Lie wrapped in their blankets, 20
Asleep on the hills.

—What forms are these coming
So white through the gloom?
What garments out-glistening
The gold-flowered broom?

What sweet-breathing presence 25
Out-perfumes the thyme?
What voices enrapture
The night's balmy prime? —

481 Peisianax, a friend of Empedocles 482 Apollo, god of music and poetry.

Ad II The action takes place in the evening on the summit of the mountain. Empedocles is ready to hurl himself into the smoking volcano. Suddenly he hears Calicles singing below. He is restrained for a short time, but finally plunges into the crater just before Calicles sings this song.

7 Helicon, a mountain in Greece, sacred to Apollo 11 Thisbe, a town situated in a valley in Boeotia, Greece

'Tis Apollo comes leading His choir, the Nine 30
— The leader is fairest,
But all are divine

They are lost in the hollows!
They stream up again!
What seeks on this mountain 35
The glorified train? —

They bathe on this mountain,
In the spring by their road,
Then on to Olympus,
Their endless abode. 40

—Whose praise do they mention?
Of what is it told? —
What will be forever;
What was from of old.

First hymn they the Father 45
Of all things; and then,
The rest of immortals,
The action of men.

The day in his hotness,
The strife with the palm; 50
The night in her silence,
The stars in their calm. (1852)

4. ISOLATION. TO MARGUERITE

We were apart; yet, day by day,
I bade my heart more constant be.
I bade it keep the world away,
And grow a home for only thee,
Nor feared but thy love likewise grew, 5
Like mine, each day, more tried, more true.

The fault was grave! I might have known,
What far too soon, alas! I learned —
The heart can bind itself alone,
And faith may oft be unreturned. 10
Self-swayed our feelings ebb and swell —
Thou lov'st no more; — Farewell! Farewell!

Farewell! — and thou, thou lonely heart,
Which never yet without remorse
Even for a moment didst depart 15
From thy remote and spheréd course

30 the Nine, the nine Muses. See note on Clough's
In the Depths, page 404. 38 the spring, a spring flowing from Mount Helicon, sacred to the Muses. 39 Olympus, a mountain in Greece, the abode of the gods. 50 the palm,
the reward of victory.

Switzerland. This title is given to a group of six love poems. The three omitted are entitled Meeting, Parting, and A Farewell. The three included here were originally published as independent poems. With Isolation, cf. Browning's Two in the Campagna, page 231.

To haunt the place where passions reign —
Back to thy solitude again!

Back! with the conscious thrill of shame
Which Luna felt, that summer-night, 20
Flash through her pure immortal frame,
When she forsook the starry height
To hang over Endymion's sleep
Upon the pine-grown Latmian steep.

Yet she, chaste queen, had never proved 25
How vain a thing is human love,
Wandering in heaven, far removed.
But thou hast long had place to prove
This truth — to prove, and make thine own:
"Thou hast been, shalt be, art, alone." 30

Or, if not quite alone, yet they
Which touch thee are unmating things —
Ocean and clouds and night and day;
Lorn autumns and triumphant springs;
And life, and others' joy and pain, 35
And love, if love, of happier men.

Of happier men — for they, at least,
Have dreamed two human hearts might blend
In one, and were through faith released
From isolation without end 40
Prolonged, nor knew, although not less
Alone than thou, their loneliness.

(1855)

5. TO MARGUERITE — CONTINUED

Yes! in the sea of life enisled,
With echoing straits between us thrown,
Dotting the shoreless watery wild,
We mortal millions live alone.
The islands feel the encircling flow, 5
And then their endless bounds they know.

But when the moon their hollows lights,
And they are swept by balms of spring,
And in their glens, on starry nights,
The nightingales divinely sing; 10
And lovely notes, from shore to shore,
Across the sounds and channels pour —

Oh! then a longing like despair
Is to their farthest caverns sent;
For surely once, they feel, we were 15
Parts of a single continent!
Now round us spreads the watery plain —
Oh, might our marges meet again!

Who ordered, that their longing's fire
Should be, as soon as kindled, cooled? 20

20 Luna, Diana, the goddess of the moon and the goddess of chastity. She fell in love with Endymion, the shepherd boy whom she found sleeping on Mt. Latmus, in Asia Minor.

Who renders vain their deep desire? —
A god, a god their severance ruled!
And bade betwixt their shores to be
The unplumbed, salt, estranging sea. (1852)

6. ABSENCE

In this fair stranger's eyes of gray
Thine eyes, my love! I see
I shiver; for the passing day
Had borne me far from thee.

This is the curse of life! that not 5
A nobler, calmer train
Of wiser thoughts and feelings blot
Our passions from our brain;

But each day brings its petty dust
Our soon-choked souls to fill, 10
And we forget because we must
And not because we will.

I struggle toward the light; and ye,
Once-longed-for storms of love!
If with the light ye cannot be, 15
I bear that ye remove.

I struggle toward the light — but oh,
While yet the night is chill,
Upon time's barren, stormy flow,
Stay with me, Marguerite, still! 20
(1852)

DESPONDENCY

The thoughts that rain their steady glow
Like stars on life's cold sea,
Which others know, or say they know —
They never shone for me.

Thoughts light, like gleams, my spirit's sky,
But they will not remain. 6
They light me once, they hurry by;
And never come again. (1852)

SELF-DECEPTION

Say, what blinds us, that we claim the glory
Of possessing powers not our share?
— Since man woke on earth, he knows his story,
But, before we woke on earth, we were.

Long, long since, undowered yet, our spirit 5
Roamed, ere birth, the treasures of God,
Saw the gifts, the powers it might inherit,
Asked an outfit for its earthly road.

Then, as now, this tremulous, eager being Strained and longed and grasped each gift it
saw; 10

Then, as now, a Power beyond our seeing
Staved us back, and gave our choice the law.

Ah, whose hand that day through heaven guided

Man's new spirit, since it was not we?
Ah, who swayed our choice, and who decided What our gifts, and what our wants should
be? 16

For, alas! he left us each retaining Shreds of gifts which he refused in full.
Still these waste us with their hopeless straining,
Still the attempt to use them proves them
null. 20

And on earth we wander, groping, reeling;
Powers stir in us, stir and disappear
Ah! and he, who placed our master-feeling,
Failed to place that master-feeling clear

We but dream we have our wished-for powers,
Ends we seek we never shall attain. 26
Ah! some power exists there, which is ours?
Some end is there, we indeed may gain?
(1852)

TRISTRAM AND ISEULT

I. TRISTRAM

Tristram

Is she not come? The messenger was sure.
Prop me upon the pillows once again —
Raise me, my page! this cannot long endure.
— Christ, what a night! how the sleet whips
the pane!

What lights will those out to the northward
be? 5

The Page

The lanterns of the fishing-boats at sea.

Tristram

Soft — who is that stands by the dying fire?

The Page

Iseult.

Tristram

Ah! not the Iseult I desire.

What knight is this so weak and pale,
Though the locks are yet brown on his noble
head, 10

Propped on pillows in his bed,
Gazing seaward for the light
Of some ship that fights the gale
On this wild December night?
Over the sick man's feet is spread 15
A dark green forest-dress;
A gold harp leans against the bed,
Ruddy in the fire's light.
I know him by his harp of gold,
Famous in Arthur's court of old; 20
I know him by his forest-dress —
The peerless hunter, harper, knight,
Tristram of Lyonesse.

What lady is this, whose silk attire
Gleams so rich in the light of the fire? 25
The ringlets on her shoulders lying
In their flitting luster vying
With the clasp of burnished gold
Which her heavy robe doth hold
Her looks are mild, her fingers slight 30
As the driven snow are white;
But her cheeks are sunk and pale.
Is it that the black sea-gale
Beating from the Atlantic sea
On this coast of Brittany, 35
Nips too keenly the sweet flower?
Is it that a deep fatigue
Hath come on her, a chilly fear,
Passing all her youthful hour
Spinning with her maidens here, 40
Listlessly through the window-bars
Gazing seawards many a league,
From her lonely shore-built tower,
While the knights are at the wars?
Or, perhaps, has her young heart 45
Felt already some deeper smart,
Of those that in secret the heart-strings rive,
Leaving her sunk and pale, though fair?
Who is this snowdrop by the sea? —
I know her by her mildness rare, 50
Her snow-white hands, her golden hair;
I know her by her rich silk dress,
And her fragile loveliness —

12 Staved us back, held us back as with a staff
Tristram and Iseult Tristram was a famous hero of Celtic legend. His home was in Lyonesse, a region which, according to tradition, sank beneath the sea, its position thereafter being marked by islands off the point of Cornwall. Tristram was sent to Ireland by his uncle, King Mark of Cornwall, to bring back Iseult, the King's bride, to the castle of Tintagel. On the return voyage Tristram and Iseult both drank of a potion that made them permanent lovers. Forced by his uncle to leave Cornwall, Tristram went to Brittany and married Iseult of the White Hands. Afterwards he became attached to Arthur's Court as one of the Knights of the Round Table. The story of Tristram is found in Malory's Morte Darthur, Books 10-12. Tennyson treated the theme in The Last Tournament, Swinburne in Tristram of Lyonesse (page 707), and Edwin Arlington Robinson in Tristram. In Arnold's poem Tristram is lying ill in Brittany waiting for an answer to the message he has sent to Iseult of Ireland asking her to come to him. The story is told partly in dialogue and partly in narrative.

The sweetest Christian soul alive,
Iseult of Brittany. 55

Iseult of Brittany? — but where
Is that other Iseult fair,
That proud, first Iseult, Cornwall's queen?
She, whom Tristram's ship of yore
From Ireland to Cornwall bore, 60
To Tyntagel, to the side
Of King Marc, to be his bride?
She who, as they voyaged, quaffed
With Tristram that spiced magic draft,
Which since then forever rolls 65
Through their blood, and binds their souls,
Working love, but working teen? —
There were two Iseults who did sway
Each her hour of Tristram's day;
But one possessed his waning time, 70
The other his resplendent prime.
Behold her here, the patient flower,
Who possessed his darker hour!
Iseult of the Snow-White Hand
Watches pale by Tristram's bed. 75
She is here who had his gloom,
Where art thou who hadst his bloom?
One such kiss as those of yore
Might thy dying knight restore!
Does the love-draft work no more? 80
Art thou cold, or false, or dead,
Iseult of Ireland?

Loud howls the wind, sharp patters the rain,
And the knight sinks back on his pillows
again.
He is weak with fever and pain, 85
And his spirit is not clear
Hark! he mutters in his sleep,
As he wanders far from here,
Changes place and time of year,
And his closed eye doth sweep 90
O'er some fair unwintry sea,
Not this fierce Atlantic deep,
While he mutters brokenly:

Tristram

The calm sea shines, loose hang the vessel's sails; 94
Before us are the sweet green fields of Wales,
And overhead the cloudless sky of May. —
"Ah, would I were in those green fields at play,
Not pent on shipboard this delicious day!
Tristram, I pray thee, of thy courtesy,
Reach me my golden phial stands by thee, 100
But pledge me in it first for courtesy. —"
Ha! dost thou start? are thy lips blanched like mine?

Child, 'tis no true draft this, 'tis poisoned
wine!
Iseult! . . .

Ah, sweet angels, let him dream! 105
Keep his eyelids! let him seem
Not this fever-wasted wight
Thinned and paled before his time,
But the brilliant youthful knight
In the glory of his prime, 110
Sitting in the gilded barge,
At thy side, thou lovely charge,
Bending gaily o'er thy hand,
Iseult of Ireland!
And she too, that princess fair, 115
If her bloom be now less rare,
Let her have her youth again —
Let her be as she was then!
Let her have her proud dark eyes,
And her petulant quick replies — 120
Let her sweep her dazzling hand
With its gesture of command,
And shake back her raven hair
With the old imperious air!
As of old, so let her be, 125
That first Iseult, princess bright,
Chatting with her youthful knight
As he steers her o'er the sea,
Quitting at her father's will
The green isle where she was bred, 130
And her bower in Ireland,
For the surge-beat Cornish strand;
Where the prince whom she must wed
Dwells on loud Tyntagel's hill,
High above the sounding sea. 135
And that potion rare her mother
Gave her, that her future lord,
Gave her, that King Marc and she,
Might drink it on their marriage-day,
And forever love each other — 140
Let her, as she sits on board,
Ah, sweet saints, unwittingly!
See it shine, and take it up,
And to Tristram laughing say:
"Sir Tristram, of thy courtesy, 145
Pledge me in my golden cup!"
Let them drink it — let their hands
Tremble, and their cheeks be flame,
As they feel the fatal bands
Of a love they dare not name, 150
With a wild delicious pain,
Twine about their hearts again!
Let the early summer be
Once more round them, and the sea
Blue, and o'er its mirror kind 155
Let the breath of the May-wind,
Wandering through their drooping sails,
Die on the green fields of Wales!

Let a dream like this restore
What his eye must see no more! 160

Tristram

Chill blows the wind, the pleasure-walks are drear —

Madcap, what jest was this, to meet me here?
Were feet like those made for so wild a way?
The southern winter-parlor, by my fay, 164
Had been the likeliest trysting-place today!

"Tristram! — nay, nay — thou must not take my hand! —

Tristram! — sweet love! — we are betrayed — out-planned

Fly — save thyself — save me! — I dare not stay!" —

One last kiss first! — "'Tis vain — to horse
— away!"

Ah! sweet saints, his dream doth move 170
Faster surely than it should,
From the fever in his blood!

All the springtime of his love
Is already gone and past,
And instead thereof is seen 175

Its winter, which endureth still —
Tyntagel on its surge-beat hill,
The pleasure-walks, the weeping queen,
The flying leaves, the straining blast,
And that long, wild kiss — their last 180

And this rough December-night,
And his burning fever-pain,
Mingle with his hurrying dream,
Till they rule it, till he seem

The pressed fugitive again, 185
The love-desperate banished knight
With a fire in his brain

Flying o'er the stormy main.
— Whither does he wander now?

Haply in his dreams the wind 190
Wafts him here, and lets him find
The lovely orphan child again

In her castle by the coast;
The youngest, fairest chatelaine

Whom this realm of France can boast, 195
Our snowdrop by the Atlantic sea,
Iseult of Brittany

And — for through the haggard air,
The stained arms, the matted hair

Of that stranger-knight ill-starred, 200
There gleamed something, which recalled
The Tristram who in better days

Was Launcelot's guest at Joyous Gard —
Welcomed here, and here installed,

161 pleasure-walks, the walks in the pleasure, an inclosure with fountains, flower gardens, etc 164. fay, faith 194 chatelaine, lady of a castle 203 Launcelot.
See Tennyson's Launcelot and Elaine, page 120, and Critical Notes Joyous Gard, Launcelot's home, reputed to have been near Berwick, in northern England

Tended of his fever here, 205

Haply he seems again to move
His young guardian's heart with love;
In his exiled loneliness,

In his stately, deep distress,
Without a word, without a tear. 210

— Ah! 'tis well he should retrace
His tranquil life in this lone place;
His gentle bearing at the side

Of his timid youthful bride;
His long rambles by the shore 215

On winter-evenings, when the roar
Of the near waves came, sadly grand,
Through the dark, up the drowned sand,

Or his endless reveries
In the woods, where the gleams play 220

On the grass under the trees,
Passing the long summer's day
Idle as a mossy stone

In the forest-depths alone,
The chase neglected, and his hound 225

Couched beside him on the ground.
— Ah! what trouble's on his brow?
Hither let him wander now;

Hither, to the quiet hours
Passed among these heaths of ours 230

By the gray Atlantic sea;
Hours, if not of ecstasy,
From violent anguish surely free!

Tristram

All red with blood the whirling river flows,
The wide plain rings, the dazed air throbs with blows 235

Upon us are the chivalry of Rome —
Their spears are down, their steeds are bathed in foam.

"Up, Tristram, up," men cry, "thou moonstruck knight!

What foul fiend rides thee? On into the fight!"

— Above the din her voice is in my ears; 240
I see her form glide through the crossing spears —

Iseult! . . .

Ah! he wanders forth again;
We cannot keep him; now, as then,
There's a secret in his breast 245

Which will never let him rest.
These musing fits in the green wood
They cloud the brain, they dull the blood!

— His sword is sharp, his horse is good;
Beyond the mountains will he see 250

The famous towns of Italy,

236 chivalry of Rome. Early tradition states that King Arthur and his knights conquered Scandinavia, Gaul, and Rome 238 moonstruck. The moon was long thought to cause madness

And label with the blessed sign
 The heathen Saxons on the Rhine.
 At Arthur's side he fights once more
 With the Roman emperor. 255
 There's many a gay knight where he goes
 Will help him to forget his care;
 The march, the leaguer, heaven's blithe air,
 The neighing steeds, the ringing blows —
 Sick pining comes not where these are. 260
 Ah! what boots it that the jest
 Lightens every other brow,
 What, that every other breast
 Dances as the trumpets blow,
 If one's own heart beats not light 265
 On the waves of the tossed fight,
 If oneself cannot get free
 From the clog of misery?
 Thy lovely youthful wife grows pale
 Watching by the salt sea-tide 270
 With her children at her side
 For the gleam of thy white sail
 Home, Tristram, to thy halls again!
 To our lonely sea complain,
 To our forests tell thy pain! 275

Tristram

All round the forest sweeps off, black in shade,
 But it is moonlight in the open glade;
 And in the bottom of the glade shine clear
 The forest-chapel and the fountain near.
 — I think I have a fever in my blood; 280
 Come, let me leave the shadow of this wood, Ride down, and bathe my hot brow in the flood.
 — Mild shines the cold spring in the moon's clear light;
 God! 'tis her face plays in the waters bright
 "Fair love," she says, "canst thou forget so soon, 285
 At this soft hour, under this sweet moon?" —
 Iseult! . . .

Ah, poor soul! if this be so,
 Only death can balm thy woe.
 The solitudes of the green wood 290
 Had no medicine for thy mood;
 The rushing battle cleared thy blood
 As little as did solitude.
 — Ah! his eyelids slowly break
 Their hot seals, and let him wake; 295
 What new change shall we now see?
 A happier? Worse it cannot be

Tristram

Is my page here? Come, turn me to the fire!

Upon the window-panes the moon shines
 bright,
 The wind is down — but she'll not come tonight. 300
 Ah no! she is asleep in Cornwall now, Far hence; her dreams are fair — smooth is her brow.
 Of me she recks not, nor my vain desire.
 — I have had dreams, I have had dreams,
 my page,
 Would take a score years from a strong man's
 age; 305
 And with a blood like mine, will leave, I fear, Scant leisure for a second messenger
 — My princess, art thou there? Sweet, do not wait!
 To bed, and sleep! my fever is gone by; 309
 Tonight my page shall keep me company.
 Where do the children sleep? kiss them for
 me!
 Poor child, thou art almost as pale as I;
 This comes of nursing long and watching late
 To bed — good night!

She left the gleam-lit fireplace, 315
 She came to the bedside;
 She took his hands in hers — her tears
 Down on his wasted fingers rained.
 She raised her eyes upon his face —
 Not with a look of wounded pride, 320
 A look as if the heart complained —
 Her look was like a sad embrace;
 The gaze of one who can divine
 A grief, and sympathize.
 Sweet flower! thy children's eyes 325
 Are not more innocent than thine.
 But they sleep in sheltered rest,
 Like helpless birds in the warm nest,
 On the castle's southern side;
 Where feebly comes the mournful roar 330
 Of buffeting wind and surging tide
 Through many a room and corridor
 — Full on their window the moon's ray
 Makes their chamber as bright as day.
 It shines upon the blank white walls, 335
 And on the snowy pillow falls,
 And on two angel-heads doth play
 Turned to each other — the eyes closed,
 The lashes on the cheeks reposed
 Round each sweet brow the cap close-set 340
 Hardly lets peep the golden hair;
 Through the soft-opened lips the air
 Scarcely moves the coverlet.
 One little wandering arm is thrown
 At random on the counterpane, 345
 And often the fingers close in haste
 As if their baby-owner chased
 The butterflies again.
 This stir they have, and this alone;

But else they are so still! 350
 — Ah, tired madcaps! you lie still;
 But were you at the window now,
 To look forth on the fairy sight
 Of your illumined haunts by night, 355
 To see the park-glades where you play
 Far lovelier than they are by day,
 To see the sparkle on the eaves,
 And upon every giant-bough
 Of those old oaks, whose wet red leaves
 Are jeweled with bright drops of rain — 360
 How would your voices run again!
 And far beyond the sparkling trees
 Of the castle-park one sees
 The bare heaths spreading, clear as day,
 Moor behind moor, far, far away, 365
 Into the heart of Brittany.
 And here and there, locked by the land,
 Long inlets of smooth glittering sea,
 And many a stretch of watery sand
 All shining in the white moonbeams — 370
 But you see fairer in your dreams!
 What voices are these on the clear night-air?
 What lights in the court — what steps on the stair?

II. ISEULT OF IRELAND

Tristram

Raise the light, my page! that I may see
 her —
 Thou art come at last, then, haughty
 Queen!
 Long I've waited, long I've fought my fever,
 Late thou comest, cruel thou hast been.

Iseult

Blame me not, poor sufferer! that I tarried; s
 Bound I was, I could not break the band.
 Chide not with the past, but feel the present!
 I am here—we meet—I hold thy hand.

Tristram

Thou art come, indeed — thou hast rejoined
 me;
 Thou hast dared it — but too late to save Fear not now that men should tax thine honor! 11
 I am dying; build (thou may'st) my grave!

Iseult

Tristram, ah, for love of Heaven, speak kindly!
 What, I hear these bitter words from thee?
 Sick with grief I am, and faint with travel — Take my hand — dear Tristram, look on me! 16

Tristram

I forgot, thou comest from thy voyage —
 Yes, the spray is on thy cloak and hair.
 But thy dark eyes are not dimmed, proud
 Iseult!
 And thy beauty never was more fair. 20

Iseult

Ah, harsh flatterer! let alone my beauty!
 I, like thee, have left my youth afar.
 Take my hand, and touch these wasted fingers —
 See my cheek and lips, how white they are!

Tristram

Thou art paler — but thy sweet charm,
 Iseult! 25
 Would not fade with the dull years away
 Ah, how fair thou standest in the moonlight!
 I forgive thee, Iseult! — thou wilt stay?

Iseult

Fear me not, I will be always with thee;
 I will watch thee, tend thee, soothe thy
 pain; 30
 Sing thee tales of true, long-parted lovers,
 Joined at evening of their days again.

Tristram

No, thou shalt not speak! I should be finding Something altered in thy courtly tone
 Sit — sit by me! I will think, we've lived so
 In the greenwood, all our lives, alone 36

Iseult

Altered, Tristram? Not in courts, believe me,
 Love like mine is altered in the breast
 Courtly life is light and cannot reach it —
 Ah! it lives, because so deep-suppressed! 40

What, thou think'st men speak in courtly chambers
 Words by which the wretched are consoled?
 What, thou think'st this aching brow was cooler,
 Circled, Tristram, by a band of gold?

Royal state with Marc, my deep-wronged husband — 45
 That was bliss to make my sorrows flee!
 Silken courtiers whispering honeyed nothings —
 Those were friends to make me false to
 thee!

Ah, on which, if both our lots were balanced,
 Was indeed the heaviest burden thrown —

Thee, a pining exile in thy forest, 51
Me, a smiling queen upon my throne?

Vain and strange debate, where both have suffered,

Both have passed a youth consumed and
sad,

Both have brought their anxious day to evening, 55

And have now short space for being glad!

Joined we are henceforth; nor will thy people,
Nor thy younger Iseult take it ill,

That a former rival shares her office,
When she sees her humbled, pale, and still.

I, a faded watcher by thy pillow, 61
I, a statue on thy chapel-floor,

Poured in prayer before the Virgin-Mother,
Rouse no anger, make no rivals more.

She will cry: "Is this the foe I dreaded? 65
This his idol? this that royal bride?"

Ah, an hour of health would purge his eyesight!

Stay, pale queen! forever by my side "

Hush, no words! that smile, I see, forgives me.
I am now thy nurse, I bid thee sleep. 70

Close thine eyes — this flooding moonlight blinds them! —

Nay, all's well again! thou must not weep.

Tristram

I am happy! yet I feel there's something Swells my heart, and takes my breath
away

Through a mist I see thee; near — come nearer! 75

Bend — bend down! — I yet have much to
say.

Iseult

Heaven! his head sinks back upon the pillow —
Tristram! Tristram! let thy heart not fail!

Call on God and on the holy angels!
What, love, courage! — Christ! he is so pale. 80

Tristram

Hush, 'tis vain, I feel my end approaching!
This is what my mother said should be,

When the fierce pains took her in the forest,
The deep drafts of death, in bearing me.

"Son," she said, "thy name shall be of
sorrow, 85

Tristram art thou called for my death's
sake "

So she said, and died in the drear forest Grief since then his home with me doth
make.

I am dying. — Start not, nor look wildly!

Me, thy living friend, thou canst not save.
But, since living we were ununited, 91

Go not far, O Iseult! from my grave.

Close mine eyes, then seek the princess Iseult;
Speak her fair, she is of royal blood!

Say, I willed so, that thou stay beside me —
She will grant it; she is kind and good. 96

Now to sail the seas of death I leave thee —
One last kiss upon the living shore!

Iseult

Tristram! — Tristram! — stay — receive me
with thee!

Iseult leaves thee, Tristram! never more 100

You see them clear — the moon shines bright.

Slow, slow and softly, where she stood,

She sinks upon the ground; — her hood

Had fallen back; her arms outspread

Still hold her lover's hand; her head 105

Is bowed, half-buried, on the bed

O'er the blanched sheet her raven hair

Lies in disordered streams, and there,

Strung like white stars, the pearls still are,

And the golden bracelets, heavy and rare, 110

Flash on her white arms still —

The very same which yesternight

Flashed in the silver sconces' light,

When the feast was gay and the laughter loud

In Tyntagel's palace proud 115

But then they decked a restless ghost

With hot-flushed cheeks and brilliant eyes,

And quivering lips on which the tide

Of courtly speech abruptly died,

And a glance which over the crowded floor,

The dancers, and the festive host, 121

Flew ever to the door

That the knights eyed her in surprise,

And the dames whispered scoffingly:

"Her moods, good lack, they pass like showers!"

But yesternight and she would be 126

As pale and still as withered flowers,

And now tonight she laughs and speaks

And has a color in her cheeks,

Christ keep us from such fantasy!" — 130

Yes, now the longing is o'erpast,
Which, dogged by fear and fought by shame,

85 name of sorrow The name Tristram is from the Latin word tristis, meaning sorrow

113 sconce, a bracket for holding a light 130 fantasy, queer behavior

Shook her weak bosom day and night,
 Consumed her beauty like a flame,
 And dimmed it like the desert-blast 135
 And though the bedclothes hide her face,
 Yet were it lifted to the light,
 The sweet expression of her brow
 Would charm the gazer, till his thought
 Erased the ravages of time, 140
 Filled up the hollow cheek, and brought
 A freshness back as of her prime —
 So healing is her quiet now
 So perfectly the lines express
 A tranquil, settled loveliness, 145
 Her younger rival's purest grace.

The air of the December-night
 Steals coldly around the chamber bright,
 Where those lifeless lovers be;
 Swinging with it, in the light 150
 Flaps the ghostlike tapestry.
 And on the arras wrought you see
 A stately huntsman, clad in green,
 And round him a fresh forest-scene.
 On that clear forest-knoll he stays, 155
 With his pack round him, and delays.
 He stares and stares, with troubled face,
 At this huge, gleam-lit fireplace,
 At that bright, iron-figured door,
 And those blown rushes on the floor. 160
 He gazes down into the room
 With heated cheeks and flurried air,
 And to himself he seems to say.
*"What place is this, and who are they?
 Who is that kneeling lady fair?
 And on his pillows that pale knight
 Who seems of marble on a tomb?
 How comes it here, this chamber bright,
 Through whose mullioned windows clear 170
 The castle-court all wet with rain,
 The drawbridge and the moat appear,
 And then the beach, and, marked with spray,
 The sunken reefs, and far away
 The unquiet bright Atlantic plain?
 —What, has some glamour made me sleep, 175
 And sent me with my dogs to sweep,
 By night, with boisterous bugle-peal,
 Through some old, seaside, knightly hall,
 Not in the free greenwood at all?
 That knight's asleep, and at her prayer
 That lady by the bed doth kneel —
 Then hush, thou boisterous bugle-peal!"*
 — The wild boar rustles in his lair,
 The fierce hounds snuff the tainted air;
 But lord and hounds keep rooted there. 185

Cheer, cheer thy dogs into the brake,
 O hunter! and without a fear

Thy golden-tasseled bugle blow,
 And through the glades thy pastime take —
 For thou wilt rouse no sleepers here! 190
 For these thou seest are unmoved,
 Cold, cold as those who lived and loved
 A thousand years ago

III. ISEULT OF BRITTANY

A year had flown, and o'er the sea away,
 In Cornwall, Tristram and Queen Iseult lay,
 In King Marc's chapel, in Tyntagel old —
 There in a ship they bore those lovers cold

The young surviving Iseult, one bright day, s Had wandered forth. Her children were at play

In a green circular hollow in the heath
 Which borders the sea-shore — a country
 path

Creeps over it from the tilled fields behind.
 The hollow's grassy banks are soft-inclined, 10
 And to one standing on them, far and near
 The lone unbroken view spreads bright and
 clear

Over the waste. This cirque of open ground
 Is light and green; the heather, which all
 round

Creeps thickly, grows not here; but the pale
 grass 15
 Is strewn with rocks, and many a shivered mass

Of veined white-gleaming quartz, and here
 and there

Dotted with holly-trees and juniper.

In the smooth center of the opening stood Three hollies side by side, and made a screen, 20

Warm with the winter-sun, of burnished green
 With scarlet berries gemmed, the fell-fare's food.

Under the glittering hollies Iseult stands,
 Watching her children play, their little hands
 Are busy gathering spars of quartz, and streams 25

Of stagshorn for their hats; anon, with screams

Of mad delight they drop their spoils, and
 bound

Among the holly-clumps and broken ground,
 Racing full speed, and startling in their rush
 The fell-fares and the speckled missel-thrush 30

Out of their glossy coverts; — but when now
 Their cheeks were flushed, and over each hot
 brow,

169 mullioned windows, windows with panes of glass divided by upright stone bars

22 fell-fare, field-fare, a kind of thrush 25 spars of quartz, pieces of quartz crystal 26 stagshorn, a kind of moss 30 missel-thrush, a large European thrush that feeds on mistletoe berries

Under the feathered hats of the sweet pair,
In blinding masses showered the golden hair—
Then Iseult called them to her, and the three Clustered under the holly-screen, and she 36
Told them an old-world Breton history.

Warm in their mantles wrapped the three stood there,
Under the hollies, in the clear still air —
Mantles with those rich furs deep glistening 40
Which Venice ships do from swart Egypt
bring Long they stayed still — then, pacing at their ease,
Moved up and down under the glossy trees
But still, as they pursued their warm dry
road, 44
From Iseult's lips the unbroken story flowed,
And still the children listened, their blue eyes
Fixed on their mother's face in wide surprise;
Nor did their looks stray once to the seaside,
Nor to the brown heaths round them, bright and wide,
Nor to the snow, which, though 'twas all
away 50
From the open heath, still by the hedgerows
lay,
Nor to the shining sea-fowl, that with screams Bore up from where the bright Atlantic gleams,
Swooping to landward, nor to where, quite
clear,
The fell-fares settled on the thickets near. 55
And they would still have listened, till dark
night
Came keen and chill down on the heather
bright;
But, when the red glow on the sea grew cold,
And the gray turrets of the castle old
Looked sternly through the frosty evening-
air, 60
Then Iseult took by the hand those children
fair,
And brought her tale to an end, and found
the path,
And led them home over the darkening heath.

And is she happy? Does she see unmoved
The days in which she might have lived and
loved 65
Slip without bringing bliss slowly away,
One after one, tomorrow like today?
Joy has not found her yet, nor ever will —
Is it this thought which makes her mien so
still,
Her features so fatigued, her eyes, though
sweet, 70
So sunk, so rarely lifted save to meet

Her children's? She moves slow, her voice
alone
Hath yet an infantine and silver tone,
But even that comes languidly; in truth,
She seems one dying in a mask of youth. 75
And now she will go home, and softly lay
Her laughing children in their beds, and play
Awhile with them before they sleep, and then She'll light her silver lamp, which fishermen
Dragging their nets through the rough waves, afar, 80
Along this iron coast, know like a star,
And take her broidery-frame, and there she'll sit
Hour after hour, her gold curls sweeping it;
Lifting her soft-bent head only to mind
Her children, or to listen to the wind 85
And when the clock peals midnight, she will move
Her work away, and let her fingers rove
Across the shaggy brows of Tristram's hound,
Who lies, guarding her feet, along the ground,
Or else she will fall musing, her blue eyes 90
Fixed, her slight hands clasped on her lap,
then rise,
And at her prie-dieu kneel, until she have told
Her rosary-beads of ebony tipped with gold,
Then to her soft sleep — and tomorrow 'll be Today's exact repeated effigy. 95

Yes, it is lonely for her in her hall
The children, and the gray-haired seneschal,
Her women, and Sir Tristram's agéd hound,
Are there the sole companions to be found
But these she loves, and noisier life than this
She would find ill to bear, weak as she is. 101
She has her children, too, and night and day
Is with them, and the wide heaths where they
play,
The hollies, and the cliff, and the seashore,
The sand, the sea-birds, and the distant sails,
These are to her dear as to them; the tales 106
With which this day the children she beguiled
She gleaned from Breton grandames, when a
child,
In every hut along this seacoast wild.
She herself loves them still, and, when they are told, 110
Can forget all to hear them, as of old.

Dear saints, it is not sorrow, as I hear,
Not suffering, which shuts up eye and ear
To all that has delighted them before,
And lets us be what we were once no more.
No, we may suffer deeply, yet retain 116
Power to be moved and soothed, for all our
pain,
By what of old pleased us, and will again

No, 'tis the gradual furnace of the world,
In whose hot air our spirits are upcurled 120
Until they crumble, or else grow like steel — Which kills in us the bloom, the youth, the
spring —

Which leaves the fierce necessity to feel,
But takes away the power — this can avail,
By drying up our joy in everything, 125
To make our former pleasures all seem stale
This, or some tyrannous single thought, some fit

Of passion, which subdues our souls to it,
Till for its sake alone we live and move —
Call it ambition, or remorse, or love — 130
This too can change us wholly, and make seem
All which we did before, shadow and dream.

And yet, I swear, it angers me to see
How this fool passion gulls men potently;
Being, in truth, but a diseased unrest, 135
And an unnatural overhear at best
How they are full of languor and distress
Not having it, which when they do possess,
They straightway are burnt up with fume
and care,
And spend their lives in posting here and
there 140

Where this plague drives them, and have little ease,
Are furious with themselves, and hard to
please,
Like that bold Cæsar, the famed Roman
wight,

Who wept at reading of a Grecian knight
Who made a name at younger years than he,
Or that renowned mirror of chivalry, 146
Prince Alexander, Philip's peerless son,
Who carried the great war from Macedon
Into the Soudan's realm, and thundered on
To die at thirty-five in Babylon. 150

What tale did Iseult to the children say,
Under the hollies, that bright winter's day?

She told them of the fairy-haunted land
Away the other side of Brittany,
Beyond the heaths, edged by the lonely sea,
Of the deep forest-glades of Broce-hande, 156
Through whose green boughs the golden sunshine creeps,

139 fume, passion 143-150. Cæsar . . . Babylon. The Roman historian Suetonius (c. 75-160 A.D.) relates that Julius Cæsar wept when he heard of the conquests of Alexander the Great (356-323 B.C.), son of Philip, king of Macedon. Alexander became king of Macedon when he was twenty years old and conquered Persia when he was twenty-five. 149 Soudan's, Sultan's 156 Broce-hande, a forest supposed to have been in Brittany. At one end of it was the tomb of Merlin, the magician of Arthur's Court, who was induced by his mistress Vivien to tell her the secret of his magic power. Having learned that secret, she used it to overcome him. See Tennyson's Merlin and Vivien.

Where Merlin by the enchanted thorn-tree
sleeps.

For her he came with the fay Vivian,
One April, when the warm days first began. 160

He was on foot, and that false fay, his friend,
On her white palfrey, where he met his end,
In these lone sylvan glades, that April-day
This tale of Merlin and the lovely fay
Was the one Iseult chose, and she brought
clear 165

Before the children's fancy him and her.

Blowing between the stems, the forest-air
Had loosened the brown locks of Vivian's
hair,

Which played on her flushed cheek, and her blue eyes

Sparkled with mocking glee and exercise 170
Her palfrey's flanks were mired and bathed in sweat,

For they had traveled far and not stopped
yet.

A brier in that tangled wilderness

Had scored her white right hand, which she allows

To rest ungloved on her green riding-dress, 175
The other warded off the drooping boughs
But still she chatted on, with her blue eyes
Fixed full on Merlin's face, her stately prize
Her 'haviour had the morning's fresh clear
grace,

The spirit of the woods was in her face 180
She looked so witching fair, that learned wight
Forgot his craft, and his best wits took flight,
And he grew fond, and eager to obey
His mistress, use her empire as she may.

They came to where the brushwood ceased,
and day 185

Peered 'twixt the stems, and the ground
broke away,

In a sloped sward down to a brawling brook;
And up as high as where they stood to look
On the brook's farther side was clear, but then
The underwood and trees began again 190
This open glen was studded thick with thorns
Then white with blossom; and you saw the horns,

Through last year's fern, of the shy fallowdeer

Who come at noon down to the water here
You saw the bright-eyed squirrels dart along Under the thorns on the greensward, and
strong 196

The blackbird whistled from the dingles near,
And the weird chipping of the woodpecker
Rang loneliness and sharp, the sky was fair,

And a fresh breath of spring stirred everywhere 200
 Merlin and Vivian stopped on the slope's
 brow,
 To gaze on the light sea of leaf and bough
 Which glistering plays all round them, lone and mild,
 As if to itself the quiet forest smiled.
 Upon the brow-top grew a thorn, and here 205
 The grass was dry and mossed, and you saw
 clear
 Across the hollow, white anemones
 Starred the cool turf, and clumps of primroses
 Ran on from the dark underwood behind.
 No fairer resting-place a man could find 210
 "Here let us halt," said Merlin then, and she Nodded, and tied her palfrey to a tree.

They sate them down together, and a sleep
 Fell upon Merlin, more like death, so deep.
 Her finger on her lips, then Vivian rose, 215
 And from her brown-locked head the wimple
 throws,
 And takes it in her hand, and waves it over
 The blossomed thorn-tree and her sleeping lover
 Nine times she waved the fluttering wimple
 round,
 And made a little plot of magic ground. 220
 And in that daisied circle, as men say,
 Is Merlin prisoner till the judgment-day;
 But she herself whither she will can rove —
 For she was passing weary of his love (1852)

SELF-DEPENDENCE

Weary of myself, and sick of asking
 What I am, and what I ought to be,
 At this vessel's prow I stand, which bears me
 Forwards, forwards, o'er the starlit sea.

And a look of passionate desire 5
 O'er the sea and to the stars I send.
 "Ye who from my childhood up have calmed
 me,
 Calm me, ah, compose me to the end!

"Ah, once more," I cried, "ye stars, ye waters,
 On my heart your mighty charm renew; 10
 Still, still let me, as I gaze upon you,
 Feel my soul becoming vast like you!"

From the intense, clear, star-sown vault of
 heaven,
 Over the lit sea's unquiet way,
 In the rustling night-air came the answer: 15
 "Wouldst thou be as these are? Live as they.

216 wimple, a linen head covering

"Unafrighted by the silence round them,
 Undistracted by the sights they see,
 These demand not that the things without
 them
 Yield them love, amusement, sympathy 20

"And with joy the stars perform their shining,
 And the sea its long moon-silvered roll,
 For self-poised they live, nor pine with noting
 All the fever of some differing soul

"Bounded by themselves, and unregardful 25
 In what state God's other works may be,
 In their own tasks all their powers pouring,
 These attain the mighty life you see "

O air-born voice! long since, severely clear,
 A cry like thine in mine own heart I hear. 30
 "Resolve to be thyself; and know that he Who finds himself loses his misery!"

A SUMMER NIGHT

In the deserted, moon-blanchèd street,
 How lonely rings the echo of my feet!
 Those windows, which I gaze at, frown,
 Silent and white, unopening down,
 Repellent as the world — but see, 5
 A break between the housetops shows
 The moon! and, lost behind her, fading dim
 Into the dewy dark obscurity
 Down at the far horizon's rim,
 Doth a whole tract of heaven disclose! 10

And to my mind the thought
 Is on a sudden brought
 Of a past night, and a far different scene.
 Headlands stood out into the moonlit deep
 As clearly as at noon; 15
 The spring-tide's brimming flow
 Heaved dazlingly between;
 Houses, with long white sweep,
 Girdled the glistening bay;
 Behind, through the soft air, 20
 The blue haze-cradled mountains spread
 away.

That night was far more fair —
 But the same restless paces to and fro,
 And the same vainly throbbing heart was
 there,
 And the same bright, calm moon. 25

And the calm moonlight seems to say:
*Hast thou then still the old unquiet breast,
 Which neither deadens into rest,
 Nor ever feels the fiery glow
 That whirls the spirit from itself away, 30
 But fluctuates to and fro,*

*Never by passion quite possessed
And never quite benumbed by the world's sway?* —

And I, I know not if to pray
Still to be what I am, or yield and be 35
Like all the other men I see.

For most men in a brazen prison live,
Where, in the sun's hot eye,
With heads bent o'er their toil, they languidly
Their lives to some unmeaning taskwork give,
Dreaming of naught beyond their prison-wall
And as, year after year,
Fresh products of their barren labor fall
From their tired hands, and rest
Never yet comes more near, 45
Gloom settles slowly down over their breast;
And while they try to stem
The waves of mournful thought by which they are prest
Death in their prison reaches them,
Unfreed, having seen nothing, still unblest 50

And the rest, a few,
Escape their prison and depart
On the wide ocean of life anew.
There the freed prisoner, where'er his heart
Listeth, will sail; 55
Nor doth he know how there prevail,
Despotic on that sea,
Trade-winds which cross it from eternity
Awhile he holds some false way, unbarred
By thwarting signs, and braves 60
The freshening wind and blackening waves,
And then the tempest strikes him; and between
The lightning-bursts is seen
Only a driving wreck,
And the pale master on his spar-strewn deck
With anguished face and flying hair 66
Grasping the rudder hard,
Still bent to make some port he knows not
where,
Still standing for some false, impossible shore
And sterner comes the roar 70
Of sea and wind, and through the deepening
gloom
Fainter and fainter wreck and helmsman loom,
And he too disappears, and comes no more

Is there no life, but these alone?
Madman or slave, must man be one? 75

Plainness and clearness without shadow of stain!
Clearness divine!

Ye heavens, whose pure dark regions have no
sign

Of languor, though so calm, and, though so
great,

Are yet untroubled and unpassionate; 80
Who, though so noble, share in the world's
toil,

And, though so tasked, keep free from dust
and soil!

I will not say that your mild deeps retain
A tinge, it may be, of their silent pain
Who have longed deeply once, and longed in
vain — 85

But I will rather say that you remain
A world above man's head, to let him see How boundless might his soul's horizons
be,

How vast, yet of what clear transparency!
How it were good to abide there, and breathe
free; 90

How fair a lot to fill
Is left to each man still!

THE BURIED LIFE . / .

Light flows our war of mocking words, and
yet,

Behold, with tears mine eyes are wet!
I feel a nameless sadness o'er me roll.

Yes, yes, we know that we can jest,
We know, we know that we can smile! 5

But there's a something in this breast,
To which thy light words bring no rest,
And thy gay smiles no anodyne.

Give me thy hand, and hush awhile,
And turn those limpid eyes on mine, 10
And let me read there, love! thy inmost soul

Alas! is even love too weak
To unlock the heart, and let it speak?

Are even lovers powerless to reveal
To one another what indeed they feel? 15

I knew the mass of men concealed
Their thoughts, for fear that if revealed
They would by other men be met

With blank indifference, or with blame re-
proved,

I knew they lived and moved 20
Tricked in disguises, alien to the rest
Of men, and alien to themselves — and yet

The same heart beats in every human breast!

But we, my love! — doth a like spell be-numb

Our hearts, our voices? — must we too be dumb? 25

75 Madman or slave, a reference to the types of life just described—one (madman) in lines 51-73, the other slave) in lines 37-50.

The Buried Life The title refers to man's hidden self—the source of his thought and his feeling

Ah! well for us, if even we,
 Even for a moment, can get free
 Our heart, and have our lips unchained,
 For that which seals them hath been deep-ordained!

Fate, which foresaw 30
 How frivolous a baby man would be —
 By what distractions he would be possessed,
 How he would pour himself in every strife,
 And well-nigh change his own identity —
 That it might keep from his capricious play
 His genuine self, and force him to obey 36
 Even in his own despite his being's law,
 Bade through the deep recesses of our breast
 The unregarded river of our life
 Pursue with indiscernible flow its way; 40
 And that we should not see
 The buried stream, and seem to be Eddying at large in blind uncertainty,
 Though driving on with it eternally.

But often, in the world's most crowded streets,
 But often, in the din of strife, 46
 There rises an unspeakable desire
 After the knowledge of our buried life;
 A thirst to spend our fire and restless force
 In tracking out our true, original course, 50
 A longing to inquire
 Into the mystery of this heart which beats
 So wild, so deep in us — to know
 Whence our lives come and where they go
 And many a man in his own breast then delves, 55

But deep enough, alas! none ever mines.
 And we have been on many thousand lines,
 And we have shown, on each, spirit and
 power;
 But hardly have we, for one little hour,
 Been on our own line, have we been ourselves — 60

Hardly had skill to utter one of all
 The nameless feelings that course through our breast,

But they course on for ever unexpressed
 And long we try in vain to speak and act
 Our hidden self, and what we say and do 65
 Is eloquent, is well — but 'tis not true!
 And then we will no more be racked
 With inward striving, and demand
 Of all the thousand nothings of the hour
 Their stupefying power; 70
 Ah yes, and they benumb us at our call!
 Yet still, from time to time, vague and forlorn,

From the soul's subterranean depth upborne
 As from an infinitely distant land,
 Come airs, and floating echoes, and convey

A melancholy into all our day. 76

Only — but this is rare —
 When a beloved hand is laid in ours,
 When, jaded with the rush and glare
 Of the interminable hours, 80
 Our eyes can in another's eyes read clear,
 When our world-deafened ear
 Is by the tones of a loved voice caressed —
 A bolt is shot back somewhere in our breast,
 And a lost pulse of feeling stirs again; 85
 The eye sinks inward, and the heart lies plain,
 And what we mean, we say, and what we would, we know.
 A man becomes aware of his life's flow,
 And hears its winding murmur, and he sees
 The meadows where it glides, the sun, the breeze. 90

And there arrives a lull in the hot race
 Wherein he doth forever chase
 That flying and elusive shadow, rest.
 An air of coolness plays upon his face,
 And an unwonted calm pervades his breast.
 And then he thinks he knows 96
 The hills where his life rose,
 And the sea where it goes. (1852)

STANZAS IN MEMORY OF THE AUTHOR OF "OBERMANN"

In front the awful Alpine track
 Crawls up its rocky stair;
 The autumn storm-winds drive the rack,
 Close o'er it, in the air.

Behind are the abandoned baths 5
 Mute in their meadows lone;
 The leaves are on the valley-paths,
 The mists are on the Rhone —

The white mists rolling like a sea!
 I hear the torrents roar. 10
 —Yes, Obermann, all speaks of thee;
 I feel thee near once more!

I turn thy leaves! I feel their breath
 Once more upon me roll,
 That air of languor, cold, and death, 15
 Which brooded o'er thy soul.

Fly hence, poor wretch, whoe'er thou art,
 Condemned to cast about,

77-98 Only . . . goes. Cf Dover Beach, lines 29-37,
 page 483

Stanzas in Memory of the Author of "Obermann" Étienne Pivert de Senancour (1770-1846) was the author of a French philosophic romance called Obermann. It is in the form of letters, many of which are supposed to have been written in a lonely Alpine valley in Switzerland where the hero of the romance lived. The book is devoted to descriptions of nature and discussions of the human soul. The tone is melancholy. Cf Obermann Once More, page 489

5 abandoned baths, the baths of Leuk, a village in the canton of Valais.

All shipwreck in thy own weak heart,
For comfort from without! 20

A fever in these pages burns
Beneath the calm they feign,
A wounded human spirit turns,
Here, on its bed of pain

Yes, though the virgin mountain-air 25
Fresh through these pages blows;
Though to these leaves the glaciers spare
The soul of their white snows,

Though here a mountain-murmur swells
Of many a dark-boughed pine; 30
Though, as you read, you hear the bells
Of the high-pasturing kine —

Yet, through the hum of torrent lone,
And brooding mountain-bee,
There sobs I know not what ground-tone 35
Of human agony.

Is it for this, because the sound
Is fraught too deep with pain,
That, Obermann! the world around
So little loves thy strain? 40

Some secrets may the poet tell,
For the world loves new ways,
To tell too deep ones is not well —
It knows not what he says

Yet, of the spirits who have reigned 45
In this our troubled day,
I know but two who have attained,
Save thee, to see their way.

By England's lakes, in gray old age,
His quiet home one keeps, 50
And one, the strong much-toiling sage,
In German Weimar sleeps.

But Wordsworth's eyes avert their ken
From half of human fate;
And Goethe's course few sons of men 55
May think to emulate.

For he pursued a lonely road,
His eyes on Nature's plan;
Neither made man too much a God,
Nor God too much a man. 60

Strong was he, with a spirit free
From mists, and sane, and clear;
Clearer, how much! than ours — yet we
Have a worse course to steer.

For though his manhood bore the blast 65
Of a tremendous time,
Yet in a tranquil world was passed
His tenderer youthful prime.

But we, brought forth and reared in hours
Of change, alarm, surprise — 70
What shelter to grow ripe is ours?
What leisure to grow wise?

Like children bathing on the shore,
Buried a wave beneath,
The second wave succeeds, before
We have had time to breathe.

Too fast we live, too much are tried,
Too harrassed, to attain
Wordsworth's sweet calm, or Goethe's wide
And luminous view to gain. 80

And then we turn, thou sadder sage,
To thee! we feel thy spell!
— The hopeless tangle of our age,
Thou, too, hast scanned it well!

Immovable thou sittest, still 85
As death, composed to bear!
Thy head is clear, thy feeling chill,
And icy thy despair

Yes, as the son of Thetis said,
I hear thee saying now: 90
*Greater by far than thou are dead;
Strive not! die also thou!*

Ah! two desires toss about
The poet's feverish blood
One drives him to the world without, 95
And one to solitude.

*The glow, he cries, the thrill of life,
Where, where do these abound? —*
Not in the world, not in the strife
Of men, shall they be found 100

He who hath watched, not shared, the strife,
Knows how the day hath gone
He only lives with the world's life,
Who hath renounced his own

To thee we come, then! Clouds are rolled 105
Where thou, O seer! art set;
Thy realm of thought is drear and cold —
The world is colder yet!

50 one, Wordsworth (1770-1850). Cf Memorial Verses, page 433. 51 sage, Goethe (1749-1832), who was buried at Weimar, Germany. Cf Memorial Verses, page 433.

89 son of Thetis, Achilles, the famous Greek hero of the Trojan War. He preferred a short career of military glory to a long life of obscurity. When Lycaon asked Achilles (his captor) for mercy, Achilles, angered by the death of his friend Patroclus, made a long speech in which he said in part, "My friend, do thou too die, Patroclus is also dead, who was better far than thou art, and behold what kind of man I am, I too must die" (the Iliad, 21, 34 ff.)

And thou hast pleasures, too, to share
With those who come to thee — 110
Balms floating on thy mountain-air,
And healing sights to see.

How often, where the slopes are green
On Jaman, hast thou sate 115
By some high chalet-door, and seen
The summer-day grow late,

And darkness steal o'er the wet grass
With the pale crocus starred,
And reach that glimmering sheet of glass
Beneath the piny sward, 120

Lake Leman's waters, far below!
And watched the rosy light
Fade from the distant peaks of snow;
And on the air of night

Heard accents of the eternal tongue 125
Through the pine branches play —
Listened, and felt thyself grow young!
Listened and wept — Away!

Away the dreams that but deceive
And thou, sad guide, adieu! 130
I go, fate drives me; but I leave
Half of my life with you.

We, in some unknown Power's employ,
Move on a rigorous line;
Can neither, when we will, enjoy, 135
Nor, when we will, resign.

I in the world must live, but thou,
Thou melancholy shadel
Wilt not, if thou canst see me now,
Condemn me, nor upbraid. 140

For thou art gone away from earth,
And place with those dost claim,
The Children of the Second Birth,
Whom the world could not tame;

And with that small, transfigured band, 145
Whom many a different way
Conducted to their common land,
Thou learn'st to think as they.

Christian and pagan, king and slave,
Soldier and anchorite, 150
Distinctions we esteem so grave,
Are nothing in their sight.

They do not ask, who pined unseen,
Who was on action hurled,

Whose one bond is, that all have been 155
Unspotted by the world.

There without anger thou wilt see
Him who obeys thy spell
No more, so he but rest, like thee,
Unsoiled! — and so, farewell 160

Farewell! — Whether thou now liest near
That much-loved inland sea,
The ripples of whose blue waves cheer
Vevey and Meillerie:

And in that gracious region bland, 165
Where with clear-rustling wave
The scented pines of Switzerland
Stand dark round thy green grave,

Between the dusty vineyard-walls
Issuing on that green place 170
The early peasant still recalls
The pensive stranger's face,

And stoops to clear thy moss-grown date
Ere he plods on again —
Or whether, by maligner fate, 175
Among the swarms of men,

Where between granite terraces
The blue Seine rolls her wave,
The Capital of Pleasure sees
The hardly-heard-of grave — 180

Farewell! Under the sky we part,
In this stern Alpine dell.
O unstrung will! O broken heart!
A last, a last farewell! (1852)

LINES

WRITTEN IN KENSINGTON GARDENS

In this lone, open glade I lie,
Screened by deep boughs on either hand,
And at its end, to stay the eye,
Those black-crowned, red-boled pine-trees
stand!

Birds here make song, each bird has his, 5
Across the girdling city's hum.
How green under the boughs it is!
How thick the tremulous sheep-cries come!

Sometimes a child will cross the glade
To take his nurse his broken toy, 10

Lines Written in Kensington Gardens Kensington is a borough in the western part of London. The Gardens are surrounded by busy streets. This poem is regarded as one of the most Wordsworthian of Arnold's poems
4 red-boled pine-trees, pine-trees with reddish trunks

Sometimes a thrush flits overhead
Deep in her unknown day's employ.

Here at my feet what wonders pass,
What endless, active life is here!
What blowing daisies, fragrant grass! 15
An air-stirred forest, fresh and clear.

Scarce fresher is the mountain-sod
Where the tired angler lies, stretched out,
And, eased of basket and of rod,
Counts his day's spoil, the spotted trout. 20

In the huge world, which roars hard by,
Be others happy if they can!
But in my helpless cradle I
Was breathed on by the rural Pan.

I, on men's impious uproar hurled, 25
Think often, as I hear them rave,
That peace has left the upper world
And now keeps only in the grave.

Yet here is peace forever new!
When I who watch them am away, 30
Still all things in this glade go through
The changes of their quiet day.

Then to their happy rest they pass!
The flowers upclose, the birds are fed,
The night comes down upon the grass, 35
The child sleeps warmly in his bed

Calm soul of all things! make it mine
To feel, amid the city's jar,
That there abides a peace of thine,
Man did not make, and cannot mar. 40

The will to neither strive nor cry,
The power to feel with others give!
Calm, calm me more! nor let me die
Before I have begun to live. (1852)

REVOLUTIONS

Before man parted for this earthly strand,
While yet upon the verge of heaven he stood,
God put a heap of letters in his hand,
And bade him make with them what word
he could

And man has turned them many times; made
Greece, 5
Rome, England, France — yes, nor in vain essayed

18 angler. Arnold was an enthusiastic fisherman 24 breathed Pan Pan was the god of shepherds and the country Arnold was born at Laleham, a country village in Middlesex

Way after way, changes that never cease!
The letters have combined, something was
made.

But ah! an inextinguishable sense
Haunts him that he has not made what he should; 10
That he has still, though old, to recommence,
Since he has not yet found the word God would.

And empire after empire, at their height
Of sway, have felt this boding sense come on;
Have felt their huge frames not constructed
right, 15
And drooped, and slowly died upon their throne.

One day, thou say'st, there will at last appear
The word, the order, which God meant
should be.
— Ah! we shall know that well when it comes near;
The band will quit man's heart, he will breathe free. 20

THE YOUTH OF NATURE

Raised are the dripping oars,
Silent, the boat! the lake,
Lovely and soft as a dream,
Swims in the sheen of the moon.
The mountains stand at its head 5
Clear in the pure June-night,
But the valleys are flooded with haze.
Rydal and Fairfield are there;
In the shadow Wordsworth lies dead.
So it is, so it will be for aye. 10
Nature is fresh as of old,
Is lovely; a mortal is dead.

The spots which recall him survive,
For he lent a new life to these hills.
The Pillar still broods o'er the fields 15
Which border Ennerdale Lake,
And Egremont sleeps by the sea.
The gleam of The Evening Star

The Youth of Nature This poem is a tribute to Wordsworth, it was written shortly after his death, in 1850 See Memorial Verses, page 433

2 the lake, Rydal or Grasmere, in the Lake District, England 8 Rydal and Fairfield. Wordsworth lived at Rydal Mount from 1813 till his death Fairfield is a mountain north of Rydal Mount 15 The Pillar, a prominent rock on a mountain in Cumberland. 17 Egremont, a town near the sea, it is seven miles from Ennerdale Lake (line 16) The places of lines 15-17 are mentioned in Wordsworth's The Brothers 18 The Evening Star, the name of Michael's cottage above Grasmere, Westmoreland It was so called because it was visible from a long distance. (See Wordsworth's Michael)

Twinkles on Grasmere no more,
But ruined and solemn and gray 20
The sheepfold of Michael survives;
And, far to the south, the heath
Still blows in the Quantock coombs,
By the favorite waters of Ruth.
These survive! — yet not without pain, 25
Pain and dejection tonight,
Can I feel that their poet is gone.

He grew old in an age he condemned.
He looked on the rushing decay
Of the times which had sheltered his youth,
Felt the dissolving throes 31
Of a social order he loved;
Outlived his brethren, his peers,
And, like the Theban seer,
Died in his enemies' day. 35

Cold bubbled the spring of Tilphusa,
Copais lay bright in the moon,
Helicon glassed in the lake
Its firs, and afar rose the peaks
Of Parnassus, snowily clear; 40
Thebes was behind him in flames,
And the clang of arms in his ear,
When his awe-struck captors led
The Theban seer to the spring.
Tiresias drank and died. 45
Nor did reviving Thebes
See such a prophet again.

Well may we mourn, when the head
Of a sacred poet lies low
In an age which can rear them no more! 50
The complaining millions of men
Darken in labor and pain;
But he was a priest to us all
Of the wonder and bloom of the world,
Which we saw with his eyes, and were glad.
He is dead, and the fruit-bearing day 56
Of his race is past on the earth,
And darkness returns to our eyes.

For, oh! is it you, is it you,
Moonlight, and shadow, and lake, 60
And mountains, that fill us with joy,
Or the poet who sings you so well?

23 Quantock coombs, valleys among the Quantock Hills in Somerset. Ruth (line 24), in Wordsworth's Ruth, visited these hills. 28 He grew old . . . condemned. In his youth Wordsworth sympathized with the French Revolution, but he later became disgusted with its excesses. The "dissolving throes" of line 31 refer to such movements as the Reform Bill of 1832 and the Repeal of the Corn Laws of 1846. By those dates Wordsworth had become a conservative. 33 brethren . . . peers, Coleridge and Southey, who were often associated with Wordsworth. They died in 1834 and 1843 respectively. 34 Theban seer, Tiresias, who is said to have met his death by drinking from a stream on Mount Tilphusa (line 36), in Boeotia. Copais (line 37) was a lake near Thebes. Mt. Helicon (line 38), sacred to the Muses, and Mt. Parnassus (line 40), sacred to Apollo, were also in Boeotia. 56-58 He is dead . . . eyes. Lines 56-58 express Arnold's usual pessimism about his own age.

Is it you, O beauty, O grace,
O charm, O romance, that we feel,
Or the voice which reveals what you are? 65
Are ye, like daylight and sun,
Shared and rejoiced in by all?
Or are ye immersed in the mass
Of matter, and hard to extract,
Or sunk at the core of the world 70
Too deep for the most to discern?
Like stars in the deep of the sky,
Which arise on the glass of the sage,
But are lost when their watcher is gone.

"They are here" — I heard, as men heard 75
In Mysian Ida the voice
Of the Mighty Mother, or Crete,
The murmur of Nature reply —
"Loveliness, magic, and grace,
They are here! they are set in the world, 80
They abide; and the finest of souls
Hath not been thrilled by them all,
Nor the dullest been dead to them quite.
The poet who sings them may die,
But they are immortal and live, 85
For they are the life of the world.
Will ye not learn it, and know,
When ye mourn that a poet is dead,
That the singer was less than his themes,
Life, and emotion, and I? 90

"More than the singer are these.
Weak is the tremor of pain
That thrills in his mournfullest chord
To that which once ran through his soul
Cold the elation of joy 95
In his gladdest, airiest song,
To that which of old in his youth
Filled him and made him divine.
Hardly his voice at its best
Gives us a sense of the awe, 100
The vastness, the grandeur, the gloom
Of the unlit gulf of himself.

"Ye know not yourselves; and your bards —
The clearest, the best, who have read
Most in themselves — have beheld 105
Less than they left unrevealed.
Ye express not yourselves — can you make
With marble, with color, with word,
What charmed you in others re-live?
Can thy pencil, O artist! restore 110
The figure, the bloom of thy love,
As she was in her morning of spring?
Canst thou paint the ineffable smile
Of her eyes as they rested on thine?

77 Mighty Mother, Cybele, the great goddess of nature. As the "Mother of the Gods" she was worshipped on Mt. Ida in Mysia, Asia Minor. She was identified with Rhea, who was worshipped in Crete, a Greek island in the Mediterranean. 90 I, Nature

Can the image of life have the glow, 115
The motion of life itself?

"Yourselves and your fellows ye know not;
and me,
The mateless, the one, will ye know?
Will ye scan me, and read me, and tell
Of the thoughts that ferment in my breast,
My longing, my sadness, my joy? 121
Will ye claim for your great ones the gift
To have rendered the gleam of my skies,
To have echoed the moan of my seas,
Uttered the voice of my hills? 125
When your great ones depart, will ye say—
*All things have suffered a loss,
Nature is hid in their grave?*

"Race after race, man after man,
Have thought that my secret was theirs, 130
Have dreamed that I lived but for them,
That they were my glory and joy.
— They are dust, they are changed, they are
gone!
I remain " (1852)

MORALITY

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire which in the heart resides,
The spirit bloweth and is still,
In mystery our soul abides.
But tasks in hours of insight willed 5
Can be through hours of gloom fulfilled

With aching hands and bleeding feet
We dig and heap, lay stone on stone,
We bear the burden and the heat
Of the long day, and wish 'twere done. 10
Not till the hours of light return,
All we have built do we discern.

Then, when the clouds are off the soul,
When thou dost bask in Nature's eye,
Ask, how she viewed thy self-control, 15
Thy struggling, tasked morality —
Nature, whose free, light, cheerful air,
Oft made thee, in thy gloom, despair.

And she, whose censure thou dost dread,
Whose eye thou wast afraid to seek, 20
See, on her face a glow is spread,
A strong emotion on her cheek!
"Ah, child!" she cries, "that strife divine,
Whence was it, for it is not mine?"

"There is no effort on my brow — 25
I do not strive, I do not weep;
I rush with the swift spheres and glow
In joy, and when I will, I sleep.

Yet that severe, that earnest air,
I saw, I felt it once — but where? 30

"I knew not yet the gauge of time,
Nor wore the manacles of space;
I felt it in some other clime,
I saw it in some other place.
'Twas when the heavenly house I trod, 35
And lay upon the breast of God " (1852)

THE FUTURE

A wanderer is man from his birth.
He was born in a ship
On the breast of the river of Time;
Brimming with wonder and joy
He spreads out his arms to the light, 5
Rivets his gaze on the banks of the stream

As what he sees is, so have his thoughts been Whether he wakes,
Where the snowy mountainous pass,
Echoing the screams of the eagles, 10
Hems in its gorges the bed
Of the new-born clear-flowing stream;
Whether he first sees light
Where the river in gleaming rings
Sluggishly winds through the plain, 15
Whether in sound of the swallowing sea —
As is the world on the banks,
So is the mind of the man

Vainly does each, as he glides,
Fable and dream 20
Of the lands which the river of Time
Had left ere he woke on its breast,
Or shall reach when his eyes have been closed
Only the tract where he sails
He wots of, only the thoughts, 25
Raised by the objects he passes, are his.

Who can see the green earth any more
As she was by the sources of Time?
Who imagines her fields as they lay
In the sunshine, unworn by the plow? 30
Who thinks as they thought,
The tribes who then roamed on her breast,
Her vigorous, primitive sons?

What girl
Now reads in her bosom as clear 35
As Rebekah read, when she sate
At eve by the palm-shaded well?
Who guards in her breast

The Future This is one of the earliest of Arnold's poems to strike an optimistic note 36-37 Rebekah . . . well Rebekah was found at the well by the servant who had been sent by Abraham to get a wife for his son Isaac (See Genesis, 24)

As deep, as pellucid a spring
Of feeling, as tranquil, as sure?

40

What bard,
At the height of his vision, can deem
Of God, of the world, of the soul,
With a plainness as near,
As flashing as Moses felt
When he lay in the night by his flock
On the starlit Arabian waste?
Can rise and obey
The beck of the Spirit like him?

45

This tract which the river of Time
Now flows through with us, is the plain
Gone is the calm of its earlier shore.
Bordered by cities and hoarse
With a thousand cries is its stream
And we on its breast, our minds
Are confused as the cries which we hear,
Changing and shot as the sights which we see.

50

55

And we say that repose has fled
Forever the course of the river of Time.
That cities will crowd to its edge
In a blacker, incessanter line;
That the din will be more on its banks,
Denser the trade on its stream,
Flatter the plain where it flows,
Fiercer the sun overhead.
That never will those on its breast
See an ennobling sight,
Drink of the feeling of quiet again.

60

65

But what was before us we know not,
And we know not what shall succeed.

70

Haply, the river of Time —
As it grows, as the towns on its marge
Fling their wavering lights
On a wider, statelier stream —
May acquire, if not the calm
Of its early mountainous shore,
Yet a solemn peace of its own.

75

And the width of the waters, the hush
Of the gray expanse where he floats,
Freshening its current and spotted with foam
As it draws to the Ocean, may strike
Peace to the soul of the man on its breast —
As the pale waste widens around him,
As the banks fade dimmer away,
As the stars come out, and the night-wind
Brings up the stream
Murmurs and scents of the infinite sea

SOHRAB AND RUSTUM

AN EPISODE

And the first gray of morning filled the east,
And the fog rose out of the Oxus stream
But all the Tartar camp along the stream
Was hushed, and still the men were plunged
in sleep

Sohrab alone, he slept not; all night long
He had lain wakeful, tossing on his bed;
But when the gray dawn stole into his tent,
He rose, and clad himself, and girt his sword,
And took his horseman's cloak, and left his tent,

And went abroad into the cold wet fog,
Through the dim camp to Peran-Wisa's tent
Through the black Tartar tents he passed, which stood

Clustering like beehives on the low flat strand
Of Oxus, where the summer-floods o'erflow
When the sun melts the snows in high Pamere,
Through the black tents he passed, o'er that low strand,

And to a hillock came, a little back
From the stream's brink — the spot where first a boat,

Crossing the stream in summer, scrapes the
land

The men of former times had crowned the top
With a clay fort, but that was fallen, and now
The Tartars built there Peran-Wisa's tent,
A dome of laths, and o'er it felts were spread
And Sohrab came there, and went in, and
stood

Upon the thick-piled carpets in the tent,
And found the old man sleeping on his bed
Of rugs and felts, and near him lay his arms
And Peran-Wisa heard him, though the step
Was dulled, for he slept light, an old man's
sleep;

And he rose quickly on one arm, and said: 30
"Who art thou? for it is not yet clear dawn Speak! is there news, or any night alarm?"

But Sohrab came to the bedside, and said
"Thou know'st me, Peran-Wisa! it is I
The sun is not yet risen, and the foe
Sleep, but I sleep not, all night long I lie
Tossing and wakeful, and I come to thee.
For so did King Afrasiab bid me seek Sohrab and Rustum. This narrative poem is based upon an episode in the great Persian epic Shah Namah (Book of Kings) written by the poet Firdausi about 1000 A.D. Rustum was the most illustrious of Persian heroes. His combat with Sohrab, his unknown son, which belongs to the realm of folklore, was supposed to have taken place about 600 B.C.

Arnold found the story in Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia. See Critical Notes

2 Oxus, the chief river of central Asia 3 Tartar
The Tartars were wandering savage tribes in central Asia and southern Russia. Although a Persian by birth, Sohrab is serving under Afrasiab, the Tartar king 11 Peran-Wisa, leader of the Tartar army 15 Pamere, a lofty plateau in central Asia 25 thick-piled, having a thick pile, or nap.

Thy counsel, and to heed thee as thy son,
In Samarcand, before the army marched, 40
And I will tell thee what my heart desires.
Thou know'st it, since from Ader-baijan first
I came among the Tartars and bore arms,
I have still served Afrasiab well, and shown,
At my boy's years, the courage of a man. 45
This too thou know'st, that while I still bear
on

The conquering Tartar ensigns through the
world,

And beat the Persians back on every field,
I seek one man, one man, and one alone —
Rustum, my father; who I hoped should greet,
Should one day greet, upon some well-fought
field, 51

His not unworthy, not inglorious son
So I long hoped, but him I never find Come then, hear now, and grant me what I ask.

Let the two armies rest today, but I 55
Will challenge forth the bravest Persian lords
To meet me, man to man; if I prevail,
Rustum will surely hear it; if I fall —
Old man, the dead need no one, claim no kin.
Dim is the rumor of a common fight, 60
Where host meets host, and many names are sunk;

But of a single combat fame speaks clear."

He spoke; and Peran-Wisa took the hand
Of the young man in his, and sighed, and said
"O Sohrab, an unquiet heart is thine! 65
Canst thou not rest among the Tartar chiefs,
And share the battle's common chance with us
Who love thee, but must press forever first,
In single fight incurring single risk,
To find a father thou hast never seen? 70
That were far best, my son, to stay with us
Unmurmuring, in our tents, while it is war,
And when 'tis truce, then in Afrasiab's towns.
But, if this one desire indeed rules all,
To seek out Rustum — seek him not through
fight! 75

Seek him in peace, and carry to his arms,
O Sohrab, carry an unwounded son!
But far hence seek him, for he is not here.
For now it is not as when I was young,
When Rustum was in front of every fray, 80
But now he keeps apart, and sits at home,
In Seistan, with Zal, his father old,
Whether that his own mighty strength at last Feels the abhorred approaches of old age,
Or in some quarrel with the Persian King 85
There go! — Thou wilt not? Yet my heart forebodes

40 Samarcand, a city in Turkestan; once the capital of Tartary 42 Ader-baijan, a province in northwestern
Persia It was the home of Sohrab's mother Tahminah (line 590) 60 common, general. 82 Seistan, a district bordering Persia and Afghanistan. 85 Persian King, Kai Khosroo (line 223).

Danger or death awaits thee on this field
Fain would I know thee safe and well, though
lost

To us; fain therefore send thee hence, in peace
To seek thy father, not seek single fights 90
In vain — but who can keep the lion's cub
From ravening, and who govern Rustum's
son?

Go, I will grant thee what thy heart desires "
So said he, and dropped Sohrab's hand, and left

His bed, and the warm rugs whereon he lay;
And o'er his chilly limbs his woolen coat 96
He passed, and tied his sandals on his feet,
And threw a white cloak round him, and he took

In his right hand a ruler's staff, no sword;
And on his head he set his sheepskin cap, 100
Black, glossy, curled, the fleece of Kara-Kul,
And raised the curtain of his tent, and called
His herald to his side, and went abroad.

The sun by this had risen, and cleared the fog 104

From the broad Oxus and the glittering sands
And from their tents the Tartar horsemen filed
Into the open plain; so Haman bade —

Haman, who next to Peran-Wisa ruled
The host, and still was in his lusty prime
From their black tents, long files of horse,
they streamed; 110

As when some gray November morn the files,
In marching order spread, of long-neck cranes

Stream over Casbin and the southern slopes
Of Elburz, from the Aralians estuaries,
Or some froze Caspian reed-bed, southward
bound 115

For the warm Persian seaboard — so they streamed.

The Tartars of the Oxus, the King's guard,
First, with black sheepskin caps and with long spears —

Large men, large steeds, who from Bokhara
come

And Khiva, and ferment the milk of mares, Next, the more temperate Toorkmuns of the
south, 121

The Tukas, and the lances of Salore,
And those from Attruck and the Caspian sands —

Light men and on light steeds, who only drink

101 Kara-Kul, a district in south-central Asia 111 ff
As when, etc This is an example of the so-called epic simile—that is, a simile, common in epic poetry, which plays upon minute details of comparison 113 Casbin, a city in northern Persia 114 Elburz, mountains on the northern border of Persia. Aralian, of the Aral Sea, in central Asia 115 froze, frozen 119. Bokhara, a large district in central Asia 120 Khiva, a district in the valley of the lower Oxus 121 Toorkmuns, a branch of the Turkish race, living in central Asia 122 Tukas, from northwest Persia Salore, a tribe living east of the Caspian Sea 123 Attruck, a river in northern Persia

The acrid milk of camels, and their wells; 125
And then a swarm of wandering horse, who
came

From far, and a more doubtful service owned,
The Tartars of Ferghana, from the banks
Of the Jaxartes — men with scanty beards
And close-set skull-caps; and those wilder hordes 130

Who roam o'er Kipchak and the northern
waste,

Kalmucks and unkempt Kuzzaks, tribes who stray

Nearest the Pole, and wandering Kirghizzes,
Who come on shaggy ponies from Pamere.
These all filed out from camp into the plain
And on the other side the Persians formed: 136
First, a light cloud of horse, Tartars they seemed,

The Ilyats of Khorassan; and behind,
The royal troops of Persia, horse and foot,
Marshaled battalions bright in burnished
steel 140

But Peran-Wisa with his herald came,
Threading the Tartar squadrons to the front,
And with his staff kept back the foremost ranks,

And when Ferood, who led the Persians, saw
That Peran-Wisa kept the Tartars back, 145
He took his spear, and to the front he came,
And checked his ranks, and fixed them where they stood.

And the old Tartar came upon the sand
Betwixt the silent hosts, and spake, and said:
"Ferood, and ye, Persians and Tartars
hear! 150

Let there be truce between the hosts to-
day

But choose a champion from the Persian lords
To fight our champion Sohrab, man to man "

As, in the country, on a morn in June,
When the dew glistens on the pearléd ears, 155
A shiver runs through the deep corn for joy —
So, when they heard what Peran-Wisa said,
A thrill through all the Tartar squadrons ran
Of pride and hope for Sohrab, whom they loved.

But as a troop of peddlers, from Cabool, 160
Cross underneath the Indian Caucasus,
That vast sky-neighboring mountain of milk
snow,

Crossing so high, that, as they mount, they
pass

Long flocks of traveling birds dead on the snow,

Choked by the air, and scarce can they themselves 165

Slake their parched throats with sugared mulberries —

In single file they move, and stop their breath,
For fear they should dislodge the o'erhanging snows —

So the pale Persians held their breath with
fear.

And to Ferood his brother chiefs came up
To counsel; Gudurz and Zoarrah came, 171
And Feraburz, who ruled the Persian host
Second, and was the uncle of the King;
These came and counseled, and then Gudurz
said:

"Ferood, shame bids us take their challenge
up, 175

Yet champion have we none to match this
youth.

He has the wild stag's foot, the lion's heart.
But Rustum came last night, aloof he sits
And sullen, and has pitched his tents apart.
Him will I seek, and carry to his ear 180
The Tartar challenge, and this young man's
name.

Haply he will forget his wrath, and fight.
Stand forth the while, and take their challenge
up."

So spake he; and Ferood stood forth and
cried:

"Old man, be it agreed as thou hast said! 185
Let Sohrab arm, and we will find a man."

He spake; and Peran-Wisa turned and
strode

Back through the opening squadrons to his tent.

But through the anxious Persians Gudurz ran,
And crossed the camp which lay behind, and
reached, 190

Out on the sands beyond it, Rustum's tents
Of scarlet cloth they were, and glittering gay,
Just pitched; the high pavilion in the midst
Was Rustum's, and his men lay camped
around.

And Gudurz entered Rustum's tent, and
found 195

Rustum; his morning meal was done, but still
The table stood before him, charged with food —

A side of roasted sheep, and cakes of bread
And dark green melons, and there Rustum sate

Listless, and held a falcon on his wrist, 200
And played with it, but Gudurz came and
stood

Before him; and he looked, and saw him stand,

128 Ferghana, a district in Turkestan, south of Samarcand. 129 Jaxartes, an early name of the Sir-Dana River, which flows through Turkestan into the Aral Sea. 131 Kipchak, a district in central Asia. 132 Kalmucks, wandering Mongolian tribes living in western Siberia. 133 Kuzzaks, Cossacks, a warlike people in southern Russia and southwestern Asia. 135 Pole, the north pole. 137 Kirghizzes, a nomadic people of northern Turkestan. 138 Ilyats of Khorassan, tribes of Khorassan, a province in north-eastern Persia. 156 corn, grain. 160 Cabool, Kabul, an important commercial city in northern Afghanistan. 161 Indian Caucasus, a mountain range between Turkestan and Afghanistan.

And with a cry sprang up and dropped the bird,
And greeted Gudurz with both hands, and said

"Welcome! these eyes could see no better sight. 205

What news? but sit down first, and eat and drink."

But Gudurz stood in the tent-door, and said:

"Not now! a time will come to eat and drink, But not today; today has other needs.

The armies are drawn out, and stand at gaze; 210

For from the Tartars is a challenge brought To pick a champion from the Persian lords To fight their champion — and thou know'st his name —

Sohrab men call him, but his birth is hid. 214

O Rustum, like thy might is this young man's!

He has the wild stag's foot, the lion's heart,

And he is young, and Iran's chiefs are old,

Or else too weak; and all eyes turn to thee

Come down and help us, Rustum, or we lose!"

He spoke, but Rustum answered with a smile: 220

"Go to! if Iran's chiefs are old, then I Am older; if the young are weak, the King

Errs strangely, for the King, for Kai Khosroo,

Himself is young, and honors younger men,

And lets the aged molder to their graves 225

Rustum he loves no more, but loves the young —

The young may rise at Sohrab's vaunts, not I

For what care I, though all speak Sohrab's fame?

For would that I myself had such a son,

And not that one slight helpless girl I have —

A son so famed, so brave, to send to war, 231

And I to tarry with the snow-haired Zal,

My father, whom the robber Afghans vex,

And clip his borders short, and drive his herds,

And he has none to guard his weak old age 235

There would I go, and hang my armor up,

And with my great name fence that weak old man,

And spend the goodly treasures I have got,

And rest my age, and hear of Sohrab's fame,

And leave to death the hosts of thankless kings, 240

And with these slaughterous hands draw sword no more"

He spoke, and smiled, and Gudurz made reply:

"What then, O Rustum, will men say to this, When Sohrab dares our bravest forth, and seeks

Thee most of all, and thou, whom most he seeks, 245

Hidest thy face? Take heed lest men should say,

'Like some old miser, Rustum hoards his fame, And shuns to peril it with younger men' "

And, greatly moved, then Rustum made reply:

"O Gudurz, wherefore dost thou say such words? 250

Thou knowest better words than this to say

What is one more, one less, obscure or famed,

Valiant or craven, young or old, to me?

Are not they mortal, am not I myself?

But who for men of naught would do great deeds? 255

Come, thou shalt see how Rustum hoards his fame!

But I will fight unknown, and in plain arms,

Let not men say of Rustum, he was matched

In single fight with any mortal man."

He spoke, and frowned, and Gudurz turned and ran 260

Back quickly through the camp in fear and joy —

Fear at his wrath, but joy that Rustum came

But Rustum strode to his tent-door and called

His followers in, and bade them bring his arms, 264

And clad himself in steel; the arms he chose

Were plain, and on his shield was no device,

Only his helm was rich, inlaid with gold,

And, from the fluted spine atop, a plume

Of horsehair waved, a scarlet horsehair plume.

So armed, he issued forth, and Ruksh, his horse, 270

Followed him like a faithful hound at heel —

Ruksh, whose renown was noised through all the earth,

The horse, whom Rustum on a foray once

Did in Bokhara by the river find

A colt beneath its dam, and drove him home,

And reared him, a bright bay, with lofty crest, 276

Dight with a saddle-cloth of brodered green

Crusted with gold, and on the ground were worked

All beasts of chase, all beasts which hunters know.

So followed, Rustum left his tents, and crossed 280

The camp, and to the Persian host appeared.

And all the Persians knew him, and with shouts

Hailed, but the Tartars knew not who he was.

And dear as the wet diver to the eyes

Of his pale wife who waits and weeps on shore,

217 Iran, Persia 223 Kai Khosroo, thought to be Cyrus the Great, the founder of the Persian Empire, sixth century B C

257 plain arms, arms devoid of devices that would betray his identity 277 dight, decorated, adorned

By sandy Bahrein, in the Persian Gulf, 286
Plunging all day in the blue waves, at night,
Having made up his tale of precious pearls,
Rejoins her in their hut upon the sands —

So dear to the pale Persians Rustum came. 290

And Rustum to the Persian front advanced;
And Sohrab armed in Haman's tent, and came

And as afield the reapers cut a swath
Down through the middle of a rich man's corn, 294

And on each side are squares of standing corn,
And in the midst a stubble, short and bare —
So on each side were squares of men, with spears

Bristling, and in the midst, the open sand.
And Rustum came upon the sand, and cast
His eyes toward the Tartar tents, and saw 300
Sohrab come forth, and eyed him as he came

As some rich woman, on a winter's morn,
Eyes through her silken curtains the poor
drudge

Who with numb blackened fingers makes her
fire

At cock-crow, on a starlit winter's morn, 305
When the frost flowers the whitened window-panes,

And wonders how she lives, and what the
thoughts

Of that poor drudge may be — so Rustum eyed

The unknown adventurous youth, who from afar

Came seeking Rustum, and defying forth 310
All the most valiant chiefs. Long he perused
His spirited air, and wondered who he was;
For very young he seemed, tenderly reared.
Like some young cypress, tall, and dark, and
straight,

Which in a queen's secluded garden throws 315
Its slight dark shadow on the moonlit turf,
By midnight, to a bubbling fountain's sound —
So slender Sohrab seemed, so softly reared.

And a deep pity entered Rustum's soul
As he beheld him coming; and he stood, 320
And beckoned to him with his hand, and said:

"O thou young man, the air of heaven is
soft,

And warm, and pleasant; but the grave is
cold!

Heaven's air is better than the cold dead
grave

Behold me! I am vast, and clad in iron, 325
And tried; and I have stood on many a field
Of blood, and I have fought with many a foe —

Never was that field lost, or that foe saved
O Sohrab, wherefore wilt thou rush on death?

Be governed! quit the Tartar host, and come
To Iran, and be as my son to me, 330
And fight beneath my banner till I die!
There are no youths in Iran brave as
thou "

So he spake, mildly; Sohrab heard his voice,
The mighty voice of Rustum, and he saw 335
His giant figure planted on the sand,
Sole, like some single tower, which a chief
Hath builded on the waste in former years
Against the robbers; and he saw that head,
Streaked with its first gray hairs; hope filled his soul, 340

And he ran forward and embraced his knees,
And clasped his hand within his own, and
said:

"Oh, by thy father's head! by thine own
soul!

Art thou not Rustum? speak! art thou not
he?"

But Rustum eyed askance the kneeling
youth, 345

And turned away, and spake to his own soul:

"Ah me, I muse what this young fox may mean!

False, wily, boastful, are these Tartar boys.
For if I now confess this thing he asks,
And hide it not, but say: 'Rustum is here!' 350
He will not yield indeed, nor quit our foes,
But he will find some pretext not to fight,
And praise my fame, and proffer courteous
gifts,

A belt or sword perhaps, and go his way.
And on a feast-tide, in Afrasiab's hall, 355
In Samarcand, he will arise and cry:

'I challenged once, when the two armies camped

Beside the Oxus, all the Persian lords
To cope with me in single fight, but they Shrank, only Rustum dared; then he and I 360
Changed gifts, and went on equal terms away.'
So will he speak, perhaps, while men applaud,
Then were the chiefs of Iran shamed through
me "

And then he turned, and sternly spake
aloud:

"Rise! wherefore dost thou vainly question
thus 365

Of Rustum? I am here, whom thou hast called

By challenge forth, make good thy vaunt, or yield!

Is it with Rustum only thou wouldst fight?
Rash boy, men look on Rustum's face and
flee! 369

For well I know that did great Rustum stand
Before thy face this day, and were revealed,
There would be then no talk of fighting more.
But being what I am, I tell thee this —

Do thou record it in thine inmost soul:

286 Bahrein, the Aval Islands, in the Persian Gulf, noted for their pearl fisheries 288 tail, count

Either thou shalt renounce thy vaunt and
yield, 375
Or else thy bones shall strew this sand, till winds

Bleach them, or Oxus with his summer-floods,
Oxus in summer wash them all away "

He spoke, and Sohrab answered, on his feet:
"Art thou so fierce? Thou wilt not fright me so! 380

I am no girl, to be made pale by words
Yet this thou hast said well, did Rustum
stand

Here on this field, there were no fighting
then.

But Rustum is far hence, and we stand here.
Begin! thou art more vast, more dread than I,
And thou art proved, I know, and I am
young — 386

But yet success sways with the breath of
Heaven

And though thou thinkest that thou knowest
sure

Thy victory, yet thou canst not surely know.
For we are all, like swimmers in the sea, 390
Poised on the top of a huge wave of fate,
Which hangs uncertain to which side to fall

And whether it will heave us up to land,
Or whether it will roll us out to sea,
Back out to sea, to the deep waves of death,
We know not, and no search will make us
know, 396

Only the event will teach us in its hour "
He spoke, and Rustum answered not, but hurled

His spear, down from the shoulder, down it
came,

As on some partridge in the corn a hawk, 400
That long has towered in the airy clouds,
Drops like a plummet; Sohrab saw it come,
And sprang aside, quick as a flash; the spear
Hissed, and went quivering down into the
sand,

Which it sent flying wide; then Sohrab threw
In turn, and full struck Rustum's shield, sharp rang, 406

The iron plates rang sharp, but turned the spear

And Rustum seized his club, which none but
he

Could wield, an unlopped trunk it was, and huge,

Still rough — like those which men in treeless plains 410

To build them boats fish from the flooded rivers,

Hyphasis or Hydaspes, when, high up
By their dark springs, the wind in winter-time
Hath made in Himalayan forests wrack,

And strewn the channels with torn boughs —
so huge 415

The club which Rustum lifted now, and struck
One stroke; but again Sohrab sprang aside,
Lithe as the glancing snake, and the club came Thundering to earth, and leapt from Rustum's
hand

And Rustum followed his own blow, and fell
To his knees, and with his fingers clutched the
sand, 421

And now might Sohrab have unsheathed his
sword,

And pierced the mighty Rustum while he lay Dizzy, and on his knees, and choked with
sand,

But he looked on, and smiled, nor bared his
sword, 425

But courteously drew back, and spoke, and
said:

"Thou strik'st too hard! that club of thine
will float

Upon the summer-floods, and not my bones.
But rise, and be not wroth! not wroth am I;
No, when I see thee, wrath forsakes my soul
Thou say'st thou art not Rustum; be it so! 431
Who art thou then, that canst so touch my
soul?

Boy as I am, I have seen battles too —
Have waded foremost in their bloody waves,
And heard their hollow roar of dying men; 435
But never was my heart thus touched before
Are they from Heaven, these softening of the
heart?

O thou old warrior, let us yield to Heaven!
Come, plant we here in earth our angry spears,
And make a truce, and sit upon this sand, 440
And pledge each other in red wine, like friends,
And thou shalt talk to me of Rustum's deeds
There are enough foes in the Persian host,
Whom I may meet, and strike, and feel no
pang;

Champions enough Afrasiab has, whom thou Mayst fight; fight them, when they confront thy spear! 446

But oh, let there be peace 'twixt thee and
me!"

He ceased, but while he spake, Rustum had risen,

And stood erect, trembling with rage; his club
He left to lie, but had regained his spear, 450
Whose fiery point now in his mailed right-
hand

Blazed bright and baleful, like that autumn
star,

The baleful sign of fevers; dust had soiled
His stately crest, and dimmed his glittering arms.

452 autumn star, Sirius, the Dog Star, associated among certain ancient peoples with hot, dry weather and with fevers

His breast heaved, his lips foamed, and twice
his voice 455

Was choked with rage, at last these words
broke way:

"Girl! nimble with thy feet, not with thy
hands!

Curled minion, dancer, coiner of sweet words!
Fight, let me hear thy hateful voice no more!
Thou art not in Afrasiab's gardens now 460
With Tartar girls, with whom thou art wont to dance;

But on the Oxus-sands, and in the dance
Of battle, and with me, who make no play
Of war; I fight it out, and hand to hand.
Speak not to me of truce, and pledge, and
wine! 465

Remember all thy valor; try thy feints
And cunning! all the pity I had is gone, Because thou hast shamed me before both the hosts

With thy light skipping tricks, and thy girl's wiles "

He spoke, and Sohrab kindled at his taunts,
And he too drew his sword. At once they rushed 471

Together, as two eagles on one prey
Come rushing down together from the clouds,
One from the east, one from the west; their shields

Dashed with a clang together, and a din 475
Rose, such as that the sinewy woodcutters
Make often in the forest's heart at morn,
Of hewing axes, crashing trees — such blows
Rustum and Sohrab on each other hailed.
And you would say that sun and stars took
part 480

In that unnatural conflict; for a cloud
Grew suddenly in heaven, and darked the sun
Over the fighters' heads; and a wind rose Under their feet, and moaning swept the
plain,

And in a sandy whirlwind wrapped the pair
In gloom they twain were wrapped, and they
alone, 486

For both the on-looking hosts on either hand Stood in broad daylight, and the sky was
pure,

And the sun sparkled on the Oxus stream.
But in the gloom they fought, with bloodshot
eyes 490

And laboring breath first Rustum struck the
shield

Which Sohrab held stiff out; the steel-spiked
spear

Rent the tough plates, but failed to reach the skin,

And Rustum plucked it back with angry
groan

Then Sohrab with his sword smote Rustum's helm, 495

Nor clove its steel quite through; but all the crest

He shore away, and that proud horsehair
plume,

Never till now defiled, sank to the dust;
And Rustum bowed his head; but then the
gloom

Grew blacker, thunder rumbled in the air, 500
And lightnings rent the cloud; and Ruksh,
the horse,

Who stood at hand, uttered a dreadful cry —
No horse's cry was that, most like the roar
Of some pained desert-lion, who all day
Hath trailed the hunter's javelin in his side,
And comes at night to die upon the sand 506
The two hosts heard that cry, and quaked for
fear,

And Oxus curdled as it crossed his stream.
But Sohrab heard, and quailed not, but rushed on,

And struck again; and again Rustum bowed
His head; but this time all the blade, like
glass, 511

Sprang in a thousand shivers on the helm,
And in the hand the hilt remained alone.

Then Rustum raised his head, his dreadful
eyes

Glared, and he shook on high his menacing
spear, 515

And shouted, "Rustum!" Sohrab heard that shout,

And shrank amazed; back he recoiled one
step,

And scanned with blinking eyes the advancing form;

And then he stood bewildered; and he dropped
His covering shield, and the spear pierced his
side. 520

He reeled and, staggering back, sank to the
ground,

And then the gloom dispersed, and the wind
fell,

And the bright sun broke forth, and melted all
The cloud; and the two armies saw the pair —

Saw Rustum standing, safe upon his feet, 525
And Sohrab, wounded, on the bloody sand

Then, with a bitter smile, Rustum began
"Sohrab, thou thoughtest in thy mind to kill

A Persian lord this day, and strip his corpse,
And bear thy trophies to Afrasiab's tent, 530

Or else that the great Rustum would come
down

Himself to fight, and that thy wiles would move

His heart to take a gift, and let thee go
And then that all the Tartar host would

praise
Thy courage or thy craft, and spread thy fame, 535

To glad thy father in his weak old age.

Fool, thou art slain, and by an unknown man!
 Dearer to the red jackals shalt thou be
 Than to thy friends, and to thy father old."

And, with a fearless mien, Sohrab replied:
 "Unknown thou art; yet thy fierce vaunt is
 vain. 541

Thou dost not slay me, proud and boastful
 man!

No! Rustum slays me, and this filial heart.
 For were I matched with ten such men as thee,
 And I were that which till today I was, 545
 They should be lying here, I standing there.
 But that beloved name unnerved my arm —
 That name, and something, I confess, in thee,
 Which troubles all my heart, and made my
 shield

Fall; and thy spear transfixes an unarmed
 foe. 550

And now thou boastest, and insult'st my fate.
 But hear thou this, fierce man, tremble to
 hear:

The mighty Rustum shall avenge my death!
 My father, whom I seek through all the world,
 He shall avenge my death, and punish thee!"

As when some hunter in the spring hath
 found 556

A breeding eagle sitting on her nest,
 Upon the craggy isle of a hill-lake,
 And pierced her with an arrow as she rose,
 And followed her to find her where she fell 560
 Far off — anon her mate comes winging back
 From hunting, and a great way off describes His huddling young left sole; at that, he checks

His pinion, and with short uneasy sweeps
 Circles above his eyry, with loud screams 565
 Chiding his mate back to her nest; but she Lies dying, with the arrow in her side,
 In some far stony gorge out of his ken,
 A heap of fluttering feathers — never more
 Shall the lake glass her, flying over it; 570
 Never the black and dripping precipices
 Echo her stormy scream as she sails by —
 As that poor bird flies home, nor knows his
 loss,

So Rustum knew not his own loss, but stood
 Over his dying son, and knew him not. 575

But, with a cold incredulous voice, he said:
 "What prate is this of fathers and revenge?
 The mighty Rustum never had a son."

And, with a failing voice, Sohrab replied:
 "Ah yes, he had! and that lost son am I. 580
 Surely the news will one day reach his ear,
 Reach Rustum, where he sits, and tarries long, Somewhere, I know not where, but far from
 here,

And pierce him like a stab, and make him leap

To arms, and cry for vengeance upon thee 585
 Fierce man, bethink thee! for an only son

What will that grief, what will that vengeance
 be?

Oh, could I live, till I that grief had seen!
 Yet him I pity not so much, but her,
 My mother, who in Ader-baijan dwells 590
 With that old king, her father, who grows
 gray

With age, and rules over the valiant Koords.
 Her most I pity, who no more will see
 Sohrab returning from the Tartar camp,
 With spoils and honor, when the war is done.
 But a dark rumor will be bruited up, 596
 From tribe to tribe, until it reach her ear;
 And then will that defenseless woman learn
 That Sohrab will rejoice her sight no more,
 But that in battle with a nameless foe, 600
 By the far-distant Oxus, he is slain."

He spoke; and as he ceased, he wept aloud,
 Thinking of her he left, and his own death
 He spoke; but Rustum listened, plunged in thought.

Nor did he yet believe it was his son 605
 Who spoke, although he called back names
 he knew;

For he had had sure tidings that the babe,
 Which was in Ader-baijan born to him,
 Had been a puny girl, no boy at all —
 So that sad mother sent him word, for fear 610
 Rustum should seek the boy, to train in arms
 And so he deemed that either Sohrab took,
 By a false boast, the style of Rustum's son,
 Or that men gave it him, to swell his fame.
 So deemed he; yet he listened, plunged in
 thought. 615

And his soul set to grief, as the vast tide
 Of the bright rocking ocean sets to shore
 At the full moon; tears gathered in his eyes;
 For he remembered his own early youth,
 And all its bounding rapture; as, at dawn, 620
 The shepherd from his mountain-lodge describes

A far, bright city, smitten by the sun,
 Through many rolling clouds — so Rustum
 saw

His youth, saw Sohrab's mother, in her bloom,
 And that old king, her father, who loved well
 His wandering guest, and gave him his fair
 child 626

With joy; and all the pleasant life they led,
 They three, in that long-distant summer-
 time —

The castle, and the dewy woods, and hunt
 And hound, and morn on those delightful
 hills 630

In Ader-baijan. And he saw that youth,
 Of age and looks to be his own dear son,
 Piteous and lovely, lying on the sand,
 Like some rich hyacinth which by the scythe

592 Koords, Curds, a warlike people of northwestern
 Persia 596 bruited up, noised abroad 613 style, name

Of an unskillful gardener has been cut, 635
 Mowing the garden grass-plots near its bed,
 And lies, a fragrant tower of purple bloom,
 On the mown, dying grass — so Sohrab lay,
 Lovely in death, upon the common sand.
 And Rustum gazed on him with grief, and
 said: 640

“O Sohrab, thou indeed art such a son Whom Rustum, wert thou his, might well have loved.

Yet here thou errest, Sohrab, or else men
 Have told thee false — thou art not Rustum’s
 son. 644

For Rustum had no son; one child he had —
 But one — a girl; who with her mother now Phes some light female task, nor dreams of
 us —

Of us she dreams not, nor of wounds, nor war.”

But Sohrab answered him in wrath; for now
 The anguish of the deep-fixed spear grew
 fierce, 650

And he desired to draw forth the steel,
 And let the blood flow free, and so to die —
 But first he would convince his stubborn foe;
 And, rising sternly on one arm, he said.

“Man, who art thou who dost deny my
 words? 655

Truth sits upon the lips of dying men,
 And falsehood, while I lived, was far from
 mine.

I tell thee, pricked upon this arm I bear
 That seal which Rustum to my mother gave,
 That she might prick it on the babe she bore.”

He spoke; and all the blood left Rustum’s
 cheeks, 661

And his knees tottered, and he smote his hand
 Against his breast, his heavy mailed hand,
 That the hard iron corslet clanked aloud;
 And to his heart he pressed the other hand, 665
 And in a hollow voice he spake, and said:

“Sohrab, that were a proof which could not lie!

If thou show this, then art thou Rustum’s
 son.”

Then, with weak, hasty fingers, Sohrab
 loosed 669

His belt, and near the shoulder bared his arm,
 And showed a sign in faint vermilion points
 Pricked. As a cunning workman, in Pekin, Pricks with vermilion some clear porcelain
 vase,

An emperor’s gift; at early morn he paints,
 And all day long, and, when night comes, the lamp 675

Lights up his studious forehead and thin
 hands —

So delicately pricked the sign appeared

On Sohrab’s arm, the sign of Rustum’s seal
 It was that griffin which of old reared Zal, Rustum’s great father, whom they left to
 die, 680

A helpless babe, among the mountain-rocks;
 Him that kind creature found, and reared,
 and loved —

Then Rustum took it for his glorious sign.
 And Sohrab bared that image on his arm,
 And himself scanned it long with mournful
 eyes, 685

And then he touched it with his hand and
 said.

“How say’st thou? Is that sign the proper sign

Of Rustum’s son, or of some other man’s?”
 He spoke; but Rustum gazed, and gazed, and stood

Speechless; and then he uttered one sharp
 cry: 690

“O boy — thy father!” — and his voice choked there.

And then a dark cloud passed before his eyes,
 And his head swam, and he sank down to
 earth.

But Sohrab crawled to where he lay, and cast
 His arms about his neck, and kissed his lips,
 And with fond, faltering fingers stroked his cheeks, 696

Trying to call him back to life, and life
 Came back to Rustum, and he oped his eyes,
 And they stood wide with horror; and he seized

In both his hands the dust which lay around,
 And threw it on his head, and smirched his
 hair — 701

His hair, and face, and beard, and glittering
 arms;

And strong, convulsive groanings shook his
 breast,

And his sobs choked him; and he clutched his
 sword,

To draw it and forever let life out. 705

But Sohrab saw his thought, and held his
 hands,

And with a soothing voice he spake, and said.

“Father, forbear! for I but meet today
 The doom which at my birth was written
 down

In Heaven, and thou art Heaven’s unconscious hand. 710

Surely my heart cried out that it was thou,
 When first I saw thee; and thy heart spoke
 too,

I know it! but fate trod those promptings
 down

Under its iron heel; fate, fate engaged
 The strife, and hurled me on my father’s
 spear. 715

But let us speak no more of this! I find

My father; let me feel that I have found!
 Come, sit beside me on this sand, and take My head betwixt thy hands, and kiss my
 cheeks,
 And wash them with thy tears, and say,
 'My son!' 720
 Quick! quick! for numbered are my sands of
 life,
 And swift, for like the lightning to this field
 I came, and like the wind I go away —
 Sudden, and swift, and like a passing wind.
 But it was writ in Heaven that this should
 be." 725

So said he, and his voice released the heart
 Of Rustum, and his tears broke forth, he cast
 His arms round his son's neck, and wept
 aloud,
 And kissed him. And awe fell on both the hosts,
 When they saw Rustum's grief; and Ruksh,
 the horse, 730
 With his head bowing to the ground and mane
 Sweeping the dust, came near, and in mute
 woe
 First to the one then to the other moved
 His head, as if inquiring what their grief
 Might mean; and from his dark, compassionate eyes, 735
 The big warm tears rolled down, and caked
 the sand.
 But Rustum chid him with stern voice, and
 said:—

"Ruksh, now thou grieve'st; but, O Ruksh, thy feet
 Should first have rotted on their nimble joints, 739
 Or ere they brought thy master to this field!"
 But Sohrab looked upon the horse and said:
 "Is this, then, Ruksh? How often, in past
 days,

My mother told me of thee, thou brave steed,
 My terrible father's terrible horse! and said,
 That I should one day find thy lord and thee.
 Come, let me lay my hand upon thy mane! 746
 O Ruksh, thou art more fortunate than I;
 For thou hast gone where I shall never go,
 And snuffed the breezes of my father's home.
 And thou hast trod the sands of Seistan, 750
 And seen the River of Helmund, and the Lake
 Of Zirrah, and the aged Zal himself
 Has often stroked thy neck, and given thee
 food,

Corn in a golden platter soaked with wine,
 And said, 'O Ruksh! bear Rustum well!' —
 but I 755
 Have never known my grandsire's furrowed
 face,
 Nor seen his lofty house in Seistan,

Nor slaked my thirst at the clear Helmund
 stream,

But lodged among my father's foes, and seen
 Afrasiab's cities only, Samarcand, 760
 Bokhara, and lone Khiva in the waste,
 And the black Toorkmun tents; and only drunk

The desert rivers, Moorghab and Tejend, Kohik, and where the Kalmuks feed their sheep,

The northern Sir; and this great Oxus stream,
 The yellow Oxus, by whose brink I die." 766
 Then, with a heavy groan, Rustum bewailed:

"Oh, that its waves were flowing over me!
 Oh, that I saw its grains of yellow silt
 Roll tumbling in the current o'er my head!"
 But, with a grave, mild voice, Sohrab
 replied: 771

"Desire not that, my father! thou must live;
 For some are born to do great deeds, and live,
 As some are born to be obscured, and die.
 Do thou the deeds I die too young to do, 775
 And reap a second glory in thine age;
 Thou art my father, and thy gain is mine.
 But come! thou seest this great host of men
 Which follow me; I pray thee, slay not these!
 Let me entreat for them, what have they
 done? 780

They followed me, my hope, my fame, my
 star.

Let them all cross the Oxus back in peace.
 But me thou must bear hence, not send with
 them,

But carry me with thee to Seistan,
 And place me on a bed, and mourn for me,
 Thou, and the snow-haired Zal, and all thy
 friends. 786

And thou must lay me in that lovely earth,
 And heap a stately mound above my bones,
 And plant a far-seen pillar over all,
 That so the passing horseman on the waste 790
 May see my tomb a great way off, and cry,
 'Sohrab, the mighty Rustum's son, lies there,
 Whom his great father did in ignorance kill!'
 And I be not forgotten in my grave."

And, with a mournful voice, Rustum replied: 795

"Fear not! as thou hast said, Sohrab, my son,
 So shall it be; for I will burn my tents,
 And quit the host, and bear thee hence with
 me,

And carry thee away to Seistan, 799
 And place thee on a bed, and mourn for thee,
 With the snow-headed Zal, and all my friends
 And I will lay thee in that lovely earth,
 And heap a stately mound above thy bones,

751-752 Helmund . . . Zirrah, in the district of Seistan, Afghanistan.

763-764 Moorghab, Tejend, Kohik, rivers in Afghanistan 765 Sir, the Jaxartes River, in Turkestan (See line 129 and note, page 461.)

And plant a far-seen pillar over all,
 And men shall not forget thee in thy grave 805
 And I will spare thy host; yea, let them go!
 Let them all cross the Oxus back in peace!
 What should I do with slaying any more?
 For would that all that I have ever slain
 Might be once more alive, my bitterest foes,
 And they who were called champions in their
 time, 811
 And through whose death I won that fame I
 have —

And I were nothing but a common man,
 A poor, mean soldier, and without renown,
 So thou mightest live too, my son, my son! 815
 Or rather would that I, even I myself,
 Might now be lying on this bloody sand,
 Near death, and by an ignorant stroke of
 thine,

Not thou of mine! and I might die, not thou,
 And I, not thou, be borne to Seistan; 820
 And Zal might weep above my grave, not
 thine;

And say, 'O son, I weep thee not too sore,
 For willingly, I know, thou met'st thine end!
 But now in blood and battles was my youth,
 And full of blood and battles is my age, 825
 And I shall never end this life of blood."

Then, at the point of death, Sohrab replied:
 "A life of blood indeed, thou dreadful man!
 But thou shalt yet have peace; only not now,
 Not yet! but thou shalt have it on that day,
 When thou shalt sail in a high-masted ship, 831
 Thou and the other peers of Kai Khosroo,
 Returning home over the salt blue sea,
 From laying thy dear master in his grave."

And Rustum gazed in Sohrab's face, and
 said. 835

"Soon be that day, my son, and deep that seal
 Till then, if fate so wills, let me endure "

He spoke, and Sohrab smiled on him, and took

The spear, and drew it from his side, and eased

His wound's imperious anguish, but the blood
 Came welling from the open gash, and life 841
 Flowed with the stream — all down his cold
 white side

The crimson torrent ran, dim now and soiled,
 Like the soiled tissue of white violets 844
 Left, freshly gathered, on their native bank,
 By children whom their nurses call with haste Indoors from the sun's eye; his head drooped
 low,

His limbs grew slack; motionless, white, he
 lay —

White, with eyes closed; only when heavy gasps,

Deep heavy gasps quivering through all his frame, 850

Convulsed him back to life, he opened them,

And fixed them feebly on his father's face;
 Till now all strength was ebbcd, and from his limbs

Unwillingly the spirit fled away,
 Regretting the warm mansion which it left,
 And youth, and bloom, and this delightful
 world. 856

So, on the bloody sand, Sohrab lay dead,
 And the great Rustum drew his horseman's cloak

Down o'er his face, and sate by his dead son.
 As those black granite pillars, once high-
 reared 860

By Jemshid in Persepolis, to bear
 His house, now 'mid their broken flights of steps

Lie prone, enormous, down the mountain
 side —

So in the sand lay Rustum by his son.

And night came down over the solemn
 waste, 865

And the two gazing hosts, and that sole pair,
 And darkened all; and a cold fog, with night,
 Crept from the Oxus Soon a hum arose,
 As of a great assembly loosed, and fires
 Began to twinkle through the fog; for now 870
 Both armies moved to camp, and took their meal;

The Persians took it on the open sands
 Southward, the Tartars by the river marge;
 And Rustum and his son were left alone.

But the majestic river floated on, 875
 Out of the mist and hum of that low land,
 Into the frosty starlight, and there moved,
 Rejoicing, through the hushed Chorasmian
 waste,

Under the solitary moon — he flowed
 Right for the polar star, past Orgunjè, 880
 Brimming, and bright, and large; then sands
 began

To hem his watery march, and dam his
 streams,

And split his currents; that for many a league
 The shorn and parceled Oxus strains along Through beds of sand and matted rushy
 isles — 885

Oxus, forgetting the bright speed he had
 In his high mountain-cradle in Pamere,
 A foiled circuitous wanderer — till at last
 The longed-for dash of waves is heard, and wide

His luminous home of waters opens, bright
 And tranquil, from whose floor the new-bathed stars 891

Emerge, and shine upon the Aral Sea.

PHILOMELA

Hark! ah, the ~~nightingale~~ —
The tawny-throated!
Hark, from that moonlit cedar what a burst!
What triumph! hark! — what pain!

O wanderer from a Grecian shore, 5
Still, after many years, in distant lands,
Still nourishing in thy bewildered brain
That wild, unquenched, deep-sunken, old-world pain —
Say, will it never heal?
And can this fragrant lawn 10
With its cool trees, and night,
And the sweet, tranquil Thames,
And moonshine, and the dew,
To thy racked heart and brain
Afford no balm? 15

Dost thou tonight behold,
Here, through the moonlight on this English
grass,
The unfriendly palace in the Thracian wild?
Dost thou again peruse
With hot cheeks and seared eyes 20
The too clear web, and thy dumb sister's shame?
Dost thou once more assay
Thy flight, and feel come over thee,
Poor fugitive, the feathery change
Once more, and once more seem to make resound 25
With love and hate, triumph and agony,
Lone Daulis, and the high Cephissian vale?
Listen, Eugenia —
How thick the bursts come crowding through the leaves!
Again — thou hearest? 30
Eternal pain!
Eternal pain! (1853)

REQUIESCAT

Strew on her roses, roses,
And never a spray of yew!
In quiet she reposes;
Ah, would that I did too!

Philomela Philomela and Procne were daughters of Pandion, king of Athens. Procne was the wife of Tereus, king of Thrace. Tereus dishonored Philomela and then cut out her tongue that she might not betray him; but Philomela wove the story in a piece of tapestry, which she gave to her sister. Procne then killed her son Itys (Itylus), served him as food to his father, and fled with Philomela. On being pursued by Tereus, the sisters prayed for deliverance and were changed into birds—Philomela into a nightingale and Procne into a swallow. In the poem Arnold has reversed the positions of the sisters. See Swinburne's Itylus, page 675.

27 Daulis, the scene of the tragedy, in Phocis, Greece. The Cephissus was the chief river of Phocis. 28 Eugenia, an imaginary person.

Requiescat The title means May She Rest
2 yew, a common tree in graveyards

Her mirth the world required; 5
She bathed it in smiles of glee.
But her heart was tired, tired,
And now they let her be.

Her life was turning, turning,
In mazes of heat and sound. 10
But for peace her soul was yearning,
And now peace laps her round.

Her cabined, ample spirit,
It fluttered and failed for breath.
Tonight it doth inherit 15
The vasty hall of death. (1853)

From THE CHURCH OF BROU

3. THE TOMB

So rest, forever rest, O princely pair!
In your high church, 'mid the still mountain-
air,
Where horn, and hound, and vassals, never
come.
Only the blessed saints are smiling dumb,
From the rich painted windows of the nave, 5
On aisle, and transept, and your marble
grave;
Where thou, young prince! shalt never more arise
From the fringed mattress where thy duchess
lies,
On autumn-mornings, when the bugle sounds,
And ride across the drawbridge with thy hounds 10
To hunt the boar in the crisp woods till eve;
And thou, O princess! shalt no more receive,
Thou and thy ladies, in the hall of state,
The jaded hunters with their bloody freight,
Coming benighted to the castle-gate. 15
So sleep, forever sleep, O marble pair!
Or, if ye wake, let it be then, when fair
On the carved western front a flood of light Streams from the setting sun, and colors
bright
Prophets, transfigured saints, and martyrs
brave, 20
In the vast western window of the nave;
And on the pavement round the tomb there glints
A checker-work of glowing sapphire-tints,

13 cabined, shut up, as in a cabin.

The Church of Brou The Church of Notre Dame de Brou is about a mile from Bourg-en-Bresse, an important town in east-central France. It contains the tombs of Philbert II, Duke of Savoy, and his wife, Margaret of Austria. These are the "princely pair" of line 1. Philbert died in 1504 after drinking cold water when he was heated from hunting. His wife built the church to his memory in 1511-36. Following a French writer, Arnold wrongly placed Brou among the mountains. The section of the poem here printed was originally published separately, under the title A Tomb among the Mountains. It is greatly superior to the rest of the poem.

And amethyst, and ruby — then uncloseth
Your eyelids on the stone where ye repose, 25
And from your broidered pillows lift your heads,

And rise upon your cold white marble beds;
And, looking down on the warm rosy tints,
Which checker, at your feet, the illumined
flints,

Say: *What is this? we are in bliss — forgiven —
Behold the pavement of the courts of heaven!* 31

Or let it be on autumn nights, when rain
Doteth rustlingly above your heads complain
On the smooth leaden roof, and on the walls
Shedding her pensive light at intervals 35
The moon through the clere-story windows
shines,

And the wind washes through the mountain-pines.

Then, gazing up 'mid the dim pillars high,
The foliaged marble forest where ye lie,
Hush, ye will say, it is eternity! 40

*This is the glimmering verge of heaven, and
these*

The columns of the heavenly palaces!

And, in the sweeping of the wind, your ear
The passage of the angels' wings will hear,
And on the lichen-crustled leads above 45
The rustle of the eternal rain of love.

THE SCHOLAR-GYPSY

Go, for they call you, shepherd, from the hill;
Go, shepherd, and untie the wattled cotes!
No longer leave thy wistful flock unfed,
Nor let thy bawling fellows rack their throats,

Nor the cropped herbage shoot another
head. 5

But when the fields are still,
And the tired men and dogs all gone to
rest,
And only the white sheep are sometimes
seen

Cross and recross the strips of moon-
blanched green,
Come, shepherd, and again begin the
quest! 10

Here, where the reaper was at work of late —
In this high field's dark corner, where he leaves

His coat, his basket, and his earthen cruise,

36 clere-story, the upper wall of a church containing windows through which light is admitted into the nave
45 leads, roofs made of lead

The Scholar-Gypsy. See Critical Notes

2. wattled cotes, sheepfolds built of wattles, or interwoven twigs 10 the quest, the search for the Scholar-Gypsy, who is supposed still to haunt the vicinity.

And in the sun all morning binds the
sheaves,

Then here, at noon, comes back his stores to use — 15

Here will I sit and wait,
While to my ear from uplands far away
The bleating of the folded flocks is borne,
With distant cries of reapers in the corn—
All the live murmur of a summer's day. 20

Screened is this nook o'er the high, half-reaped field,

And here till sun-down, shepherd! will I be.
Through the thick corn the scarlet poppies peep,

And round green roots and yellowing stalks
I see

Pale pink convolvulus in tendrils creep,
And air-swept lindens yield 26

Their scent, and rustle down their perfumed showers

Of bloom on the bent grass where I am
laid,

And bower me from the August sun with
shade;

And the eye travels down to Oxford's
towers 30

And near me on the grass lies Glanvil's book—
Come, let me read the oft-read tale again!

The story of the Oxford scholar poor,
Of pregnant parts and quick inventive
brain,

Who, tired of knocking at preferment's
door, 35

One summer-morn forsook
His friends, and went to learn the gypsy-lore,

And roamed the world with that wild brotherhood,

And came, as most men deemed, to little
good,

But came to Oxford and his friends no
more. 40

But once, years after, in the country-lanes,
Two scholars, whom at college erst he knew,

Met him, and of his way of life inquired;
Whereat he answered that the gypsy-crew,

His mates, had arts to rule as they desired
The workings of men's brains, 46

And they can bind them to what thoughts they will.

"And I," he said, "the secret of their art,
When fully learned, will to the world
impart;

But it needs heaven-sent moments for this skill." 50

19 corn, grain, wheat 25. convolvulus, a species of morning-glory. 31 Glanvil's book. See Critical Note on title. 34 pregnant parts, inventive faculties

This said, he left them, and returned no more. —

But rumors hung about the country-side,
That the lost scholar long was seen to stray,

Seen by rare glimpses, pensive and tonguetied,

In hat of antique shape, and cloak of gray, 55

The same the gypsies wore.

Shepherds had met him on the Hurst in spring,

At some lone alehouse in the Berkshire moors,

On the warm ingle-bench, the smock-frocked boors

Had found him seated at their entering 60

But, 'mid their drink and clatter, he would fly
And I myself seem half to know thy looks,

And put the shepherds, wanderer! on thy trace;

And boys who in lone wheatfields scare the rooks

I ask if thou hast passed their quiet place,
Or in my boat I lie 66

Moored to the cool bank in the summer-heats,

'Mid wide grass meadows which the sunshine fills,

And watch the warm, green-muffled Cumner hills,

And wonder if thou haunt'st their shy retreats. 70

For most, I know, thou lov'st retired ground!
Thee at the ferry Oxford riders blithe,

Returning home on summer-nights, have met

Crossing the stripling Thames at Bab-lock-hithe,

Trailing in the cool stream thy fingers wet,
As the punt's rope chops round; 76

And leaning backward in a pensive dream,
And fostering in thy lap a heap of flowers

Plucked in shy fields and distant Wychwood bowers,

And thine eyes resting on the moonlit stream 80

And then they land, and thou art seen no more! —

57. Hurst, Cumner Hurst, a prominent hill in the parish of Cumner, southwest of Oxford. 58. Berkshire, a county south of Oxford. 59. ingle-bench, bench in the chimney corner. 74. Bab-lock-hithe, a ferry over the Thames about two miles west of the village of Cumner. 76. punt's round. The Scholar-Gypsy is seen reposing in a boat moored to the bank. The punt, or ferryboat, is pulled across the stream by a rope, and the boat moves in a kind of curve. The rope "chops" or suddenly shifts with the wind or current. 79. Wychwood, a forest about ten miles northwest of Oxford.

Maidens, who from the distant hamlets come

To dance around the Fyfield elm in May,
Oft through the darkening fields have seen thee roam,

Or cross a stile into the public way. 85
Oft thou hast given them store

Of flowers—the frail-leaved, white anemone,

Dark bluebells drenched with dew of summer eves,

And purple orchises with spotted leaves—
But none hath words she can report of thee.

And, above Godstow Bridge, when hay-time's here 91

In June, and many a scythe in sunshine flames,

Men who through those wide fields of breezy grass

Where black-winged swallows haunt the glittering Thames,

To bathe in the abandoned lasher pass,
Have often passed thee near 96

Sitting upon the river bank o'ergrown;
Marked thine outlandish garb, thy figure spare,

Thy dark vague eyes, and soft abstracted air —

But, when they came from bathing, thou wast gone! 100

At some lone homestead in the Cumner hills,
Where at her open door the housewife darns,

Thou hast been seen, or hanging on a gate

To watch the threshers in the mossy barns.
Children, who early range these slopes and late 105

For cresses from the rills,
Have known thee eying, all an April-day,

The springing pastures and the feeding kine;

And marked thee, when the stars come out and shine,

Through the long dewy grass move slow away. 110

In autumn, on the skirts of Bagley Wood —
Where most the gypsies by the turf-edged way

Pitch their smoked tents, and every bush you see

83. Fyfield. May, a reference to the maypole dance at Fyfield, a village six miles southwest of Oxford. The large elm was a landmark for all the countryside. 91. Godstow Bridge, about two miles up the Thames from Oxford. 95. lasher pass, pool below a dam. 111. Bagley Wood, southwest of Oxford. It was a favorite place of Arnold's father.

With scarlet patches tagged and shreds of
gray,
Above the forest-ground called Thessaly — 115
The blackbird, picking food, Sees thee, nor stops his meal, nor fears at
all;
So often has he known thee past him
stray,
Rapt, twirling in thy hand a withered
spray,
And waiting for the spark from heaven to
fall. 120

And once, in winter, on the causeway chill
Where home through flooded fields foottravelers go,
Have I not passed thee on the wooden
bridge,
Wrapped in thy cloak and battling with the
snow,
Thy face tow'rd Hinksey and its wintry
ridge? 125
And thou hast climbed the hill,
And gained the white brow of the Cumner
range;
Turned once to watch, while thick the snowflakes fall,
The line of festal light in Christ-Church
hall —
Then sought thy straw in some sequestered grange. 130

But what — I dream! Two hundred years are flown
Since first thy story ran through Oxford halls,
And the grave Glanvil did the tale inscribe
That thou wert wandered from the studious walls
To learn strange arts, and join a gypsy tribe; 135
And thou from earth art gone
Long since, and in some quiet churchyard
laid —
Some country-nook, where o'er thy unknown grave
Tall grasses and white flowering nettles
wave,
Under a dark, red-fruited yew-tree's shade.
— No, no, thou hast not felt the lapse of hours! 141
For what wears out the life of mortal men?

'Tis that from change to change their being rolls;
'Tis that repeated shocks, again, again,
Exhaust the energy of strongest souls 145
And numb the elastic powers,
Till having used our nerves with bliss and
teen,
And tired upon a thousand schemes our
wit,
To the just-pausing Genius we remit
Our worn-out life, and are — what we have
been. 150

Thou hast not lived, why should'st thou perish, so?
Thou hadst one aim, one business, one
desire;
Else wert thou long since numbered with
the dead!
Else hadst thou spent, like other men, thy
fire!
The generations of thy peers are fled, 155
And we ourselves shall go;
But thou possessest an immortal lot,
And we imagine thee exempt from age
And living as thou liv'st on Glanvil's
page,
Because thou hadst — what we, alas! have
not. 160

For early didst thou leave the world, with powers
Fresh, undiverted to the world without,
Firm to their mark, not spent on other
things;
Free from the sick fatigue, the languid
doubt,
Which much to have tried, in much been baffled, brings. 165
O life unlike to ours!
Who fluctuate idly without term or scope,
Of whom each strives, nor knows for what he strives,
And each half lives a hundred different lives,
Who wait like thee, but not, like thee, in
hope. 170

Thou waitest for the spark from heaven!
and we,
Light half-believers of our casual creeds,
Who never deeply felt, nor clearly willed, Whose insight never has borne fruit in
deeds,
Whose vague resolves never have been fulfilled; 175

114 scarlet patches . . gray. The bright-colored, tattered garments of the gypsies were hung on the bushes
115 Thessaly, a piece of forest ground near Bagley Wood
125. Hinksey, a village south of Oxford. 129. Christ-Church hall, the dining-hall in Christ Church College, Oxford.

147 teen, sorrow. 149 just-pausing Genius. According to the ancients the Genius of a man was his spirit or guardian angel. The phrase may mean that the Genius pauses just for a moment before departing, or that the even-handed spirit of the world impartially ends individual lives.

For whom each year we see Breeds new beginnings, disappointments
new;
Who hesitate and falter life away,
And lose tomorrow the ground won today —
Ah! do not we, wanderer! await it too? 180

Yes, we await it! — but it still delays,
And then we suffer! and amongst us one,
Who most hast suffered, takes dejectedly
His seat upon the intellectual throne;
And all his store of sad experience he 185
Lays bare of wretched days;
Tells us his misery's birth and growth and
signs,
And how the dying spark of hope was fed,
And how the breast was soothed, and how the head,
And all his hourly varied anodynes. 190

This for our wisest! and we others pine,
And wish the long unhappy dream would
end,
And waive all claim to bliss, and try to
bear,
With close-lipped patience for our only
friend,
Sad patience, too near neighbor to despair — 195
But none has hope like thine!
Thou through the fields and through the woods dost stray,
Roaming the country-side, a truant boy,
Nursing thy project in unclouded joy,
And every doubt long blown by time away.

O born in days when wits were fresh and
clear, 201
And life ran gayly as the sparkling Thames,
Before this strange disease of modern life,
With its sick hurry, its divided aims,
Its head o'ertaxed, its palsied hearts, was rife — 205
Fly hence, our contact fear!
Still fly, plunge deeper in the bowering
wood!
Averse, as Dido did with gesture stern
From her false friend's approach in Hades
turn,
Wave us away, and keep thy solitude! 210

Still nursing the unconquerable hope,
Still clutching the inviolable shade,
With a free, onward impulse brushing
through,
By night, the silvered branches of the glade —
Far on the forest-skirts, where none pursue, 215
On some mild pastoral slope
Emerge, and resting on the moonlit pales
Freshen thy flowers as in former years
With dew, or listen with enchanted ears,
From the dark dingles, to the nightingales!

But fly our paths, our feverish contact fly! 221
For strong the infection of our mental strife,
Which, though it gives no bliss, yet spoils
for rest;
And we should win thee from thy own fair
life,
Like us distracted, and like us unblest
Soon, soon thy cheer would die, 226
Thy hopes grow timorous, and unfixed thy
powers,
And thy clear aims be cross and shifting
made,
And then thy glad perennial youth would fade,
Fade, and grow old at last, and die like
ours. 230

Then fly our greetings, fly our speech and smiles!
— As some grave Tyrian trader, from the
sea,
Descried at sunrise an emerging prow
Lifting the cool-haired creepers stealthily,
The fringes of a southward-facing brow
Among the Ægæan isles; 236
And saw the merry Grecian coaster come, Freighted with amber grapes, and Chian
wine,
Green, bursting figs, and tunnies steeped in brine —
And knew the intruders on his ancient home,

The young light-hearted masters of the waves — 241
And snatched his rudder, and shook out more sail;
And day and night held on indignantly
O'er the blue Midland waters with the gale,

182 ff one who suffered, etc. These lines have been taken to refer to Carlyle or Tennyson. See In Memoriam, Section 5, line 5, page 58. 190 anodynes, drugs to soothe pain. 208-209. Dido . . . turn. STANZAS FROM THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE

Through Alpine meadows soft-suffused
 With rain, where thick the crocus blows,
 Past the dark forges long disused,
 The mule-track from Saint Laurent goes.
 The bridge is crossed, and slow we ride, 5
 Through forest, up the mountain-side.

The autumnal evening darkens round,
 The wind is up, and drives the rain;
 While, hark! far down, with strangled sound
 Doth the Dead Guier's stream complain, 10
 Where that wet smoke, among the woods,
 Over his boiling caldron broods.

Swift rush the spectral vapors white
 Past limestone scars with ragged pines,
 Showing — then blotting from our sight! —
 Halt — through the cloud-drift something shines! 16
 High in the valley, wet and drear,
 The huts of Courrierie appear.

Strike leftward! cries our guide; and higher
 Mounts up the stony forest-way 20
 At last the encircling trees retire;
 Look! through the showery twilight gray
 What pointed roofs are these advance? —
 A palace of the kings of France?

Approach, for what we seek is here! 25
 Alight, and sparely sup, and wait
 For rest in this outbuilding near;
 Then cross the sward and reach that gate.

Stanzas from the Grande Chartreuse The Grande Char-treuse, located in the French Alps about fourteen miles from Grenoble, was formerly a monastery of the Order of Carthusians It was founded by St Bruno, about 1084, but the present building dates from 1678. The monks were compelled to leave France in 1903 Arnold had visited the Grande Chartreuse in 1852

Knock, pass the wicket! Thou art come
 To the Carthusians' world-famed home. 30

The silent courts, where night and day
 Into their stone-carved basins cold
 The splashing icy fountains play —
 The humid corridors behold!
 Where, ghostlike in the deepening night, 35
 Cowed forms brush by in gleaming white

The chapel, where no organ's peal
 Invests the stern and naked prayer —
 With penitential cries they kneel
 And wrestle; rising then, with bare 40
 And white uplifted faces stand,
 Passing the Host from hand to hand;

Each takes, and then his visage wan
 Is buried in his cowl once more.
 The cells! — the suffering Son of Man 45
 Upon the wall — the knee-worn floor —
 And where they sleep, that wooden bed,
 Which shall their coffin be, when dead!

The library, where tract and tome
 Not to feed priestly pride are there, 50
 To hymn the conquering march of Rome,
 Nor yet to amuse, as ours are!
 They paint of souls the inner strife,
 Their drops of blood, their death in life.

The garden, overgrown — yet mild, 55
 See, fragrant herbs are flowering there!
 Strong children of the Alpine wild
 Whose culture is the brethren's care;
 Of human tasks their only one,
 And cheerful works beneath the sun. 60

Those halls, too, destined to contain
 Each its own pilgrim-host of old,
 From England, Germany, or Spain —
 All are before me! I behold
 The House, the Brotherhood austere! 65
 — And what am I, that I am here?

For rigorous teachers seized my youth,
 And purged its faith, and trimmed its fire,
 Showed me the high, white star of Truth,
 There bade me gaze, and there aspire. 70
 Even now their whispers pierce the gloom.
What dost thou in this living tomb?

Forgive me, masters of the mind!
 At whose behest I long ago
 So much unlearned, so much resigned — 75
 I come not here to be your foe!

 Arnold, of Rugby

I seek these anchorites, not in ruth, To curse and to deny your truth,		They have the grief men had of yore, But they contend and cry no more.	120
Not as their friend, or child, I speak! But as, on some far northern strand, Thinking of his own gods, a Greek In pity and mournful awe might stand Before some fallen Runic stone — For both were faiths, and both are gone	80	Our fathers watered with their tears This sea of time whereon we sail, Their voices were in all men's ears Who passed within their puissant hail. Still the same ocean round us raves, But we stand mute, and watch the waves.	125
Wandering between two worlds, one dead, 85 The other powerless to be born, With nowhere yet to rest my head, Like these, on earth I wait forlorn. Their faith, my tears, the world deride — I come to shed them at their side 90	85 90	For what availed it, all the noise And outcry of the former men? — Say, have their sons achieved more joys? Say, is life lighter now than then? 130 The sufferers died, they left their pain — The pangs which tortured them remain.	130
Oh, hide me in your gloom profound, Ye solemn seats of holy pain! Take me, cowed forms, and fence me round, Till I possess my soul again; Till free my thoughts before me roll, 95 Not chafed by hourly false control!	95	What helps it now that Byron bore, With haughty scorn which mocked the smart, Through Europe to the Ætolian shore, 135 The pageant of his bleeding heart? That thousands counted every groan, And Europe made his woe her own?	135
For the world cries your faith is now But a dead time's exploded dream; My melancholy, sciolists vow, Is a passed mode, an outworn theme — 100 As if the world had ever had A faith, or sciolists been sad!	100	What boots it, Shelley! that the breeze Carried thy lovely wail away, 140 Musical through Italian trees Which fringe thy soft blue Spezzian bay? Inheritors of thy distress Have restless hearts one throb the less?	140
Ah, if it be passed, take away, At least, the restlessness, the pain; Be man henceforth no more a prey 105 To these out-dated stings again! The nobleness of grief is gone — Ah, leave us not the fret alone!	105	Or are we easier, to have read, 145 O Obermann! the sad, stern page, Which tells us how thou hiddest thy head From the fierce tempest of thine age In the lone brakes of Fontainebleau, Or chalets near the Alpine snow? 150	145 150
But — if you cannot give us ease — Last of the race of them who grieve 110 Here leave us to die out with these Last of the people who believe! Silent, while years engrave the brow; Silent — the best are silent now.	110	Ye slumber in your silent grave! — The world, which for an idle day Grace to your mood of sadness gave, Long since hath flung her weeds away. The eternal trifler breaks your spell, 155 But we — we learned your lore too well!	155
Achilles ponders in his tent, 115 The kings of modern thought are dumb; Silent they are, though not content, And wait to see the future come.	115	Years hence, perhaps, may dawn an age, More fortunate, alas! than we, Which without hardness will be sage, And gay without frivolity. 160 Sons of the world, oh, speed those years; But, while we wait, allow our tears!	160

115 Achilles . . . tent. During the siege of Troy, Achilles, one of the Greek heroes, retired to his tent and refused to take part in the war because he had been deprived of his captive maiden. It has been suggested that Arnold here refers to Newman's two years of quiet study, 1843-45, before he was received into the Roman Catholic Church

133 Byron. Byron died at Missolonghi, on the shores of Ætolia, Greece, in 1824. When exiled from England, Byron traveled through France and Italy to Greece, and showed off his hurts in all that he wrote during these years.
Byron and his writings exercised a strange hold upon Europe.

spent most of his life abroad. He was drowned in the Gulf of Spezzia, south of Genoa, Italy, in 1822. 146 Obermann.

Allow them! We admire with awe
The exulting thunder of your race;
You give the universe your law, 165
You triumph over time and space!
Your pride of life, your tireless powers,
We laud them, but they are not ours.

We are like children reared in shade
Beneath some old-world abbey wall, 170
Forgotten in a forest-glade,
And secret from the eyes of all.
Deep, deep the greenwood round them waves,
Their abbey, and its close of graves!

But, where the road runs near the stream, 175
Oft through the trees they catch a glance
Of passing troops in the sun's beam —
Pennon, and plume, and flashing lance!
Forth to the world those soldiers fare,
To life, to cities, and to war! 180

And through the wood, another way,
Faint bugle-notes from far are borne,
Where hunters gather, staghounds bay,
Round some fair forest-lodge at morn.
Gay dames are there, in sylvan green; 185
Laughter and cries — those notes between!

The banners flashing through the trees
Make their blood dance and chain their eyes,
That bugle-music on the breeze
Arrests them with a charmed surprise. 190
Banner by turns and bugle woo:
Ye shy recluses, follow too!

O children, what do ye reply? —
"Action and pleasure, will ye roam
Through these secluded dells to cry 195
And call us? — but too late ye come!
Too late for us your call ye blow,
Whose bent was taken long ago.

"Long since we pace this shadowed nave,
We watch those yellow tapers shine, 200
Emblems of hope over the grave,
In the high altar's depth divine;
The organ carries to our ear
Its accents of another sphere.

"Fenced early in this cloistral round 205
Of reverie, of shade, of prayer,
How should we grow in other ground?
How can we flower in foreign air?
— Pass, banners, pass, and bugles, cease,
And leave our desert to its peace!" 210

THYRSIS ✕

A MONODY, to commemorate the author's friend, ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH, who died at Florence, 1861

How changed is here each spot man makes or fills!
In the two Hinkseys nothing keeps the
same;
The village street its haunted mansion
lacks,
And from the sign is gone Sibylla's name,
And from the roofs the twisted chimney-stacks — 5
Are ye too changed, ye hills?
See, 'tis no foot of unfamiliar men
Tonight from Oxford up your pathway strays!
Here came I often, often, in old days —
Thyrsis and I; we still had Thyrsis then. 10

Runs it not here, the track by Childsworth Farm,
Past the high wood, to where the elm-tree crowns
The hill behind whose ridge the sunset
flames?
The signal-elm, that looks on Ilsley Downs,
The Vale, the three lone weirs, the youthful Thames? — 15
This winter's-eve is warm,
Humid the air! leafless, yet soft as spring,
The tender purple spray on copse and briers!
And that sweet city with her dreaming
spires,
She needs not June for beauty's heighten-
ing, 20

Lovely all times she lies, lovely tonight! —
Only, methinks, some loss of habit's power
Befalls me wandering through this upland dim;
Once passed I blindfold here, at any hour;
Now seldom come I, since I came with
him. 25

Thyrsis See Critical Notes In the poem Arnold speaks of himself as Corydon (line 80) and of Clough as Thyrsis
These are conventional names in pastoral poetry, they are found in Virgil's Seventh Eclogue, Milton's L'Allegro, and elsewhere Arnold's poem is full of reminiscences of the days spent with Clough in Oxford and its environs

That single elm-tree bright
Against the west — I miss it! is it gone?
We prized it dearly; while it stood, we
said,

Our friend, the gypsy-scholar, was not
dead;
While the tree lived, he in these fields
lived on. 30

Too rare, too rare, grow now my visits here,
But once I knew each field, each flower,
each stick;

And with the country-folk acquaintance
made

By barn in threshing-time, by new-built rick.

Here, too, our shepherd-pipes we first assayed 35

Ah me! this many a year
My pipe is lost, my shepherd's holiday!
Needs must I lose them, needs with heavy heart

Into the world and wave of men de-
part;

But Thyrsis of his own will went away 40

It irked him to be here; he could not rest.

He loved each simple joy the country yields,
He loved his mates; but yet he could not keep,

For that a shadow lowered on the fields,
Here with the shepherds and the silly
sheep 45

Some life of men unblest
He knew, which made him droop, and filled his head

He went; his piping took a troubled
sound

Of storms that rage outside our happy
ground;

He could not wait their passing, he is dead

So, some tempestuous morn in early June, 51
When the year's primal burst of bloom is
o'er,

Before the roses and the longest day —
When garden-walks and all the grassy floor
With blossoms red and white of fallen
May 55

And chestnut-flowers are strewn —

So have I heard the cuckoo's parting cry,
From the wet field, through the vexed
garden-trees,

Come with the volleying rain and tossing
breeze: 59

The bloom is gone, and with the bloom go I!

Too quick despairer, wherefore wilt thou go?
Soon will the high midsummer pomps come
on,

Soon will the musk carnations break and
swell,

Soon shall we have gold-dusted snapdragon,
Sweet-William with his homely cottage-smell, 65

And stocks in fragrant blow;

Roses that down the alleys shine afar,

And open, jasmine-muffled lattices,

And groups under the dreaming garden-
trees,

And the full moon, and the white evening-
star. 70

He hearkens not! light cometh, he is flown!

What matters it? next year he will return,
And we shall have him in the sweet spring-days,

With whitening hedges, and uncrumpling
fern,

And bluebells trembling by the forestways, 75

And scent of hay new-mown.

But Thyrsis never more we swains shall
see;

See him come back, and cut a smoother
reed,

And blow a strain the world at last shall heed —

For Time, not Corydon, hath conquered
thee! 80

Alack, for Corydon no rival now! —

But when Sicilian shepherds lost a mate,
Some good survivor with his flute would
go,

Piping a ditty sad for Bion's fate;

And cross the unpermitted ferry's flow,
And relax Pluto's brow, 86

And make leap up with joy the beauteous
head

Of Proserpine, among whose crowned
hair

Are flowers first opened on Sicilian air,
And flute his friend, like Orpheus, from the dead. 90

O easy access to the hearer's grace
 When Dorian shepherds sang to Proserpine!
 For she herself had trod Sicilian fields,
 She knew the Dorian water's gush divine,
 She knew each lily white which Enna
 yields, 95
 Each rose with blushing face;
 She loved the Dorian pipe, the Dorian
 strain.
 But, ah, of our poor Thames she never
 heard!
 Her foot the Cumner cowslips never
 stirred;
 And we should tease her with our plaint
 in vain! 100

Well! wind-dispersed and vain the words will
 be,
 Yet, Thyrsis, let me give my grief its hour
 In the old haunt, and find our tree-topped hill!
 Who, if not I, for questing here hath power?
 I know the wood which hides the daffodil,
 I know the Fyfield tree, 106
 I know what white, what purple fritillaries
 The grassy harvest of the river-fields,
 Above by Ensham, down by Sandford,
 yields,
 And what sedged brooks are Thames's tributaries; 110

I know these slopes; who knows them if not I? —
 But many a dingle on the loved hillside,
 With thorns once studded, old, white-
 blossomed trees,
 Where thick the cowslips grew, and far descried
 High towered the spikes of purple
 orchises, 115
 Hath since our day put by
 The coronals of that forgotten time;
 Down each green bank hath gone the plowboy's team,
 And only in the hidden brookside gleam
 Primroses, orphans of the flowery prime 120

Where is the girl, who by the boatman's door,
 Above the locks, above the boating throng, Unmoored our skiff when through the Wytham flats,
 Red loosestrife and blond meadow-sweet among

And darting swallows and light watergnats, 125
 We tracked the shy Thames shore?
 Where are the mowers, who, as the tiny
 swell
 Of our boat passing heaved the river-
 grass,
 Stood with suspended scythe to see us
 pass? —
 They all are gone, and thou art gone as
 well! 130

Yes, thou art gone! and round me too the
 night
 In ever-nearing circle weaves her shade
 I see her veil draw soft across the day,
 I feel her slowly chilling breath invade
 The cheek grown thin, the brown hair sprent with gray, 135
 I feel her finger light
 Laid pausefully upon life's headlong train—
 The foot less prompt to meet the morning dew,
 The heart less bounding at emotion new,
 And hope, once crushed, less quick to spring again. 140

And long the way appears, which seemed so
 short
 To the less practiced eye of sanguine youth,
 And high the mountain-tops, in cloudy
 air,
 The mountain-tops where is the throne of
 Truth,
 Tops in life's morning-sun so bright and
 bare! 145
 Unbreachable the fort
 Of the long-battered world uplifts its wall,
 And strange and vain the earthly turmoil grows,
 And near and real the charm of thy
 repose,
 And night as welcome as a friend would
 fall. 150

But hush! the upland hath a sudden loss
 Of quiet! — Look, adown the dusk hillside,
 A troop of Oxford hunters going home,
 As in old days, jovial and talking, ride!
 From hunting with the Berkshire hounds
 they come. 155
 Quick! let me fly, and cross
 Into yon farther field! — 'Tis done; and
 see,
 Backed by the sunset, which doth glorify
 The orange and pale violet evening-sky,
 Bare on its lonely ridge, the Tree! the Tree!

I take the omen! Eve lets down her veil, 161
 The white fog creeps from bush to bush about,
 The west unflushes, the high stars grow
 bright,
 And in the scattered farms the lights come
 out

I cannot reach the signal-tree tonight, 165
 Yet, happy omen, hail!

Hear it from thy broad lucent Arno-vale
 (For there thine earth-forgetting eyelids
 keep

The morningless and unawakening sleep
 Under the flowery oleanders pale), 170

Hear it, O Thyrsis, still our tree is there! — Ah, vain! These English fields, this upland
 dim,

These brambles pale with mist engar-landed,

That lone, sky-pointing tree, are not for
 him;

To a boon southern country he is fled, 175

And now in happier air,

Wandering with the great Mother's train
 divine

(And purer or more subtle soul than thee,
 I trow, the mighty Mother doth not see)

Within a folding of the Apennine, 180

Thou hearest the immortal chants of old! —
 Putting his sickle to the perilous grain

In the hot cornfield of the Phrygian king,
 For thee the Lityrses-song again

Young Daphnis with his silver voice doth sing; 185

Sings his Sicilian fold,

His sheep, his hapless love, his blinded
 eyes —

And how a call celestial round him rang,
 And heavenward from the fountain-
 brink he sprang,

And all the marvel of the golden skies. 190

There thou art gone, and me thou leavest here
 Sole in these fields! yet will I not despair.

Despair I will not, while I yet descry

'Neath the mild canopy of English air

That lonely tree against the western sky

See note on The Youth of Nature, line 77, page 457. 183 Phrygian king, Lityrses, who made strangers contest with him in reaping grain. If he defeated them he put them to death. The Sicilian shepherd Daphnis (line 185), son of Hermes (messenger of the gods), engaged in such a contest in order to release his mistress, who was in the power of the king. Hercules reaped the grain for Daphnis and killed Lityrses. The Lityrses-song connected with the tradition used to be sung by Greek grain reapers. Another tradition represented Daphnis as having been blinded by a nymph whose love he slighted. His father raised Daphnis to heaven and caused a fountain to spring up in the place from which he ascended

Still, still these slopes, 'tis clear, 196
 Our gypsy-scholar haunts, outliving thee!
 Fields where soft sheep from cages pull
 the hay,

Woods with anemones in flower till May,
 Know him a wanderer still; then why not
 me? 200

A fugitive and gracious light he seeks,
 Shy to illumine; and I seek it too.

This does not come with houses or with
 gold,

With place, with honor, and a flattering crew;

'Tis not in the world's market bought and sold — 205

But the smooth-slipping weeks

Drop by, and leave its seeker still untired;
 Out of the heed of mortals he is gone,

He wends unfollowed, he must house
 alone;

Yet on he fares, by his own heart inspired

Thou too, O Thyrsis, on like quest wast
 bound; 211

Thou wanderedst with me for a little hour!
 Men gave thee nothing, but this happy
 quest,

If men esteemed thee feeble, gave thee
 power,
 If men procured thee trouble, gave thee
 rest 215

And this rude Cumner ground,

Its fir-topped Hurst, its farms, its quiet
 fields,

Here cam'st thou in thy jocund youthful
 time,

Here was thine height of strength, thy golden prime! 219

And still the haunt beloved a virtue yields.

What though the music of thy rustic flute
 Kept not for long its happy, country tone;
 Lost it too soon, and learned a stormy note

Of men contention-tossed, of men who groan,

Which tasked thy pipe too sore, and tired thy throat — 225

It failed, and thou wast mute!

Yet hadst thou alway visions of our light,
 And long with men of care thou couldst
 not stay,

And soon thy foot resumed its wandering
 way,

Left human haunt, and on alone till
 night. 230

 heart-wearying roar,
 Let in thy voice a whisper often come,

SAINT BRANDAN

Saint Brandan sails the northern main;
 The brotherhoods of saints are glad.
 He greets them once, he sails again;
 So late! — such storms! — The Saint is mad!

He heard, across the howling seas, 5
 Chime convent-bells on wintry nights;
 He saw, on spray-swept Hebrides,
 Twinkle the monastery-lights.

But north, still north, Saint Brandan steered —
 And now no bells, no convents more! 10
 The hurtling Polar lights are neared,
 The sea without a human shore.

At last — (it was the Christmas night;
 Stars shone after a day of storm) —
 He sees float past an iceberg white, 15
 And on it — Christ! — a living form.

That furtive mien, that scowling eye,
 Of hair that red and tufted fell —
 It is — oh, where shall Brandan fly? —
 The traitor Judas, out of hell! 20

Palsied with terror, Brandan sate;
 The moon was bright, the iceberg near.
 He hears a voice sigh humbly, "Wait!
 By high permission I am here.

"One moment wait, thou holy man! 25
 On earth my crime, my death, they knew,
 My name is under all men's ban —
 Ah, tell them of my respite too!

"Tell them, one blessed Christmas-night
 (It was the first after I came, 30

Saint Brandan Saint Brandan was an Irish saint (c. 484-578) who, according to medieval tradition, went on a voyage across the Atlantic to the "Promised Land of the Saints". The legend is found in many languages.

Breathing self-murder, frenzy, spite,
 To rue my guilt in endless flame) —

"I felt, as I in torment lay
 'Mid the souls plagued by heavenly power,
 An angel touch mine arm, and say, 35
Go hence and cool thyself an hour!

"Ah, whence this mercy, Lord?" I said.
*The Leper recollect, said he,
 Who asked the passers-by for aid,
 In Joppa, and thy charity. 40*

"Then I remembered how I went,
 In Joppa, through the public street,
 One morn when the sirocco spent
 Its storms of dust with burning heat;

"And in the street a leper sate, 45
 Shivering with fever, naked, old;
 Sand raked his sores from heel to pate,
 The hot wind fevered him five-fold.

"He gazed upon me as I passed,
 And murmured: Help me, or I die! 50
 To the poor wretch my cloak I cast, Saw him look eased, and hurried by.

"Oh, Brandan, think what grace divine,
 What blessing must full goodness shower,
 When fragment of it small, like mine, 55
 Hath such inestimable power!

"Well-fed, well-clothed, well-friended, I Did that chance act of good, that one!
 Then went my way to kill and lie —
 Forgot my good as soon as done. 60

"That germ of kindness, in the womb
 Of mercy caught, did not expire,
 Outlives my guilt, outlives my doom,
 And friends me in the pit of fire

"Once every year, when carols wake, 65
 On earth, the Christmas-night's repose,
 Arising from the sinners' lake,
 I journey to these healing snows.

"I stanch with ice my burning breast,
 With silence balm my whirling brain. 70
 O Brandan! to this hour of rest
 That Joppa leper's ease was pain." —

Tears started to Saint Brandan's eyes;
 He bowed his head, he breathed a prayer —
 Then looked, and lo, the frosty skies! 75
 The iceberg, and no Judas there! (1867) f

WORLDLY PLACE

Even in a palace, life may be led well!
 So spake the imperial sage, purest of men,
 Marcus Aurelius. But the stifling den
 Of common life, where, crowded up pell-mell,
 Our freedom for a little bread we sell,
 And drudge under some foolish master's ken
 Who rates us if we peer outside our pen —
 Matched with a palace, is not this a hell?
Even in a palace! On his truth sincere,
 Who spoke these words, no shadow ever
 came; 10

And when my ill-schooled spirit is aflame
 Some nobler, ampler stage of life to win,
 I'll stop, and say, "There were no succor here!
 The aids to noble life are all within." (1867)

EAST LONDON

'Twas August, and the fierce sun overhead
 Smote on the squalid streets of Bethnal Green,
 And the pale weaver, through his windows
 seen
 In Spitalfields, looked thrice dispirited.
 I met a preacher there I knew, and said: 5
 "Ill and o'erworked, how fare you in this scene?" —

"Bravely!" said he, "for I of late have been Much cheered with thoughts of Christ, the living bread."

O human soul! as long as thou canst so
 Set up a mark of everlasting light, 10
 Above the howling senses' ebb and flow,
 To cheer thee, and to right thee if thou
 roam —

Not with lost toil thou laborest through the
 night!

Thou mak'st the heaven thou hop'st indeed
 thy home. (1867)

WEST LONDON

Crouched on the pavement, close by Belgrave
 Square,

A tramp I saw, ill, moody, and tongue-tied.
 A babe was in her arms, and at her side
 A girl; their clothes were rags, their feet were
 bare.

Some laboring men, whose work lay somewhere there, 5

 emperor (161-180 A.D.) and philosopher, author of Meditations, a book highly valued by Arnold. Cf. Meditations, 5, to live well and happy. But thou mayest live at the Court, there then also mayest thou live well and happy."

 tricts of London. 4 Spitalfields. This is the famous district of silk-weavers, it has been the scene of numerous riots.

 of members of the nobility and of distinguished foreigners.

Passed opposite; she touched her girl, who hied

Across, and begged, and came back satisfied
 The rich she had let pass with frozen stare Thought I: "Above her state this spirit
 towers;

She will not ask of aliens, but of friends, 10
 Of sharers in a common human fate.

She turns from that cold succor, which attends
 The unknown little from the unknowing great,
 And points us to a better time than ours" (1867)

THE BETTER PART

Long fed on boundless hopes, O race of man,
 How angrily thou spurn'st all simpler fare!
 "Christ," someone says, "was human as we are;

No judge eyes us from heaven, our sin to scan;

We live no more, when we have done our span" — 5

"Well, then, for Christ," thou answerest,
 "who can care?"

From sin, which heaven records not, why forbear?

Live we like brutes our life without a plan!"
 So answerest thou, but why not rather say:

"Hath man no second life? — *Pitch this one
 high!*" 10

Sits there no judge in heaven, our sin to see?

More strictly, then, the inward judge obey!

Was Christ a man like us? Ah! let us try

If we then, too, can be such men as he!" (1867)

IMMORTALITY

Foiled by our fellow-men, depressed, outworn,
 We leave the brutal world to take its way,

And, Patience! in another life, we say,

The world shall be thrust down, and we up-borne.

And will not, then, the immortal armies scorn
 The world's poor, routed leavings? or will
 they, 6

Who failed under the heat of this life's day,
 Support the fervors of the heavenly morn?

No, no! the energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun; 10

And he who flagged not in the earthly strife,
 From strength to strength advancing — only
 he,

His soul well-knit, and all his battles won,
 Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD WITH THE KID

He saves the sheep, the goats he doth not save
So rang Tertullian's sentence, on the side
Of that unpitying Phrygian sect which cried,
"Him can no fount of fresh forgiveness lave,
Who sins, once washed by the baptismal
wave" — 5

So spake the fierce Tertullian. But she sighed,
The infant Church! of love she felt the tide Stream on her from her Lord's yet recent
grave.

And then she smiled, and in the Catacombs,
With eye suffused but heart inspired true, 10
On those walls subterranean, where she hid
Her head 'mid ignominy, death, and tombs,
She her Good Shepherd's hasty image drew —
And on his shoulders, not a lamb, a kid

SIMPLO
AUSTERITY OF POETRY

That son of Italy who tried to blow,
Ere Dante came, the trump of sacred song,
In his light youth amid a festal throng
Sate with his bride to see a public show.
Fair was the bride, and on her front did glow 5
Youth like a star, and what to youth belong —
Gay raiment, sparkling gauds, elation strong
A prop gave way! crash fell a platform! lo,
'Mid struggling sufferers, hurt to death, she
lay!

Shuddering, they drew her garments off —
and found 10

A robe of sackcloth next the smooth, white
skin.

Such, poets, is your bride, the Muse! young,
gay,

Radiant, adorned outside, a hidden ground
Of thought and of austerity within. (1867)

DOVER BEACH

The sea is calm tonight,
The tide is full, the moon lies fair
Upon the straits, — on the French coast the
light

Gleams and is gone; the cliffs of England
stand, 4

Glimmering and vast, out in the tranquil bay
Come to the window, sweet is the night-air!

Austerity of Poetry 1 son of Italy, Giacomone di Todi, a poet of the 13th century. Upon the death of his bride, as related in the poem, he became a Franciscan monk

Only, from the long line of spray
Where the sea meets the moon-blanch'd land,
Listen! you hear the grating roar
Of pebbles which the waves draw back, and fling, 10

At their return, up the high strand,
Begin, and cease, and then again begin,
With tremulous cadence slow, and bring
The eternal note of sadness in.

Sophocles long ago 15
Heard it on the Ægean, and it brought Into his mind the turbid ebb and flow
Of human misery; we Find also in the sound a thought,
Hearing it by this distant northern sea 20

The Sea of Faith

Was once, too, at the full, and round earth's shore

Lay like the folds of a bright girdle furled
But now I only hear
Its melancholy, long, withdrawing roar, 25
Retreating, to the breath
Of the night-wind, down the vast edges drear
And naked shingles of the world

Ah, love, let us be true
To one another! for the world, which seems
To lie before us like a land of dreams, 31
So various, so beautiful, so new,
Hath really neither joy, nor love, nor light,
Nor certitude, nor peace, nor help for pain,
And we are here as on a darkling plain 35 Swept with confused alarms of struggle and
flight,
Where ignorant armies clash by night (1867)

PALLADIUM

Set where the upper streams of Simois flow
Was the Palladium, high 'mid rock and wood
And Hector was in Ilium, far below,
And fought, and saw it not — but there it
stood!

It stood, and sun and moonshine rained their
light 5
On the pure columns of its glen-built hall

Palladium The Palladium was a statue of Pallas Athena, goddess of wisdom, which was supposed to have fallen from heaven when the city of Troy (Ilium, line 3) was being built, and upon which the safety of the city depended. The statue was stolen by the Greeks, and the city then fell

Backward and forward rolled the waves of
fight
Round Troy — but while this stood, Troy could not fall.

So, in its lovely moonlight, lives the soul.
Mountains surround it, and sweet virgin air,
Cold plashing, past it, crystal waters roll, 11
We visit it by moments, ah, too rare!

We shall renew the battle in the plain
Tomorrow; — red with blood will Xanthus be;
Hector and Ajax will be there again, 15
Helen will come upon the wall to see.

Then we shall rust in shade, or shine in strife,
And fluctuate 'twixt blind hopes and blind
despairs,
And fancy that we put forth all our life, 19
And never know how with the soul it fares

Still doth the soul, from its lone fastness high,
Upon our life a ruling effluence send.
And when it fails, fight as we will, we die;
And while it lasts, we cannot wholly end.
(1867)

YOUTH AND CALM

'Tis death! and peace, indeed, is here,
And ease from shame, and rest from fear.
There's nothing can dismarble now
The smoothness of that limpid brow.
But is a calm like this, in truth, 5
The crowning end of life and youth,
And when this boon rewards the dead,
Are all debts paid, has all been said?
And is the heart of youth so light,
Its step so firm, its eyes so bright, 10
Because on its hot brow there blows
A wind of promise and repose
From the far grave, to which it goes;
Because it hath the hope to come,
One day, to harbor in the tomb? 15
Ah no, the bliss youth dreams is one
For daylight, for the cheerful sun,
For feeling nerves and living breath —
Youth dreams a bliss on this side death.
It dreams a rest, if not more deep, 20
More grateful than this marble sleep;
It hears a voice within it tell:
Calm's not life's crown, though calm is well.
'Tis all perhaps which man acquires,
But 'tis not what our youth desires. 25

GROWING OLD

What is it to grow old?
Is it to lose the glory of the form,
The luster of the eye?
Is it for beauty to forego her wreath?
—Yes, but not this alone 5

Is it to feel our strength —
Not our bloom only, but our strength — decay?
Is it to feel each limb
Grow stiffer, every function less exact,
Each nerve more loosely strung? 10

Yes, this, and more; but not,
Ah, 'tis not what in youth we dreamed
'twould be!
'Tis not to have our life
Mellowed and softened as with sunset-glow,
A golden day's decline. 15

'Tis not to see the world
As from a height, with rapt prophetic eyes,
And heart profoundly stirred,
And weep, and feel the fullness of the past,
The years that are no more. 20

It is to spend long days
And not once feel that we were ever young,
It is to add, immured
In the hot prison of the present, month
To month with weary pain. 25

It is to suffer this,
And feel but half, and feebly, what we feel.
Deep in our hidden heart
Festers the dull remembrance of a change,
But no emotion — none. 30

It is — last stage of all —
When we are frozen up within, and quite
The phantom of ourselves,
To hear the world applaud the hollow ghost
Which blamed the living man. 35

THE PROGRESS OF POESY

A VARIATION

Youth rambles on life's arid mount,
And strikes the rock, and finds the vein,
And brings the water from the fount,
The fount which shall not flow again.

Growing Old Cf. Browning's Rabbi Ben Ezra, page 280
The Progress of Poesy 2 strikes the rock, a reference to Moses, who secured water for the Israelites by smiting a rock on Mt. Horeb. (See Exodus, 17 1-6)

The man mature with labor chops 5
For the bright stream a channel grand,
And sees not that the sacred drops
Ran off and vanished out of hand.

And then the old man totters nigh,
And feebly rakes among the stones 10
The mount is mute, the channel dry,
And down he lays his weary bones. (1867)

PERSISTENCY OF POETRY

Though the Muse be gone away,
Though she move not earth today,
Souls, erewhile who caught her word,
Ah! still harp on what they heard. (1867)

A CAUTION TO POETS

What poets feel not, when they make,
A pleasure in creating,
The world, in its turn, will not take Pleasure in contemplating. (1867)

THE LAST WORD

Creep into thy narrow bed,
Creep, and let no more be said!
Vain thy onset! all stands fast.
Thou thyself must break at last.

Let the long contention cease! 5
Geese are swans, and swans are geese.
Let them have it how they will!
Thou art tired, best be still

They out-talked thee, hissed thee, tore thee? 10
Better men fared thus before thee,
Fired their ringing shot and passed,
Hotly charged — and sank at last.

Charge once more, then, and be dumb!
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall, 15
Find thy body by the wall! (1867)

PIS-ALLER

“Man is blind because of sin;
Revelation makes him sure.
Without that, who looks within,
Looks in vain, for all’s obscure.”

The Last Word 16 body wall, where it fell in attacking the forts of folly
Pis-Aller The title means A Last Resource

Nay, look closer into man! 5
Tell me, can you find indeed
Nothing sure, no moral plan
Clear prescribed, without your creed?

“No, I nothing can perceive!
Without that, all’s dark for men. 10
That, or nothing, I believe.” —
For God’s sake, believe it then! (1867)

A WISH

I ask not that my bed of death
From bands of greedy heirs be free;
For these besiege the latest breath
Of fortune’s favored sons, not me.

I ask not each kind soul to keep 5
Tearless, when of my death he hears.
Let those who will, if any, weep!
There are worse plagues on earth than tears.

I ask but that my death may find
The freedom to my life denied, 10
Ask but the folly of mankind
Then, then at last, to quit my side

Spare me the whispering, crowded room,
The friends who come, and gape, and go,
The ceremonious air of gloom — 15
All which makes death a hideous show!

Nor bring, to see me cease to live,
Some doctor full of phrase and fame,
To shake his sapient head, and give
The ill he cannot cure a name. 20

Nor fetch, to take the accustomed toll
Of the poor sinner bound for death,
His brother-doctor of the soul,
To canvass with official breath

The future and its viewless things — 25
That undiscovered mystery
Which one who feels death’s winnowing wings
Must needs read clearer, sure, than he!

Bring none of these, but let me be,
While all around in silence hes, 30
Moved to the window near, and see
Once more, before my dying eyes,

Bathed in the sacred dews of morn
The wide aerial landscape spread —
The world which was ere I was born, 35
The world which lasts when I am dead;

Which never was the friend of one,
Nor promised love it could not give,
But lit for all its generous sun,
And lived itself, and made us live. 40

There let me gaze, till I become
In soul, with what I gaze on, wed!
To feel the universe my home,
To have before my mind — instead

Of the sick room, the mortal strife, 45
The turmoil for a little breath —
The pure eternal course of life,
Not human combatings with death!

Thus feeling, gazing, might I grow
Composed, refreshed, ennobled, clear; 50
Then willing let my spirit go
To work or wait elsewhere or here! (1867)

BACCHANALIA;

OR, THE NEW AGE

I

The evening comes, the fields are still.
The tinkle of the thirsty rill,
Unheard all day, ascends again;
Deserted is the half-mown plain,
Silent the swaths! the ringing wain, 5
The mower's cry, the dog's alarms,
All housed within the sleeping farms!
The business of the day is done,
The last-left haymaker is gone.
And from the thyme upon the height, 10
And from the elder-blossom white
And pale dog-roses in the hedge,
And from the mint-plant in the sedge,
In puffs of balm the night-air blows
The perfume which the day forgoes 15
And on the pure horizon far,
See, pulsing with the first-born star,
The liquid sky above the hill!
The evening comes, the fields are still
Loitering and leaping, 20
With saunter, with bounds —
Flickering and circling
In files and in rounds —
Gayly their pine-staff green
Tossing in air, 25
Loose o'er their shoulders white
Showering their hair —
See! the wild Mænads
Break from the wood,
Youth and Iacchus 30
Maddening their blood
See! through the quiet land
Rioting they pass —
Fling the fresh heaps about,
Trample the grass, 35

Bacchanalia The title indicates a festival or revelry of Bacchus, god of wine

5 ringing wain, wagon with bells 28 Mænads, priestesses of Bacchus The name is derived from a Greek word meaning to be frenzied 30 Iacchus, another name for Bacchus

Tear from the rifled hedge
Garlands, their prize;
Fill with their sports the field,
Fill with their cries.

Shepherd, what ails thee, then? 40
Shepherd, why mute?
Forth with thy joyous song!
Forth with thy flute!
Tempt not the revel blithe?
Lure not their cries? 45
Glow not their shoulders smooth?
Melt not their eyes?
Is not, on cheeks like those,
Lovely the flush?
—Ah, so the quiet was! 50
So was the hush!

2

The epoch ends, the world is still
The age has talked and worked its fill —
The famous orators have shone,
The famous poets sung and gone, 55
The famous men of war have fought,
The famous speculators thought,
The famous players, sculptors, wrought.
The famous painters filled their wall,
The famous critics judged it all. 60
The combatants are parted now —
Uphung the spear, unbent the bow,
The puissant crowned, the weak laid low.
And in the after-silence sweet,
Now strifes are hushed, our ears doth meet,
Ascending pure, the bell-like fame 66
Of this or that down-trodden name,
Delicate spirits, pushed away
In the hot press of the noon-day.
And o'er the plain, where the dead age 70
Did its now silent warfare wage —
O'er that wide plain, now wrapped in gloom,
Where many a splendor finds its tomb,
Many spent fames and fallen might —
The one or two immortal lights 75
Rise slowly up into the sky
To shine there everlastingly,
Like stars over the bounding hill
The epoch ends, the world is still.

Thundering and bursting 80
In torrents, in waves —
Caroling and shouting
Over tombs, amid graves —
See! on the cumbered plain
Clearing a stage, 85
Scattering the past about,
Comes the new age.
Bards make new poems,
Thinkers new schools,

RUGBY CHAPEL

NOVEMBER, 1857

Coldly, sadly descends The autumn evening. The field Strewn with its dank yellow drifts Of withered leaves, and the elms, Fade into dimness apace, Silent — hardly a shout From a few boys late at their play! The lights come out in the street, In the schoolroom windows; — but cold, Solemn, unlighted, austere, Through the gathering darkness, arise The chapel-walls, in whose bound Thou, my father! art laid.	5 10	Sternly represseth the bad! Still, like a trumpet, dost rouse Those who with half-open eyes Tread the border-land dim 'Twixt vice and virtue; reviv'st, Succorest! — this was thy work, This was thy life upon earth.	55
There thou dost lie, in the gloom Of the autumn evening. But ah! That word, gloom , to my mind Brings thee back, in the light	15	What is the course of the life Of mortal men on the earth? — Most men eddy about Here and there — eat and drink, Chatter and love and hate, Gather and squander, are raised Aloft, are hurled in the dust, Striving blindly, achieving Nothing; and then they die — Perish; — and no one asks Who or what they have been, More than he asks what waves, In the moonlit solitudes mild Of the midmost Ocean, have swelled, Foamed for a moment, and gone.	60 65 70

Rugby Chapel This poem was written in memory of the poet's father, Dr. Thomas Arnold, the famous headmaster of Rugby School. He died suddenly in June, 1842, and was buried in the College Chapel

And there are some, whom a thirst
 Ardent, unquenchable, fires,
 Not with the crowd to be spent,
 Not without aim to go round
 In an eddy of purposeless dust,
 Effort unmeaning and vain.
 Ah, yes! some of us strive
 Not without action to die
 Fruitless, but something to snatch
 From dull oblivion, nor all
 Glut the devouring grave!
 We, we have chosen our path —
 Path to a clear-purposed goal,
 Path of advance! — but it leads
 A long, steep journey, through sunk
 Gorges, o'er mountains in snow
 Cheerful, with friends, we set forth —
 Then, on the height, comes the storm.
 Thunder crashes from rock
 To rock, the cataracts reply,
 Lightnings dazzle our eyes
 Roaring torrents have breached
 The track, the stream-bed descends
 In the place where the wayfarer once
 Planted his footstep — the spray
 Boils o'er its borders! aloft
 The unseen snow-beds dislodge
 Their hanging run; alas,
 Havoc is made in our train!
 Friends, who set forth at our side,
 Falter, are lost in the storm
 We, we only are left!
 With frowning foreheads, with lips
 Sternly compressed, we strain on,
 On — and at nightfall at last
 Come to the end of our way,
 To the lonely inn 'mid the rocks,
 Where the gaunt and taciturn host
 Stands on the threshold, the wind
 Shaking his thin white hairs —
 Holds his lantern to scan
 Our storm-beat figures, and asks:
 Whom in our party we bring?
 Whom we have left in the snow?

Sadly we answer: We bring
 Only ourselves! we lost
 Sight of the rest in the storm
 Hardly ourselves we fought through,
 Stripped, without friends, as we are Friends, companions, and train,
 The avalanche swept from our side.

But thou would'st not alone
 Be saved, my father! alone
 Conquer and come to thy goal,
 Leaving the rest in the wild.
 We were weary, and we

Fearful, and we in our march
 Fain to drop down and to die.
 Still thou turnedst, and still Beckonedst the trembler, and still Gavest the weary thy hand

If, in the paths of the world,
 Stones might have wounded thy feet,
 Toil or dejection have tried
 Thy spirit, of that we saw Nothing — to us thou wast still Cheerful, and helpful, and firm!
 Therefore to thee it was given
 Many to save with thyself,
 And, at the end of thy day,
 O faithful shepherd! to come,
 Bringing thy sheep in thy hand.

And through thee I believe
 In the noble and great who are gone;
 Pure souls honored and blessed
 By former ages, who else —
 Such, so soulless, so poor,
 Is the race of men whom I see —
 Seemed but a dream of the heart,
 Seemed but a cry of desire.

Yes! I believe that there lived
 Others like thee in the past,
 Not like the men of the crowd
 Who all round me today
 Bluster or cringe, and make life
 Hideous, and arid, and vile,
 But souls tempered with fire,
 Fervent, heroic, and good,
 Helpers and friends of mankind.

Servants of God! — or sons
 Shall I not call you? because
 Not as servants ye knew
 Your Father's innermost mind,
 His, who unwillingly sees
 One of his little ones lost —
 Yours is the praise, if mankind
 Hath not as yet in its march
 Fainted, and fallen, and died!

See! In the rocks of the world
 Marches the host of mankind,
 A feeble, wavering line.
 Where are they tending? — A God
 Marshaled them, gave them their goal.
 Ah, but the way is so long!
 Years they have been in the wild!
 Sore thirst plagues them, the rocks,
 Rising all round, overawe,
 Factions divide them, their host
 Threatens to break, to dissolve

148 who else, etc., who, but for what I have known of thee, would have seemed a dream 162 Servants sons.
 Cf. John, 1 12 — "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God"

—Ah, keep, keep them combined!
Else, of the myriads who fill
That army, not one shall arrive;
Sole they shall stray; in the rocks
Stagger forever in vain,
Die one by one in the waste.

185

Then, in such hour of need
Of your fainting, dispirited race,
Ye, like angels, appear,
Radiant with ardor divine!
Beacons of hope, ye appear!
Languor is not in your heart,
Weakness is not in your word,
Weariness not on your brow.
Ye alight in our van! at your voice,
Panic, despair, flee away
Ye move through the ranks, recall
The stragglers, refresh the outworn,
Praise, re-inspire the brave!
Order, courage, return
Eyes rekindling, and prayers,
Follow your steps as ye go
Ye fill up the gaps in our files,
Strengthen the wavering line,
Stablish, continue our march,
On, to the bound of the waste,
On, to the City of God.

OBERMANN ONCE MORE

Savez-vous quelque bien qui console du regret d'un monde? — OBERMANN.

Ghlon? — Ah, twenty years, it cuts
All meaning from a name!
White houses prank where once were huts.
Ghlon, but not the same!

And yet I know not! All unchanged
The turf, the pines, the sky!
The hills in their old order ranged;
The lake, with Chillon by!

5

And, 'neath those chestnut-trees, where stiff
And stony mounts the way,
The crackling husk-heaps burn, as if I left them yesterday!

10

Across the valley, on that slope,
The huts of Avant shine!
Its pines, under their branches, ope
Ways for the pasturing kine.

15

190 Ye, the servants of God of line 162
Obermann Once More See introductory note to Stanzas in Memory of the Author of "Obermann," page 453 This poem presents a review of the world's spiritual history beginning with the Christian era The quotation from Obermann may be translated thus Do you know anything that consoles regret for a lost world?

1 Ghlon, a mountain village above Lake Geneva, Switzerland
3 prank, adorn 8 Chillon, the Castle of Chillon
14 Avant, a village opposite Ghlon

Full-foaming milk-pails, Alpine fare,
Sweet heaps of fresh-cut grass,
Invite to rest the traveler there
Before he climb the pass —

20

The gentian-flowered pass, its crown
With yellow spires aflame;
Whence drops the path to Allière down,
And walls where Byron came,

By their green river, who doth change
His birth-name just below;
Orchard, and croft, and full-stored grange
Nursed by his pastoral flow.

25

But stop! — to fetch back thoughts that stray
Beyond this gracious bound,
The cone of Jaman, pale and gray,
See, in the blue profound!

30

Ah, Jaman! delicately tall
Above his sun-warmed firs —
What thoughts to me his rocks recall,
What memories he stirs!

35

And who but thou must be, in truth,
Obermann! with me here?
Thou master of my wandering youth,
But left this many a year!

40

Yes, I forget the world's work wrought,
Its warfare waged with pain;
An eremite with thee, in thought
Once more I slip my chain,

And to thy mountain-chalet come,
And lie beside its door,
And hear the wild bee's Alpine hum,
And thy sad, tranquil lore!

45

Again I feel the words inspire
Their mournful calm, serene,
Yet tinged with infinite desire
For all that might have been —

50

The harmony from which man swerved
Made his life's rule once more!
The universal order served,
Earth happier than before!

55

—While thus I mused, night gently ran Down over hill and wood.
Then, still and sudden, Obermann
On the grass near me stood.

60

20 the pass, the Col de Jaman 23 Allière, a district at the foot of the mountain 24 walls . . . came, Montbovon, a town visited by Byron 25-26 change birth-name, the River Saane, which becomes the Savine below Montbovon 27 croft, a small piece of enclosed ground 31 Jaman, a peak that rises above the pass 43. eremite, hermit

Those pensive features well I knew,
On my mind, years before,
Imaged so oft! imaged so true!
—A shepherd's garb he wore,

A mountain-flower was in his hand, 65
A book was in his breast.
Bent on my face, with gaze which scanned
My soul, his eyes did rest.

"And is it thou," he cried, "so long 70
Held by the world which we Loved not, who turnest from the throng
Back to thy youth and me?"

"And from thy world, with heart oppress'd,
Chooseth thou now to turn? —
Ah me! we anchorites read things best, 75
Clearest their course discern!

"Thou fledst me when the ungenial earth,
Man's work-place, lay in gloom.
Return'st thou in her hour of birth,
Of hopes and hearts in bloom? 80

"Perceiv'st thou not the change of day?
Ah! Carry back thy ken,
What, some two thousand years! Survey
The world as it was then!

"Like ours it looked in outward air. 85
Its head was clear and true,
Sumptuous its clothing, rich its fare,
No pause its action knew;

"Stout was its arm, each thew and bone
Seemed puissant and alive —
But, ah! its heart, its heart was stone,
And so it could not thrive! 90

"On that hard Pagan world disgust
And secret loathing fell
Deep weariness and sated lust
Made human life a hell. 95

"In his cool hall, with haggard eyes,
The Roman noble lay;
He drove abroad, in furious guise,
Along the Appian way. 100

"He made a feast, drank fierce and fast,
And crowned his hair with flowers —
No easier nor no quicker passed
The impracticable hours.

"The brooding East with awe beheld 105
Her impious younger world.

The Roman tempest swelled and swelled,
And on her head was hurled.

"The East bowed low before the blast
In patient, deep disdain, 110
She let the legions thunder past,
And plunged in thought again

"So well she mused, a morning broke
Across her spirit gray;
A conquering, new-born joy awoke, 115
And filled her life with day.

"'Poor world,' she cried, 'so deep accurst,
That runn'st from pole to pole
To seek a draft to slake thy thirst —
Go, seek it in thy soul!' 120

"She heard it, the victorious West,
In crown and sword arrayed!
She felt the void which mined her breast,
She shivered and obeyed.

"She veiled her eagles, snapped her sword, 125
And laid her scepter down;
Her stately purple she abhorred,
And her imperial crown.

"She broke her flutes, she stopped her sports,
Her artists could not please, 130
She tore her books, she shut her courts,
She fled her palaces;

"Lust of the eye and pride of life
She left it all behind,
And hurried, torn with inward strife, 135
The wilderness to find.

"Tears washed the trouble from her face!
She changed into a child!
'Mid weeds and wrecks she stood — a place
Of ruin — but she smiled! 140

"Oh, had I lived in that great day,
How had its glory new Filled earth and heaven, and caught away
My ravished spirit too!

"No thoughts that to the world belong 145
Had stood against the wave
Of love which set so deep and strong
From Christ's then open grave.

"No cloister-floor of humid stone
Had been too cold for me. 150
For me no Eastern desert lone
Had been too far to flee.

"No lonely life had passed too slow,
When I could hourly scan

Upon his Cross, with head sunk low, That nailed, thorn-crown'd Man!	155	"— Down came the storm! O'er France it passed In sheets of scathing fire, All Europe felt that fiery blast, And shook as it rushed by her.
"Could see the Mother with her Child Whose tender winning arts Have to his little arms beguiled So many wounded hearts!	160	"Down came the storm! In ruins fell The worn-out world we knew. It passed, that elemental swell! Again appeared the blue;	205
"And centuries came and ran their course, And unspent all that time Still, still went forth that Child's dear force, And still was at its prime.		"The sun shone in the new-washed sky, And what from heaven saw he? Blocks of the past, like icebergs high, Float on a rolling sea!	210
"Aye, ages long endured his span Of life — 'tis true received — That gracious Child, that thorn-crown'd Man! — He lived while we believed.	165	"Upon them plies the race of man All it before endeavored, 'Ye live,' I cried, 'ye work and plan, And know not ye are severed!	215

"Now he is dead! Far hence he lies In the lorn Syrian town; And on his grave, with shining eyes, The Syrian stars look down.	175	" "That glow of central fire is done Which with its fusing flame Knit all your parts, and kept you one — But ye, ye are the same!
"In vain men still, with hoping new, Regard his death-place dumb, And say the stone is not yet to, And wait for words to come.	180	" "The past, its mask of union on, Had ceased to live and thrive. The past, its mask of union gone, Say, is it more alive?	225

"Unduped of fancy, henceforth man Must labor! — must resign His all too human creeds, and scan Simply the way divine!	185	" "The millions suffer still, and grieve, And what can helpers heal With old-world cures men half believe For woes they wholly feel?	235
"But slow that tide of common thought, Which bathed our life, retired; Slow, slow the old world wore to naught, And pulse by pulse expired.	190	" "And yet men have such need of joy! But joy whose grounds are true, And joy that should all hearts employ As when the past was new	240
"Its frame yet stood without a breach When blood and warmth were fled; And still it spake its wonted speech — But every word was dead	195	" "Ah, not the emotion of that past, Its common hope, were vain! Some new such hope must dawn at last, Or man must toss in pain.

"Then to the wilderness I fled. — There among Alpine snows And pastoral huts I hid my head, And sought and found repose.	250	"With hope extinct and brow composed I marked the present die; Its term of life was nearly closed, Yet it had more than I.	300
"It was not yet the appointed hour. Sad, patient, and resigned, I watched the crocus fade and flower, I felt the sun and wind.	255	"But thou, though to the world's new hour Thou come with aspect marred, Shorn of the joy, the bloom, the power Which best befits its bard —

"O thou, who, ere thy flying span Was past of cheerful youth, Didst find the solitary man And love his cheerless truth —	280	— The vision ended. I awoke As out of sleep, and no Voice moved — only the torrent broke The silence, far below.	325
"Despair not thou as I despaired, Nor be cold gloom thy prison! Forward the gracious hours have fared, And see! the sun is risen!		Soft darkness on the turf did lie. Solemn, o'er hut and wood, In the yet star-sown nightly sky, The peak of Jaman stood.	330
"He breaks the winter of the past; A green, new earth appears. Millions, whose life in ice lay fast, Have thoughts, and smiles, and tears	285	Still in my soul the voice I heard Of Obermann! — away I turned; by some vague impulse stirred, Along the rocks of Naye	335
"What though there still need effort, strife? Though much be still unwon? Yet warm it mounts, the hour of life! Death's frozen hour is done!	290	Past Sonchaud's piny flanks I gaze And the blanched summit bare

Of Malatrait, to where in haze The Valais opens fair,	340	Hark! through the alley resounds Mocking laughter! A film Creeps o'er the sunshine; a breeze Ruffles the warm afternoon, Saddens my soul with its chill. Gibing of spirits in scorn Shakes every leaf of the grove, Mars the benignant repose Of this amiable home of the dead.	40 45
And the domed Velan, with his snows, Behind the upcrowding hills, Doth all the heavenly opening close Which the Rhone's murmur fills —
And glorious there, without a sound, Across the glimmering lake, High in the Valais-depth profound, I saw the morning break.	345 (1867)

HEINE'S GRAVE

" Henri Heine " — 'tis here! That black tombstone, the name Carved there — no more! and the smooth Swarded alleys, the limes Touched with yellow by hot Summer, but under them still, In September's bright afternoon, Shadow, and verdure, and cool. Trim Montmartre! the faint Murmur of Paris outside; Crisp everlasting-flowers, Yellow and black, on the graves.	5 10	Bitter spirits, ye claim Heine? — Alas, he is yours! Only a moment I longed Here in the quiet to snatch From such mates the outworn Poet, and steep him in calm. Only a moment! I knew Whose he was who is here Buried — I knew he was yours! Ah, I knew that I saw Here no sepulcher built In the laureled rock, o'er the blue Naples bay, for a sweet Tender Virgil! no tomb On Ravenna sands, in the shade Of Ravenna pines, for a high Austere Dante! no grave By the Avon side, in the bright Stratford meadows, for thee, Shakespeare! loveliest of souls, Peerless in radiance, in joy.	50 55 60 65
Half blind, palsied, in pain, Hither to come, from the streets' Uproar, surely not loath Wast thou, Heine! — to lie Quiet, to ask for closed Shutters, and darkened room, And cool drinks, and an eased Posture, and opium, no more, Hither to come, and to sleep Under the wings of Renown.	15 20	What, then, so harsh and malign, Heine! distills from thy life? Poisons the peace of thy grave?
Ah! not little, when pain Is most quelling, and man Easily quelled, and the fine Temper of genius so soon Thrills at each smart, is the praise, Not to have yielded to pain! No small boast, for a weak Son of mankind, to the earth Pinned by the thunder, to rear His bolt-scathed front to the stars; And, undaunted, retort 'Gainst thick-crashing, insane, Tyrannous tempests of bale, Arrowy lightnings of soul.	25 30 35	I chide with thee not, that thy sharp Upbraidings often assailed England, my country — for we, Heavy and sad, for her sons, Long since, deep in our hearts, Echo the blame of her foes. We, too, sigh that she flags; We, too, say that she now — Scarce comprehending the voice Of her greatest, golden-mouthed sons Of a former age any more — Stupidly travels her round Of mechanic business, and lets Slow die out of her life Glory, and genius, and joy.	70 75 80
		So thou arraign'st her, her foe; So we arraign her, her sons.	85

340. Valais, the Swiss canton on either side of the Rhone above Lake Geneva. 341. Velan, a high peak in the Alps. Heine's Grave. Heinrich Heine (1797-1856), the famous German poet, lived in Paris from 1831 to the end of his life. During his last eight years he suffered from a spinal disease that made him helpless. He was buried in the cemetery of Montmartre in Paris.

32. bolt-scathed, wounded by a thunderbolt.

57. laureled rock. Virgil was buried in a monument on the road from Naples. 60. Ravenna sands. Dante was buried at Ravenna. 63. Avon side. Shakespeare was buried in Stratford on the River Avon. 71. Upbraidings. Heine visited England in 1827 and strongly disapproved of the commercial and religious life of the country.

Yes, we arraign her! but she,
The weary Titan, with deaf
Ears, and labor-dimmed eyes,
Regarding neither to right
Nor left, goes passively by,
Staggering on to her goal,
Bearing on shoulders immense,
Atlantean, the load,
Wellnigh not to be borne,
Of the too vast orb of her fate.

But was it thou — I think
Surely it was! — that bard
Unnamed, who, Goethe said,
Had every other gift, but wanted love;
Love, without which the tongue
Even of angels sounds amiss?

Charm is the glory which makes
Song of the poet divine;
Love is the fountain of charm
How without charm wilt thou draw,
Poet! the world to thy way?
Not by the lightnings of wit —
Not by the thunder of scorn!
These to the world, too, are given;
Wit it possesses, and scorn —
Charm is the poet's alone.
*Hollow and dull are the great,
And artists envious, and the mob profane.*
We know all this, we know!
Cam'st thou from heaven, O child
Of light! but this to declare?
Alas, to help us forget
Such barren knowledge awhile,
God gave the poet his song!

Therefore a secret unrest
Tortured thee, brilliant and bold!
Therefore triumph itself
Tasted amiss to thy soul.
Therefore, with blood of thy foes,
Trickled in silence thine own.
Therefore the victor's heart
Broke on the field of his fame.

Ah! as of old, from the pomp
Of Italian Milan, the fair
Flower of marble of white
Southern palaces — steps
Bordered by statues, and walks
Terraced, and orange-bowers
Heavy with fragrance — the blond
German Kaiser full oft

88 Titan The Titans were superhuman beings of great size who rebelled against the gods 94 Atlantean, so called from Atlas, the mythological giant who supported the world on his shoulders. 135-136. blond . . . Kaiser, probably Frederick Barbarossa (1123?-1190), Holy Roman Emperor, who was a German by birth He captured Milan in 1158 He is said to have had flowing yellow hair and a reddish beard

Longed himself back to the fields,
Rivers, and high-roofed towns
Of his native Germany; so,
So, how often! from hot
Paris drawing-rooms, and lamps
Blazing, and brilliant crowds,
Starred and jeweled, of men
Famous, of women the queens
Of dazzling converse — from fumes
Of praise, hot, heady fumes, to the poor brain
That mount, that madden — how oft Heine's spirit outworn
Longed itself out of the din,
Back to the tranquil, the cool
Far German home of his youth!

See! in the May afternoon,
O'er the fresh, short turf of the Hartz
A youth, with the foot of youth,
Heine! thou climbest again!
Up, through the tall dark firs
Warming their heads in the sun,
Checkering the grass with their shade —
Up, by the stream, with its huge
Moss-hung boulders, and thin
Musical water half-hid —
Up, o'er the rock-strewn slope,
With the sinking sun, and the air
Chill, and the shadows now
Long on the gray hillside —
To the stone-roofed hut at the top!

Or, yet later, in watch
On the roof of the Brocken-tower
Thou standest, gazing! — to see
The broad red sun, over field,
Forest, and city, and spire,
And mist-tracked stream of the wide,
Wide German land, going down
In a bank of vapors — again
Standest, at nightfall, alone!

Or, next morning, with limbs
Rested by slumber, and heart
Freshened and light with the May,
O'er the gracious spurs coming down
Of the Lower Hartz, among oaks,
And beechen coverts, and copse
Of hazels green in whose depth
Ilse, the fairy transformed,
In a thousand water-breaks light
Pours her petulant youth —
Climbing the rock which juts
O'er the valley, the dizzily perched
Rock — to its iron cross

153. Hartz, mountains in central Germany 168 Brocken-tower, in the Hartz Mountains. 183 Ilse, a river in the Hartz Mountains 184. water-breaks, ripples 188 iron cross, a cross erected on the granite peak Ilstenstein by Count Anton von Stolberg-Wernigerode in memory of his friends killed in the wars of 1813-15

Once more thou cling'st, to the Cross
Clingest! with smiles, with a sigh! 190

Goethe, too, had been there.
In the long-past winter he came
To the frozen Hartz, with his soul
Passionate, eager — his youth
All in ferment! — but he 195
Destined to work and to live
Left it, and thou, alas!
Only to laugh and to die

But something prompts me: Not thus
Take leave of Heine! not thus 200
Speak the last word at his grave!
Not in pity, and not
With half censure — with awe
Hail, as it passes from earth
Scattering lightnings, that soul! 205

The Spirit of the world,
Beholding the absurdity of men —
Their vaunts, their feats — let a sardonic
smile,
For one short moment, wander o'er his lips.
That smile was Heine! — for its earthly hour
The strange guest sparkled; now 'tis passed
away. 211

That was Heine! and we,
Myriads who live, who have lived,
What are we all, but a mood,
A single mood, of the life 215
Of the Spirit in whom we exist,
Who alone is all things in one?

Spirit, who fillest us all!
Spirit, who utterest in each
New-coming son of mankind 220
Such of thy thoughts as thou wilt!
O thou, one of whose moods,
Bitter and strange, was the life
Of Heine — his strange, alas,
His bitter life! — may a life 225
Other and milder be mine!
May'st thou a mood more serene,
Happier, have uttered in mine!
May'st thou the rapture of peace
Deep have embreathed at its core; 230
Made it a ray of thy thought,
Made it a beat of thy joy! (1867)

GEIST'S GRAVE

Four years! — and didst thou stay above
The ground, which hides thee now, but four?
And all that life, and all that love,
Were crowded, Geist! into no more?

Geist's Grave Geist was a dachshund much loved by the Arnold family

Only four years those winning ways, 5
Which make me for thy presence yearn,
Called us to pet thee or to praise,
Dear little friend! at every turn?

That loving heart, that patient soul,
Had they indeed no longer span, 10
To run their course, and reach their goal,
And read their homily to man?

That liquid, melancholy eye,
From whose pathetic, soul-fed springs
Seemed surging the Virgilian cry, 15
The sense of tears in mortal things —

That steadfast, mournful strain, consoled
By spirits gloriously gay,
And temper of heroic mold —
What, was four years their whole short day?

Yes, only four! — and not the course 21
Of all the centuries yet to come,
And not the infinite resource
Of Nature, with her countless sum

Of figures, with her fullness vast 25
Of new creation evermore,
Can ever quite repeat the past,
Or just thy little self restore.

Stern law of every mortal lot!
Which man, proud man, finds hard to bear,
And builds himself I know not what 31
Of second life I know not where

But thou, when struck thine hour to go,
On us, who stood despondent by,
A meek last glance of love didst throw, 35
And humbly lay thee down to die.

Yet would we keep thee in our heart —
Would fix our favorite on the scene,
Nor let thee utterly depart
And be as if thou ne'er hadst been 40

And so there rise these lines of verse
On lips that rarely form them now;
While to each other we rehearse.
Such ways, such arts, such looks hadst thou!

We stroke thy broad brown paws again, 45
We bid thee to thy vacant chair,
We greet thee by the window-pane,
We hear thy scuffle on the stair.

We see the flaps of thy large ears
Quick raised to ask which way we go, 50

15 Virgilian cry, Sunt lacrymarum rerum—"There is sadness in human affairs" (from the Æneid, 1, 462)

Crossing the frozen lake, appears
Thy small black figure on the snow:

Nor to us only art thou dear
Who mourn thee in thine English home;
Thou hast thine absent master's tear, 55
Dropped by the far Australian foam.

Thy memory lasts both here and there,
And thou shalt live as long as we.
And after that — thou dost not care!
In us was all the world to thee 60

Yet, fondly zealous for thy fame,
Even to a date beyond our own
We strive to carry down thy name,
By mounded turf and graven stone.

We lay thee, close within our reach, 65
Here, where the grass is smooth and warm,
Between the holly and the beech,
Where oft we watched thy couchant form,

Asleep, yet lending half an ear
To travelers on the Portsmouth road — 70
There build we thee, O guardian dear,
Marked with a stone, thy last abode!

Then some, who through this garden pass,
When we too, like thyself, are clay,
Shall see thy grave upon the grass, 75
And stop before the stone, and say.

*People who lived here long ago
Did by this stone, it seems, intend
To name for future times to know
The dachshund, Geist, their little friend. (1881)*

THE FAIRIES

A CHILD'S SONG

Up the airy mountain,
Down the rushy glen,
We daren't go a-hunting
For fear of little men:
Wee folk, good folk, 5
Trooping all together,
Green jacket, red cap,
And white owl's feather!

Down along the rocky shore
Some make their home — 10
They live on crispy pancakes
Of yellow tide-foam;

55 absent master, Arnold's son Richard, who was in Australia when the dog died 70 Portsmouth road Arnold lived in the parish of Cobham, Surrey, on the road from London to Portsmouth

Some in the reeds
Of the black mountain-lake,
With frogs for their watchdogs, 15
All night awake.

High on the hilltop
The old King sits;
He is now so old and gray
He's nigh lost his wits. 20
With a bridge of white mist
Columbkil he crosses,
On his stately journeys
From Slieveleague to Rosses;
Or going up with music 25
On cold starry nights,
To sup with the Queen
Of the gay Northern Lights.

They stole little Bridget
For seven years long; 30
When she came down again
Her friends were all gone.
They took her lightly back,
Between the night and morrow;
They thought that she was fast asleep, 35
But she was dead with sorrow.
They have kept her ever since
Deep within the lakes,
On a bed of flag-leaves, 40
Watching till she wakes.

By the craggy hillside,
Through the mosses bare,
They have planted thorn-trees
For pleasure here and there
Is any man so daring 45
As dig one up in spite,
He shall find the thornies set
In his bed at night.

Up the airy mountain,
Down the rushy glen, 50
We daren't go a-hunting
For fear of little men:
Wee folk, good folk,
Trooping all together;
Green jacket, red cap, 55
And white owl's feather! (1850)

A DREAM

I heard the dogs howl in the moonlight night;
I went to the window to see the sight,
All the Dead that ever I knew
Going one by one and two by two.

The Fairies 22 Columbkil, Iona, a sacred island off the west coast of Scotland where the ancient Scotch kings were buried 24 Slieveleague, a mountain on the coast of Donegal, Ireland Rosses, a promontory on the Isle of Mull off the west coast of Scotland, near Iona

On they passed, and on they passed, 5
 Townsfellows all, from first to last;
 Born in the moonlight of the lane,
 Quenched in the heavy shadow again.

Schoolmates, marching as when we played
 At soldiers once — but now more staid; 10
 Those were the strangest sight to me
 Who were drowned, I knew, in the awful sea.

Straight and handsome folk; bent and weak,
 too;
 Some that I loved, and gasped to speak to;
 Some but a day in their churchyard bed; 15
 Some that I had not known were dead

A long, long crowd — where each seemed lonely,
 Yet of them all there was one, one only,
 Raised a head or looked my way:
 She lingered a moment — she might not stay.

How long since I saw that fair pale face! 21
 Ah! Mother dear! might I only place
 My head on thy breast, a moment to rest, While thy hand on my tearful cheek were prest¹

On, on, a moving bridge they made 25
 Across the moon-stream, from shade to shade,
 Young and old, women and men;
 Many long-forgot, but remembered then.

And first there came a bitter laughter;
 A sound of tears the moment after; 30
 And then a music so lofty and gay,
 That every morning, day by day
 I strive to recall it if I may

THESE LITTLE SONGS

These little Songs,
 Found here and there,
 Floating in air
 By forest and lea,
 Or hillside heather, 5
 In houses and throngs,
 Or down by the sea —
 Have come together,
 How, I can't tell.
 But I know full well 10
 No witty goose-wing
 On an inkstand begot 'em;
 Remember each place
 And moment of grace,
 In summer or spring, 15

These Little Songs This poem was printed as an introduction to a volume of verse entitled Day and Night Songs

Winter or autumn,
 By sun, moon, stars,
 Or a coal in the bars,
 In market or church,
 Graveyard or dance, 20
 When they came without search,
 Were found as by chance
 A word, a line,
 You may say are mine;
 But the best in the songs, 25
 Whatever it be,
 To you, and to me,
 And to no one belongs. (1854)

HERACLITUS

They told me, Heraclitus, they told me you were dead,
 They brought me bitter news to hear and bitter tears to shed.
 I wept, as I remembered how often you and I Had tired the sun with talking and sent him down the sky.

And now that thou art lying, my dear old
 Carian guest, 5
 A handful of gray ashes, long, long ago at
 rest,
 Still are thy pleasant voices, thy nightingales,
 awake;
 For Death, he taketh all away, but them he cannot take. (1845; 1858)

MIMNERMUS IN CHURCH

You promise heavens free from strife,
 Pure truth, and perfect change of will;
 But sweet, sweet is this human life,
 So sweet, I fain would breathe it still;
 Your chilly stars I can forgo — 5
 This warm kind world is all I know.

You say there is no substance here,
 One great reality above;
 Back from that void I shrink in fear,
 And child-like hide myself in love. 10
 Show me what angels feel. Till then,
 I cling, a mere weak man, to men.

Heraclitus This poem is a translation of a lyric by the Greek poet Callimachus (c. 250 B.C.) Heraclitus, his friend, was an elegiac poet who lived at Halicarnassus, a city of Caria in Asia Minor.

Mimnermus in Church Mimnermus was a Greek elegiac poet (c. 600 B.C.) noted for his erotic verse. His chief themes were the transitoriness of life and the enjoyment of youth, which he called the age of love. Cory suggests that if Mimnermus could have heard the Christian gospel he might have replied in some such words as these. Cf. The Rubáiyát, lines 245-252, page 420.

You bid me lift my mean desires
 From faltering lips and fitful veins
 To sexless souls, ideal quires, 15
 Unwearied voices, wordless strains;
 My mind with fonder welcome owns
 One dear dead friend's remembered tones.

Forsooth the present we must give
 To that which cannot pass away, 20
 All beauteous things for which we live
 By laws of time and space decay
 But oh, the very reason why
 I clasp them, is because they die. (1858)

A POOR FRENCH SAILOR'S SCOTTISH SWEETHEART

I cannot forget my Joe,
 I bid him be mine in sleep;
 But battle and woe have changed him so
 There's nothing to do but weep.

My mother rebukes me yet, 5
 And I never was meek before,
 His jacket is wet, his lip cold set,
 He'll trouble our home no more.

Oh, breaker of reeds that bend!
 Oh, quencher of tow that smokes! 10
 I'd rather descend to my sailor friend
 Than prosper with lofty folks.

I'm lying beside the gowan,
 My Joe in the English bay;
 I'm Annie Rowan, his Annie Rowan, 15
 He called me his Bien-Aimée.

I'll hearken to all you quote,
 Though I'd rather be deaf and free;
 The little he wrote in the sinking boat
 Is Bible and charm for me. (1877)

ON AN OLD MUFF

Time has a magic wand!
 What is this meets my hand,
 Moth-eaten, moldy, and Covered with fluff?
 Faded, and stiff, and scant, 5
 Can it be? no, it can't —

Yes, I declare, it's Aunt Prudence's muff!

Years ago, twenty-three,
 Old Uncle Doubledee 10
 Gave it to Aunt P.

Laughing and teasing:
 "Prue of the breezy curls,
 Whisper those solemn churls,
What holds a pretty girl's 15
Hand without squeezing?"

Uncle was then a lad
 Gay, but, I grieve to add,
 Sinful, if smoking bad
Baccy's a vice; 20
 Glossy was then this mink
 Muff, lined with pretty pink Satin, which maidens think
 "Awfully nice!"

I seem to see again 25
 Aunt in her hood and train
 Glide, with a sweet disdain,
 Gravely to Meeting,
 Psalm-book, and kerchief new,
 Peeped from the Muff of Prue; 30
 Young men, and pious too,
 Giving her greeting

Sweetly her Sabbath sped
 Then, from this Muff, it's said,
 Tracts she distributed; 35
 Converts (till Monday!),
 Lured by the grace they lacked,
 Followed her. One, in fact,
 Asked for — and got — his tract
 Twice of a Sunday! 40

Love has a potent spell;
 Soon this bold ne'er-do-well,
 Aunt's too susceptible
 Heart undermining, 45
 Slipped, so the scandal runs,
 Notes in the pretty nun's
 Muff — triple-cornered ones,
 Pink as its lining

Worse followed; soon the jade
 Fled (to oblige her blade) 50
 Whilst her friends thought that they'd Locked her up tightly.
 After such shocking games
 Aunt is of wedded dames
 Gayest, and now her name's 55
 Mrs. Golightly.

In female conduct, flaw
 Sadder I never saw.
 Faith still I've in the law
 Of compensation. 60

A Poor French Sailor's Scottish Sweetheart 10 tow, flax

 the smoking of flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth." 13 gowan, daisy. 16 Bien- Aimée, sweetheart

Once Uncle went astray,
Smoked, joked, and swore away,
Sworn by he's now, by a Large congregation

Changed is the Child of Sin, 65
Now he's (he once was thin)
Grave, with a double chin —
Blest be his fat form!
Changed is the garb he wore,
Preacher was never more 70
Prized than is Uncle for Pulpit or platform.

If all's as best befits
Mortals of slender wits,
Then beg this Muff and its 75
Fair Owner pardon.
All's for the best, indeed —
Such is my simple creed;
Still I must go and weed
Hard in my garden. 80

TOM TAYLOR (1817-1880)

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

You lay a wreath on murdered Lincoln's bier,
You, who with mocking pencil went to trace,
Broad for the self-complaisant British sneer,
His length of shambling limb, his furrowed
face,

His gaunt, gnarled hands, his unkempt,
bristling hair, 5
His garb uncouth, his bearing ill at ease,
His lack of all we prize as debonair,
Of power or will to shine, of art to please

You, whose smart pen backed up the pencil's
laugh,
Judging each step as though the way were
plain, 10
Reckless, so it could point its paragraph,
Of chief's perplexity, or people's pain

Beside this corpse, that bears for winding-sheet
The Stars and Stripes he lived to rear anew,
Between the mourners at his head and feet, 15
Say, scurrie jester, is there room for you?

Yes, he had lived to shame me from my sneer,
To lame my pencil and confute my pen,

Abraham Lincoln This poem first appeared in Punch.
Taylor was associated for some years with this magazine, which expressed a hostile attitude toward Lincoln during the Civil War period

To make me own this hind of princes peer,
This rail-splitter a true-born king of men. 20

My shallow judgment I had learned to rue,
Noting how to occasion's height he rose,
How his quaint wit made home-truth seem more true,
How, iron-like, his temper grew by blows;

How humble, yet how hopeful he could be; 25
How in good fortune and in ill the same,
Nor bitter in success, nor boastful he,
Thirsty for gold, nor feverish for fame

He went about his work — such work as few Ever had laid on head and heart and
hand — 30
As one who knows, where there's a task to
do,
Man's honest will must Heaven's good grace command,

Who trusts the strength will with the burden
grow;
That God makes instruments to work his
will,
If but that will we can arrive to know, 35
Nor tamper with the weights of good and ill.

So he went forth to battle, on the side
That he felt clear was Liberty's and Right's,
As in his peasant boyhood he had plied
His warfare with rude Nature's thwarting mights — 40

The uncleared forest, the unbroken soil,
The iron bark that turns the lumberer's ax,
The rapid that o'erbears the boatman's toil,
The prairie hiding the mazed wanderer's tracks,

The ambushed Indian, and the prowling
bear — 45
Such were the deeds that helped his youth to train:
Rough culture, but such trees large fruit may
bear,
If but their stocks be of right girth and grain.

So he grew up, a destined work to do,
And lived to do it, four long-suffering years'
Ill-fate, ill-feeling, ill-report lived through, 51
And then he heard the hisses change to cheers,

The taunts to tribute, the abuse to praise,
And took both with the same unwavering
mood —

Till, as he came on light from darkling days,
And seemed to touch the goal from where he stood, 56

A felon hand, between the goal and him,
Reached from behind his back, a trigger
prest,
And those perplexed and patient eyes were
dim,
Those gaunt, long-laboring limbs were laid
to rest! 60

The words of mercy were upon his lips,
Forgiveness in his heart and on his pen,
When this vile murderer brought swift eclipse
To thoughts of peace on earth, good will to
men.

The Old World and the New, from sea to
sea, 65
Utter one voice of sympathy and shame!
Sore heart, so stopped when it at last beat
high!
Sad life, cut short just as its triumph came!

A deed accursed! Strokes have been struck
before
By the assassin's hand, whereof men doubt
If more of horror or disgrace they bore; 71
But thy foul crime, like Cain's, stands darkly out,

Vile hand, that brandest murder on a strife,
Whate'er its grounds, stoutly and nobly striven,
And with the martyr's crown crownest a life 75
With much to praise, little to be forgiven!

GEORGE ELIOT (1819-1880)

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE

O may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence; live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn 5
For miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like
stars,
And with their mild persistence urge man's search
To vaster issues.

So to live is heaven:
To make undying music in the world, 10
Breathing as beauteous order that controls

64 peace . men From Luke, 2 14

With growing sway the growing life of man.
So we inherit that sweet purity
For which we struggled, failed, and agonized
With widening retrospect that bred despair.
Rebellious flesh that would not be subdued, 16
A vicious parent shaming still its child,
Poor anxious penitence, is quick dissolved;
Its discords, quenched by meeting harmonies,
Die in the large and charitable air. 20
And all our rarer, better, truer self,
That sobbed religiously in yearning song,
That watched to ease the burthen of the
world,
Laboriously tracing what must be,
And what may yet be better — saw within 25
A worthier image for the sanctuary,
And shaped it forth before the multitude,
Divinely human, raising worship so
To higher reverence more mixed with love —
That better self shall live till human time 30
Shall fold its eyelids, and the human sky
Be gathered like a scroll within the tomb
Unread forever.

This is life to come,
Which martyred men have made more glorious
For us who strive to follow. May I reach 35
That purest heaven, be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty —
Be the sweet presence of a good diffused, 40
And in diffusion ever more intense.
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world

THE STEAM THRESHING-MACHINE

WITH THE STRAW-CARRIER

Flush with the pond the lurid furnace burned
At eve, while smoke and vapor filled the yard,
The gloomy winter sky was dimly starred,
The fly-wheel with a mellow murmur turned,
While, ever rising on its mystic stair 5
In the dim light, from secret chambers borne,
The straw of harvest, severed from the corn,
Clumbed, and fell over, in the murky air.
I thought of mind and matter, will and law,
And then of him, who set his stately seal 10
Of Roman words on all the forms he saw
Of old-world husbandry; I could but feel

The Steam Threshing-Machine 7 corn, wheat 10-12 him . . . husbandry, a reference to Virgil (70-19 B.C.), whose Georgics, devoted to rural life and scenery, contains descriptions of farm implements Cf. the picture of the

With what a rich precision he would draw
The endless ladder, and the booming wheel!

CONTINUED

Did any seer of ancient time forebode
This mighty engine, which we daily see
Accepting our full harvests, like a god,
With clouds about his shoulders — it might be
Some poet-husbandman, some lord of verse, 5
Old Hesiod, or the wizard Mantuan,
Who catalogued in rich hexameters
The rake, the roller, and the mystic van;
Or else some priest of Ceres, it might seem,
Who witnessed, as he trod the silent fane, 10
The notes and auguries of coming change,
Of other ministrants in shrine and grange —
The sweating statue, and her sacred wain
Low-booming with the prophecy of steam! 1868)

THE BLESSED DAMOZEL

The blessed damozel leaned out
From the gold bar of heaven;
Her eyes were deeper than the depth
Of waters stilled at even;
She had three lilies in her hand, 5
And the stars in her hair were seven.

Her robe, ungirt from clasp to hem,
No wrought flowers did adorn,
But a white rose of Mary's gift,
For service meetly worn; 10
Her hair that lay along her back
Was yellow like ripe corn.

Herseemed she scarce had been a day
One of God's choristers;
The wonder was not yet quite gone 15
From that still look of hers,
Albert, to them she left, her day
Had counted as ten years.

Continued 6 Hesiod (8th century B.C.), the father of Greek didactic poetry. He drew many faithful pictures of the life of his period. Mantuan, Virgil, who was born in the city of Mantua. 8 van, a fan or other winnowing device. The implements mentioned in this line were all sacred to Ceres, the Italian goddess of agriculture. They are mentioned by Virgil in Georgics, 1. 13 sweating statue. Drops of water that sometimes appeared on the statues of the gods were interpreted as foretelling disaster. wain, wagon, chariot, it was drawn by serpents.

The Blessed Damozel. The theme of this poem was suggested by Poe's The Raven, published in 1845. "I saw," Rossetti said, "that Poe had done the utmost it was possible to do with the grief of the lover on earth, and I determined to reverse the conditions, and give utterance to the yearning of the loved one in heaven." See Critical Notes.

10 For worn, fittingly worn in the service of the Virgin Mary. 13 Herseemed, it seemed to her.

(To one it is ten years of years
. . . Yet now, and in this place, 20
Surely she leaned o'er me — her hair
Fell all about my face . . .
Nothing: the autumn fall of leaves.
The whole year sets apace.)

It was the rampart of God's house 25
That she was standing on;
By God built over the sheer depth
The which is Space begun,
So high, that looking downward thence
She scarce could see the sun. 30

It lies in heaven, across the flood
Of ether, as a bridge.
Beneath the tides of day and night
With flame and darkness ridge
The void, as low as where this earth 35
Spins like a fretful midge.

Around her, lovers, newly met
'Mid deathless love's acclaims,
Spoke evermore among themselves
Their heart-remembered names; 40
And the souls mounting up to God
Went by her like thin flames.

And still she bowed herself and stooped
Out of the circling charm;
Until her bosom must have made 45
The bar she leaned on warm,
And the lilies lay as if asleep
Along her bended arm.

From the fixed place of heaven she saw
Time like a pulse shake fierce 50
Through all the worlds. Her gaze still strove
Within the gulf to pierce
Its path; and now she spoke as when
The stars sang in their spheres.

The sun was gone now; the curled moon 55
Was like a little feather
Fluttering far down the gulf; and now
She spoke through the still weather.
Her voice was like the voice the stars
Had when they sang together. 60

(Ah, sweet! Even now, in that bird's song,
Strove not her accents there,
Fam to be harkened? When those bells
Possessed the mid-day air,
Strove not her steps to reach my side 65
Down all the echoing stair?)

36 midge, a kind of small gnat or fly. 54 stars, . . . spheres. From Job, 38. 7 — "Where wast thou When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" The ancients believed that the stars made music as they revolved in their spheres.

"I wish that he were come to me,
 For he will come," she said.
 "Have I not prayed in heaven? — on earth,
 Lord, Lord, has he not prayed? 70
 Are not two prayers a perfect strength?
 And shall I feel afraid?"

"When round his head the aureole clings,
 And he is clothed in white,
 I'll take his hand and go with him 75
 To the deep wells of light;
 As unto a stream we will step down,
 And bathe there in God's sight.

"We two will stand beside that shrine,
 Occult, withheld, untrod, 80
 Whose lamps are stirred continually
 With prayers sent up to God,
 And see our old prayers, granted, melt
 Each like a little cloud

"We two will be i' the shadow of 85
 That living mystic tree
 Within whose secret growth the Dove
 Is sometimes felt to be,
 While every leaf that His plumes touch
 Saith His Name audibly. 90

"And I myself will teach to him,
 I myself, lying so,
 The songs I sing here; which his voice
 Shall pause in, hushed and slow,
 And find some knowledge at each pause, 95
 Or some new thing to know."

(Alas! We two, we two, thou say'st!
 Yea, one wast thou with me
 That once of old. But shall God lift
 To endless unity 100
 The soul whose likeness with thy soul
 Was but its love for thee?)

"We two," she said, "will seek the groves
 Where the lady Mary is,
 With her five handmaidens, whose names 105
 Are five sweet symphonies,
 Cecily, Gertrude, Magdalen,
 Margaret, and Rosalys.

"Circlewise sit they, with bound locks
 And foreheads garlanded; 110

 87 Dove, a symbol of the Holy Spirit, the third member of the Trinity. 107-108. Cecily . . . Rosalys. These are names of famous Christian saints. St. Cecelia (3d century) is the patron saint of the blind and of musicians. (See Chaucer's Second Nun's Tale and odes in her honor by Dryden and Pope.) St. Gertrude (7th century) is the patron saint of travelers. St. Mary Magdalen is the patron saint of penitents (see Mary Magdalene, page 525). St. Margaret is the chosen type of female innocence and meekness. St. Rosalie (12th century) is the patron saint of the city of Palermo, Sicily.

Into the fine cloth white like flame
 Weaving the golden thread,
 To fashion the birth-robcs for them
 Who are just born, being dead.

"He shall fear, haply, and be dumb; 115
 Then will I lay my cheek
 To his, and tell about our love,
 Not once abashed or weak;
 And the dear Mother will approve
 My pride, and let me speak. 120

"Herself shall bring us, hand in hand,
 To Him round whom all souls
 Kneel, the clear-ranged unnumbered heads
 Bowed with their aureoles;
 And angels meeting us shall sing 125
 To their citherns and citoles

"There will I ask of Christ the Lord
 Thus much for him and me —
 Only to live as once on earth
 With Love, only to be, 130
 As then awhile, forever now,
 Together, I and he "

She gazed and listened and then said,
 Less sad of speech than mild —
 "All this is when he comes " She ceased. 135
 The light thrilled toward her, filled
 With angels in strong, level flight.
 Her eyes prayed, and she smiled.

(I saw her smile) But soon their path
 Was vague in distant spheres; 140
 And then she cast her arms along
 The golden barriers,
 And laid her face between her hands,
 And wept. (I heard her tears)

MY SISTER'S SLEEP

She fell asleep on Christmas Eve;
 At length the long-ungranted shade
 Of weary eyelids overweighed
 The pain naught else might yet relieve.

Our mother, who had leaned all day 5
 Over the bed from chime to chime,
 Then raised herself for the first time,
 And as she sat her down, did pray.

Her little work-table was spread
 With work to finish. For the glare, 10

126 citherns and citoles, medieval stringed musical instruments.
My Sister's Sleep This is an imaginative poem without basis of fact in Rossetti's life

Made by her candle, she had care
To work some distance from the bed.

Without, there was a cold moon up,
Of winter radiance sheer and thin,
The hollow halo it was in 15
Was like an icy crystal cup

Through the small room, with subtle sound
Of flame, by vents the fireshine drove
And reddened In its dim alcove
The mirror shed a clearness round. 20

I had been sitting up some nights,
And my tired mind felt weak and blank;
Like a sharp strengthening wine it drank
The stillness and the broken lights.

Twelve struck That sound, by dwindling
years 25
Heard in each hour, crept off; and then
The ruffled silence spread again,
Like water that a pebble stirs

Our mother rose from where she sat,
Her needles, as she laid them down, 30
Met lightly, and her silken gown
Settled — no other noise than that.

"Glory unto the Newly Born!"
So, as said angels, she did say;
Because we were in Christmas Day, 35
Though it would still be long till morn.

Just then in the room over us
There was a pushing back of chairs,
As some who had sat unawares
So late, now heard the hour, and rose. 40

With anxious, softly-stepping haste
Our mother went where Margaret lay,
Fearing the sounds o'erhead — should they
Have broken her long watched-for rest!

She stooped an instant, calm, and turned, 45
But suddenly turned back again;
And all her features seemed in pain
With woe, and her eyes gazed and yearned

For my part, I but hid my face,
And held my breath, and spoke no word 50
There was none spoken; but I heard
The silence for a little space.

Our mother bowed herself and wept;
And both my arms fell, and I said,
"God knows I knew that she was dead" 55
And there, all white, my sister slept.

Then kneeling, upon Christmas morn
A little after twelve o'clock
We said, ere the first quarter struck,
"Christ's blessing on the newly born!" 60

THE PORTRAIT

This is her picture as she was;
It seems a thing to wonder on,
As though mine image in the glass
Should tarry when myself am gone. 5
I gaze until she seems to stir,
Until mine eyes almost aver
That now, even now, the sweet lips part
To breathe the words of the sweet heart —
And yet the earth is over her.

Alas! even such the thin-drawn ray 10
That makes the prison-depths more rude —
The drip of water night and day
Giving a tongue to solitude.
Yet only this, of love's whole prize,
Remains; save what in mournful guise 15
Takes counsel with my soul alone —
Save what is secret and unknown,
Below the earth, above the skies.

In painting her I shrined her face
'Mid mystic trees, where light falls in 20
Hardly at all; a covert place
Where you might think to find a dim
Of doubtful talk, and a live flame
Wandering, and many a shape whose name
Not itself knoweth, and old dew, 25
And your own footsteps meeting you,
And all things going as they came.

A deep dim wood, and there she stands
As in that wood that day — for so
Was the still movement of her hands 30
And such the pure line's gracious flow.
And passing fair the type must seem,
Unknown the presence and the dream
